"The Court has recognized these difficulties [of adjusting to the decision] by withholding a decree and by inviting 'the full assistance of the parties in formulating decrees * * *. When some hostile propagandist rises in Moscow or Peking to accuse us of being a class society we can * * * recite the courageous words of yesterday's opinion."

Atlanta Constitution—"The Court decision does not mean that Negro and White children will go to school together this fall. The Court provides a cooling off period * * *. A reasonable transition period. It is no time for hasty or ill-considered actions. What is needed most is a calm, rational approach. It is generally recognized that the people of Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Louisiana and possibly other states are not ready to accept mixing of Negro and White children in public schools. This fact is tied in with local conditions that Court decisions do not change. In them, there will be great difficulties."

Louisville Courier-Journal—"What the Supreme Court has ruled is that the 'separate but equal' rule is without meaning. However, the end of the world has not come for the South or the nation. The Supreme Court ruling is acceptance of a process that has been going on for a long time. Rarely has the Supreme Court been so careful to bridge the gap of tradition. Every effort is made to compose the passion of certain states — as in South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia—where the prospect of abolishing public education is waved incitingly. It is a mad and impossible idea. People everywhere could well match the Court's moderation and caution.

New York World-Telegram and Sun—The highest qualities of leadership among both colored and white Americans will be required to bring about an orderly adjustment to the Supreme Court's ruling. * * * The Court has decided this principle as a national issue, but the application is in local hands. And it is something more. It involves the survival of all of us. It is a world-wide issue * * *. Our preachments on democracy and dignity and equal opportunity of man will ring truer to Asia's fermenting millions when they learn that here in America equality is not graded by complexion.

Free and Responsible

Yesterday and today on this page we have presented a sampling of editorial opinion from the nation's newspapers in the wake of the Supreme Court ruling on segregation.

Two impressions stand out from our own perusal of these editorials.

The first is a reminder that the white South, in its special attitude toward racial problems, is a considerable national minority. Every non-Southern newspaper we saw hailed the Court decision as right and just—and no matter how conservative its political position on other matters, none questioned the Court's interpretation of the Constitution.

Our second impression is one of pride in the Southern press. Many Southern editors as a matter of deep conviction dissented from the Court's ruling. Yet, with only one exception, the Southern newspapers that came across our desk met the occasion by counseling a calm and rational consideration of the complex problems their states will face in the wake of the decision.

And this, of course, is the wise and responsible approach. No one could expect anything approximating unanimity of opinion in a matter of such broad social consequence. There is an obvious area of disagreement here between Southern whites and Southern Negroes, with varying shades of opinion on either side.

We enter a time when we will continue to disagree, but when we must adjust our disagreements to meet the obvious demands of tangible and measurable situations. In this the Southern press has led the way in the best tradition of public service.

Politically Speaking

Segregation Vote Emphasizes Big Political Point

By Sam G. Harris

A DECLARATION of war couldn't have affected Arkansas political thinking any more than did the United States Supreme Court decision on segregation last Monday.

It came at a time when there are as many, or more, qualified Negro voters in Arkansas than ever before—85,000 at least. If they should move as a bloc—which they've shown no inclination of doing so far—they could be the balance in any election.

There are many Negroes, and whites too, who think that the Court's decision dealt the death blow to all Jim Crow thinking and legislation. Jim Crow will not die in Arkansas for a long, long time but he has suffered a stroke that, if not fatal, is permanently crippling. Prejudices and social mores do not succumb rapidly. It could easily be 10 years or longer before integration, or a merger, of the school system is complete.

(Some of his associates were kidding Ed McCuistion, state supervisor of Negro education, about being "decreed out of a job." His reply was that he hoped that he was physically able to stick around long enough to see the need for his job eliminated.)

Candidates for public office, especially the legislature, must now let their views be known on all phases of segregation and especially on the matter of conforming with the Supreme Court's decree anent public schools.

A lot of concurrent questions will arise:

What about the state colleges which still remain on a segregated basis except in the professional and graduate levels? What about public transportation? What about the state supported charitable institutions? Gazette 5-23-54

Segregation in Arkansas is statutory. The legislature writes the statutes. Thus the legislature is on the spot, so to speak, as a result of the Supreme Court decision. It suddenly has become a place for big men and the record reflects that it has been shy of that quality on too many occasions in the past, although at other times it has risen to heights of statesmanship.

The 1955 session of the General Assembly will be a historic meeting. Demogoguery and rabble-rousing will have little premium then. There will be some social and financial problems, greater than usual, to be solved. The pressure groups and special interests would make a great contribution by going fishing next January.

Help Wanted

The most distressed individuals, in light of the segregation decision, might turn out to be the Negro school teachers whose average experience and tenure is greater than those of the white teachers in Arkansas. Their average collegiate and professional training is just a fraction less than those of the white teachers.

The decision has written a pattern for the future of the Negro school children, but what about the teachers? Will they become the displaced persons of the Arkansas education system? There are those, who should know the temper and prejudices of school boards and administrators, who fear that they will.

The school teaching problem in Arkansas will be greater than ever before if the Negro teachers are not absorbed to some degree. The end of segregation will not lessen the need for school teachers.

There are 1,167 Negro teachers in Arkansas—and some of them among the best trained in the nation. There are 3,622 white teachers. The average Negro teacher has been drawing about $316 less annually than the average white teacher.

A skilled and devoted Negro teacher should be no less effective with a mixed class than with an all-Negro class. But will administrators and school boards think so? If they do, a lot of long-standing prejudices will have to be rearranged rapidly.

The Negro Teachers

There is a right nice job going begging, after a fashion, at the Capitol. The $7,200-a-year job of state purchasing agent has not been filled since Rip Walker returned to his old job at the University Hospital.

There are plenty of folks who would like to have it but none of them fit the mould that Finance Director Frank Storey and Governor Cherry have made for the job.

The men of the experience and caliber they'd like to have either are in jobs which pay as well or they do not want to take a chance of being unemployed after Governor Cherry leaves office. The purchasing agent is gubernatorial patronage and the head man in that set up cannot be considered a career employe by any stretch of the imagination.

Even if the job was a career job not many men seeking security and peace of mind would want it any way. It is a hot seat in any administration. And several members of the legislature have let it be known that there'll be some changes made in the Finance Department's method of operations come next winter.

Storey has been handling the major decisions of purchasing since Walker's departure March 15.

An Editorial

The Pattern of the Future

THE "separate but equal" doctrine under which Arkansas has always operated its public school system has now been struck down by a unanimous opinion of the United States Supreme Court.

This is, of course, a fact of great historic significance. But it does not provide an occasion for undue alarm, or for precipitate political action.

First of all, the Court, while announcing a new legal precedent adverse to segregation, did not enter decrees in the five cases before it. It will not do so until October at the earliest—and then it will consider ways and means of providing a time for transition. The exact effect of the decision, therefore, will not be known for many months, and in the interim all school litigation based on the new precedent will in effect be frozen.

Moreover, when the Court does hand down its specific orders it will direct changes in the prevailing pattern only in the five school districts in which the cases originated—none of them in Arkansas. No change will follow in any other school district unless it is undertaken voluntarily by local school officials, or until and unless a suit is filed and litigated in each district.

This means there is time for calm and dispassionate consideration of the course we must now undertake to meet the changed legal conditions under which our schools will operate in the future. We know from the lessons of our own history that great and sweeping social changes do not and cannot proceed immediately from judicial determination. Yet we cannot fail to recognize this decision as another significant milestone on the long road to reunion the South has traveled since the end of the Civil War.

Arkansas Gazette, June 5-18-54

A NEW report on bi-racial education written by the executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette and based upon the findings of some 40 Southern scholars states the problem in these terms:

"The fact is that the two races in the South have been growing apart for a generation; although still living side by side Negroes and whites have had less real communication in the past 25 years than ever before in the region's history. Their relationship in earlier years was basically that of master and servant, but it was nevertheless intimate and as it existed between individuals it was based upon confidence and trust. The rising status of the Negro has now replaced the domestic who "lives on the place" with a part-time transient servant paid by the hour; the sawmill hand who once negotiated with his boss on the basis of their mutual memories of the boss's father is now represented by a union business agent; the tenant farmer with his personal identification with the land and its owners is rapidly being replaced by the day laborer. These are the hallmarks of economic and social progress for the Negro, but they also mark a process which has eroded away an historic interracial working relationship without effectively replacing it.

"The transition from the tradition of noblesse oblige, which the Negro now rejects because of its connotations of inferiority, to a new concept of race relations is only beginning. The Negro's exercise of the legal weapons available to him under the Plessy doctrine provided a significant start, for here he did not appear as a supplicant but arose to demand equality of educational opportunity as his right. In many of these cases the state and federal district courts did not resort to dry legalisms in reaching their decisions, but resorted to special techniques to work out what they could recognize were complex social problems. The court-sponsored conference between the Negro plaintiffs and their spokesmen and the white defendants and theirs became common * * *

Little Rock

"In many ways this is the end product of a process that began many years ago and began, as such things must, at the very top of the educational structure. But where a half-century ago Booker T. Washington and a handful of white Southern college presidents represented the outside limits of free and frank discussion of the mutual problems inherent in educating the two races, the level of discussion has now descended to the cross-roads hamlet and the participants are not learned educators but the parents of Negro children and the white laymen who sit on a local school board.

"It is here that the South will have to determine the future of its educational system. Wise leadership at the upper levels can help, and emotional excursions by the leaders of either race can do great harm. But in the end the new patterns will have to be hammered out across the table in thousands of scattered school districts, and they will have to be shaped to accommodate not only the needs but the prejudices of whites and Negroes to whom these problems are not abstractions but the essence of their daily lives."

★ ★ ★

THIS, we believe, is an adequate summary of the problem which now faces Arkansas, and of the pattern in which we can and will move to meet it. The Supreme Court decision will not wipe out segregated schools in this or any other state at a stroke. But it does call for a sober reappraisal of the manner in which we have lived up to our long-accepted obligation to provide adequate educational opportunity for all our children, regardless of race, creed or color. Where we have failed to provide equality, we must move now to provide it— not alone because a new Court precedent places the dual system in jeopardy, but in justice to our own standards of fair and decent treatment.

White and Negro leaders in Arkansas now have urgent business together—as they have had so often in the past. Together they must move on toward the still unrealized goal of creating a total school system that will meet the needs of all our children, and accommodate it to the rapidly changing society in which we are fated to live.

Once again, we are faced with a great time of testing, but we are confident Arkansas will meet the future with good will.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. NEWS

Legislative Group Makes Impressive Report On Alabama's School Problem

The report of the Interim Legislative Committee headed by Sen. Albert Boutwell which has been studying Alabama's school problem in relation to the Supreme Court's decision against compulsory segregation is an impressive work, reflecting earnest endeavor and high purpose. It is a document evolved after long study and labor and should have the very careful consideration of all the people.

The plan it advances, as we understand it after a first examination, would recognize and seek to meet the law as interpreted by the high court. It would also seek to recognize and meet constructively community sentiment against forced integration. These are two basic objectives essential to a sound and satisfactory meeting of the problems. That was emphasized in a News editorial of last week.

A Free School Choice For All

The committee plan would seek these ends by the establishment of an opportunity for a free choice as between white, colored and mixed schools. The committee believes its plan would legally lead to general maintenance of the present separate attendance pattern. Any mixed schools would be operated by the state and attendance at them would be on a voluntary basis. But it is set forth that under this plan, legal authority as to school administration and police power; provision of fully adequate schools for Negroes, and the support of the good sense of the Negro people would "reduce the number of school districts in Alabama in which belligerent nonconformity to custom and threatened discord would make it necessary to consider substitution" of subsidized private and separate schools for white and colored students.

In order to legalize and carry out such a system, the report points out, a number of constitutional changes would be necessary, including elimination of the express prohibition against the operation of mixed schools and setting up of provisions for use of public funds for private school subsidy purposes. But the power to discontinue public schools and grant public aid would be delegated to local school authorities only as "a last resort."

Would Keep Public Schools

The report declares specifically that "the committee's recommendations do not call for abolition or abandonment of the public school system." That is to be carefully noted, particularly in relation to reports and interpretations that abolition is contemplated as a primary move in other states. In this report the emphasis is on preserving the public school system insofar as seems feasible.

As to mixed public schools, the committee says: "Considered from the standpoint of the right of free citizens of all races to control their social and personal contacts, relations and environment, the people of Alabama might be willing to concede the right of white and Negro families to send their children to mixed public schools within any appropriate school district where the qualifications for admission might be consistent with the school program, and where the arrangement should be acceptable to the community and its taxpayers; but compulsory attendance at a mixed school, inevitably resulting in friction, disorder and bad feeling, is another thing entirely."

This newspaper commends the committee for the broad spirit, the method of reason and the devoted endeavor in the public interest which its report so clearly reflects.

We agree with many of its fundamental premises and ideas. Our editorial of last week is in line with a number of the report's basic points.

A Difference As To Method

But it is at a crucial point of method that there seems to be an important difference of viewpoint and possibly of approach. The committee plan apparently would rely basically on the private school-subsidy plan. We have serious and far-reaching doubts as to the legality, practicability and desirability of that approach.

We have noted that the committee would use that procedure only as a last resort. And we have said that "a change in state law in due time giving the Legislature authority in that respect might be a wise precaution affording a means of dealing with an extreme situation of danger or conflict, should such a situation ever develop." But we have sought to indicate—and now reiterate—that we believe the original approach to the problem should place emphasis and reliance primarily on widespread popular acceptance of a free-choice plan growing out of active, voluntary and cooperative efforts by white and colored citizens of good will in our communities.

Support For Free Choice

With a free-choice system actually in effect for all, with renewed efforts to accelerate the provision of adequate schools for all, it is reasonable to hope that any extremist efforts to disrupt such a program could be effectively met. Is it conceivable that such extremists could, with free choice for all a fact, effectively move to tear down the respective white, colored and mixed schools under such a plan?

Of course, any plan is going to present uncertainties and difficulties. But this newspaper is greatly heartened by indications that in this state we may be moving toward a constructive meeting of a momentous problem and thereby may work out a high achievement for Alabama and possibly contribute to such achievement in other states.

RACE RELATIONS REPORT - 1954
CLIPPINGS REQUESTED

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. NEWS

A SCHOOL PLAN OF GOOD WILL AND COOPERATION

Respect For Both Law And Mutual Convictions Is Essential In Meeting Supreme Court Decision

The grave problems raised by the Supreme Court's decision outlawing compulsory school segregation are pressing hard upon the minds and consciences of the people of the South. But specific application of the decision will not be entirely clear until decrees are issued, and consequently in most areas a period of reflection and preparation fortunately now is available. Able students of the law pertinently point out that legal doctrine to be effective must be translated into actual legal practice. We are now seeking methods of legal practice in conformity with the newly pronounced legal doctrine. It is an inexpressibly complex and momentous task.

This interval of preparation does not mean that procrastination can be afforded. The situation even now is urgent, though in most communities the climax is not yet at hand. These grave problems will not be solved by bitter conflict among our people. They cannot be escaped by evasion.

* * *

This newspaper, having expressed its deep regret that this decision has come at this time, nevertheless believes that constructive and creative efforts must be made to meet it. After long and earnest reflection, The News has come to the conclusion—which perhaps should have been obvious at once—that a constructive approach requires recognition of two fundamental principles:

1. Respect for the law and its interpretation by the Supreme Court.

2. Respect for sincere, widespread community convictions.

If either of these principles is ignored or grossly subordinated, there can be no creative dealing with the situation. Instead there would be bitterness and conflict and a peril whose limits could not be defined.

* * *

The Supreme Court is our final interpreter of the law. Our system of government—of justice and freedom—is based on law and respect for law. Our way of life could not survive on any other basis. But it is also true that law gains its support and effectiveness from the willing acceptance of the people. Law which deeply violates the conviction of the people of a nation—or a region—or a community—cannot be adequately effective in that nation, region or community. Any program of action under the Supreme Court decrees, to be constructive and successful, must take account of the deep convictions of the people involved.

* * *

What Kind Of Program?

What kind of a program would be in accord with those two basic principles and avoid the great danger of disruption and conflict which would be involved in other courses of action?

First of all, it is to be recognized, we believe, that compulsory public school segregation is invalidated in principle by the decision. This newspaper recognizes force and reality in the contention that such segregation does involve a kind of discrimination in itself. But it also believes that contentions and conditions underlying the superseded "separate but equal" decision of more than a half century ago and bearing on state rights and the public interest and peace also are still to be recognized as involving considerations of great pertinence and weight. Who can fail to recognize that sentiment among white people in communities of the South generally, and even in some communities in other regions, is strongly against compulsory integration of white and Negro students in the public schools.

* * *

What kind of a plan of action could constructively meet these realities?

It is the belief of this newspaper that a fundamental requisite of any such plan would require that our people of good will of BOTH RACES UNITE COMMUNITY BY COMMUNITY IN STRIVING TO ACHIEVE AS MUCH COMMON GROUND OF AGREEMENT as possible. They should STRONGLY RESIST being drawn into almost EXCLUSIVE CONCENTRATION ON DIFFERENCES. Different conditions and sentiments will make for varying problems in different communities. No one program will be equally effective everywhere.

There IS much common ground upon which we believe a great majority of ALL our Southern people CAN stand. That is true here in Birmingham and the rest of Alabama.

This great majority in both races do not want to defy law.

They do not want to foment new and terrible bitterness and conflict here at home in a world facing the menace of overwhelming destruction through strife.

The great majority of our white people want to respect law and to avoid compulsory action in defiance of law.

The great majority of our Negro citizens, we believe, do not want to try to force integration of students where it is against a prevailing white sentiment and would involve grave possibilities of trouble.

* * *

Much Solid Common Ground

These and other feelings, including long-standing realities of genuine friendship and good will between the two races, provide much solid, common ground upon which to work. Action on that basis, looking to POSITIVE, HOPEFUL results, rather than NEGATIVE OBSTRUCTION AND ANTAGONISM, could, we believe, evoke a powerful COOPERATIVE support among white and colored people.

It could develop the incomparable power of true good will.

It could conceivably lead to marked creative progress instead of mounting stress and hate and peril.

* * *

What kind of a definite program of action, then, could be evolved from such a cooperative spirit and attitude?

In seeking specific answer to that crucial question, let the court's decision be carefully considered. One thing seems to us especially important. The decision clearly invalidates COMPULSORY SEGREGATION. But to this paper it seems evident that it does NOT COMPEL INTEGRATION, especially if there is individual desire or community conviction to the contrary. This distinction points, we believe, to an opportunity for action in conformity with both the court's ruling against compulsory segregation and community sentiment against compulsory integration. In our anxiety over DIFFERENCES and DANGERS, have we OVERLOOKED a really HOPEFUL OPPORTUNITY?

* * *

Helpful Voluntary Action

Specifically, The Birmingham News proposes the most careful examination and consideration of a plan under which it would be possible, we believe, both to give respect, and to conform, to the court's ruling against compulsory segregation, and to avoid by VOLUNTARY ACTION an integration of students profoundly against intense community sentiment among white people.

In seeking such a program, school districts might be evolved in each of which—where both white and colored children resided—there would be a school that now is white and one that now is colored. The problem of such districting should not be insurmountable.

Residential patterns in Birmingham as in many other cities are such as to be helpful in meeting school districting problems under the court's decision. It will be natural and logical for great numbers of colored school children to want to continue attending the schools they have been attending. But under the idea here suggested for study, there would be a genuine opportunity for colored children to choose and attend schools regardless of race. Anything less than such an opportunity would not, in a public school system, meet the court's decision.

This paper is unable to believe that a satisfactory solution can be found in abolishing the public school system, although a change in state law in due time giving the Legislature authority in that respect might be a wise precaution affording a means of dealing with an extreme situation of danger or conflict, should such a situation ever develop.

However, under a system which respected the court's ruling against compulsory segregation, which provided an opportunity for a free choice of schools, and which had the strong, active support of most citizens of good will of both races, we would have an excellent chance, we believe, to minimize problems and perils and to keep our schools in operation by VOLUNTARY MEANS along the lines of student body composition which now prevail.

* * *

A Basis For Cooperation

We repeat: We believe that, with compulsory legal segregation done away with by the court, with general recognition of that reality and with continued efforts to make progress in providing genuinely equal educational opportunities for both white and colored students, Negro students and parents in Birmingham and the rest of Alabama would not seek to FORCE UNWELCOME INTEGRATION except in isolated instances. Any instances of difficulty and controversy surely could be met through the development of a broad measure of good will and cooperation than under conditions emphasizing differences and divisions.

There would be hard problems, challenges and difficulties under such a positive, hopeful and bold program. So would this paper believes, hold more promise but this than continued efforts to exert compulsions from any quarter.

It should have the strength and vitality of a sincere endeavor carried forward in good will.

At the least such an endeavor should, with the law and the deep convictions of community sentiment.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. NEWS

The Public School Segregation Decision

This newspaper deeply regrets that the Supreme Court has come to a decision that segregation of Negro and white students in the public schools is unconstitutional. It has thus overturned—and by a unanimous ruling—the "separate but equal" doctrine upheld by the court in 1896. The News believes that the considerations of public interest and state rights which underlay the superseded decision still apply and would better serve progress in racial relations and education.

We are gratified, however, that the court decided to delay formulation of decrees giving effect to the ruling until further consideration is given this Fall to questions having to do with the time and method of application. Obviously problems of great difficulty and delicacy are involved, and it is to be expected they will be considered with the most thorough eare.

The court ruled on cases involving South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. Other states with segregation in public schools are not directly and immediately affected. But action now doubtless will be pressed by opponents of segregation looking to ending it in all states.

The court's ruling read by Chief Justice Warren was explicit. It declared: "We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does." The ruling held that the decision of the court could not "turn on merely a comparison of these tangible factors in the Negro and white schools involved," continuing. "We must look instead to the effect of segregation itself on public education."

This paper recognizes that "separate but equal" facilities and opportunities have not been developed in most instances. But substantial progress has been made in recent years in that direction, and it has been going forward, considering everything, at a fairly good rate, we think, and would continue to do so.

Admittedly segregation has produced emotional reactions that have not always been good. But we are much concerned that the ending of segregation may produce feelings and problems far more difficult to deal with.

It has been our conviction that the greater progress in racial relations and in improving educational opportunities would be attained by pressing on with the evolutionary progress under state control that has been going forward in the states where segregation has been in effect. It is to be recognized, of course, that elimination of segregation cannot eliminate the financial problems of our schools. And it is to be understood that the changin- by compulsion of law of a system tha long has prevailed cannot of itself alte deep feelings, established patterns of human thought and emotion. Alterations of that kind generally, we think, come about in a more constructive and creative way when they evolve in a voluntary way in communities and regions than when they are attempted by broad legal compulsions.

Of course, the authority of the Supreme Court will be recognized. Possibly there will be extended efforts toward reconsideration of the ruling. But after the long time the court has taken in considering these cases and in view of the unanimous decision, no basic change in the ruling seems at all likely.

But compliance will take time, as the court recognizes. In that time the vast majority of both white and colored citizens will, we hope and expect, strive for the utmost sound judgment, good will and restraint in dealing with a very difficult situation. Leaders, white and Negro, we earnestly hope, will do their best to work out constructive and cooperative plans.

It is unrealistic to talk of such extreme things as abandoning the public school systems. There will, in our view, be no wholesale and indiscriminate rush to alter drastically the composition of school student bodies. Residential zoning in Birmingham on a basis of color has been ruled against by the federal court but there has been no swift and extensive scramble by colored people to cross old lines.

Surely there should be no violence. We are confident the good sense and good will of our people, white and colored, will prevent anything like that. It is obvious that that could only make matters worse.

There is no easy solution to the problems and tensions inherent in the situation. But wisdom, good will, self-discipline, can be combined, we hope, to develop ways of dealing with this situation that will hold down difficulties and stresses and dangers to the minimum. That, of course, should be the common aim. Inflamed extremists of any kind can only menace the common good.

Talmadge Is Wrong

Whatever the deep belief that is driving Herman Talmadge of Georgia to loose talk, this paper believes it is a disservice to Southern people to lead them into an ever deeper pit of unreality in facing the problem resulting from the Supreme Court segregation decision. We do not believe the people of Alabama would accept as sensible such talk as the Georgia governor's comment about resisting the decree "regardless." Something can, we hope, be worked out. Talking in terms of near-rebellion may make for Georgia votes, but it won't provide a solution.

A Timely Commission Decision

The City Commission yesterday unanimously voted to revise a section of the city code which barred Negroes and whites from participating together in any sporting event. The redrawn ordinance permits Negroes and whites to play football and baseball together.

The clear intent of the commission was, at this time, to permit our law affecting such matters to conform to present realities in professional baseball and football. Negroes increasingly have entered those two professional sports. Birmingham had remained one of the few larger Southern cities specifically prohibiting such mixed playing. We now take a step forward, and the decision to do so was sound. We believe that majority sentiment in the community will approve and that the results will be constructive.

The Sports Segregation Vote

Far fewer than a majority of the real baseball fans of Birmingham voted for an ordinance to restore absolute racial segregation in Birmingham professional sports. The majority of those who did vote, however, was overwhelmingly for restoration of a rigid bar. The vote was three to one for the strict segregation ordinance.

The City Commission, in our view, acted courageously in trying to eliminate such segregation quietly and without noise.

Opposition to relaxing this particular bar was well organized. And in support of the City Commission view there was no active group working to promote a reasonable arrangement.

Thursday Birmingham's Willie Mays, back in fine form with the Giants, popped two home runs to run his total up to 16, tying Hank Sauer for the National League lead in home runs.

We still find it something of which Birmingham should be ashamed, to think such a fine athlete could not, under this new ordinance, be seen playing with the Giants should they pass through his own home town. This, though several teams with Negroes played at Rickwood this Spring with no disturbance, of course, of any kind.

The heavy majority doubtless is partly ascribed to the Supreme Court ruling on school segregation.

Sports Segregation?

An ordinance is to be voted on in Tuesday's election which would restore a prohibition against Negro and white athletes playing baseball or football together professionally in Birmingham.

To vote for permitting mixed playing, citizens should vote against the proposed ordinance. Such a negative vote would permit a City Commission ruling allowing such play to stand.

This paper has said before and now repeats, it is entirely fitting that Birmingham sports fans should be allowed to see such mixed playing when teams having Negro players come to this city. We cannot see that our sister city, Montgomery, for example, has suffered, and Negroes have been playing baseball with whites professionally there, now, for the second season. Negroes and whites played here in exhibition games this Spring, well attended. There of course was no difficulty.

We urge a vote against the substitute ordinance.

Gov. Persons Shows Wise Restraint In Meeting Court's Segregation Decision

Gov. Persons is showing wise restraint in meeting the situation growing out of the Supreme Court's school segregation ruling.

It is too early, this newspaper believes, to enact any changes in state law in this connection.

It certainly would be premature to move now in the direction of basically altering our public school system.

Until the Supreme Court issues its decrees as to specific application of its decision, it will be impossible to know just what the immediate problems will be in Alabama.

This state was not involved in the cases which brought the court's ruling. The Persons administration acted wisely also in deciding against filing briefs in the Supreme Court in relation to its forthcoming decrees. Alabama will be much better informed as to what its precise problems are when the decrees have been issued. Until then we believe it is sound not to participate in the decree proceedings.

Of course, the court's ruling is clear and unequivocal that compulsory segregation on the basis of race is in principle unconstitutional. That fact should be squarely faced. It calls for earnest and thorough study and preparation against the time when the effects of the decision on Alabama will be less difficult to determine.

Efforts along that line have been going forward. A special legislative committee, with the aid of an Alabama Bar Association committee, has been considering the prospect and has made recommendations to the governor, who in turn has sought opinions from others. The most careful and comprehensive reflection is called for.

But in our view a special session of the Legislature is not warranted now. We do not yet have adequate information for deciding specifically on questions as to changes in state law. Gov. Persons appears to have seen this clearly and is, in our opinion, doing much to aid in avoiding unwise action and in developing a realistic, constructive approach to the problems ahead.

Preparations Should Go Forward To Meet Court's Decree On Non-Segregation Ruling

Until the U. S. Supreme Court issues orders as to methods for applying its decision declaring public school segregation unconstitutional, it is difficult to foresee just what the problems will be. They will be many and serious, of course. But their exact nature cannot yet be foreseen. However, that does not mean that careful thought and preparation should not proceed in anticipation of dealing with the situation as it develops.

Sen. Albert Boutwell disclosed this week that a special legislative committee which has been studying the matter, with the aid of an Alabama Bar Association committee, has made some recommendations to Gov. Persons. One proposal looks to a constitutional amendment giving the Legislature more flexible authority in relation to schools. Gov. Persons has asked a group of lawyers to study the recommendations.

The committee's plan is not in final form and has not yet been made public.

Sen. Boutwell said that the committee, rather than taking a defiant attitude toward the Supreme Court ruling, has been seeking a simple, sensible solution which has a chance to work. Such a spirit and aim are commendable. Earnest, rational and realistic efforts along such lines should aid greatly in dealing with a very complex problem.

Pressing Now Of Housing Segregation Suit Will Not Help Racial Relations

Real progress in racial relations and in dealing with the complex problems in that field depend very largely on the good feeling and the voluntary efforts that have so widely prevailed between our white and colored citizens and have produced marked advances. The suit seeking to bring an early end to racial segregation in Birmingham's public housing projects will not promote such fundamental feeling and efforts. We particularly regret its filing at this time when so many difficult matters must be faced as a result of the Supreme Court's decision against segregation in the public schools. We are sorry that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and others concerned have elected to press the legal action now.

We emphasize that we are all, in dealing with such problems, basically and primarily dependent on friendly, mutual cooperation and willing, uncoerced action. At times the compulsions of law are necessary. But in this field they should be resorted to with great care and restraint.

Whatever might be achieved by the housing segregation action now by its proponents could, we think, be more than offset by unfortunate effects in other important respects.

Christianity ar Supreme Co

(By EDWIN L. BROCK)

(A Copy from the Christian Century—August 18, 1954, Issue).

In the debate over segregation there always was a convenient crutch on which we could lean. Segregation, we would contend, was the law of the land. The moral and religious implications could be ignored in the subterfuge of upholding the law. With the decision of the Supreme Court that crutch has now been broken and must be discarded. Segregation can no longer be legally defended. The issue now stand clear as moral a.d religious. The demand, of the Christian in the months and years ahead will become increasingly pressing, for Christianity's idealism is directly pertinent to the issues in which we are involved. What, then, constitutes the task of Christians in relation to this problem as it has now been altered by the decision of the court?

Increasingly the Christian will have to act as a stabilizing influence to maintain an emotional balance while the transition is being worked out. The situation obviously calls for calmness and for a reasonable example of the problem. Already there is an encouraging start in that direction. While the decision has been received in the south with a sense of hurt and disturbance, the voices of council with a few notable exceptions have been sensibly restrained and unimpassioned. That is as it should be. There is no reason to believe that southerners are incapable of facing this problem intelligently and in good faith. The Christian is under obligation in such a situation to work for the elimination of blind passion and emotion and to clear the way for intelligent facing of the issues now raised.

For in the thinking of the Christian there can be no place for rancor or hatred. Such an emotional approach to a problem only beclouds the issue: ". . . he who hates his brother is in the darkness and walks in the darkness, and does not know where he is going, because the darkness has blinded his eyes." To deal successfully with this problem we need all of our facilities. We cannot permit emotion to obscure judgement. Obligatory for the Christian therefore is this necessity of remaining calm and controll himself and of seeking to curb the wild excesses of unbridled emotion in order that reason may be free to deal intelligently and constructively with the problem.

In the second place, the Christian has a binding duty to be honest with the intent of the law and to strive to see that his commnity and his state honestly face the issue. To urge Christians to be honest seems elementary, but dishonesty is often an extremely subtle force. In this case it takes the form of an attempt to escape the basic intent of the law. The intent of the ruling is the elimination of segregation in the public schools. But already voices are raised which call for efforts to circumvent the law. Many are asking how we can stay within the bounds of the law and yet maintain the system as it is. The states of South Carolina and Georgia having enabling legislation in process of development to eliminate the public school itself as a last resort in the effort to maintain segregation.

In regard to that effort the executive board of the Woman's Society of Christian Service of the North Georgia Methodist conference said: "Ours is a nation founded on respect for law and the courts. Attempts to defy or evade the law of the land attack the very foundation of our republic. Sch subterfuges have not suceeded in the past and are unworthy of a great state and a great people."

The position of South Carolina and Georgia is extreme. But intermediate between that position and one that honestly faces the intent of the law are some positions that are more subtly dishonest because they have a ready attractiveness in that they seem to remain within the intent of the law. One of these is zoning—the changing of school districts to conform to a racial pattern. Where the districts are natural ones, the plan has some practicality. But at its worst it results in a type of racial gerrymandering—the changing of district lines to conform solely to racial differences. Another equally dishonest effort is that of the Louisiana legislature to bring the schools undeh the police power of the state and maintain segregation under the subterfuge of maintaining law and order.

The intent of the court can also be almost endlessly delaped and postponed by a resort to the channels of the law. Some cases of legal action will certainly be justified. But a resort to a cort of law merely as stalling action or as a defiance of law, saying, "We won't take any action until directly ordered by the court," could only be a delaying and dishonest evasion of the intent of the court's order.

Efforts such as these, which seek simply to circumvent the intent of the court, the Christian is obligated to oppose.

The Christian is obligated to take direct steps on a community level toward the implementation of the court's decision. Christian moral suasion was involved in the court's decision. That victory for moral values can be made effective only as Christian on a community level seek to think through the means and methods by which the decision can be made effectual, to guard against injustice and to combat the demonstrations of littleness and ill will. Reconciliation, the task of the peace maker, is still one of the inescapable obligations of the Christian.

There are many problems of a practical nature on a local level which must be solved. To that end the Supreme Court has asked the U. S. attorney general and the attorney generals of the states involved in the historic cases to meet in the fall to discuss means by which the intent of the decision can be realized. But while that advice and guidance will be helpful, what is done on a local level will depend largely on the constructive wisdom and insight of Christians within the community. They are the ones who will be the leaders in facing the issues and solving the complex problems involved.

The example of Greensboro, North Carolina, school board in facing the issue immediately and honestly might well be one for all southern communities to follow. Deciding "to go forward instead of following," the board directed the city school superintendent to report to the board "regarding ways and means for complying with the court's decision."

The Christian, in the fourth place, will become the guardian of the moral and spiritual values that are involved in the decision. Basic to the decision are certain assumptions fundamental to the Christian faith. These values the Christian is obligated to uphold. One of them is the recognition that there are no inferior races. That is a fundamental fact of science, but long before science had discovered the proof of its truth Christians were declaring their belief in a God who was the Father of all men and before whom all men were equal. The court therefore was not discovering a new fact when it recognized that there are no inferior races. It was only emphasizing, recognizing and incorporating into law what has always been true.

The Christian must seek also to preserve the values of human personality, for he affirms that all men are made in the image of God. The court rightly saw the damages to personality resulting from segregation. Some of them, the court felt, were so severe that they were "unlikely ever to be undone." The Christian equally must in the years ahead seek to protect human personality from influences which would inquire or distort it, and thus to make possible the flowering of the divine in every man.

Simply by virtue of the fact that he calls himself by the name of the Christ, the Christian must seek to uphold the values of justice and fair dealing which are involved in the decision. The court found segregation an injurious wrong. The Christian cannot make his stand on a moral foundation that is built on a lesser concept of justice than that.

The court has presented a challenge to the south, to the nation and, above all, to the Christian. Because of what he stands for, the Christian will be looked to for leadership. He cannot permit himself to be misled by emotion or deceived by dishonesty, or to be distracted from the faith he is obligated to declare.

* * *

NOTE from the Christian Century on Edwin L. Brock:

(Edwin L. Brock was born and grew up in New Orleans, and holds degrees from Tulane and Duke. He has served several churches in Georgia and Louisiana, and is at present minister of the Methodist church in Church Point, La.)

RACE RELATIONS REPORT- 1954
CLIPPINGS REQUESTED

DALLAS, TEXAS MORNING NEWS

Segregation Strike

The students in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, who quit classes and carried banners through the streets because Negroes were put in white schools, should be told, in no uncertain terms, to go back to their desks and shut up.

In behalf of the students: All we have heard so far from the liberal press and the so-called sobsister is that, if the Negro-in-white-school issue were left up to the students, they would be in favor of racial integration, that the parents are causing all the fuss. So far, nobody has put the question to the scholars, themselves. The West Virginia white students refute the assumption. They don't want to mix the races.

But student strikes solve nothing. Students going to school at the pleasure of their taxpaying elders can't dictate policy.

You can't run a school system by anarchy. You surely can't let the kids run it. If they can strike against integration, they can strike against homework and mathematics.

Dallas School Growth

Ever since World War II ended, Dallas has been building new schools and additions to old ones. But still some of them are crowded and others are about to become so. Dallas' rapid growth in population and the high birth rate of the early postwar years have made the need for additional school facilities and teachers a continuing problem. Dallas still must look ahead and plan for new schools in sections that are outgrowing their present buildings.

This problem is being complicated by attempts to rush desegregation locally in advance of a state-wide plan. Efforts of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to put Negro children in white schools here, as elsewhere, are harming its cause. The Supreme Court itself admitted that its decision of last spring could not be put into effect immediately and called a meeting to find ways to accomplish this. Local school districts are not in a position to override state laws. Those can be changed only by the Legislature, and it is to that body that the NAACP should look next.

Meanwhile, the school districts here, as elsewhere in the South, will have to keep in mind in their planning a probable desegregation at an early date. This may call for new school buildings in some places and a redrawing of district lines in others. Full racial integration of the school system may require several years.

NAACP Demands 'Immediate Steps'

The request of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for "immediate steps" to put desegregation into effect in Dallas schools is both unwise and untimely. Supt. W. T. White makes the only sound answer, an outright rejection.

The Dallas school superintendent will undoubtedly get the full backing of his superiors at the Sept. 14 meeting of the Board of Education. He has answered in the light of the clear mandate from the State Board of Education, which in July ordered all public school systems in Texas to continue racial segregation for at least another year. Governor Shivers has endorsed this policy.

Additional time is necessary to permit an orderly compliance with the United States Supreme Court's decision abolishing segregation. The court itself recognized the need for time to do this. It did so by withholding any compliance orders at the time of its decision.

Even if the order of the State Board of Education and the views of Governor Shivers were not binding on the Dallas public school system, the present state law and Constitution are plain on this matter. The Legislature, meeting next in January of the coming year, is the only body that can set the process in motion to make the state law and State Constitution conform to the Supreme Court's latest interpretation of the overriding Federal Constitution.

Short of a change in the Texas law, or a specific knocking out of it in a test case before the Supreme Court at Washington, Dallas school authorities would flout existing state laws at their peril. The NAACP should recognize these facts. In the light of them, the present request seems highly out of order.

Segregation Plan Up to Legislature

The State Board of Education, declining to upset school segregation in Texas for 1954-55, has two sound legal bases for inaction.

Primarily, it is beyond the authority of the board to integrate. To do so would be to violate the existing statutes of which the board is a creature. Any action on integration must come from the Legislature.

The board has back of it, too, the United States Supreme Court's own deferment of effectuation of its ruling until it can consult with state authorities. From all angles, no one expects the affected states to rush in with moves which must be authorized by legislation.

It is unlikely that any state in disagreement with the court ruling will disregard it. Should any state do so, its educational authorities would be in a difficult position. Obviously no board can act without authority of law and, with the law under which it operates nullified by the Supreme Court, it would have no solution for its own problem.

Nonsegregated Schools On United States Land

The Defense Department's plan to end segregation in schools on United States military property is clearly the department's right.

A military base belongs to the Federal Government. What it does on it is its business. It foots the bills. There is no constitutional bar.

Elsewhere, in the view of The News, public schooling is a local and state matter; that, because the United States Constitution makes it plain that all powers not delegated to the Federal Government are reserved to the states and to the people.

If the people of Mississippi and Texas want segregated schools, that is their business. The people of Texas and Mississippi do not object to nonsegregated schools in Ohio and New York, if Ohio and New York want them.

But the people of Texas and Mississippi do object to the Federal Government's imposing on them what they have rejected.

What the government does on a military base—which isn't state property or jurisdiction—is the government's business. The government, however, can not set up nonsegregated schools on military property and ask the states to support them, if the states do not want to.

Violence Is No Help In Segregation Issue

It is to be sincerely hoped that the burning of crosses at Athens and Port Arthur was the act of irresponsible individuals and not the work of an organized group or groups.

Parts of Texas experienced the reign of the fiery cross thirty years ago when the Ku Klux Klan defied law and order, elected members to political office and advocated the persecution of members of minority groups.

The demonstrations at Athens and Port Arthur evidently were intended as protests against the decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in public schools. As such, they are provocative and premature.

The court did not indicate how its decision should be applied but left it to the individual states to come up with a fair solution that will satisfy the intent of its ruling.

Gov. Allan Shivers and Sen. Price Daniel have advised acceptance of and compliance with the order. It is expected that Texas will work out a form of compliance that will make the best out of an unwelcome situation.

Until that is done members of both races should restrain themselves with patience. There should be no acts of violence which would challenge their victims to retaliate. That would foment hatreds and lead to further trouble, making infinitely more difficult the necessary adjustment to a hard, cold fact.

Individuals should refuse to join any group to keep Negroes out of white schools by intimidation or by encouraging lawless acts to that end.

The News is unalterably opposed to such methods and will fight them and their advocates as it fought the Ku Klux Klan after World War I.

Birmingham Voters Segregate Sports

By a vote of more than two to one, Birmingham citizens Tuesday vetoed their city council's move to permit mixed participation in sports by whites and Negroes.

The council's avowed purpose was to aid the Birmingham baseball club and to bring to Birmingham outstanding sports events, many of which include Negro contestants.

The council, in January, amended its segregation ordinance to permit such participation in all sports. The citizens objected so strongly that the amendment was revised in March to limit mixed participation to professional football and baseball. The revised amendment was submitted to the people by referendum.

Meanwhile, the United States Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation in public schools, a decision which may have influenced the voting Tuesday.

For two or three years Dallas fans have accepted mixed participation in football and baseball without any sense of contamination. They cheer as loudly for Willie Brown as they do for Wilcy Moore. There has been no evidence of social intermingling.

Dallas has yet to cope with the full impact of the Supreme Court's decision breaking down segregation in schools. It will pose tough problems in many residential areas with mixed populations.

A great many Southerners who would like to see Negroes get a square deal have feared that progress toward that end would be set back ten years by the decision the court has just made.

Now we are face to face with the fact. We must act patiently and intelligently until a fair and reasonable solution is found. Retaliatory measures will only intensify existing hatreds. Let's keep our heads.

NAACP Plans

Planning its national convention for Dallas, June 28-July 4, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peoples has a key theme. This, says Thurgood Marshall, the general counsel, will be the subject of segregation in fields other than education.

That is logical enough for NAACP. Nor is it a new agenda. To a degree, The News believes that NAACP is entitled to nonsegregation in fields other than education. The limits of that belief can be sharply defined. The Negro race is entitled to freedom from segregation by law, if it wants that. But it should be emphasized that in all of the fields in which segregation by law exists, its abolishment is not necessarily best for the Negro race nor is it obvious that even a majority of Negroes desire it. You see, segregation works both ways. It segregates the Negro against undesired association with the white as well as vice versa. If racial pride means anything to the Negro, as it should, segregation also tends to protect the purity of the racial strain.

But NAACP is not satisfied with the abolition of segregation by law. NAACP wants to abolish segregation in fact, which means that it desires forced association. The idea is indefensible on any ground except a faith in the brotherhood of man. That brotherhood is a teachable, but not enforceable, shibboleth. How could brotherhood be forced?

The point is that in private life, in private business, in social contact, both white and Negro are entitled to be secure in prejudices. NAACP fails to see or understand that. NAACP has worked hard and earnestly for what it believes, or claims, to be best for the Negro race. But it is far from certain that NAACP is a true friend of its own race in the true sense of what true friendship is.

New Problems Raised In Segregation Issue

Hopeful reformers believed that the closing of the War Between the States and the freeing of the slaves would solve the Negro problem. It solved the slavery problem, but raised innumerable problems in its place.

Today there are those hopefuls who think that the Supreme Court decision ending segregation in the schools will solve most of the problems left over from the War Between the States. But a multitude of new problems are rising. We have a long way to go.

The basic fact in the problem is this. Here in the South we have approximately 30,000,000 whites and 10,000,000 Negroes living side by side. There is a rule of human concept and conduct that runs like this: Wherever there is a minority race, there is a problem if the minority race is strong. We have had our Chinese-Japanese-Filipino race trouble on the Pacific Coast, our Latin-American trouble in the border states, our Negro trouble in the South.

No war, law or court decision can settle such a problem. It can be settled only on a man-to-man basis. It can be settled only through education and understanding. The Supreme Court itself took cognizance of this in its statement that time would be required for compliance with its edict. Gov. Allan Shivers and State Education Commissioner J. W. Edgar recognize the true nature of the problem in stating that it must be settled primarily on a local basis.

Police Power In Segregation

The first answer to the Federal Supreme Court's effort to force integration on the South by fiat is Louisiana's bold appeal to the police power of the state. Louisiana proposes to continue segregation. Louisiana says it will not segregate on the grounds of race. But by legislative act it has already provided that the police power can be used to segregate. The Legislature has also submitted a constitutional amendment to the same effect which asks similar authority from the people by other than representative vote.

The police power of a state is an inherent and necessary force which, over its long history, the Supreme Court has been strongly inclined to support. The court has been disinclined to buffet that power with other than a light hand. Because, obviously, Louisiana will segregate on the basis of race while using police power, the present court can hold that police power is a subterfuge. But, unfortunately, that is not true in entirety. That is, what is feared in the wake of the court holding is that deplorable extreme of violence which makes police power necessary.

It is no secret that municipal authorities in many places have special apprehension that bi-racial use of certain recreational facilities may have that result.

So on one hand the Supreme Court can hold that Louisiana uses theory to evade fact. On the other hand, Louisiana may have to remind the court that its own use of theory can not avoid the grim fact of violence.

Integration is no problem where racial groups are heavily out of proportion. Segregation owes its existence to the heavy proportion of Negroes to whites in the South.

There can be no question that both races are entitled to equal public facilities. No make-up of the Supreme Court since 1865 has held otherwise. It would be absurd, too, to contend that in all places at all times in the South equal facilities have been provided. And it may well be that the unfairness with which the "separate but equal facilities" program was applied has brought about the present situation.

The outcome in Louisiana depends upon the degree of public support accorded the legislative device. That can best be determined, of course, by the vote on the constitutional amendment.

Theoretically, federal police power through the use of armed forces can enforce a dictum of a federal court. But in actuality, you can no more indict a state than, as Burke said, you can indict a nation.

This Is Discrimination

In Delaware, it seems, Negroes have superior rights of agitation.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has for years been agitating for mingling of races in public schools.

The United States Supreme Court upheld the NAACP but deferred implementing its decision until some sensible formula could be worked out.

So there is no overriding federal law imposing racial mingling upon the schools. The state laws existing before the decision contain the only authority for operation of the schools.

Nevertheless, Negroes tried to move in on some segregated schools in Delaware. White pupils and their parents objected.

Bryant Bowles, president of the Association for the Advancement of White People, sought to address a mass meeting of these patrons at Milford, Del., Sunday. He was arrested on order of the Governor and charged with conspiring to violate the school laws of the state.

NAACP has conspired for years to break down the segregation laws of other states but none of its agitators have been arrested.

Until the Supreme Court is ready with its formula for compliance with its decision there should be free and full discussion of the issues and the probable consequences.

Otherwise the consequences may become more disagreeable to both sides.

DALLAS, TEXAS MORNING NEWS

How Open Is Open in War of Words?

. John Foster Dulles, setting the stage for a wake for the Geneva Conference, said Tuesday that this country may intervene with troops in Indochina under certain conditions. The condition is the crux of the question. We may fight, says the Secretary of State, "if the Chinese Reds move openly into Indochina."

Of course, Mr. Dulles can not commit this country to war. Only Congress can do that. Mr. Dulles is wise enough to make no hard-and-fast statement. He says that we may intervene, not that we will. And he predicates a condition that, judging by the past, the Reds are unlikely to supply.

The systematic Red method is not to move into a war "openly." The Chinese Reds have never accepted the belligerent label in Korea. From our standpoint we fought a full-scale war against the Red Chinese after the North Koreans had been practically eliminated. The myth of Red Chinese volunteers did not deceive us. These were T/O divisions and corps and armies to which we were opposed.

But we did accept the Red Chinese myth to one purpose, good for them, bad for us. We respected the complete integrity of Red Chinese soil. We gave them sanctuary beyond the Yalu. We initiated no measures that would have won the war, bombing bases in Red China, blockading Red China. Why? Because, we said, we did not wish to start a war with a nation with which we were actually at war.

Red Chinese intervention in Indochina may not be as "open" now as it was in Korea. So perhaps Dulles means that we will intervene if the Red Chinese go as far in Indochina as they did go in Korea. But the difference now is only in degree and that only because the Red Chinese have not had to pour as many troops into support of Viet Minh as were necessary to alter the situation around the thirty-eighth parallel.

Of course, Dulles said nothing new. Under the Truman Doctrine, a sound policy, we have declared long since that we will oppose Communism wherever it starts aggression. But the Truman Doctrine can not be called into being to redress a war balance so long as we put two interpretations on the word "aggression."

Whether it is wise to fight these wars may be challenged. But only outright commission to fight them will alter the Red method. We know in fact that the Red Chinese have intervened in Indochina. But so far we have agreed not to say so. How open is intervention? If we wait until Moscow or Red China has admitted intervention, there will never be an open one.

No Easy Path

In its integration-by-easy-stages decision on segregation, the United States Supreme Court recognized that the change involved could not be accomplished overnight. The court itself must have realized that, practically, nonsegregation between the races may never be factual in many places. Sen. Price Daniel was quoted in Washington on the heart of the matter when he said that racial concentration in areas would handle the problem in many cases.

The earnest group that for two years past has studied the subject for the Fund for the Advancement of Education (the "Ashmore Project") reached the same conclusion. In the segregated South, Negro schools are in Negro areas. In nonsegregated states, Negroes have voluntarily segregated their race to a large extent with the same result. There are many localities, especially rural, of course where small Negro populations draw away from this pattern.

The ultimate solution will not be as simple as the generality voiced by Price Daniel, nor as easy as Walter White and the NAACP envision it. Indeed, the latter may find that the Supreme Court decision is, as one thoughtful Negro educator has said in Dallas, the worst thing that has happened for the Negro race. It is tragically possible to see the numerous heartbreaks that may be in store for Negro children, channeled into contact with race prejudices that no legal fiat with verbiage can dismiss out of existence.

While man is a gregarious animal, he tends to flock more with his own variety of man than with different breeds of the human race. The tendency has not been bred out of him. It is unlikely to be knocked out of him by nine justices on a court bench. The NAACP is aware that in nonsegregation states, the amount of voluntary integration by either race is limited. The Negro needs, should be encouraged in, pride of race. Involuntary association is not a part in that justifiable pride.

Segregation and Governor's Race

In view of the United States Supreme Court decision, unanimous by the way, segregation in Texas schools is perhaps the oddest issue in the current Governor's race.

The opinion was a notable victory for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peoples. NAACP's legal cases were aimed primarily at the South, where segregation is a preferred status, unfortunately handicapped by a long period of unfair administration. Against this last the South has made notable strides in the past two decades. NAACP elected to ignore this in favor of compulsory integration which the opinion prescribes.

In the wake of the opinion by the court, Gov. Allan Shivers defined the position of his administration on three points. These included traditional preference for segregation, unwillingness to sacrifice public schooling (the plan toward which South Carolina and Georgia have tentatively turned), and insistence that the future must be worked out at the local level. (Even the United States Supreme Court has recognized the difficulty of making its ruling completely effective.)

Ralph Yarborough was notably silent on the subject, a fact which apparently made him a candidate preferred by the NAACP. (NAACP does not endorse, but its influence is, nevertheless, extended by support.)

It was not until Yarborough extended his campaign to East Texas, where a large Negro population makes the segregation issue important, that he elected to take a stand. He then announced that he favored segregation. This was comparatively late in the race and it seems to have had the odd effect of convincing East Texans in large numbers that he is for segregation and Negroes in large numbers in the urban centers that he is against it.

At least this last conclusion seems borne out by the results in the four largest essentially Negro precincts in Dallas in the first primary. These were the results for Yarborough against all three opponents: No. 165 (Colored Branch YMCA), 304 to 28; No. 226 (Greater Bethlehem Baptist Church, colored), 270 to 23; No. 309 (Colored School in South Dallas), 282 to 12; No. 404 (Colored School in West Dallas), 223 to 30.

As a practical matter, the only way in which the next Governor of Texas can deal with the segregation question is in legislative leadership, with the Legislature's course sharply restricted by the Supreme Court decision which becomes constitutional law.

Yarborough exhibited considerable political acumen in effectively playing both sides with only a belated commitment. Shivers from the start was forthright on his position. But forthrightness is seldom as effective as political sagacity. Forthrightness will be much more valuable in guiding Texas through the difficult problems presented by mandatory integration in which only a limited number of Texans believe, a condition which quite obviously the majority do not want.

Shivers Fights For Segregation

Gov. Allan Shivers has made his position clear on segregation in Texas public schools. He is against mixing whites and Negroes in schoolrooms. He is against the increasing tendency of the Federal Government to take jurisdiction in matters never intended in the Constitution.

Ralph Yarborough has hedged. Texas, particularly East Texas, where the Negro population is heavy, is worried over segregation. It wants more than a weak-kneed, evasive stand on the issue.

Shivers, more than any other individual, saved us the tidelands. Two years ago it looked dark. The Supreme Court had ruled against us, just as it has ruled against the South on segregation.

Successful against all odds in the tidelands fight, Shivers pledges to fight until the last breath in his body to preserve segregation and, with it, the right of Texas to run its affairs as it always has—and not as eastern radicals, the CIO and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peoples dictate.

Shivers can't be dictated to by these groups that would end all States' rights and cram down the throats of Texans everything that is un-Texan.

Shivers stood up and battled Adlai Stevenson and the left-wing element that backed him. And he whipped them. Now Shivers' opponent, Yarborough, asks Texas to turn its back on the Governor.

Yarborough, when confronted with a serious problem like mixing whites and Negro school children in schools, backs off from a clear-cut stand.

The reason is clear. The bulk of the Negro vote seems to favor Yarborough. If he comes out for keeping segregation, he will lose it. If he comes out for abolishing it, he can keep it.

Shivers, with more courage of the real Texas brand, has taken his stand squarely with Southern principles.

No Local Option For Segregation

Governor Shivers' views on leaving segregation in education to local solution are sound enough. But in effect the Governor is expressing an opinion, not a plan, as he would be the first to admit. The segregation ruling has left so many unanswered questions that the Supreme Court itself realized its dictum could not be put into immediate effect. As to what can be done in the way of voluntary segregation, one guess is as good as another.

It can be laid down that both white and Negro races in general will prefer segregation. The NAACP is not the Negro race, although it has long since self constituted itself as spokesman therefor. As voluntary segregation by residence is the rule in nonsegregated states, this means that with the strictest application of the new ruling, there will be many schools that are all Negro or all white.

But it is plain to the eye that this is a generality only. The borders of white and Negro communities can not be kept identical with school district areas. Under nonsegregation, there are always going to be fringe areas of mutual occupancy.

Whatever the doubt as to legal questions, it is quite clear that as far as public schooling is concerned, there can be no local option on segregation or nonsegregation. The only local option is the right to prefer private schooling.

Education is the sensitive field especially chosen by NAACP with the ultimate aim of breaking down the South's long-maintained social barrier between black and white. There are few, if any, other fields in which legal victory can have much effect. But in schooling, the effect is there. The schools provide auto matically a social contact in the forma tive years of the human being.

Personal Preferences

Under the present application of its Fair Employment Practice Code, the United States Government requires this: That there be no discrimination in employment on the part of corporations or persons enjoying government contracts.

In discussing the effects of the nonsegregation ruling of the United States Supreme Court, The News Tuesday stated that the government probably has a legal right to apply FEPC to public business. Yet that stand could be challenged and it would be interesting to know what argument the Attorney General could advance to meet it.

The News has long contended that government has no right to tell any private person with whom he shall associate or whom he may employ. NAACP says that is wrong because if you don't force whites to hire blacks, the Negro is doomed to the bucket and the mop. That is, of course, absurd. The Negro, like the white, is limited economically only by his own initiative, as thousands of able Negroes have proved. But even if the argument were true, there is still no reason why a private person should employ a Negro worker instead of a white worker or vice versa if he so desires.

If it is interference with a Negro citizen's rights to refuse to employ him on a government contract, it is equally interference with a white citizen's rights to refuse him the rights to exercise his own preferences in employing people.

So even applying FEPC to government contracts can be argued both ways. That is an illustration of the problem raised by the nonsegregation ruling in schools. These may not be legal questions thenceforward, but will be political and controversial and personal. Personal preferences can not be created or abolished by law.

By HERC FICKLEN
—Dallas News Staff Cartoonist.

"CROSS OVER THE BRIDGE"

RACE RELATIONS REPORT- 1954
CLIPPINGS REQUESTED

DALLAS, TEXAS MORNING NEWS

Legal Aspects For Segregation

The Department of Justice asks the Interstate Commerce Commission to ban separation of white and Negro passengers on southern railroads. Southerners might as well face the fact that separation of races by law was generally nullified in the Supreme Court ruling against separation in public schools. This ruling implied, at least, that separation was not constitutional where tax money was involved, as in public schools, and it is not far to the further implication that separation is not constitutional in quasi-public operations under strict government management. (The court has already ruled against separation on dining cars.)

Dallas Morning News 10/11/54

Southern people who do not believe in racial integration should work out a retreat from legal separation by as common-sense a procedure as possible. The Supreme Court specifically provided for at least a start in this direction.

After all, "segregation" of races throughout the world is largely by individual choice and not by law. The Supreme Court Justices were undoubtedly mindful of this (in the backs of their heads, at least) in making the ruling on public school separation. A ruling in favor of separation with equal facilities would have brought world-wide reverberation even though it had tracked previous Supreme Court rulings. Certainly, it would have given Soviet agitators an opportunity for propaganda against the United States among the world's colored races.

But, if separation by law is unconstitutional, then integration by law is unconstitutional. Yet there is strong sentiment for the application of the fair-employment-practice principle by law. The court ruling for abandonment of legal separation has shocked southern whites, yet its implications are not nearly as great as might appear on the surface. A follow-through of enforced integration in private employment and in other strictly private affairs would bring about a revolutionary situation and one strictly in defiance of any fair interpretation of the Constitution.

RACE RELATIONS REPORT- 1954
CLIPPINGS REQUESTED

DES MOINES, IOWA REGISTER

Erasing a Black Mark Of U. S. Democracy.

The United States Supreme Court has begun the erasure of one of American democracy's blackest marks with its ruling that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional. Register

It has taken a long time. But finally America's basic law on public education has been brought into line with the ringing spirit of freedom and equality in the Declaration of Independence. Happily, the decision of the Court was unanimous. 1954

"In these days (Chief Justice Warren wrote for the Court), it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education.

"Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms." Dec. 5-18-54

For a good many years, this principle that public education is a right which accrues to every American regardless of race has been accepted. But until now, many states have followed the theory that "separate but equal" school facilities discharged this obligation of the state. This was based on a Supreme Court decision in 1896. Morris

The heart of the new decision is its reversal of this doctrine of what constitutes equality in education.

The Warren decision states that segregation of students in separate buildings, solely on the basis of race, denies equal educational opportunity to Negroes in America today—even if the physical facilities are equal. He cited earlier decisions of the Court on segregation in universities and said the principle applied with "added force" in elementary and high schools. He fully supported the finding of a federal court in Kansas which said segregation had a "detrimental effect on colored children".

★ ★ ★

A ruling by the Supreme Court does not and cannot change the fact of segregated schools in a day—or in a year. The Court has postponed formulation of the specific decrees that will be necessary to enforce the new interpretation of the Constitution. It will hear further arguments this fall on how and when to end segregation in schools.

Let no one minimize the task that lies ahead for Southern communities.

This is a fundamental change in a way of life. Some states may even go so far as to carry out the threat of Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina to close up the public schools, though we doubt it. Public education is too much a part of the American fabric to be discarded now, as the Supreme Court recognizes in calling it a necessity for success in life. The adjustments in the South will be severe ones, no matter what course they take. We who have always lived with unsegregated schools should be sympathetic rather than critical if Southern habits are not remade over night.

But let no one maximize the difficulties involved in ending segregation, either.

Segregation has been stopped in a number of localities, smoothly and without incident. The South has made tremendous progress toward equality in jobs, equality in public conveyances, equality in theaters and elsewhere. There is every reason to believe that the adjustment to equality in schools will be made in the same pattern.

The Supreme Court decision will ease America's conscience. The stinging cry of "hypocrite" from colored folks all over the world has been heard in Des Moines and in Mobile. But America's conscience will not be cleared until her practice measures up to the noble words of the Court's decision.

Des Moines Tribune

"Separate But Equal"?

For more than 20 years, Negro boys have attended a separate camping session at the Young Men's Christian Association camp near Boone. Until recent years, they did so because they had to. Today, the pattern of segregation is not imposed, but continues all the same.

The present camping session is the "Crocker Street period" at the "Y" camp. Eighty-odd boys from the all-colored Crocker Street Y. M. C. A. are enjoying the facilities of the camp, which has a capacity of around 150. The only whites at the camp are leaders and counselors. One of the counselors is an Ethiopian (not an Iowa) Negro.

The "Y" leaders say the Negro boys like it this way, that they live and play together and thus prefer to go to camp together, as any group of boys would. That is why, the officials say, no Negroes attended any of the five earlier sessions this year, even though they were invited to do so.

Perhaps the Negro boys do want to go to camp together, although the reasons are surely more complex than might appear on the surface. But we wonder whether the Y. M. C. A., an organization which no one could accuse of conscious race prejudice, does not have a responsibility to the community to break up this pattern of segregation. The Young Women's Christian Association did it several years ago for their camp. The efforts of the Y. M. C. A. thus far have been half-hearted, at best.

The "Y" should not, of course, coerce any boy into going to camp when he does not want to go. But neither should it in effect perpetuate an undesirable practice through inaction. "Separate but equal" schools are not possible, the Supreme Court has found. That applies also, we should say, to the Young Men's Christian Association.

Byrnes and Segregation

We can't help but contrast the reaction of Washington, D. C., officials with that of Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina to the Supreme Court's segregation ruling.

Byrnes has told South Carolina school officials to forget about school integration for the academic year 1954-55. If Negroes try to enter white schools, Byrnes said trustees "should deny admission . . . unless or until they are ordered by the court to admit them."

The governor apparently is basing his advice on the grounds that the Supreme Court still hasn't issued formal decrees to implement its ruling. It has set October as the date to hear arguments on ways and means of abolishing segregation.

Washington officials swung into action the day following the court's decision. The district commissioners met promptly with President Eisenhower and then with the local board of education. They were advised by corporation counsel there was no need to wait for further Supreme Court action, there being ample authority to set up an integrated school system.

A week later the superintendent of schools submitted a detailed plan for ending segregation. It called for transferring 2,500 Negro pupils to 18 underfilled white schools by next September. It also proposed changing school boundaries and opening two teachers colleges on a non-segregated basis by the fall. The plan called for having complete de-segregation by 1955. The board of education itself adopted a five-point declaration of policy, pledging elimination of all distinctions between the races —such as to school records and pupil and faculty assignments.

We had no illusions that southern leaders such as James Byrnes would rush into democratizing their school systems. At the same time we find it rather disheartening to have a former Supreme Court justice counseling his school officials to ignore the court decision altogether. Governor Byrnes would do well to study the actions in the District of Columbia for a lesson in respect to the spirit of the laws.

Des Moines Tribune

De-Segregation Moves Ahead Slowly

A few school districts in a few southern states are going ahead on their own with school desegregation and are not waiting for the Supreme Court to hand down the decrees implementing its May 17 decision that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

In all cases of de-segregation so far reported, the change has been smooth. In Hobbs, N. M., a fundamentalist preacher predicted violence and indirectly tried to stir a little of it up. There was no violence. In Oklahoma's Catholic schools, in West Virginia, in Arkansas, in St. Louis, Mo., Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Md., and elsewhere the barriers of segregation are falling almost soundlessly.

The fact remains, however, that the places where integration has occurred are for the most part marginal areas, where Negroes are few and where segregation was crumbling even before the Supreme Court spoke.

Ten states in the deep South have held back, most of them quietly waiting for the implementing decrees. In others—Georgia, Mississippi, Texas, South Carolina, Louisiana, Virginia—public officials, at least, are defiant. Some of these die-hard states plan to boycott the Supreme Court hearings on how the decision will be put into effect. This they may regret. And certainly they will not be justified in complaining of an invasion of states' rights if they refuse to cooperate.

De-segregation can be held off a long time in the South by the manipulation of school district boundaries, by enforcing segregated housing patterns, and in extreme cases by intimidation. In the deep South, where in some localities Negroes outnumber whites, ingenious schemes for evading the will of the Supreme Court may be devised. One such scheme is the Mississippi plan, given preliminary approval Wednesday by the Mississippi house of representatives, to abolish public schools and replace them with private schools. This would require amendment of the state constitution.

Whether statements such as those of Governor Shivers of Texas ("Segregation will continue as long as I am governor") or the even-more inflammatory announcements from racial extremists such as Governor Talmadge of Georgia really represent the opinion of the deep South is questionable. There should be understanding of the deep fears and of the special problems of the people in the deep South, but out and out defiance of the Supreme Court is unthinkable. The real test will come when the Supreme Court issues the decrees implementing its May decision.

Meanwhile, there is absolutely no excuse for integration to be stalled in such states as Kansas, Oklahoma, and Missouri, indeed in any of the so-called border states. In the areas where the issue has been met squarely, there has been no trouble, no violence, no serious difficulty. The longer de-segregation is put off, the more difficult it will be.

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS
AND SENTINEL
THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY
J. W. DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W. GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

Editorial, Page Six

MONDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1954

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale, The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade). Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 9744.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

"Seek Ye the Truth — and the Truth Shall Make You Free"

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Common Sense, Plain Everday Logic Must Prevail

Daily News p. 6

FLORIDA'S Attorney General, Richard W. Ervin, has done his state and the nation a worthwhile service in putting before the United States Supreme Court a 243-page brief on the school desegregation problem which in essence calls for more time to work out the problems associated with desegregation and a more or less local determination of the grave issues involved.

Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Ervin's brief, which was prepared after months of careful study and consultation with leading citizens all throughout this state, points out that a hasty attempt by the Supreme Court to enforce its ruling of last May 17 outlawing segregation in the public schools "will threaten the very existence of Florida's public school system."

"There is," Ervin wrote, "some reason to believe that segregated schools can be ended in Florida in an equitable manner without destroying the school system itself. Mon. 10-4-54

"But there is no reason to believe," Ervin continued, "that this can be accomplished hurriedly or through legal coercion of school officials who would be caught in the impossible dilemma of confronting on one hand the irresistible force of a judicial edict which must be obeyed and on the other hand the immovable object of public opinion which cannot be altered.

"The only hope for a solution," the Attorney General then pointed out, "is for this court [the U. S. Supreme Court] to restrain the use of coercive measures where necessary until the hard core of public opinion has softened to the extent that there can be at least some measure of acceptance on the part of the majority of the people."

ERVIN then went on to recommend some specific proposals which the Supreme Court could put into effect to make the desegregation less explosive. He suggested that the Court send back to the court of origin suits to gain admittance to segregated schools and allow the lower court to decide upon the basis of local conditions—including sociological and psychological factors—when the races can be integrated in classrooms.

These lower courts, which in most instances would be federal courts, should be vested with broad discretionary powers, Ervin said, to determine:

Broad Powers

"1. What should be a reasonable time for transition in any given case.

"2. Whether or not specific plans for compliance with the court's general directive prepared by responsible local school authorities measure up to the broad tests of good faith."

Under this procedure lower courts could hold hearings and determine on the basis of local conditions whether the petitions should be granted keeping in mind whether the applications for admittance were filed in good faith and whether the public evidenced such a strong degree of sincere opposition and sustained hostility as to disrupt the school system if the application were granted.

After the court arrived at its determination it would then have three choices of action:

1. Order the application for admission to the school in question granted immediately if it had been determined the petition was made in good faith and no reasonable grounds for delay existed.

2. Dismiss the petition if it appeared it was not made in good faith and well founded in law as interpreted in the May 17 decision.

3. Order the school authorities to hold the application in abeyance for a reasonable period of time to allow for further adjustment to a single school system if necessary with directions to school authorities to proceed to overcome factors which prevent immediate approval.

ERVIN'S suggestions make a lot of sense and if they are heeded by the Supreme Court they will greatly lessen the prospects of serious trouble arising from this desegregation issue. It is clearly evident now from the troubles which have arisen in areas where desegregation has been pushed too fast that the majority of people in hitherto segregated areas won't meekly submit to having this radical social change rammed down their throats.

These "jumping the gun" attempts at desegregation only serving to build up tension to the point where no reasonable solution to this whole problem can be worked out. It is easy enough for the Supreme Court to say that segregation is unconstitutional and must be eliminated. Enforcing that proclamation, however, is another matter and that's where common sense and plain every day logic must prevail if, as our own Attorney General points out, "the very existence of our public school system" is to be protected.

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY

J. W. DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W. GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1954

Editorial, Page Six

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade). Dial Hollywood 2-1543.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 9744.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

"Seek Ye the Truth — and the Truth Shall Make You Free"

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

South Ponders Effect of Court Outlawing Segregation in Schools

Daily News

THROUGHOUT the entire length and breadth of the South today there are worried brows as leaders of both the White and Colored races ponder the effects of Monday's long-expected Supreme Court decision striking down the principle of segregation in our public school systems. P. 6 Tues. 5-18-54

Fortunately, there is no cause for hysteria or spur of the moment conclusions as to what must be done as the high tribunal, realizing the tremendous repercussions its decision is bound to have, postponed issuing any order putting its decision into effect until more arguments could be heard from both sides this fall.

Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

Nevertheless, it must now be recognized in every southern state that what has long been feared has now come to pass and that some far-reaching and vitally important changes are going to have to be made.

At least three southern states have already indicated the course they would follow if the Supreme Court abolished segregation in their public schools. Leaders of these states, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia, have flatly declared they would close the public schools rather than permit them to be operated with Negro and White pupils in the same classrooms.

Three States Will Close Public Schools

Whether this was just talk or whether it was policy that will now be implemented by action designed to turn the public schools in these states over to private interests remains to be seen, but certainly all of this indicates the seriousness with which virtually all of the southern states regard this problem.

Here in Florida it is much too early to say what the eventual outcome might be despite the fact that some legislators have already voiced a demand for a special session of the Legislature to consider appropriate action. Our state constitution is one of those which specifically provides for segregation in the public school system, but school leaders and top state officials have already indicated they want to make a full study of the entire situation before making any hasty comments.

ALMOST all of these officials who could be reached for comment shortly after Monday's ruling became known pointed out that sober and careful thinking would be necessary and that since no application of the decision was planned until some months hence there would be no immediate disruption of the school system.

Right here in our own county, O. K. Phillips, county school superintendent, was quick to point out that a way perhaps could be found to bypass any trouble or any future difficulties in this area. Since we now have a law on the books which says that students must attend the schools closest to their homes, and since almost all of our Colored schools have been built with the idea of serving only Negro areas, Broward County can apparently maintain a segregated system without running afoul of the Supreme Court decision, Phillips declared.

This is dependent, however, upon the court's upholding the law as to children attending the school nearest their home. If this law should be challenged and upset then there is no question but that under this Supreme Court ruling neither the state nor the individual counties would have the right to separate Negro and White pupils in different schools.

Counties, States Can't Change Law

With the reasoning behind the Supreme Court decision there can be little quarrel as even in the South there is widespread acceptance of the argument that all children, regardless of their color, deserve the same educational opportunities. But whether or not equal opportunities can be extended to all children under a segregated system was the key issue which the Supreme Court had to decide.

SOUTHERN spokesmen have long argued that "equal but separate" school facilities met the responsibility of providing all children with the same educational opportunities. But the Supreme Court has now declared that "in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place because it inherently denotes inferiority and has a tendency to retard the education and mental development of Negro children wherever it has the sanction of law.

Whether southerners agree with the Supreme Court justices or not is a moot question because there is no appeal from their decision and no likelihood of any change. As Sen. Spessard Holland, Florida's senior senator said yesterday, "This is a new law, make no mistake about it, and it appears final."

Sen. Holland, like others, appealed for moderation in accepting the Supreme Court verdict, but he represented the feelings of the vast majority of southerners when he said the decision will produce a "great many disappointed people, both White and Colored."

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY
J. W. DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W. GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

Editorial, Page Two

SUNDAY, JUNE 20, 1954

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale, The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade). Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 8911.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

"Seek Ye the Truth — and the Truth Shall Make You Free".

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Crisis Must Be Met

STATEMENTS and news stories this past week make it abundantly clear that time is quickly running out on plans to solve the complicated Negro beach situation in this area.

Up to this past week it was hoped that a crisis could be staved off at least until freeholders in the county could go back to the polls this fall and vote again on a proposed bond issue which would give the Negroes their own beach area south of Port Everglades.

But now it appears the crisis will have to be met before that time as the county has been warned that unless a beach area is made available to the Negro population before July 4th it will be impossible to prevent impatient Negro elements from attempting to make mass use of presently segregated public beach areas.

This warning may or may not have been timed to spur the county commission into greater effort to obtain a lease on property which could be used this summer as a Negro beach site. But whether it was so timed or not, it is already apparent that if present efforts to lease such a site do not meet with success the county commission faces little alternative but to take drastic measures to obtain such a site as quickly as possible.

The cost of obtaining such a site has now become relatively unimportant. Whether it is a half-million, a million or two million dollars it would still be trivial compared to the losses in real estate values that would accrue here if we were forced to abandon our present policy of keeping our public beaches on a segregated basis.

There's no sense in trying to say that the Negroes here would never try to force their way onto our public beaches. We'll agree that the vast majority of our Negro population has no liking or any inclination to resort to this type of approach to their problem. But as is true in any population group there are always a certain number of agitators and firebrands who aren't content with trying to solve problems the sensible way. And since our Negro population here in Broward County has its share of those people, and since radical elements in the North are constantly seeking to embolden these people into keeping agitation going, it is silly to assume that some attempt won't be made to carry out the warning given to the county commission this past week.

Agitators, Firebrands

IN FACT, evidence has already been forthcoming that some don't even intend to wait until July 4th to push the issue. At several places in Broward County small groups of Negroes have already appeared on the public beaches with no untoward results and these small groups will unquestionably be followed up by larger gatherings.

That's when trouble may loom and that's why the county commission should lose no time in coming to grips with this problem on a realistic basis. If we can get a Negro beach there will be no excuse for them not to use their own facility. At the same time, since there have been no court rulings outlawing segregation on the public beaches in the South, the principle of equal but separate facilities can still be upheld and enforced until there is a court ruling handed down.

Without a Negro beach, howeve there is little chance of finding a solution to this c. dical problem. That's the basic reason such a strong effort was made last month to win freeholder approval of the Negro beach bond issue at the polls. Property owners in Broward County were warned then that this issue had to be resolved and resolved quickly, but not enough of them bothered to go to the polls to carry the proposed bond issue.

Property owners will get another opportunity to approve this bond issue at the polls next fall. But unless there is some action by the county commission soon to provide the Negroes with a temporary beach this summer there may be no point to even having a bond issue referendum in the fall as in the meantime the Negroes may well have established their claim to use all of our public beaches.

THIS is not an idle threat. It is a crisis that looms dead ahead and which must be met by positive rather than negative thinking. We have fooled around on this Negro beach question for a long time always hoping that in the end the problem might just up and disappear. But it hasn't disappeared. It has grown more acute and now we have no choice but to provide the Negroes with their own beach or else face the fact that segregation on our public beaches can no longer be practiced or enforced.

If segregation ends on our public beaches our future as a high-class tourist center will go a glimmering, too. And while the moralists can argue all they want to as to why segregation should be abolished their arguments can't get around the fact that this area's economy is almost entirely dependent upon the maintenance of a strong tourist trade and tourists aren't going to react favorably to any policy of comingling of the races on our public

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY

J. W DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W. GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

Editorial, Page Six

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1954

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale, The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade). Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 5911.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Beach Situation Well Handled By All Concerned

P. G. Daily News 7-7-54

LEADERS of both the White and Negro races in Broward County can breathe a little bit easier today as the Fourth of July holidays passed with no outbreak of trouble over the beach situation.

For a while it appeared that there was no way to avert what could have been a very nasty conflict. But at the last moment county authorities were able to secure use of the Kline tract as a Negro beach over the holidays and this move apparently convinced Negro elements that county officials were doing all they possibly could to obtain a beach site, and that it wouldn't help their cause to create a furor over use of the public beach areas.

Ft. Lauderdale

The surprising development in this whole controversy was the slim number of Negroes who actually used the Kline tract after county officials went all out to make it available to them. Despite the fact that the county chartered three boats on the Fourth of July to transport Negroes from the Port to the beach site only a few hundred Negroes made use of the facilities and many of these stayed but a short time.

Some of the reluctance could have stemmed from the fact that there was no time to put the Kline tract in proper shape. Up to the time the county secured permission to use this area for a Negro beach for the holiday it had only been used by occasional fishermen and thus accumulated seaweed and undergrowth were elements that had to be put up with.

Nevertheless, the beach area was in no worse shape than areas the Negroes have been using up to this year and thus, with free transportation provided, it was rather surprising that more Negroes didn't use the facilities they have been demanding for a long while.

THIS could indicate that the rank and file among the Negro population isn't as interested in this Negro beach proposition as some of the noisier elements in their midst have been claiming. This, in turn, can only lead to the speculation that this whole issue is being pushed as a question of principle rather than a question of acute need.

This is something which is certainly going to give county officials food for thought. Quite naturally the county would be justified in questioning the expenditure of approximately $2,500,000 if after spending that amount of money only a few hundred Negroes would be interested in actually using the facilities that had been developed. When one considers that some 22,000 people used the public beaches over the holidays in Ft. Lauderdale alone while only 400 Negroes took advantage of the opportunity to enjoy their own beach it becomes obvious that beach interest on the part of the Negro population may not be as intense as some have been claiming.

This doesn't mean we don't think the Negroes are entitled to have their own beach. We still think they should have a beach of their own and that county officials should proceed post haste with plans for obtaining one for them. But we also think that there's been a lot more smoke than fire over the issue and that the time has now come to sit down and settle this problem without any more threats and hot-headed by-play. Common sense and patience will get the Negroes of Broward County the beach they say they want and we're glad to see that they didn't choose some other method to enforce their demands over the holidays.

* * *

Meeting Costs Of Illness

THOSE who argue that the cost of medical care is a very serious problem to a large percentage of the American people, and that the only solution is some kind of federal intervention whereby the government will assume much of the financial burden, overlook or ignore the progress that has been made by the voluntary health and accident insurance systems.

Their growth has been literally phenomenal. In 1941 only 16,000,000 people were thus protected against hospital and medical expense; now some 100,000,000 have protection. In a recent year benefit payments exceeded $2,000,000,000, a figure which does not include the large sums paid under sick leave programs, union-administered plans and employe mutual benefit associations.

A striking recent development is found in a form of insurance which covers major illnesses of long duration and heavy cost. This is very new — yet as of a late date, 1,000,000 people had the coverage and the number is growing very rapidly. The policies are written on a "deductible" basis, as in automobile collision insurance, and their cost is moderate in view of the all-inclusive coverage provided.

It is true, of course, that there is a small percentage of indigent families which can't afford any form of protection. But certainly public assistance can be given them without subjecting all the rest of us to politically-dominated medicine.

Finally, it is being urged that families hit with unusually large medical expenses be allowed reasonable income tax deductions, which is not the case now, and that health insurance premiums be considered a medical expense for tax purposes. That would go a long way toward solving the cost problems that still exist.

RACE RELATIONS REPORT

EDUCATION 1954

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY
J. W. DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W. GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1954

Editorial, Page Six

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale, The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade) Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 9744.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

"Seek Ye the Truth —
and the Truth Shall Make You Free"

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Supreme Court Segregation Ruling Will Bring About Drastic Changes In South's Living Pattern

Daily News

WHILE many people have been under the impression that last week's Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in our public schools would not result in any immediate repercussions it is already evident that drastic changes in the South's living pattern are on the way and coming much faster than was earlier assumed.

Sun. 5-23-54

Monday, for instance, the U. S. Supreme Court handed down some more decisions all based on segregation issues. It ordered the Florida Supreme Court to reconsider its refusal to order four Negroes admitted at once to the University of Florida and in other actions paved the way for Negroes to be admitted to publicly-supported theaters, golf courses and housing projects in other parts of the South.

The significance of these decisions cannot be ignored. They mean clear and unequivocally that the "separate but equal" facilities fight has been lost and that from here on out no tax-supported facility can operate on a segregated basis.

P. 6

The implications in that are almost too obvious to bring out. There was no question but that after winning their school segregation fight Negro leaders would immediately begin pressing for the abolition of segregation at other levels. And now that decisions favorable to them have been issued on some of these other levels it is now crystal clear that some won't be content to stop until there's nothing left to attack.

Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

THIS is a process which is certain to stir up trouble in the South. Custom and tradition cannot be changed overnight and we greatly fear that this inordinate rush to change the pattern of living that the South has maintained all these years isn't going to react to anyone's benefit.

There's no point to speaking in whispers about this segregation business. It's here with us now and those who think that what's ahead can be avoided by hiding our heads in the sand and refusing to face realities are only kidding themselves.

Future Of Broward's Top Industry Uncertain

One major uncertainty we face right here in Broward County is the effect these rulings will have on our major industry — the tourist business. Will we, once all of our tax-supported entertainment and recreational facilities drop the bars against segregation, play host to the vast numbers of tourists we now get? Will our big hotels and apartment houses fronting on our public beach become white elephants when the color line comes off Ft. Lauderdale's miles of public, tax-supported beach? And what of Bahia-Mar? What is its future on a non-segregated basis? Will it continue to draw the plush yacht trade it now gets? You can judge for yourself but that answer is obvious enough.

something that is already being considered and these most recent Supreme Court decisions will spur it along.

The South, to our mind, was doing an excellent job of meeting its racial problem in its own way. But that way has now been ordered out the window and the changeover isn't going to be quite as easy, quite as unemotional or quite as trouble-free as some of our northern neighbors seem to think.

What will inevitably happen throughout the whole South under this new setup is easy to predict. Public, tax-supported facilities will tend to disappear and in their place will be private facilities which as yet haven't been affected by the Supreme Court declarations.

THAT'S the only economic answer there is to some of the problems that have now been dumped in our laps. Millions upon millions of dollars have been invested right here in Broward County alone which are absolutely dependent upon the maintenance of a segregated social order. Are these investments to go by the boards because the U. S. Supreme Court has now said that there can be no segregation where public monies or public properties are involved? We don't think so, and if private ownership of what are now public facilities is the only answer then we think there will be a strong surge all through the Southland toward this remedy.

We don't say this would be a good trend. But it is

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY

J. W DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1954

Editorial, Page Eight

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale, The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade). Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 5911.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier: 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Most Tragic Note of Election Was Failure of Bond Referendum

Daily News
Wed. 5-5-54

IN ASSESSING the results of Tuesday's balloting it can be said today without fear of contradiction that the most disappointing and maybe even tragic note was the failure of the Negro beach bond issue to attract enough votes to be considered a legal expression of the freeholders' wishes.

Fort Lauderdale

As was expected the freeholders who did participate in this bond referendum favored the proposal by an overwhelming majority. But since only 16,812 freeholders cast ballots this was not enough to meet the required 50 per cent plus one turnout that all ad valorem bond issues must obtain to be valid, and thus the issue went by the boards.

Fort Lauderdale Sun

It is quite possible, even probable, that had the freeholders paid closer attention to where the bond issue question was located on the voting machines it might have passed. But as it was many freeholders became confused and after voting on the individual candidates forgot to look for the bond issue question up in the right hand corner of the machine. Some remembered after they had finished voting that they had forgotten to vote on this issue, but then it was too late and their forgetfulness did more harm than if they had voted against the bonds.

IT WAS realized almost from the start by some that the position given to bond issue questions on our voting machines would make it extremely difficult to get approval of this issue and there was at least one attempt made to have the question decided by paper ballots which would be handed to freeholders. But this wasn't done and while an intensive campaign was conducted to acquaint freeholders with the necessity for going to the polls and where to look for the bond issue question, not enough of them apparently were convinced this was an important enough issue to demand the extra effort this would take.

What will happen now is anybody's guess. It is a foregone conclusion that another attempt will be made to win freeholder approval for this project, but just when that will be scheduled must await a further study of yesterday's voting pattern and what steps must be taken to assure better success the next time.

In the meantime we can only hope that our Negro leaders will realize a sincere attempt was made to put this project over the top and that it failed, not because those who voted didn't approve it, but only because not enough voters took part in the referendum. It is possible that a few firebrands may say there's no point to waiting any longer for their own beach but we think these will be in the minority and it's our belief thoughtful Negroes will understand that little is to be gained by trying to force an issue when by being patient a little longer a solution to this problem will unquestionably be forthcoming.

AS TO the other results in Tuesday's balloting probably the major surprise was the victory of Ted Cabot over John S. Burwell in the hotly contested State Senate race. Burwell, a veteran of 14 years experience in the Legislature was expected by most observers to win a close victory, but Cabot, who compiled an impressive record here as Clerk of the Circuit Court for nine years, upset Burwell and now will face County Commissioner Herbert Burke, the Republican candidate, in the general election this coming November. Regardless of who wins this race it now means Broward County will have two newcomers in its legislative delegation at the 1955 session as Burwell gave up a chance to retain his House seat to run for the Senate and Sen. George Leaird chose to contest the Circuit Judge's race instead of trying to retain his Senate post.

In the gubernatorial contest here in the county the balloting went pretty close to what observers expected with LeRoy Collins being top man, Acting Governor Charley Johns a good second and Brailey Odham a lagging third. Over the state as a whole, however, Governor Johns piled up a big enough vote to give him a good margin over Collins and these two will now go into the second primary on May 25 with the big question mark being which of the two the Odham supporters will swing over to. Most observers already are saying that Collins will get the bulk of the Odham vote, but past experience has proven anything can happen in a second primary and this one is apt to be a bitter one right down to the wire.

AS TO the Circuit Judge race here perhaps the big surprise was the failure of State Sen. Leaird to qualify for the runoff election. The top man in this race was County Solicitor Otis Farrington, as expected, but Municipal Judge Jake Watson of Hollywood surprised a good many experts by running a good second to Farrington and these two will now enter the May 25 runoff.

Another runoff will also take place in the race for the State House of Representatives post. It was freely predicted that the two top candidates in this race would be Jack Musselman and Ted Galatis and these two came through as expected.

Others who won predicted victories were County Commissioner Tony Salvino who beat Felix Williams handily to retain his seat on the county board and Circuit Court Clerk Frank Marks who bested Gene Bond by a comfortable margin to keep his post. County Commissioner Vivian Saxon, while high man in his district failed to win a clear majority and thus a runoff will be necessary between him and Bruce Blount to determine the ultimate winner.

In the school board races Wesley Parrish and John O. Calvin were the victors in Districts One and Three but Robert Ferris, the top man in District Five and Clarence C. Edewaard, the second place candidate, will also have to engage in a runoff battle.

The total vote here, while better than some had predicted, wasn't anything to brag about, and it once again demonstrates that a lot of people still don't care very much about using the ballot box and that's not a very healthy condition in any country that's supposed to take pride in its democratic spirit.

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY

J. W. DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W. GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

Editorial, Page Four

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1954

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdale, The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of all the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade). Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 6911.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL

One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Affliction is a sort of moral gymnasium in which the disciples of Christ are trained to robust exercise, hardy exertion, and severe conflict. — Hannah More.

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

'A Handful of Patience Is Worth More Than a Bushel of Brains'

Fort Lauderdale News, Fri. 8-20-54

NEGRO leaders, who are trying to "jump the gun" and stuff desegregation down the throats of Florida citizens even though this state is not involved in the present Supreme Court deliberations on the issue, ought to heed an old Dutch proverb which is more than a little bit pertinent to the whole question of smoothing out relations between the White and Negro races.

P. 4

The Dutch have a saying that "a handful of patience is worth more than a bushel of brains" and in view of the attempts now being made in Miami and elsewhere in the state to force this desegregation issue to a quick head we can think of no better counsel to give Negro leaders than this old Dutch proverb.

We don't doubt for a minute that from the ranks of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People 'a bushel of brains" can be summoned up to launch an immediate all-out assault on Florida's present segregation laws. But if that should happen we also don't doubt for a single moment that the repercussions from such a policy would be disastrous to the hopes of more patient members of the Negro race for an ultimate peaceful solution to this entire problem.

As it stands today individual county school boards in this state have absolutely no choice on this segregation issue. Our state Constitution makes segregation mandatory in our public school system and short of a federal court decision setting aside this segregation clause in our state Constitution, county and state school officials must abide by the law.

IT MAKES no difference whatsoever in this state that the United States Supreme Court has handed down a decision terming segregation of the races unconstitutional. This decision affects only those states which were directly involved in the Supreme Court case and Florida didn't happen to be one of those states.

Even in the states directly involved there is still considerable confusion as to exactly how the Supreme Court intends to enforce its anti-segregation ruling, and this question won't even be argued until long after the fall school term gets under way.

Here again Florida only enters the picture as a bystander whose views on the subject have been sought. Even granting the point that the Supreme Court will lose little time in laying down the principles of how its ruling will be carried out, the fact remains that Florida won't be subject to any Supreme Court declarations until it is made an official party to a suit testing this state's own laws.

Florida Not Subjected

That being so, it is difficult for us to understand what the Miami NAACP leaders hope to accomplish by trying to force Dade County school authorities to abandon segregation in Miami schools this fall. If they have kept abreast of what has been going on in this segregation dispute they know full well that there isn't going to be any big rush in this state to abandon a custom of many years' standing just because a few, highly impatient zealots want to rebuild the world overnight.

We are in full agreement with a survey conducted by state authorities recently which shows that desegregation in our public school system must be handled on a slow and cautious basis. With some 30 per cent of "White leaders" even now on record as being in violent disagreement with the Supreme Court's stand and taking a position of actively opposing or refusing to co-operate with any move to end segregation, it is perfectly obvious that only trouble, and serious trouble, could come from any attempt to force desegregation at an early date.

throats by northern agitators who seem more interested in creating trouble than averting it.

Surely patience is a virtue that is sorely needed in this controversy as without it we greatly fear more harm than good will evolve from the Supreme Court's attempt to adjudicate a problem which from the South's standpoint might better have been left strictly alone.

FEW want to see violence erupt over this issue. Few want to see the legislature seriously consider the abandonment of the public school system in this state. But if segregation is handled on a "force" or "threat" basis both of those grim prospects will loom dead ahead.

That's why we think this old Dutch proverb should be heeded by the people behind this move to desegregate Florida schools long before there is any necessity or even any good reason to do so. This certainly seems to be a case where "a handful of patience is worth more than a bushel of brains" and if the "brains" behind this NAACP campaign can't understand what they are doing to their own race by their "jumping the gun" tactics it is time some of their more patient Negro brethren explained the facts of southern life to them.

Eventually the time may come when the bulk of Florida's citizens will accept desegregation of their own free will and volition. But the day isn't here yet, and they won't sit idly by and have it stuffed down their

FORT LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS

AND SENTINEL

THE GORE PUBLISHING COMPANY
J. W DICKEY, President-Publisher
JACK W GORE, Editor and Co-Publisher
BILL STARR, Advertising Manager

Editorial, Page Six

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1954

Published every week-day afternoon and Sunday morning at Ft. Lauderdal The News Building, 320 SE First Ave.

Classified Department — Dial 3-5425
All Other Departments — Dial 2-3711

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for publication of al the local news printed in this newspaper as well as all AP news dispatches.

All rights of publication of special dispatches are also reserved.

DAILY NEWS Hollywood Bureau, 1926 Hollywood Blvd. (Morse Arcade) Dial Hollywood 2-1548.

DAILY NEWS Pompano Beach Bureau, 347 NE First St. Dial Pompano Beach 8911.

FT. LAUDERDALE DAILY NEWS is a member of Audit Bureau of Circulation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: BY CARRIER OR MAIL
One month $1.30; two months $2.60; three months $3.90; six months $7.80; one year $15.60.
By carrier, 30c weekly.
Postal regulations require that all subscriptions be paid in advance.

Entered as Second Class Matter, March 11, 1911, at the Post Office at Ft. Lauderdale under the act of March 3, 1879.

"Seek Ye the Truth —
and the Truth Shall Make You Free"

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Two Events Come to a Head to Make For a Better Community

AFTER a good many months of confusion and uncertainty two events came to a head here yesterday which are certain to have a rather significant influence on many of our people.

The first event happened at the County Commission meeting when that group of officials finally took the bull by the horns and completed the acquisition of the Kline tract which will now be developed as a county-owned and county-operated public beach.

Purchase of this beach area, primarily for the use of our Negro residents, climaxed years of effort toward finding ways and means to meet the problem of providing the Negro population of Broward County with access to a public beach area. For a while it appeared that this was almost an insurmountable problem, but with the imposition of a special tax levy to finance the deal the County Commission was finally able to work out a solution to this situation that should meet with the approval of almost all concerned.

This action by the Commission in purchasing the Kline tract doesn't mean that Negroes should expect to have a beach overnight. The area in question is overgrown with underbrush and needs a good bit of cleaning and development before it will qualify as a first rate beach. Also, the county will have to provide a means of access to the property until an adequate road and bridge can be constructed. And in the meantime the county still must keep in mind that a court test of its power to levy a special tax for this purpose has already been filed and that an adverse decision in this respect could overthrow the entire program.

However, all of these factors can't becloud the fact that at long last the county has taken concrete action to alleviate one of our most critical problems and this action should serve to quiet any fears that impatient Negro elements would take matters in their own hands by seeking to use present segregated beach areas.

ON another controversial front there was also action yesterday as the Ft. Lauderdale City Commission finally approved an ordinance calling for fluoridation of the municipal water supply by a 3-1 vote after three and one-half hours of rather heated public discussion on both sides of the fence.

This fluoridation measure has been up for discussion in this community for a good many weeks and as usual in almost every community in which it is proposed a controversy didn't take long to develop. Opponents of the program have bitterly claimed that it would "poison" the municipal water supply and force persons to submit to mass medication against their will while proponents have said that addition of the chemical in such closely-controlled minute quantities as one part per million could not possibly have any harmful effects and would greatly decrease the incidence of dental caries in small children.

Two Sides To Story

With over 2,000 communities already fluoridating their water supplies and with the program having the solid backing of the medical and dental fraternities we can't subscribe to the theory that fluoridation here is going to be as harmful as some proclaim. But we certainly don't deny these people their right to protest and if present indications are carried out there is little question but that the fluoridation program will also be the subject of some court action.

THAT is as it should be. If something is against the law it should not be carried out regardless of its possible benefits. But with over 2,000 communities already carrying out the fluoridation program it is perfectly obvious that there is some precedent for terming it a program well within the scope of municipal authority and conceived to do the most good for the greatest number of people so we can't quite agree to the theory that the City Commission exceeded its lawful authority in approving the program here.

The main point about both of these actions is that our officials finally realized the time had come to move one way or another and that no further good could come from delaying a decision. Officials who try to please everybody eventually wind up pleasing nobody and while some of our citizens may not approve of what went on yesterday we think a fair hearing was given to all parties in both of these controversies and that if the decisions do happen to conflict with the law it won't take too long for the courts to determine that point.

* * *

Prayers for Peace

TODAY is National Day of Prayers throughout the world. By invitation of the President of the United States the people behind the Iron Curtain were asked to join with us on this side to seek out God and ask His Guidance in a problem that mere men can't solve alone—worldwide peace. As President Eisenhower so ably stated it: peace on earth through the Divine Spirit.

If, as you read this, you haven't joined in today's "prayers for peace" program, you still can do so by calling on HIM in silent prayer with the request for "lasting peace for all mankind."

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Supreme Court Is Dealing With No Minor Issue In Desegregation .

Sunday News p.2

FROM developments this past week it has now become rather clear that those who had been hoping desegregation experiments in some school areas would go off without any hitch will have to modify their thinking a little bit. Fort Lauderdale

It is true that in at least one area, the nation's capital, desegregation has been accompanied with less furor than had been expected. But Washington, D.C. is not a very typical example of the problems that face other areas. Over the past few years Washington has had such a heavy influx of Negro residents that White people have become more or less accustomed to comingling of the races in hotels, restaurants, amusement places and on transportation mediums. In other words, desegregation in the schools came not as any surprise but as something which had been expected for a long time and thus the initial shock was tempered a great deal. Sun 9-26-54

Even so the experiment hasn't been as enthusiastically accepted as some would have us believe. There have been dislocations and serious ones. Many White people in Washington, D.C. who had been living in rather close proximity to Negro residents have moved to other areas rather than send their children to schools with a preponderance of Negro children. Many others, who could afford the cost, have enrolled their children in private schools where segregation is still the rule. And almost everywhere in the nation's capital it is generally accepted that the real crisis is yet to come as the problem of what to do about the social issues which will arise at school-sponsored dances and parties comes to the fore.

OUTSIDE of Washington, D.C. the desegregation issue is much more explosive. In Delaware real trouble arose as schools in one locality had to be closed in the face of threats from parents of White students that violence would break out if the school board persisted in its attempts to put Negro students in formerly all-White schools. In Ohio and in other places it was the Negro elements who were demanding immediate observance of the Supreme Court's initial decision outlawing segregated schools.

The widespread nature of the social upheaval that ay come as the eventual result of this Supreme Court decision is exemplified by the areas in which trouble has already reared its head This issue is not any one state or one-section affair. Alabama is a far piece from Delaware yet human nature is the same in both states And while most White people can justify and perhaps even go along with desegregation in the public school system they just aren't ready yet, and maybe they never will be, to accept social intermingling of the two races.

Human Nature Is The Same

That's the overt fear behind the avowed intent of officials in some southern states to abandon the public school system rather than bow to the Supreme Court's desegregation verdict. Alabama has already drafted up a constitutional amendment which will do away with the public school system in that state in favor of a private school system supported by state subsidies. The same kind of procedure is well past the talking stage in Mississippi and in Georgia and has even been broached right here in Florida.

Actually, such drastic action is only a last resort and no state is going to go that far until after the Supreme Court holds hearings on Dec. 6 on how to enforce its desegregation ruling and announces how the various states will be expected to conform.

THIS is when the real crisis will come and if the Supreme Court has any understanding at all of the grave social problems inherent in its ruling it can only approach this enforcement problem gingerly and in a spirit of cooperation rather than with a club.

When given a proper amount of time to become accustomed to change most people can condition themselves to accepting the change. But when somebody tries to force something down their throat in quick order then it is only human nature to rebel and to seek ways and means of circumventing the change.

These early attempts to enforce desegregation before the Supreme Court has even considered how such a drastic change in long standing customs shall be brought about aren't helping to ease peoples' minds on this issue. Trouble in one area can only beget trouble in other areas and if the desegregation controversy has caused serious trouble and even violence in certain areas even before there is any compulsion about it we shudder to think about what might happen should the Supreme Court seek to implement its decision too rigidly and too quickly.

This is no minor issue the Court is dealing with. It is one which strikes deep into our social order and the changes it entails cannot be brought about overnight. If handled slowly and properly desegregration in the public schools can be achieved with a minimum of upheaval. But if inflicted upon our people too quickly or if regarded in some quarters as merely the first stepping stone toward even greater social changes then it's almost a certainty that the troubles which have already cropped out are only a foretaste of what's to come.

issue is the only practical way to obtain it.

But what these citizens are worried about is that a considerable number of freeholders won't even bother to vote on this question and this can easily happen if voters aren't well aware of the exact location of the bond issue question on the voting machines.

This location will be in the upper right hand corner of each machine and all voters will have to do is to pull a lever indicating they are either for or against the bond issue.

That seems simple enough, yet it is surprising how many freeholders will go to the polls a week from next Tuesday not even knowing this bond issue question will be up for decision.

If only a majority vote of the freeholders taking part in the election was required to carry the issue those who didn't vote couldn't do too much harm. But as it is with all ad valorem bond issues at least 50 percent plus one of the registered freeholders must take part in the balloting to legalize the result and this provision has killed a good many bond issues in this county in the past.

WE aren't going to argue here the merits or demerits of

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

Freeholders Must Not Forget Their Duty to Vote on Negro Beach Bond Issue In the May 4 Primary

Sunday News 4-2-54 p.6
Fort Lauderdale

THE public-spirited citizens of this country who have taken upon themselves the task of spearheading the drive to win freeholder approval of a $2,500,000 bond issue for the purchase and development of a Negro beach are facing a much tougher job today than most people realize.

These citizens aren't worried too much about securing a favorable verdict from a majority of the freeholders who go to the polls and actually vote next May 4 as it has become pretty apparent that most people have accepted the facts that we need this proposed Negro beach and that a bond

It's Our Opinion

EDITORIALLY YOURS

School Interests Should Have Learned Important Lesson From Tuesday's Referendum Election Failure

SCHOOL INTERESTS in Broward County who are hoping to have a multi-million dollar school bond issue before the freeholders at the general election next November got a stiff jolt this past week when the failure of the Negro beach bond issue once again emphasized the tremendous difficulties that any ad valorem bond issue must surmount to be approved. Sunday News

There wasn't much question last Tuesday about the Negro beach bond issue being rejected by an adverse vote as there was widespread support of it. The only question was whether or not enough freeholders would vote to make it a legal referendum, and since not enough freeholders did vote the issue failed regardless of the overwhelming support it received from those who did cast ballots. Sun. 5-9-54

This brings up the question of why people didn't vote. Since over 54 percent of all the registered voters in the county did participate in the primary election which added up to a total turnout of some 28,466 voters it is logical to believe that at least 19,000 of these were freeholders or more than enough to carry the bond election if all voted.

So why then wasn't there a larger vote than was actually cast? From what we have been able to gather this week it appears that many freeholders either forgot to look for the bond issue question or became so confused over the intricacies of working the voting machine that after voting for the candidates they neglected to go over to the right side of the machine and pull the lever on the bond issue. We know this happened in many instances and it could well have been a major reason why the bond issue failed. Fort Lauderdale Ne.

BOND ISSUE proponents were afraid this would happen and that's why an attempt was made to have the county commission approve the use of paper ballots for the bond issue referendum. But the county commission figured that there was no reason to go to the expense of printing and counting separate ballots when there was space on the voting machines for this purpose so the paper ballot deal was turned down.

As was expected the voting machine deal boomeranged to a certain extent as a good many voters here still aren't used to these machines and didn't know where to look for the bond issue question.

That's one lesson that the school bond interests can't afford to overlook next fall if they hope to have any better luck than the Negro beach bond proponents had. More than this it has now become clearer than ever that to make sure over 18,000 freeholders get to the polls and actually vote a tremendous educational campaign has to be put on and a block by block drive instituted to see that all freeholders are contacted.

Even then it is not at all certain that success would crown such an effort. Much would depend upon the size of the bond issue and how much opposition it aroused. The Negro beach bond issue was a relatively small one and it aroused little actual opposition yet it failed despite all the effort that was made to get it approved.

All this means that school interests can't assume that just because it's an admitted fact we are short of classrooms in Broward County the freeholders will rush out to approve a bond issue to build some new schools. It isn't that easy. It takes organization, a lot of hard work and planning and a critical need to even hope to get a bond issue approved, and even then the sponsors had better be prepared for some disappointment.

---

that 50 percent plus one requirement as it is on the books as a legal condition which must be met and whether a person is for or against the requirement doesn't make much difference. But we are going to show how this requirement can affect this Negro beach bond issue and we sincerely hope every freeholder will keep in mind the figures we quote here.

As of the present time Broward County has 51,106 voters who are eligible to cast ballots in the May 4 primary election. Of this total 37,233 are registered as freeholders who are qualified to take part in the bond issue referendum.

Now this means that to meet the conditions imposed by the 50 percent plus one requirement at least 18,617 freeholders are going to have to cast their ballots on May 4 for or against the bond issue. If only 18,000 freeholders vote it wouldn't make a particle of difference if all 18,000 favored the issue as it would still fail because not enough freeholders voted to make it a legal election.

Under ordinary circumstances it wouldn't seem like too big a task to get half plus one of the registered freeholders out to vote. But it must be remembered that many property owners in this county who are registered as freeholders don't live here the entire year and quite a few of these have probably already left the county to go north. It must also be remembered that many other freeholders won't even bother to go to the polls at all on election day while still others may go to vote for somebody in the general election but will completely ignore the bond issue question.

IT IS obvious, therefore, that if this bond issue is to be approved freeholders must be impressed with the vital importance of getting out to the polls on May 4 and actually pulling down one of the levers on the bond issue question. Talking about how badly we need this proposed Negro beach isn't enough as talk won't buy land nor put improvements on it. It takes money to buy land and finance improvements and there's no point in kidding ourselves that we can raise the $2,500,000 this beach project will probably take in any other fashion than from a bond issue.

Sure there are a lot of people who don't like bond issues. We don't like them very much ourselves, but when it comes down to a choice of paying a half a mill in extra taxes or of having the courts order our segregation system thrown out the window none of us who own property here in Broward County really have much choice. If we want to protect our property values we'll go to the polls May 4 and approve this bond issue and we'll hustle around to all of our neighbors and make sure that they also get out and vote.

It's no easy job at any time here in Broward County to get 18,617 voters out to the polls. But this is one time we have to get that many out and if we don't the results can be too disastrous to even mention.

LOUISVILLE, KY. COURIER-JOURNAL

Incitement Pays Until Decency Awakes

ADOLF HITLER, the frustrated painter who turned to politics and nearly destroyed the free world, would be interested in a young American so far distinguished more for a police record than for any success story. He is Bryant W. Bowles, self-styled Florida "Cracker," self-appointed spokesman for segregationists, now enjoying unwonted prosperity as founder and president of something called the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

That name, of course, is a takeoff on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, an equal-rights group militantly active since 1909.

How long the prosperity will last is debatable. Founded only last December, the organization sells plain memberships for $5, fancier ones for sums ranging up to $1,000, expects its membership to reach 50,000 shortly, and claims it has been offered "more than $2 million in pledges."

But the State of Delaware has arrested BOWLES for conspiring to break its education law, demanded the organization's data on finances and operations, and is seeking to revoke its charter. In addition, Mr. BOWLES's announcement that he planned to extend his anti-segregation mass meetings to Philadelphia has met with the flat warning of Philadelphia authorities that if he does so he will be arrested immediately for "inciting to riot."

Mr. BOWLES is unmoved. He boasts that "plenty of states" are ready to welcome his organization. He seems confident of continued prosperity, working as he is in a very rich field. Meantime, he refuses to hand over his records to the Delaware Attorney General, defying a subpoena until some "authorized court" requests them.

Already BOWLES has told reporters enough to give a clear picture of the remarkably undemocratic organization he heads. It is run by his hand-picked board of six, two of whom he has "locked out" and replaced since ED EDSTROM first described its setup in THE COURIER-JOURNAL last April. The ousted directors claim that BOWLES does not account for the organization's income and expenditures even to his own board. Other members of the N.A.A.W.P. have no vote, BOWLES has blandly explained, because "the left-wing elements" might take over if dues-payers by the thousands had that privilege.

This is a quick rise indeed to potential riches and power for the 34-year-old Floridian. After 7½ years in the Marine Corps and no great success as a home-repair salesman, he was convicted in Baltimore only last year on three charges of failing to pay workmen and two false-pretense charges involving worthless checks. Earlier similar charges in Florida and Maryland, either left to languish or settled out of court, suggested neither comfort nor distinction in Mr. BOWLES's career until he founded his "pro-white, not anti-Negro" organization.

Good-looking and soft-spoken, the ex-sergeant hit the dues-paying jackpot after the Supreme Court ruled last May that segregated schools were unconstitutional. In Delaware through mass demonstrations and school strikes, he "re-segregated" the schools of Milford. Delaware officials charge that he brought about "by means of mass hysteria, mob rule, boycott and race prejudice, the closing of public schools."

But these tactics encouraged last week's flareups in Washington and Baltimore—flareups fanned by Messrs. BOWLES and associates, but ended by prompt police action and the appeals of school and civic leaders. His methods certainly helped to swell the rising pile of membership applications on the desks of the N.A.A.W.P. headquarters in Washington.

Mr. BOWLES professes to abhor violence. But at mass meetings the potential violence of his movement has been betrayed by his repeated statement: "My daughters will never attend a school with Negroes as long as there is breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

BOWLES's movement is playing footsie with anti-Jewish propagandists. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith charges that the Floridian "has joined forces with one of the most prolific and vicious anti-Semitic pamphleteers in the country, FRANK L. BRITTON . . . active on the anti-Semitic hate front since 1950." The first issue of BOWLES's publication, The National Forum, reprinted this headline from BRITTON's American Nationalist: "South Indignant as Jew-Led N.A.A.C.P. Wins School Segregation Case." But the end is in sight. Mr. BOWLES and his movement, Attorney General BROWNELL says, are "under observation."

The Old Southern Filibuster May Have Seen Its Best Days

THERE are signs of still another by-product of the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in public schools. It could mean a loss of potency in threat and practice of the old-fashioned Senate filibuster, Southern style.

A premonitory glimpse of this change comes as Senator MAYBANK of South Carolina says he will oppose any and all programs of public housing. Hitherto the South Carolinian has been stout for federal housing plans. Only Monday, however, the Supreme Court, broadening its public school ruling, applied it to forbid discrimination between races in public housing.

In other days, when Southern senators felt that traditional customs of their region were threatened by proposed legislation, and the feelings of their white constituents affronted, they would arise and talk a bill to death. This has been going on for more than 60 years, and the technique of filibustering against "force bills" and civil-rights bills was highly perfected.

The tactics reached back to 1891, when senators mainly from the South talked 29 days, using up about one-third of all the time in a short session of Congress, to prevent a vote on what they considered a "force bill." It was a bill by the older HENRY CABOT LODGE for federal supervision of elections in the South to make sure that Negroes were not denied their right to vote.

After that, every time a bill was aimed at the poll tax, or proposed an anti-lynching or a so-called fair employment law, the lethal strategy of delay was called forth. In 1949, when the Democratic Administration's civil-rights program was before Congress, the strategy reached a high point in a successful filibuster to perpetuate the filibuster in a change of Senate rules to make debate harder to cut off.

The point was not only to kill the offensive bill at hand, but also to prevent writing into federal law the principle of non-discrimination. Now, however, the Supreme Court has defined and established the principle. To a large extent this removes the issue from the field of legislation and places it in the field of the courts.

Now the bill which is undesirable by test of Southern tradition must be opposed for itself, not for the dreadful element of anti-Southern intention. Formerly, the Southern senators did indeed have an emotional and prideful point, if not altogether a moral one, because the matters they fought against were definitely aimed at their states. They didn't like being singled out, even if in their heart of hearts they may have agreed to the general rule proposed.

As it is now, bills however helpful like public housing or aid to education cannot be forever opposed because custom is affronted. The principle entrenched by the Supreme Court cannot be removed by defeat of a law.

At the same time, an opposite strategy is also deprived of its power. There were cases when members of Congress deliberately incited Southern opposition to defeat measures which they didn't want in the first place. In 1949, for example, Senator BRICKER of Ohio moaned loudly for the underprivileged Negro. He offered an amendment to the housing bill of that year which would have wiped out the color line in public housing. Instantly, as he must have known, Southerners like Senator MAYBANK, old friends of housing programs, lined up to defeat the bill because of the rider.

But nobody could forget Senator BRICKER's long opposition to federal housing programs. The insincerity of his proviso was glaring. Even his Ohio colleague, the late ROBERT A. TAFT, newly won to championship of public housing programs, lined up worked against him to block the amendment.

There are bound to be fewer of these wheels within wheels, now that courts have taken title to the inflammatory old issue. Filibusters with other motives will come now and then. The Senate rules help them, as Senator MORSE showed last year, and as HUEY LONG, the first LAFOLLETTE and many another proved. But anti-segregation will figure less in them. The point is blunted.

Helping People Exchange Experience

WHEN the Supreme Court last May declared school segregation unconstitutional, it was immediately apparent that detailed reporting on what happens in education as a result could be of enormous usefulness to the educators, public officials, and other citizens most directly involved. Factual and objective reporting, that is, and in depth sufficient to supplement that expectable from the daily press for the public at large.

To meet this need the Southern Education Reporting Service was born, financed by funds from the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education. Correspondents were appointed in the District of Columbia and each of the 17 states requiring or permitting segregation. With the Richmond Times-Dispatch's VIRGINIUS DABNEY as chairman and with a board of directors composed of distinguished Southern educators and newspaper editors, the organization obtained the services of Editor C. A. MCKNIGHT of The Charlotte News as executive director of its publication, Southern School News.

Mr. MCKNIGHT and his colleagues have now mailed out the first issue of their paper. Because the enterprise was earlier attacked in a few misguided quarters (as a Dixiecrat attempt, on the one hand, to preserve segregation, and as a Yankee attempt, on the other, to encourage integration) we are happy to report that the first issue of Southern School News is guilty of neither charge. It is instead, as factual and objective as trained newspapermen could hope to make it.

The first issue's state-by-state reports are also as Mr. MCKNIGHT puts it, "somewhat long, somewhat weighty." But for their specialized audience they had to be, because each gives not only a wealth of background on the state and local educational systems and laws before the Supreme Court spoke but also a three-month summary of developments since then.

Future issues may be briefer, and the publication's promised close look at key communities, no less than its broad and detailed coverage of legal-political-editorial-statistical pronouncements bearing on desegregation, could make it a fascinating documentary on one of the most explosive stories of our time.

But the first issue alone is of great value to the educators and lawmakers and opinion-makers most concerned with understanding the problems involved, and it firmly establishes the factual and objective approach so necessary to the attainment of S.E.R.S.'s purpose to render public service. Published in Nashville and sent free of charge to educators, public officials, newspapermen and other interested citizens who ask for it, Southern School News is well launched to implement its practical belief that communities throughout the South and the border states "can learn useful lessons from the experiences of one another."

Washington Schools Are Blazing the Trail Quietly

THE surprising thing in the school segregation picture is not that one West Virginia community dropped integration like a hot potato. It is, instead, that so controversial a change is working out so quietly in so many other communities long before the change is actually required.

The most notable of these is the District of Columbia, where Negro students number nearly 61,000 of the District's total enrollment of 106,000 Enjoined by President EISENHOWER last May to become the trail-blazer in desegregation, Washington has done just that. Some 16,000 new pupils were assigned to schools without regard to color. Among older pupils, about 3,000 Negroes were transferred to schools formerly all white, and all formerly white schools were opened to Negroes newly resident in their districts. White teachers are instructing many predominantly Negro classes, and there are several Negro teachers in classrooms with a predominantly white enrollment.

There were advance rumors of trouble, of course, particularly at one high school where Negro demonstrators were expected to demand full instead of partial integration this year. But with police guards and scout cars on hand no demonstration developed, and elsewhere in the District there were no incidents whatever.

Similar smoothness seems to have been the welcome rule in scattered communities elsewhere, not least of all in Arkansas and New Mexico and Arizona. It may not last in every place, as it did not after a quiet five-day trial of integration in West Virginia's Greenbrier County. There at White Sulphur Springs a band of hoodlums waylaid two Negro players after a high school football game and the resulting dispute spread to white students and their parents. Confronted with the threat of some 600 parents to stage a mass meeting and bodily remove the 25 Negro students enrolled at White Sulphur Springs High School, the county board ordered an immediate return to the old system of separate schools for each race—its legal right until the Supreme Court rules this fall or later on implementing its historic decision of last May 17 outlawing school segregation on the basis of race.

Two other counties in West Virginia, however, still retain their newly-established policy of integration, albeit with some rumblings. And every successful instance of transition, especially the remarkable beginning in Washington, with the largest Negro population of any Southern city, will be worth its weight in community gold to the majority of the states and districts still waiting for the Supreme Court to spell out the absolutes in the pattern of change.

The schedule and the process are yet to be blueprinted, for Kentucky as for others. But the basic decision already has been made. Imbedded prejudice and custom die hard, but it will help everywhere to remember, as Dr. A. LEE COLEMAN put it to a University of Kentucky class last week, that "You can't get around it—the ideas of compulsory racial segregation and democracy are incompatible and one or the other must go."

MIAMI, FLA. HERALD

A Disservice To Negroes

Herald

THE NATIONAL Association for the Advancement of Colored People is headed toward doing our Negro citizens a distinct disservice.

Miami, Fla

Howard Dixon, attorney and spokesman for the Miami unit of the NAACP, reports that it is determined to push the issue of immediate desegregation in our public schools without waiting for a ruling from the U. S. Supreme Court whether its order should be on a gradual or immediate basis.

Fri. 8-20-54

The national NAACP has instructed local chapters to enroll children in White schools. Petitions are now being circulated in Dade county to find out how many families would be willing to serve as "test cases."

P. 6 A

It is an unfortunate program. It ignores the realities of which the Supreme Court was keenly conscious when it withheld a supplemental order establishing the specific time for the implementation of its decision.

In Florida generally and in this county particularly there has been a measured acceptance of the court's decision.

Attorney General Richard Ervin has been conducting a wide-scope survey of White and Colored leadership to ascertain how the court's order could be best implemented, in an orderly and non-provocative manner.

The NAACP spurns this sort of considered evaluation of an admittedly complex problem. The Attorney General calls its action a "flouting of the United States Supreme Court."

Certainly the program is completely contrary to what Ervin's analysis found to be the majority reactions of the Colored leadership in this county.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL makes this factual and realistic evaluation of the NAACP's demand for immediate de-segregation:

"Any precipitate and hasty action as contemplated by the NAACP will be rash and will only cause ill feelings. We have been trying to work out this problem in an orderly and careful fashion and they are acting before even the Supreme Court has had a chance to consider all the factors."

The Supreme Court provided no talisman for making its order effective when it made its decision.

A great segment of the White population accepted the order with the understanding that it would be carried out in a manner that would cause the least friction. They did not take that to mean a designed and inflammatory pressing if the issue before the Supreme Court had completed its findings.

The NAACP's program stands to alienate the sympathies of this great group. Colored leadership should not deliberately prod ill feeling. This is the time for healing, not creating, new social scars.

It is not a question here of the rightness of the Court's decision.

The issue as such has been settled. Its effectuation has not.

That calls for another sort of Colored leadership than that being shown by the NAACP.

We Just Can't Count Ohio as 'The South'

Herald

THE ASSOCIATED Press reported school desegregation rows this week in three states. It mixed up its geography considerably in the doing.

It told of telephone threats closing two schools at Milford, Delaware, possible court action at Hillsboro, Ohio, and a strike of White students at Madison, West Virginia.

P 6 A

Then it added: "Elsewhere in the South the segregation situation continued calm, with no incidents reported."

Miami, Fla.

That "elsewhere in the South" throws us. We'll go along with West Virginia being "South," we'll even accept Delaware.

Phila. 9-23-54

We cannot by any stretch of geographical imagination include Ohio even in the fringe-area-South. Ohio is just plain North.

Accuracy as to place and description is vital in this delicate situation. Reporting must not take the form it has had with the crime of lynching of which the South is ashamed.

There have been more killings caused by racial conflicts north of the Mason-Dixon line than lynchings in the South. Only up there they are called deaths due to rioting, mob clashes or what-have-you. The terminology doesn't change the horror, nor lessen the guilt of its perpetrators.

We're trying to get the Supreme Court's school desegregation order properly oriented and with the least possible friction down this way. We should not be saddled with incidents that are not our responsibility, further to complicate things.

MIAMI, FLA. HERALD

U.S. Can Face the Challenge

THE SUPREME COURT ruling that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional is another milestone of progress in the history of our country —again proving the ability of America to rise and face the challenge of a critical world by meeting the issue with a unanimous vote, proving us a world leader of true greatness.

DR. BASS

In order to understand our destiny we must go back not only through decades but cycles of time. The history of the USA in contrast to that of European and Asiatic nations is very young, but it cannot be considered either simple, short or unimportant.

If the history of Europe and Asia is complex, ours is more so. We are not yet homogenous. We are still in the developing stage and within our borders we have elements from every other race in the world. And the American Negro, unlike any other Negro, runs the strain from what appears to be the whitest white to the blackest black, with all the colors of the spectrum thrown in between.

WITH THE SOUTH more American than any other sector, and the Negro a product of the soil of the south, indeed more American than any other group, why deny him his civil rights under the Constitution —for which through several wars he has bled and died without shirking, knowing he is paying the highest price without the privileges that go with it?

In view of world conditions, there was only one decision the Supreme Court could have made — the one it did make. Our differences are mostly from ignorance, stemming from an economy that has not as yet found the ultimate answer. One group still in darkness from an unwarranted inner fear.

Our fear should be from without. As one great statesman put it, "Our racial prejudice is a cancer gnawing at the heart of this republic; if not remedied, it shall prove as dangerous as an attack from an army—within or without."

I see no immediate change in conditions relative to high and elementary school from this Supreme Court ruling. But it will require much thinking and planning to break a 100-year custom.

★ ★ ★

THE DECISION not only affects the south but much of the north, where large numbers of Negroes live. Only recently several northern states have abolished segregation in schools in its entirety; there are some whose programs are still incomplete.

To this I would like to call the attention of Florida citizens! One state in particular has a 12-point program in which the integrating starts in first grade; by the time the children finish senior high school, the plan will be complete.

This could easily work here, since the small ones would not have learned to hate, dislike and distrust each other before learning first hand that all people are alike regardless of the color of their skins.

★ ★ ★

LONG AFTER the people of the USA will have forgotten racial discrimination and its attendant evils, there will still be a breech between the Christian and the non-Christian faiths.

We who profess Christ must at some time recognize the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The expediency of the Supreme Court decision was surely within the keeping of our Christian faith. We need spiritual growth as well as physical growth. It must be cultivated and developed as we would cultivate a plant, or develop an army. It must be fed by spiritual action one toward the other.

Having lived for short periods in all sections of the USA, I have a faint idea of the existing problems. And I would like to end with the word of a great American theosophist:

". . . So that we too (the American people) may walk along the road of reason, through the portals of conscious cooperation, until in the power of love and the glory of compassion, encompassed about with peace, perfect and unshakable, we shall come to our appointed end."

DR. JAMES L. BASS
Fort Lauderdale

As We See It

The Desegregation Survey Found—

THE BROOKSVILLE Journal takes Sen. Spessard L. Holland to task on the subject of racial desegregation in the schools.

"We cannot spend all our time in vain regrets but must spend our time in trying," the newspaper quotes Holland, "to learn how to bring it (desegregation) about."

Says The Journal:

"He should realize the Negro himself is against desegregation, and is happy in his own sphere and that we should strive to leave him there."

To keep the record straight in this controversial issue it should be noted for what it is worth, that the fact-finding survey, conducted throughout Florida under direction of the Attorney General, included among its conclusions:

That a large majority of the Negro leaders acclaim the Supreme Court's decision as being right.

That only a small minority of the Negroes responding personally disagreed with the decision; only a small minority of these Negroes think that other Negroes in their communities are in disagreement with the court.

That Negroes frequently do not give honest opinions on the subject when talking to White people because they are afraid to do so.

As We See It

Ervin's Brief Is Reasoned Document

THE UNITED STATES Supreme Court opened a new term yesterday in which it is expected to hand down final decrees in the five public school segregation cases.

The court has set the week of December 6 for hearing new arguments and reports intended to aid the justices in determining how and when to order its school desegregation decision into final effect.

Florida's Attorney General Richard W. Ervin, in keeping with the permission of the Court, has filed an amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief with the high tribunal.

Ervin has not intervened in the original cause. Nor is he authorized to submit the State of Florida as a direct party in the cases at issue.

As he points out, his action cannot preclude the Florida legislature or the people of Florida from taking any legislative or constitutional action dealing with the segregation problem.

His brief is a masterly sounding of public opinion at all official and civil levels.

It is a dispassionate, orderly inquiry into how the Supreme Court's order can be carried out in this state, due and measured attention being given to the time element as related to the implementation of the court's order.

★ ★ ★

THE WHOLE tenor and purpose of its action is phrased in the brief's first paragraph on "The Report and the Conclusions" as prepared by Dr. Lewis Killian, of the Department of Sociology of Florida State University:

"Just as the effects of segregation, held by the Court to be discriminatory, are essentially psychological, the problems of desegregation are also social and psychological as much as they are legal."

The Attorney General set out to compile for the Court a discussion of the reasons for a period of gradual adjustment to desegregation be permitted in Florida—"with broad powers of discretion vested in local school authorities to determine administrative procedures."

The 243-page brief now in the hands of the justices is its own best proof of successful achievement of the objective Ervin set for himself.

RACE RELATIONS- 1954 (REPORT)
CLIPPINGS REQUESTED

MONROE, LOUISIANA MORNING WORLD

Editorials

The 'Clearing' Of Ralph Bunche

Last week, a government "loyalty review board" cleared Dr. Ralph Bunche, Negro employee of the "U. N." holding a high position in that organization. The board said it could find no hint of Communist sympathies in the man's record.

It stated that it "even had to call on Walter White to help clear Bunche's record. If this is the type man who was called in to "help clear" the record of Ralph Bunche, the "clearance" would have come out no matter the record. This newspaper has described in great detail the record of Walter White, stating that White has belonged to at least three Communist front organizations and a host of Socialist fronts.

What about Dr. Bunche? What is his record? He has a long list of jobs with the Federal Government, in particular, the State Department. In the beginning, Bunche was a professor at Howard University, the Negro place of higher learning in the National capital. He first received notice in 1936 when the Division of Investigations of the Department of the Interior made an examination of Howard.

It was revealed that Bunche had sponsored a conference at Howard with the Theme of "The Position of the Negro in Our Economic Crisis." This was supposedly held in 1935. It was alleged that the conference was Communist in nature and that the violent overthrow of the United States government was openly advocated.

Among the speakers invited by Bunche were Norman Thomas, then presidential candidate on the Socialist ticket; James W. Ford, Communist party leader; Robert Dunn, a member of the Central Committee of the Communist party; James S. Allen, a notorious Communist; E. R. McKinney, president of the American Labor Party; Ira De A. Reid, member of numerous front groups and organizations cited as subversive; Frank Tannenbaum, former member of the I. W. W. and author of "Peace By Revolution"; Charles H. Houston, member of the NAACP and affiliated with Communist front movements; W. E. B. duBois, long active in Communist and Communist front organizations and founder or organizer of the NAACP and T. Arnold Hill, prominent in the National Negro Congress cited as subversive and Communist by the Justice Department.

Asked by the investigators to produce transcripts of the conference, Bunche stated that they were either "lost" or were not taken. He "lost" even the context of his own speech entitled "Critique of New Deal Social Planning as it affects the Negro." Asked about the backgrounds of his speakers, he stated that he wanted a "fair and impartial view presented." Most of those interviewed by the investigators stated that in their opinion, the conference was Communist in nature. This information is taken from Senate Document No. 217, 74th Congress, 2nd Session.

Dr. Bunche was termed a "radical" by a member of his own faculty, Dr. A. Jackson, head of the Howard school of medicine. He was in 1936, found to be a member of the subversive National Negro Congress. He was a member in 1941 of "National Sharecroppers Week" already described by this newspaper.

In 1950, Bunche was guest speaker at an encampment of the "American Ethical Union." This thing was founded in 1946 with the aim of acting as a "training camp" for young Americans between the ages of 17 and 23. The majority of those connected with this organization have long lists of front and Communist party affiliations. Bunche participated in a luncheon meeting of the "League for Industrial Democracy" in 1951. The "LID" is cited as a "far to the left Socialist group."

At the hearings before the Jenner Sub-Committee to investigate the administration of the Internal Security act, it was found that Bunche, as a member of the "U. N." staff, had recommended a Jack Sargeant Harris who fell on the Fifth Amendment when questioned as to whether or not he was a member of the Communist party. Bunche attended the Eighth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at Mount Tremblant in Canada in 1942. He stated that he had never experienced "a more profitable one than the Mount Tremblant Conference."

On October 28th, 1944, he attended another conference of the IPR in the national capital. More references to Bunche's IPR connections can be found in the hearings before the sub-Committee to Investigate the Administration Of The Internal Security Act. These records are in the possession of the Morning World. They are not good. The reader needs no further description of the IPR except a reminder that the IPR formed the Pacific policy of the State Department which helped destroy the Chinese National Government and turn over to the Communists the Chinese mainland.

Bunche stated of his "U. N." cohorts, "No where in this country is there a more loyal, patriotic group." The sub-Committee was then holding hearings in conjunction with the New York grand jury which showed that more than fifty of these employees were either Communists or were members of affiliate organizations. Bunche has consistently opposed all investigations of "U. N." personnel and has time and time again, ridiculed charges that Communist influence existed therein.

This is the partial record of the man who was just "cleared" before the loyalty review board. There are many Americans who feel that Bunche has no place in the employ of the American taxpayers who are bearing the great load of the fight against the Marxists and the Communists. Bunche's record needs more investigation.

It is quite possible that the "loyalty review board" which cleared him could also use some examination.

Editorials

Meet The 'Brown Man'

The Morning World has come into possession of a strange and curious photograph. Apparently, it was reprinted from a book, entitled, "The United Nations: Blueprint for Peace."

The photo is of a man. Rather, it is a figure. A faceless, colorless, raceless, sexless figure. The figure appears to be standing on top of the earth. At least, it would appear to be the earth in that there are lines of latitude and longitude clearly marked. The author of the book claims that the picture was an "official photo from the United Nations."

The statement beneath the photo says the following: "This symbolic figure represents all of us, everyone on earth, wherever we are without distinction of any kind such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or any other status." What is the intent of UNESCO? Is it to mix all races and thus destroy them?

If God intended that there be only a race of "Brown men" on the earth, would there be the other races with their manifold attributes and certainly, faults? Are the politicians and "new thinkers" of today plus some of the scientists, supposed to tinker with the works of God? In any case, the "UNESCO Brown Man" would seem to give away the objectives, that of a composite of all races, the ultimate human to which all God created races are to descend.

The propagandists however, were so intent on wiping out racial or national lines and origins, that they made a slight "slipup." They wiped out individual character. There are not even character lines in this monstrous figure.

Obviously, there are sources in the world today which are deliberately attempting to eliminate character and individuality. It is these two forces in a man which make them want to lead their own existences, to live individual lives and to do what they please. The individual human resents domination. Therefore, the characterless human could be dominated.

A noted leftwinger, advocate of "one worldism," the late Senator Benton of Connecticut stated before the United States National Commission for UNESCO on September 23, 1946, "we are at the beginning of a long process of breaking down the walls of our national sovereignty." He further stated that UNESCO could be of great assistance in fostering this attempt.

An associate of Karl Marx who helped write the "Manifesto" stated long ago in reference to "Complete Communism," "There will be no mention of either nationality or religion; there will only be one fatherland, the globe. There may be only one flock and one shepherd—one free shepherd with an iron staff, and a shorn, bleating alike, human herd!"

This is one Communist's idea of "individuals" under a unified "one world" government. Most any fanatic advocate of the "United Nations" is ready and willing to agree that the existence of a race of humans lacking national racial and religious lines would be the "best thing for a one world existence." Apparently, some of this has brushed off on members of the Federal Government and the Supreme Court who are busy mixing into the lives of individual Americans and fostering races upon races, societies upon societies and as a result, causing terrible dissension where there was none before.

There are many, many races on this earth. They were put here by the hand of God. Only God can erase them. It is not up to humans to try. Each race is possessed of its excellent attributes and each has its faults. Each is a separate creation of God and as such, should remain that way.

Such tampering as is presently proposed would seem to be against divine law.

Editorials

Morning World

'Freedom Of Speech?'

The Constitution is supposed to provide freedom of speech. When the United States was founded, its builders believed that the people should not be bound by old world ideas that citizens were not citizens at all, but "subjects." Thus emerged the freest set of laws devised since the dawn of man's coming to the earth.

The United States as a nation has fought many wars to preserve these freedoms. It has fought to preserve the idea that a popular swing by a great majority would not imperil a minority. Today, the American people dreamily and very happily delude themselves into believing that they are indeed possessed of complete freedom of speech.

Morning World

In Delaware such freedoms of speech as might have been possessed in recent years (after the new Supreme Court edicts) have been cast out of the window. In the Senate, there is no longer freedom of speech. In the columns of the newspapers, speech is cautiously regulated to insure a full compliment of friends and supporters no matter the importance of an issue.

10/15/54

For the moment however, consider the Delaware situation. A small organization entitled "The National Association For The Advancement of White People" attempted to insure that the segregated schools of Delaware remained segregated. Organized protest against integration started and caught under the advice of the NAAWP.

The incensed people of Milford, finding no solace in a Supreme Court which now can dictate matters seemingly far astray of its jurisdiction, decided to ask the NAAWP to help them. The leader of the NAAWP, for his efforts in aiding this group has been smeared, arrested, ordered to do this and that, "refused permission" to enter Philadelphia (are cities actually able to refuse any free American admittance to their limits?) accused of inciting a riot and disturbing the peace.

10/15/54

The Constitution gives express guarantees to citizens that they might organize and hold meetings without governmental interference. Has the Governor of Delaware also forgotten the Constitution or is it more than likely that he has succumbed to other pressures such as have been exerted in the past by the United States Attorney General and the National Association For the Advancement of Colored People?

Louisiana

The NAACP's record as has many times been described in this newspaper is none too good. Yet, it is allowed to exist peacefully and to bring about race prejudice and race hatred. It is allowed to flaunt its power in American and State courts, demanding this, threatening that. Holding a record of Marxism of some length, many NAACP leaders, continue to attempt integration of the South and in the border states.

WHEN AN ARROUSED CITIZENRY FIGHTS FOR ITS CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS, AND ORGANIZES, TO PREVENT UNWANTED ACTION, THE LEADER OF THE GROUP IS PILLORIED AND ATTACKED BY SMEAR ORGANIZATIONS AS WELL AS THE LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS.

IF THE NAACP CAN REMAIN IN EXISTENCE, WHY CAN'T THE NAAWP? WHAT IS FREEDOM FOR ONE, MUST BE FREEDOM FOR THE OTHER.

The Morning World does not go along and will never support action outside the law. That is why the NAACP has been denounced so severely in these columns. Operating supposedly "inside the law," many of its acts are violations or could be easily termed violations of the rights of many American people.

On the other hand, it may be that the NAAWP is operating in the same manner.

If the Governor of Delaware sincerely desires to "play fair," he will immediately institute proceedings in order to investigate also the actions of the NAACP and its leaders. Moreover, he will make a most thorough and complete investigation of the NAACP cooperating organizations in an attempt to see who is really behind the NAACP actions and leaders.

Pressures being pressures, there is hardly a chance that such will be the case in that there is far too much power and financial aid on the part of those in full support of the NAACP and it is not all Negro.

So, Americans have not only been penalized for speaking freely, their leaders who have hoped to successfully allow them to pick and choose their social companions are attacked and destroyed.

Some months ago, this newspaper in a Sunday editorial asked "Why Not An NAAWP" to protect the rights of the white people who are now trampled upon. The answer has clearly been presented in the edicts of the Delaware State officials who one day, will dearly pay for their actions. In this case minority is not only protected, but hoisted over a majority, (at the direst expense of that majority).

If the leaders of the majority are successfully destroyed, minority rule can become the order of the day.

To completely understand the problem of the NAACP, one must study the background of its leaders and the operating procedures of the organization.

If the Negro race can organize a protective and advancement association, why can't the whites? If real and honest action is taken by the State officials of Delaware, the NAACP will readily be put out of that state, just as fast as the action has come against the NAAWP.

In Louisiana, there are Senators and Representatives in the Legislature who even now are familiarizing themselves with the problem and what to do about it. The Morning World has released to the Committee studying the question, information concerning the radical organizations and their benefactors. Moreover, it has told the Legislators where they can go to get more information.

Unless the American people are ever diligent as to their freedoms, they will be slashed away. The Delaware incident is proof that a minority can not only force itself on the majority, but can curtail effective action and freedoms of that majority and make it inoperative.

If the Delaware incident is to become the rule in the United States, goodbye freedoms.

Better think it over, fellow citizens. It is your God given rights you are casting away.

Editorials

The Rights Of States

On Monday, the United States as a Republic of "united states," ceased to exist.

The Supreme Court has ruled that segregation as it has been practiced in many areas of the nation was outside the law. The high court has thus set itself up as a government all its own and has overruled the rights of the many states involved.

It is possible to argue about segregation day and night. Some advocates maintain that the Negroes should be sent to white schools (and vice versa) whether they like it or not. The NAACP, an organization with great wealth and power at its disposal and an organization of radical thinkers, believes that it is necessary to force the Negroes into schools and positions rather than to have the situation come about of a gradual nature.

Certain elements of that organization right here in the Twin Cities have already voiced that opinion.

Segregation as an issue is as important sociologically as any issue which has come up since Lincoln's "emancipation proclamation" (a war maneuver to disrupt the South in the heat of battle rather than what many have said it was) and certainly, a very important one in these times. Unfortunately, it is not as important as the basic issue behind the whole thing.

Are the various states merely districts of a federal government with far reaching powers? It would appear that way from the recent Court maneuvers. It is almost trite to call these things "decisions"; they are more on the order of "edicts." The Governor of Georgia was correct in his assumption of the edict handed down on Monday when he called the segregation edict a gross infringement on the rights of the states.

The northern people, many of them, believe that the edict was a good one. Many left wingers both in the south north, east, west or wherever they may be found (and they are found everywhere) believe the edict was a correct one.

ALL FORGET THAT THEIR RIGHTS AS SOVEREIGN INDIVIDUALS ARE BEING SAPPED AND TAKEN AWAY AT A PACE WHICH GROWS WITH ASTONISHING RAPIDITY.

The northern politicians who have been attempting to cram this segregation edict down the throats of the southern states for many years, will someday awaken to find their historical state governments "eine traum" as the Germans call it. A dream they indeed will be if the present situation keeps up.

Actually, the Negroes as individuals are affected on the same basis as are the whites. Their rights as individuals are rapidly being removed in the guise of "ending segregation." In the south, Negroes and whites practice segregation out of tradition. It is impossible to believe that a supreme court edict will change the sociological trend of things unless it is backed by the armed forces of the federal government even as it was after the war for states rights (sometimes erroneously termed the "Civil War").

Negroes and whites both find within their ranks radical thinkers. They find that some would prefer to overthrow all existing conditions and make revolutionary changes on the spur of the moment. If the ideas of the radicals on the part of both racer are followed, the south, and the nation is indeed in for bad times.

It is a well known fact in the north that race relations in the south are far better than anywhere else in the nation. That fact is indeed, a "galling" one for many extremist radical northern politicians who fall helpless before the pictures of the race riots in their area by people in both races wherein is found the shadow of severe hate.

There is little or no hate in the south between the races. If radicals attempt to bludgeon their way, backed by a Federal Government, into various positions, there will be hate where none was before. It might be well to remember that hate, dissension and discord is exactly what the Marxists desire.

These are times of utmost caution. The American people, the southern people especially, have a good record of careful and intelligent thinking. They must realize that behind the issue on segregation, behind the issue on tariffs, behind the issue on the tidelands, behind the issue on the steel mills, there is a pattern which if allowed to continue, will spell the destruction of this Republic.

As of Monday, the United States can hardly be termed a "Republic." It can hardly fit that definition. Instead, the power has passed from the hands of the people to a governing body of both the Court and the Administration. What one desires, the other seems to fulfill. If the American people still desire the rights of states to be paramount over the Federal government, which they are certainly in no way today, a plan of concerted action by the 48 state governments must be taken.

The segregation issue, important as it most certainly is, falls before the issue which will eventually determine the rights of individual Americans, both Caucasian and Negro. That issue will determine whether or not there is to be maintained a true Republic, one designed to last many years and to give the citizens within, the rights as are given them by their Creator.

MONROE, LOUISIANA MORNING WORLD

Editorials

Where Do We Go From Here

On three occasions in the last several months, the Morning World has discussed the issue of racial integration in the school systems of the South. It has recommended a calm, considerate attitude towards the problem while at the same time, denouncing the Federal Supreme Court for its action, due to the fact that the decree would seem to have been out of the jurisdiction of that court.

In short, a minority has foisted its decision on the people of the various states whether the people and the states agree with the decision or otherwise.

Moreover, the people of at least one area in the nation (this one) have in past years, attempted to better the conditions of that minority all over the South. Good schools, better city and community housing, better pay scales and other aspects are written in the records for all people to see in behalf of the Negro.

Yet, what is the "reward" granted the Southern people for their efforts in attempting to raise the standard of living for the Southern Negro? Militant and very aggressive organizations have entered the South "in behalf" of the Negroes. They are forcing the issue immediately when such action is not only unwise, but harmful.

No one likes to have a group forced down their throats especially when the group has been bettered by the taxpayers of the South to an extent not possible by their own means.

The Southern people are calm and considerate. Moreover, they are in the main, possessed with great intelligence and patience. They hold few hates even though actions in past years have given them ample ground to possess such hates. Their desire is to get along with people. They have been able to accomplish this throughout the years since reconstruction due to their excellent traits.

Now, there seems to be a wholesale dislike for the South. Northern publishers, some of them, would seem to spend their idle hours attempting to dream up new attacks on this area of the United States. The title "Southern Gentleman" is portrayed as a joke by Northern comics, and on radio and television programs.

The Negro is pictured as oppressed and downtrodden by the whip-wielding Southern people. There are people in the North who honestly believe the horror stories told about the "poor Negro being chased through the fields by bloodhounds." Every left wing and "liberal" publication in the North and some in the South denounce Southern efforts at race relations and denounce the South in general. Led usually by the villifying Luce publications, this cabal becomes more boistrous by the week.

They attack the South. Perhaps in some cases, the attacks are justified. No people are perfect. Everyone makes a mistake and handles a problem in the wrong manner. That's human nature. There was only one perfect person in the history of the human race. What happened to Him is history.

What is the record of the "perfect" North? Great goodness, that's amazing. The record of that area in race relations is far from perfect. The history of race riots, stabbings, brutality, "Ciceros," Detroits, New Yorks, demonstrations and other significant considerations is well known to the average Southerner who is led to believe that all Northern people love the Negroes.

The truth is plain and extremely simple, and hardly a living Negro who has ever been North can deny it; the feeling of hate in the North is very pronounced.

Every year, droves of Negroes head North towards what they have been told is heaven. Every year, many more come sullenly home, disappointed to find that their ideal haven is a mass of seething race hatred and slum dwellings. Even vaunted New York City has a very pronounced segregation situation.

So, they return.

They return to the South which freely gives them an education, allows them to hold land as does every other American citizen, does not question their beliefs and allows them to live in peace, freedom and tranquility.

The record of Northern schooling, for instance, would be amusing in comparison if it was not miserable and despicable. Negroes, wherever you are, count the number of Negro teachers presently hired in Northern schools as against those in Southern schools.

More dismay will follow as the pre-fabricated Northern "ideal" falls apart before the eyes of a trusting, believing people.

Yet, this is not an attack on the North. Those people are certainly entitled to their feelings.

However, it is a demand and a statement to Northern agitators, both white and Negro, to let the South alone to handle its own problems. Southerners, both Negro and white, are ready and willing to do so. The record indicates that beyond any shadow of a doubt.

The Morning World is in possession of records from files both within and without the government which carefully describe the deliberate trouble being stirred in the South today. It possesses information concerning organizations such as the NAACP and others which would astonish the Southern people of both races.

Organizations such as this with hired Northern attorneys have no place in the South. Their manufactured trouble will bear some day bitter fruit which is precisely the aim in the minds of certain other groups. The record of the Southern people is a good one. It is a clean one. It is one which, demonstrated on a historical basis, has always been equal or better than that of other sections of the nation. Political scientists have often indicated that the South is the last fortress of Constitutionality in the nation.

Are there those who want and demand this broken down?

So it would appear.

The South is wondering, "Where do we go from here?"

"We've done everything in our power to help these people, to better their living standards and to assist them in times of difficulty." "Where do we go from here?"

"What do they want now?"

The answer to that is written clearly in the fiery statements of the agitators who demand "complete equality," and "integration."

The record of the human race indicates that no people will ever be forced to associate with those whom they do not choose to associate with. The efforts of the Northern agitators, the "service" organizations such as NAACP and the Civil Rights Congress are worsening instead of helping the situation. Intelligent and calm citizens on both sides realize this. Trouble can only be the outcome should the present trend continue.

The South wants, and the South demands to be let alone to handle its own problems.

If the otherwise continues, the South cannot be held responsible for the tragic consequences.

ORLANDO, FLA. SENTINEL

9-29 Orlando Sent.

Freedom Of Choice

SPEAKING ON THE 23d annual forum of the New York Herald Tribune last week, Philip G. Hammer, consulting economist and director of Atlanta's Metropolitan Planning Commission, said that the growth of the South cannot long continue unless the migration of the Negro to the North is stopped.

He points out that between 1940 and 1950 more than 1,400,000 Negroes left the South seeking new homes in other parts of the nation. Among this number were at least 600,000 able-bodied workers which the expanding economy of the South could not afford to lose. The earning power of these 600,000 laborers is figured at many millions of dollars.

An even more significant item of cost in these export figures is the money spent on education. "I would estimate," Mr. Hammer said, "that Negro male workers leaving the South each year take with them at least 60 million dollars worth of education paid for by the South."

Mr. Hammer is conveniently overlooking the fact, of course, that millions of northern people are also migrating to the South and that they are bringing with them millions of dollars worth of education paid for by the North.

A fair exchange is no robbery, we would say. We hate to lose the Negro as a source of labor and because as a rule he is a good citizen. But the choice is a free one and it is his to make. We do not believe he will be happier in the North. But if he thinks so, he should be privileged to go.

Study In Integration

AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT in racial relations is being conducted this week in New Rochelle, N. Y. where a group of Washington and Baltimore high school students are visiting the New Rochelle high school for an intimate first hand study of how integration works in actual practice.

They will find there that about 25 pct. of the students are Negroes, that they, or other Negroes before them, have been attending the New Rochelle school as far back as anyone can remember, that they are accepted in every way on terms of complete equality with the white students, and are encouraged to participate in athletics and other school activities.

Having made this trip to New Rochelle, it seems to us it would be a good idea for the Washington and Baltimore students to ask for a return engagement and to invite the New Yorkers down to their schools to see how integration is working there. And is seems to us the idea might well be further extended to invite other northerners down to Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi schools to see how segregation works.

They would find here, as the visitors to New Rochelle have undoubtedly found, that local customs naturally develop along lines of least resistence and that people, if left alone, are likely to do what they want to do, or at least what seems best for them to do. And they will find that the established system in the South is working about as well as could be expected.

They would probably be surprised to find how races of completely different cultures and background, live side by side in the same communities mutually dependent upon one another in their economic pursuits, totally incompatible in social interests, and yet almost completely without friction.

Because we find integration working in some communities, it by no means follows that it would work in other communities, or that segregation is wrong for them either in practice or in principle.

to grow along the entire eastern seaboard throughout the colonial period until in 1790 the census showed there were 697,624 slaves in this country, with almost as many in the North as there were in the South. At this time slavery was so little of any issue that the 1787 convention provided for the abolition of the trade after 1808.

However, the invention of the cotton gin in 1793 made cotton king in the South and created a demand for labor which far exceeded the ability of the young republic to supply. There were only 8,000 bales produced in this section in 1790. By 1820 there were 650,000 bales and by 1860, some

The Growth Of The American Negro

DEMONSTRATING AGAINST RACIAL integregation, white students in Delaware recently carried banners reading. "Go back where you came from," "Send the Negro back to Africa." And Vice-Pres. Nixon, speaking in Wilmington a few days later, declared, "We in America must bring into reality the dream of equality . . . so that the rest of the world will feel free to join our society of free nations instead of the Communist regime."

We doubt if the Delaware children realized the cruelty of the sentence they were imposing upon the American Negro or if Vice-Pres. Nixon had taken into consideration the historic achievements of the black race in this country when he apologized for the treatment they have received here.

The first African slaves arrived in this country on board a Dutch man-of-war in 1619, only a few years after the founding of Jamestown. Their numbers continued

OUR NEGROES' FOREBEARS
They Came In Chains

5,387,000. Despite laws prohibiting the slave trade, the number of Negroes increased from about a million in 1800 to 4,441,000 by 1860, less than half a million of whom were free.

And so it is seen that most of the Negroes in this country today are descended from slaves brought to our shores only a little more than a hundred years ago. Captured on the west coast of Equatorial Africa, they were shipped across the Atlantic under such appalling conditions that one-third of their number died in transit, the only immigrants who did not arrive in America of their own free will and accord in quest of liberty, freedom and equality.

As a matter of fact, most of the slaves brought to America, had been slaves in Africa. The natives along the coast soon developed the practice of seizing neighboring tribesmen from the interior and offering them to slave ships for their own protection. These were a primitive people, living in the worst part of Africa, endangered by elephants, boa constrictors and tsetse flies, targets of repeated attacks by neighboring tribesmen, victims of cannibalism and human sacrifices.

"It is probable that no people ever became resident on or near the west coast except under compulsion," says Ulrich Bonnell Phillips. "From the more easterly regions successive hordes have been driven after defeat in war." Conditions have not improved much there in the last 100 years. Even in British South Africa, the Negro is not recognized as a citizen to this day.

AFRICAN NATIVES TODAY
They are Still a Primitive Race

Our country owes no apology to any other nation on earth for rescuing the American Negro from the jungles of Africa. And the Negro owes no apology to any other race for the progress he has made since he started his somewhat belated but upward climb toward civilization under the just and humane laws of the American Govt.

Atty. Gen. Ervin Appeals For Time

ALTHOUGH ATTY. GEN. Ervin has been severely criticized for filing a brief as a friend of the court in a segregation case which does not immediately concern Florida, his wisdom in doing so is now apparent from the mass of statistics he has collected which shows that opposition to integration is not based on prejudice but on good and sufficient reasons. Sentinel

It is impossible to abolish segregation immediately, the attorney general points out, because of the need for repealing state laws pertaining to it, because of the necessity of redrawing school districts and rerouting school buses, because of overcrowded conditions in existing school buildings, because of the shortage of teachers, and because of racial differences in health, moral attitudes, and cultural and educational backgrounds. Orlando Sent

Pointing out that the achievement level of white students is two or three grades higher than that of Negroes, Mr. Ervin says that a great injustice would be done the latter if compelled to compete against the former and that the scholastic standards of the schools themselves would be bound to suffer.

The State Dept. of Education reveals that on annual uniform placement tests given high school seniors between 1949 and 1953 only five pct. of the Negroes ranked as high as the average white student, and that 59 pct. of the Negroes ranked with the lowest 10 pct. of the whites. Records at the University of Florida also show that students who ranked on these tests in the lower 50 pct. have less than a 50 pct. chance of making satisfactory grades in college. Jues. 18-54

The injustice of expecting Negro students, in their present stage of development, to compete against white students is further borne out by results on examinations given for state teachers' scholarships numbering 1,050 of $400 each. The Legislature has provided that these scholarships be apportioned between whites and Negroes according to their ratio in each county. Only in this way could the Negroes be assured of receiving their proportionate share of scholarships.

Ervin

The average score of the 740 12th grade white students taking the examinations last spring was 340. The average score of the 488 12th grade Negro students taking the same examinations was 237. In the previous year, 664 white applicants made an average score of 342 while the Negro applicants made an average of 237. The attorney general makes no claim that this difference in mental aptitudes is due to inherent, racial characteristics but rather to environmental factors which cannot be changed overnight.

He does not present these facts as obstacles which can never be overcome but only as illustrations of the difficulties confronting immediate desegregation. In effecting so radical a change in the way of life of millions of people, he appeals to the Supreme Court for time, and plenty of it.

The South Can't Be Coerced

GOV. WHITE OF Mississippi, true to the promises he has made in the past, has called upon the state legislature to abolish the public school system. "We shall resist by every means at our command," he said, "the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation." Sentinel

Such stubborn intransigence is hardly understandable to persons who are not familiar with the problems of the South. It simply does not make sense that people who would allow Negroes to cook their food, nurse their children, would not tolerate them in public schools which their own children attend. It can be attributed to nothing but ignorance and prejudice by those who do not understand. Orlando Sent. 9-10-54

Hodding Carter, editor and publisher of the Democrat-Times of Greenville, Miss., a Pulitzer Prize winner, and one of the South's most liberal thinkers on racial problems, points out in the current issue of the Reader's Digest that integration would be relatively simple if the racial ratio in the South were the same as that in the nation as a whole—one in 10. But in his state of Mississippi, it is 45 to 100, in his home town, 52 to 100, and in his county, 67 to 100.

Hodding Carter

He also points out that while in some cities there are educated Negroes of high standing, the rate of illiteracy in most rural areas, as well as the rate of communicable diseases, illegitimacy and law violations of both a minor and major nature, are far greater than among white people. These are purely statistical matters, have nothing to do with prejudice, and can be verified by anyone who is interested.

AS A RESULT of this cultural gap, and regardless of who is to blame, whether the southern planter, who used the Negro for a slave to harvest his crops, or the Yankee trader who captured the savage Senegambian on the coast of Africa and sold him to an unsuspecting Southerner in the first place, the fact remains today's Negroes can not be integrated in white schools without a serious lowering of educational standards.

Mr. Carter goes on to say it would be a mistake to think that three-fourths of the nation can inflict its views upon the remaining one-fourth "unless the affected group is largely willing to abide by it." "White Southerners cannot be forced to accept the court decision", he insists. "Until they want to do so there will not be actual, full integration." His point may well be that you simply cannot put 40 million people in jail.

Great progress has been made in the South toward raising the Negro's standard of living without benefit of outside coercion. The federal anti-lynching law failed to pass, but there has been no lynching in the South for three years. The FEPC also failed, but the South is the only part of the country where Negroes are employed in the public school system anywhere near in proportion to their actual numbers.

This progress will continue, we believe, as Hodding Carter does, if the flames of prejudice are not aroused by outside agitators and the political destiny of the South taken over by blatant demagogues as it was following the Reconstruction era.

PADUCAH, KENTUCKY SUN-DEMOCRAT

Editorial And Other Comment:

The Ending Of Segregation In The Public Schools

Kentucky is one of 17 states which have had separate public schools for white and colored pupils. This separation of the races is now at an end, at the direction of the U. S. Supreme Court, which on Monday ruled that segregation in school is unconstitutional.

The court wisely left for further consideration the formulation of specific decrees which will spell out exactly what was meant in this historic decision, but these are matters of detail only. For all practical purposes segregation of the races in public schools is over.

Here in Paducah and McCracken County the ending of segregation will not have a pronounced physical effect. Only one-ninth of our city school students are colored, these could with little difficulty be accommodated in the present white schools. Should all of the city's colored school buildings be abandoned there would be no great financial loss. All the buildings are old and could stand replacement; in fact, two new elementary schools for the colored have been in the planning for some time.

In McCracken County the colored pupil enrollment is only 182 in a total pupil census of 6,827. Paducah schools have about 700 colored pupils in a total enrollment of 6,300.

In other states, notably those in the South with large colored populations, the ending of segregation may present complicated problems. In some districts it will mean that colored schools will be absorbing white pupils.

Both races have been conditioned for the ending of segregation by the efforts of the colored people through the past 30 years to win for themselves the victory the Supreme Court gave them on Monday. There is no segregation now in 31 of the 48 states. "Jim Crow" is a thing of the past in most parts of the country. White and colored troops are no longer separated in our armed services. Colored students have been enrolled in numerous Southern schools in recent years. Paducah Junior College has had colored students in its classes since June 1, 1953.

The Supreme Court's decision will remove or at least remedy one great universal objection to America's claim that it is a democratic nation—other nations have never understood what they have come to term our oppression of the colored race while championing the rights of other races and minorities around the globe.

RALEIGH, N.C. NEWS AND OBSERVER

The Keynote

The Supreme Court of the United States has spoken. As good citizens we have no other course except to obey the law as laid down by the court. To do otherwise would cost us our respect for law and order, and if we lose that in these critical times we will have lost that quality which is the source of our strength as a State and as a Nation.

That statement, made by Irving Carlyle of Winston-Salem, the State Democratic Convention keynote speaker, and endorsed by the rising and resounding applause of the delegates, stated the attitude, the mood and the purpose of the people of North Carolina in the situation created by the Supreme Court segregation decision.

North Carolina in that combination of statement and applause made it clear that the Democrats of this State have no intention of falling in angry line behind some leaders in South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi.

This does not mean that leaders in North Carolina are less concerned about the problems presented by the Supreme Court decision. It does mean that this State and its leaders mean to face those problems with deliberation, thoughtfulness and unshaken respect for law.

"Voluntary"

There may, indeed, be some virtues in minimizing the difficulties of change under the Supreme Court's school segregation decision in some sort of "voluntary" separation of races in the schools. One thing which ought to be clear to everybody, however, is that at this point no "voluntary—or else" plan will work. If any volunteer separation in any degree takes place, it must be truly voluntary.

It may very well be that in the schools as in their churches the great majority of Southern Negroes will wish to maintain their separate identity. It would be unfortunate if, for instance, such a college as the North Carolina College ceased to be an institution giving colored people in the South opportunities for a demonstration of the capacities of their group in education. Most of the student body and faculty of that institution might long remain Negro on a truly voluntary basis. But any suggestion of "voluntary" separation which was based upon any form of covert compulsion would end that possibility. That is true of the whole school problem.

This whole manner requires the best wisdom the South possesses. Much planning must be done. But any plans which are based on the slick trick or the twisted word will have hard going and make the problem more difficult for all concerned.

Sound Advice

The Institute of Government, in its special report to Governor Umstead on the segregation decision, outlined a strong case for the appearance of North Carolina before the U. S. Supreme Court in October, when additional briefs on segregation will be filed. Now it is reported that the lawyers advising the Governor have been thinking along the same line.

It is difficult to understand how this State could seriously entertain the idea of avoiding the invitation of the Supreme Court to offer a brief setting forth suggested procedures for implementing the decision outlawing school segregation. While it is true that North Carolina was not directly involved in the case which brought the decision, it is equally true that for all practical purposes the State has as much at stake in the case as the legal participants.

As the Institute so forcefully pointed out, the states invited to submit briefs would not have received the invitations if the Supreme Court did not want to secure advice on the problem of reducing the decision to workable proportions when it is ordered into effect. Thus the Southern states will be given an opportunity to present their views with the implied assurance that those views will be given weight in subsequent decisions.

One of the standard arguments of those who have favored segregated schools in the South is that segregation stems from special problems not common to other sections of the country. To boycott the Supreme Court, as it seeks a delineation of those special problems, would be a tacit admission that such problems may be, after all, a myth. And, as the Institute noted, another state cannot speak with absolute sureness and comprehensive knowledge about North Carolina's views on this important subject.

When the segregation advisory committee meets here on Sept. 10, the State will have only five days in which to signify to the Supreme Court its intentions with regard to filing a brief. It is well that the lawyers have indicated this soon that they have been giving thought to the proposal.

The Negro Teacher

One individual who has a special and critical position in the whole problem of ending segregation in the schools is the Southern Negro schoolteacher. His problem has a special interest to North Carolina, which employs more Negro schoolteachers than any state in the Union. In a recent issue, The U. S. News and World Report presented significant questions and facts about this matter. It said:

> With an end to school segregation decreed for the South, Negro teachers there are coming up against a real question. It is this: Can they look to the Northern states for teaching jobs if these are wiped out by an integration of Negro and white schools in the South?
>
> The answer, on the basis of the present use of Negro teachers in the non-segregated schools of Northern states, appears to be: No.
>
> Negro leaders themselves are convinced that thousands of Negro teachers will go out of Southern schools with the end of segregation. They have seen this happen in many Northern communities with the integration of schools. They expect to see it happen again in the South.
>
> As it stands now, the South is the land of opportunity for the Negro teacher. Seven Negro teachers are employed in the segregated schools of the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia for each one employed in the 31 non-segregated states outside the South.
>
> A few illustrations tend to point up the difference in the use of Negro teachers in the segregated and the non-segregated states.
>
> Mississippi alone has as many Negro teachers in its schools as do the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Kansas put together. North Carolina employs as many Negro teachers as do the seven states of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, California and Indiana, all put together.
>
> These figures cover all teacher employment in the states below college level, in both public and private schools.
>
> Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and New York have about one million Negro residents each—some of them a few more, some a few less. The four Southern states have segregated school systems. New York's system, legally, is non-segregated.
>
> Mississippi has more than three Negro teachers for each one in New York. Alabama and Georgia employ almost five for each one in New York. North Carolina has more than five for each one in New York.
>
> Further consideration of the figures show that North Carolina employs one Negro teacher for every 123 Negroes in its population. New York employs one for every 542 Negroes in its population. Obviously, employment in the schools is a significant part of the base of the economic life of the Negro in the South.
>
> This is a matter which deserves the careful thought of both races in shaping any plans for our schools in the future. The loss of jobs in this one field where the Southern Negro has an equal economic chance today would be a serious matter not merely for the Negro teachers, but the South itself.

Courageous Action

Many may question the rightness of the action of the Greensboro school board in announcing its purpose to promptly conform to the Supreme Court decision on segregation. No one can question its courage.

By a vote of 6 to 1 (with the one dissenter questioning not the resolution but its timing) the board ordered an immediate study of ways and means of ending public school segregation in Greensboro. And none of them were in doubt about the meaning and purpose of the resolution. Its introducer announced that its purpose was to "let the community, the State, the South and, if necessary, the nation, know that we here propose to live under the rule of law."

Clearly also the school board and school officials acted in answer to proposals made in other parts of the South to abandon schools rather than submit to non-segregation in them. At the same meeting the school superintendent, who will make the study ordered, declared that "there are certain officials in the South who have said they will abolish the public school system if the decision of the court should stand. That, I think, would be disastrous."

Greensboro's school board has made it clear that, in dealing with this serious situation, there will be more Southerners engaged and concerned than those who have been most angrily articulate. The decision has created a great and difficult problem for school men and thoughtful men, their children, their schools and their civilization. They do not mean to leave its solutions to those who have loudly announced they are ready to abandon the schools or reject the laws.

Those politicians in some other Southern States who have made the issue the abolition of the public schools will find little support in North Carolina. This State is concerned as other States are about the results of the decision. But what it will seek is a solution which will save and advance the cause of education for all its people. That may not be easy. Nothing else will suffice.

The problem before the South calls for creative, conscientious thinking, not for precipitate and destructive anger.

Wiser Course Here

The Richmond Times-Dispatch thinks Governor Stanley has named "a reasonably good" commission to study the questions raised by the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

It expresses some concern, however, that he named nobody but some of the members of the Legislature and that his commission therefore will contain no representative of the Negro race. In this matter, The Times-Dispatch said, it seemed desirable that the group include qualified representatives of Virginia's Negro citizens, who numbered 734,211 in the 1950 census out of the state's total population of 3,318,680, or between one-fifth and one-fourth." The Richmond paper added:

"The best thought of the State, both white and colored, will have to be brought to bear on this problem, for solutions are going to be far from easy."

There would be no better way to prevent the expression of thoughtful colored people who are concerned about this matter than to exclude them entirely from public consideration of it. Such a procedure will leave all Negro expression on this subject to those organized groups which see no need for anything but precipitate action. Certainly no better way could be found for silencing those Negroes at home who realize the difficulties and dangers in this problem than by eliminating all local Negroes from State groups considering it and thus leave Negro expression about the matter to aggressive national Negro organizations.

That is what has been done in Virginia. Fortunately for all, Governor Umstead has followed a much wiser course in this State by including in his advisory committee representatives of both races and private citizens as well as public officials.

RALEIGH, N.C. NEWS AND OBSERVER

Nice Distinction

Attorney General McMullan has made inquiry and received assurances that North Carolina's status will not be affected by his appearance at further hearings on pending cases involving racial segregation in public schools.

Mr. McMullan wanted to be sure he was not making North Carolina a party to the cases of four other states which were decided, in principle, by the court last May

It is well enough to get the record straight. But the distinction about involvement is not important. As a practical matter, North Carolina and all other states which have segregated schools are already involved. And any citizen could, if he chose, carry North Carolina into court. What is important is that the decision to integrate the schools should be worked out in an orderly way, after due consideration of all the serious factors involved. Fortunately, North Carolina and the court seem to be cooperating to that end.

"Calm, Careful"

All North Carolinians who wish well for their State will endorse the statement of Governor Umstead that "this is no time for rash statements." This, says the Governor in an official comment on the Supreme Court's recent decision is a time for "calm, careful and thoughtful study." Anybody who undertakes to manufacture fury in this time of great problem, to stir the fears of the people or complicate a difficult State problem for their own personal or political benefit acts in disregard of the safety of North Carolina.

Governor Umstead could not have made his statement at a better time. The heat of a political campaign increases the danger that some men might act in carelessness of the future welfare of the State if they thought they might get some quick benefit for their candidate or candidates. But as the Governor's statement suggests, such "rash statements" in the spoken word or the printed word, said publicly or spread surreptitiously, could do much damage and no good.

This is a time for "calm, careful and thoughtful study," not for rash statements or even more dangerous —or calculatedly violent—acts.

Proper Course

The State Board of Education has taken the wise and proper course in waiting for the final decree of the Supreme Court before taking any action in terms of the segregation decision. Obviously nothing could be gained and serious mistakes might be made if North Carolina made plans for change without full knowledge of the how and when of change required of it.

The action of the State Board constituted no such defiance of law as some leaders have counseled in some states. The resolution which it passed on Thursday was taken in terms of that "calm and reasonable" attitude which the Board urged upon all citizens. Such an attitude in this difficult problem clearly should involve a desire to know all the law and the facts before taking action.

There is no place for either precipitate action or impotent defiance in this matter.

The Right to Lead

The one man who has the greatest responsibility in the leadership of the State in connection with the situation created by the Supreme Court decision is Governor Umstead. In dealing with this explosive matter it would be well if the people of the State confidently let him take the initiative in all acts or plans for acts, proposals or statements for the people of North Carolina. No one else has such right to speak or act. No one else is so burdened with the responsibility to act wisely for all the people. All the people will be best served if they wait for his leadership in this matter.

Undoubtedly many may have good and valuable ideas as to what should be done. At this point those with any or all ideas would be wise if they conveyed them to the Governor who will need the advice of citizens as well as the Attorney General and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. Such a course will be more useful than any individual efforts to force one course or another. Not all North Carolinians agree with Governor Umstead on all policies. All sensible North Carolinians do agree that Governor Umstead is a man who loves the State over which he presides and will be anxious to lead it in intelligence and devotion.

It may be that when Governor Umstead shapes the pattern of his leadership in this matter, many will disagree with him. That will be their right. At this point, however, when steps taken now and things said now may make more difficult the solution of problems later, there should be a general and unanimous agreement to leave the initiative in the hands of William Umstead. If any, later, disagree with the wisdom of the course he proposes, none can doubt now that he will give the problem the best in his mind and his heart.

This is too serious a matter for scattered, private, political, divisive dealing. It is a time which calls for leadership and in which leadership deserves the full, unimpeded, unembarrassed right to lead.

Wise Decision

The Governor and the Attorney General have taken a wise course in deciding to file a brief as friend of the court in the segregation cases now awaiting final decrees in the United States Supreme Court.

Since the court's sweeping decision early last summer there has never been any possibility that North Carolina would not be profoundly affected by the decision. The suggestion, that because North Carolina was not a party to the cases, it should not accept the court's invitation to appear and advise it in the formulation of its decrees was an ostrich-like proposal.

There is no sand in which this State can hide its head. North Carolina contains more Negroes than any other state in the union. The State itself operates the school system. Obviously under such circumstances no state has greater need to afford itself of the court's invitation to state its case, to emphasize its problem, and to present proposals which might reduce the danger and distress involved in the great change.

The decision to file a brief was sensible. The brief which is presented will require not merely law but statesmanship if it is to serve the State. Indeed, North Carolina could serve the whole South well if in good spirit but great candor, if presented the dimensions of the difficulties involved in this matter and avowed the determination of this State to conform to the law of this land. No brief now will change this decision which the court has already made. A statesmanlike brief now could help in devising means of application which would reduce some of the stresses and strains which the great change entails.

North Carolina in its brief should neither truckle nor defy. But it should stand in the court as a Southern state whose record of justice in the education of the Negro entitles it to be heard and will undoubtedly receive an attentive hearing. Its appearance will serve the court and serve the South, the children and the schools.

The South Never Needed Wisdom More, Nor Fury Less

The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the school segregation cases is the law of the land—and, unhappily many may feel, but certainly all know, the law of the South.

Nothing will change that. Clarity is given to that fact by the complete unanimity of the nine justices. No erudite lawyers are required to interpret the meaning of a decision which says in the most simple language that segregation in public education in America is no longer legal. Fortunately the Court also declared that application of its decision will not be imposed precipitately—probably not for a year or more.

Already the decision has brought forth in the South reactions of disappointment, dismay, anger and resentment. They are not unexpected following a decision which, more than any other in the history of the country or the court, presents so difficult a problem to so many people. Clearly, however, the very sweeping quality of the decision makes it the more essential that it be faced in the South with the composure and the wisdom for which fear and anger are no substitutes.

Many thoughtful men may feel, as Senator Richard Russell said yesterday, that the decision is "a flagrant abuse of judicial power." No appeal lies from any abuse of the power of the Supreme Court except by amendment to the Constitution of the United States or resort to rebellion. It is clear that no amendment permitting what the Court has declared to be illegal could be adopted or even seriously contemplated. It is equally clear that the modern South, much as many of its people may dislike the law enunciated in this decision, is not prepared for rebellion. Finally, whatever may be the proposals of some leaders, not even at this juncture is the South prepared to abandon public effort to educate the children of the South.

No sensible, informed person would minimize the proportions of the problem presented to the South by this decision. The practical dangers and difficulties involved are apparent. This decision amounts in effect not only to the judicial repeal of existing state laws but a judicially ordered alterations of the customs, habits and convictions of millions of Americans. It involves emotion as well as education. It involves not only justices in a marble court building in Washington but parents and children in the most remote school districts in the Southern states. It involves great numbers of people who sincerely believe that they are right and the Court is wrong. Quite simply, the decision involves the most explosive subject on the face of the South or the face of the earth.

Such facts make it more than ever imperative that the South which is primarily involved in this epoch-making national decision face it with all the composure and good sense of which it is capable. Distasteful as it may be, Southerners will have the task of putting into practice the law which the Supreme Court only put on paper. Quick expressions of anger by Southern leaders—precipitate acts of defiance by Southern legislatures or other officials—will only make more difficult the long job of the South under the law.

Furthermore, if this were not the wisest course for the years ahead, it is clearly the practical course for the months ahead. Under the decision the attorneys general of the Southern states will appear before the Court in October for argument as to how and when the sweeping decision will be put into effect. That may be the occasion upon which wisdom for all concerned may be most effectively brought to bear in dealing with this supremely important matter. The South should have much to contribute to the design of the application of the decision which will then be shaped. And at that time the South will be most persuasive if its representatives come from a background of good sense and good will and not loud anger and impotent defiance.

The South has never needed wisdom more nor fury less than it does this moment.

RICHMOND, VA. TIMES DISPATCH

Virginia's Grave School Problems

The public schools of Virginia are faced with unprecedentedly knotty problems as some 10,000 white and colored superintendents, supervisors and teachers gather in Richmond for the annual conventions of the Virginia Education Association and the Virginia Teachers Association.

Not only are they faced with the Supreme Court's segregation decision (not yet implemented with decrees), but there is also the record-breaking oncoming crop of children, for whom we have nothing like enough teachers or physical facilities.

It will tax the vision, ingenuity and financial strength of the entire Commonwealth to solve these two extremely difficult and complex problems—problems which are necessarily interrelated.

Meanwhile it is encouraging that the public school system of Virginia enjoys the asset of good leadership, a leadership that has its feet on the ground and is refreshingly free from the extremist doctrines as to curriculum and attitude that have taken root in some other areas of the United States.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Dowell J. Howard is a level-headed administrator who is aware of the good to be found in the traditional emphasis on fundamentals, while at the same time keeping his eyes open for helpful innovations.

His statements with respect to the problems arising out of the segregation issue have been commendably free from bombast, and have been addressed to the need for a meeting of minds. His approach, and that of the State Board of Education, has emphasized avoidance of inflammatory and provocative declarations.

Apropos of the perennial controversy involving conservative vs. progressive educational policies, we should like also to commend the excellent article in the October Atlantic by H. I. Willett, Richmond's school superintendent, and president-elect of the American Association of School Administrators.

Entitled "Public Schools Under Pressure," the article deals cogently with the principal criticisms leveled at the public schools in recent years. Mr. Willett exhibits in this article the balanced viewpoint that we knew him to possess. He actually manages to discuss the schools from practically every angle without once using such time-worn cliches of the educationalists as "democracy in the classroom," "democratic living," "life-adjustment education" and "societally significant subjects."

We like to believe that Mr. Willett's informed and well-presented discussion is typical of the thinking that prevails in Virginia today concerning our school problems. For while the Virginia public school system shows here and there the effects of the weird educational doctrines that have taken root in many parts of this country, those doctrines are distinctly less prevalent, by and large, in the Old Dominion.

That is something to be thankful for. We cannot hope to build a satisfactory public school system in Virginia on an unsound foundation of fads and phony educational theories. The sharp criticisms that have been made of the American public schools in late years have been, in the main, sincere, and have usually come from persons who are genuinely convinced that anti-intellectualism has taken root in them, and that boys and girls are being pampered, if not ruined, by lack of discipline and by courses in such inanities as lipstick application and how to wield a knife and fork.

It is good to know that relatively little of this sort of thing is to be found in Virginia, and that the men and women who have gathered in Richmond for the next few days from all over the State are providing our public school system with a sane and balanced, yet forward-looking, leadership.

What the Segregation Decision Means to the South

In the most momentous decision in the interracial field since the Dred Scott case of 1857, the United States Supreme Court yesterday held unanimously that segregation in the public schools must go. Apparently the ruling will not become effective before the opening of the school session a year from next September, but the justices must be brought to realize that considerably more time than that should be allowed for the South to make the complicated adjustments that will be called for.

We had hoped that the court would uphold the "separate but equal doctrine," but since it did not do so, this is a time for calm and unhysterical appraisal of the situation by the officials and people of Virginia and the other 16 States where segregated schools are now required. The serious problems created by this decision can only be solved in such an atmosphere, and over a period of time.

Governor Stanley's restrained statement that he is planning a conference of State and local officials, and that he does not now contemplate calling a special session of the General Assembly, is in the proper vein. So is State Superintendent of Public Instruction Dowell J. Howard's similar declaration. These officials have set a good example in calling on the citizenry to meet the issue calmly and reasonably.

The Supreme Court might have been on sounder ground if it had entered its decrees yesterday in the five cases before it, and granted a specific number of years for compliance, thus lending uncertainty throughout the 17 States directly affected. It would have been desirable, too, if the court had at the same time specified the abolition of segregation by stages or steps, with, say, 10 per cent eliminated the first year after the decrees became effective, 40 per cent more two years later, perhaps, and the remaining 50 per cent some years after that. In this way, all uncertainty as to the timing and method of the tremendous shift would have been eliminated at once.

Perhaps the attorneys-general of the affected States will be able to reach agreement as to timing and method, prior to their appearance to argue the cases before the court in the Fall. But, owing to the difference in viewpoint between the States in this part of the South and those nearer the Gulf, where the situation is considerably more acute, it may not be possible for them to agree. In that event, we devoutly trust that the court will not, because of the failure to agree, disregard the South's views in the matter, and make the decrees effective at a time, and in accordance with a method, which would be entirely unworkable in those numerous areas where the people are far from ready, either psychologically or otherwise, for education of both races in the same schools.

Virginia's Acute Problem

Let it not be forgotten that in Virginia, for example, there are 23 counties where the Negro school population is larger than the white. The map of the State published on Page 7 also shows that in seven of these counties the Negro school population is from 61 to 70 per cent of the total, with Charles City and Surry approaching 80 per cent.

There are scores of such counties throughout the South, and the problem of how they will meet this ruling of the Supreme Court is a real one. While it is true that local school officials and boards have considerable leeway in deciding what children shall go to which school, there is only a limited opportunity in the rural counties mentioned above for sending most Negro children to one school, and most white children to another, since in the typical situation children of both races are scattered throughout the county.

The problem is even more acute where, as is often the case, regiona[l] greater than in the upper South, which makes the problem there that much more acute.

Since the percentage of Negroes

The farther South one goes, the greater the number of counties where Negro school children greatly outnumber white school children. Not only so, but the proportion of Negroes to whites throughout each of the deep Southern States is in the population of any political unit is usually the key to the interracial problem there, it can readily be seen that the Supreme Court's decision has raised many extremely difficult and complex questions in areas where the colored population is large. That is emphatically true of the counties of Tidewater, Southside and Piedmont Virginia.

It is true, although to a lesser degree, of the cities in these sections of Virginia. In Richmond, for example, Negro school children in 1950 made up 31.7 per cent of the school population. Although the colored population is much more concentrated in certain areas of this city than it is in the average Eastern Virginia county, especially difficult problems are sure to arise in those parts of Richmond where the white and colored residential areas adjoin or overlap.

We should bear in mind that the problem of working out integration of the public schools, in accordance with the Supreme Court's decree, is not going to be solved in the same way in each of the 17 States, or in each of the political subdivisions of those States. Varying conditions and sharply contrasting population percentages are certain to evoke a variety of approaches.

A Mild Dislocation

In Virginia, the Shenandoah Valley and Southwest Virginia counties afford an excellent example of the relatively simple problem that exists in many transmontane and mountain sections of the South. Those areas have few Negroes, and the court's decree consequently involves comparatively mild social dislocations there.

The map of Virginia on Page 7 shows that in 22 counties of the Valley and Southwest Negro children constitute less than 10 per cent of the school population. All these counties, shown white on the chart, have a minor problem compared to that which exists in the Eastern part of the Commonwealth. The cities in the Western region also have a low percentage of Negro school children.

Another important matter that will require much earnest thought is how to fit the thousands of Negro schoolteachers and principals into the integrated schools of Virginia and other Southern States. It is important to note that there are hardly any colored teachers in the public schools of the nonsegregated States. Indeed, Virginia alone has more of them than all the 31 nonsegregated States put together.

To what extent will the white parents and children of Virginia and the other Southern States agree to have their children taught by colored teachers and to serve under Negro principals? These Negroes are extremely useful citizens, and it is to be hoped that a maximum number of them will be retained in the school system. The fact remains that a practical problem exists here.

An important consideration in this whole discussion is the undoubted fact that full integration throughout the 17 States will take a long time. A vast number of local and individual problems will have to be worked out, and each of the separate localities and States must adjust to the new dispensation. This could easily take a decade or two.

Be it remembered that the first Negro to enter a State-supported university professional school for whites in one of the 17 States affected by yesterday's decision was admitted in 1938, when DONALD MURRAY was admitted to the University of Maryland following the Supreme Court's GAINES decision. No fewer than 16 years have passed, and there are five Southern State universities which still do not admit Negroes to either graduate or professional schools, much less to their undergraduate departments.

So despite yesterday's ruling by the court, epoch-making though it is, segregation in the public schools of the South is not about to be eliminated. Final achievement of that objective is years, perhaps many years, in the future.

What seems desirable today, in the light of the court's finding, is for men and women of good will in both races to keep their heads, to avoid threats and hysteria, and to seek reasonable and sane solutions. It is only thus that the many knotty problems posed by yesterday's truly historic decision can be solved.

RICHMOND, VA. TIMES DISPATCH

Dixie Press Hopeful As to Court Ruling

The tone of the press, especially the Southern press, with respect to the Supreme Court's segregation decision, is encouraging. The extracts published on this page serve to provide a fair cross-section of opinion, insofar as we have been able to gather it.

There is one quite violent editorial in the lot, and there are other papers which obviously are disturbed. Yet, on the whole, the prevailing attitude is one of willingness to try to work out solutions within the law, and to attack the problem in a hopeful spirit.

We have purposely included only one editorial from outside the area directly affected by the decision, since practically all editorial comment in the North and West has been of the same general tenor. The prevailing view in those regions, which do not have segregation now, is that separate education of the races ought to be abolished as speedily as possible in the Southern and border States, and that such abolition can be accomplished without great difficulty.

Editors in the 17 States which have segregation are in a far better position to appreciate the practical problems involved in the adoption of integration. Most of them wish this country to be democratic in fact, as well as in name, but they know that such things cannot be achieved by simply waving a wand and issuing a decree.

The percentage of Negroes in the States of the North and West, except in a few urban areas, is everywhere far below what it is in the South. The South, on the other hand, is confronted, in view of the Supreme Court's decision, with the problem of how to eliminate segregation in scores of school districts where the white children are heavily outnumbered by the colored children. It isn't going to be easy.

The encouraging aspect of the matter lies in the apparent willingness of so many Southerners of both races to recognize the difficulties, to consider them without rancor, and to seek earnestly for adequate answers to the manifold questions that are certain to present themselves. It is only in such a spirit that the terribly complex and widely ramified problems confronting the South can be solved.

Negro Percentage In Schools Is High

An interesting, and vitally important, aspect of the public school situation in Richmond and most other Virginia cities, viewed in the light of the Supreme Court's segregation decision, is the fact that the percentage of colored children in the public schools of those cities is considerably higher than the percentage of Negroes in the population. The same situation prevails in many Virginia counties.

This makes the problem of integrating the two races into the same schools more difficult than it would otherwise be. Experience in Northern and Western States which have no school segregation is generally to the effect that where the ratio of colored students is low, the problem is a relatively simple one, but that difficulties mount as the percentage of Negro children goes up.

Consider the figures for Richmond City. The Negro population of Richmond was 31.7 per cent of the whole in 1950, but Negro school children made up no less than 40.9 per cent. By last month, the latter percentage had mounted to 42.4 per cent. While the Negro population of the city may also have grown, percentagewise, in the four years since the decennial census, it is unquestionably far below 42.4 per cent.

There is a similar statistical picture in Norfolk, Roanoke, Petersburg, Bristol and other Virginia centers of population, although in a few communities, such as Danville and Suffolk, the proportion of Negro school children is below the proportion of Negroes in the population.

The high Negro birthrate is a prime factor in the larger percentage of Negro school children where it exists. Here in Richmond there seem also to be at least two other factors: (1) Children in the private and parochial schools here are nearly all white, so that the white total in the public schools is thus considerably reduced; (2) housing developments outside the corporate limits of Richmond are almost entirely for white families, so that the Negro families stay inside the city and furnish a larger share of the pupils in the city's public schools.

But while colored children make up an exceptional percentage of the school population, the cost of educating them under an integrated system isn't likely to be much less, statements of certain opponents of segregation to the contrary, notwithstanding.

HARRY ASHMORE, author of the just-published book, The Negro and the Schools, says in that volume, on the basis of much careful research, that "segregation has not been an important separate factor in school costs until now, and is not likely to be in the immediate future." He goes on to declare:

> If at any point in the past discrimination had been wiped out by total integration, the effect would have been that some Negroes would have gone to better schools and some whites to worse—but no appreciable economies would have resulted to make additional funds available for improvement of the total system.

The problem of financing the education of huge numbers of colored children, who, in many cities and counties, are crowding into the schools in disproportionate numbers, is obviously large. It is one of the many aspects of the situation precipitated by the Supreme Court's decision which will have to receive major attention. Apparently, however, the elimination of segregation will not prove a preponderant factor in enabling Virginia and the other Southern States, in the years just ahead, to carry the financial burden of providing adequate schools for both races.

Business Slippage Slowing Down

When the hemline of business began to shrink early this year, there was much derisive pointing of Fair Deal fingers, and exultant jeers, because its slip was showing. This was bad manners, but then, since when has politics ever been noted for chivalry?

Besides, the derision was no directed at business, but at the EISENHOWER administration, which had been unfortunate enough to take office at the very time the postwar prosperity boom had begun to subside.

On Monday of this week, however, the Federal Reserve Board reported that while industrial output in the United States had dropped 2 per cent below March, business slippage has now slowed down. Production in May showed every sign of continuing at the April rate. This is what the economists call "a flattening out" of the downward curve.

Employment has followed the general trend, as it naturally would. Joblessness increased only slightly in March, according to the Bureau of the Census, followed by a leveling-off of decline in April and during the first half of May. Many plants recalled workers previously furloughed. Unemployment insurance benefit claims, however, are reported practically unchanged since early February.

The same steadying infuences appear to be at work in agriculture. But basic grain prices, while only slightly less than a year ago, and some 3 per cent above the pre-Korea months of 1950, are still depressed by huge surpluses. The "curse of price support" is offsetting "the curse of plenty, but this vicious cycle can be slowed down very little, if at all, thanks to holdover laws.

According to the United States Soil Conservation Service, 3,500,000 acres of grazing land put under the plow in five Southwestern States since 1942 (to boost production during the war years) are still in tillage, and aggravating Secretary Benson's surplus dilemma.

In the livestock department however, the law of supply and demand is asserting itself. Number of hogs raised dropped sharply two years ago when pork was selling at 76 per cent of parity. As a result mid-April prices, now without benefit of support, have risen to 128 per cent of parity.

For similar reasons cattle prices have recovered from their slump of last year. Consumer demand remains strong, because beef has been retailing at reasonable prices.

The worst thing that could happen to offset the over-all trend forward business stability would be a "war-buying scare", should the never fully adjusted baseball President indicate our participation in Far Eastern fringe wars. That might bring immediate demand for price controls—and then the pro- verbial fat would be in the fire again.

To the grammatically sensitive, "He went to see The King and I" sounds odd, but then this class of person has

(South Carolina) NEWS AND COURIER

Mr. Eisenhower's 'FEPC' Decree

The Eisenhower administration has differed from the Truman administration largely in the matter of integrity and attitude toward business.

There have been no serious scandals within the present administration. Security risks are being weeded out of government. President Eisenhower repeatedly has shown respect and sympathy for the businessman, who was portrayed as something close to a national villain by the Dealers.

When it comes to the Negro question, however, there is little to choose between the handling of that problem by the Republicans and by the Democrats. Neither national party has shown the slightest regard for states rights in dealing with racial matters. Both have played disgraceful politics.

For instance, President Eisenhower recently issued an executive order which requires manufacturers to mix the races among their employes, if the manufacturers expect to do business with the government. The order applies not only to contractors, but to their sub-contractors.

This order is completely dictatorial. It seeks to do by executive fiat something that Congress has repeatedly refused to do by law. In effect, it means that Mr. Eisenhower has "enacted" the FEPC law, without the formality of sending the law to Congress.

Is his executive order unconstitutional? The Supreme Court, which already has ruled that the races must be mixed in schools, doubtless would say that it is entirely legal.

But, as Truman Sensing of the Southern States Industrial Council points out, ours is supposed to be a government by law and not by executive edict or judicial edict. If the President can mix races and control the economy through edicts, he has usurped the power of Congress.

The dangers are obvious. If it is established that a President can fix the rules under which the government buys materials, then we are paving the way for all kinds of abuses.

Suppose we should have as President an unscrupulous potential Hitler, who should rule that the government would buy no products from factories which employed Jews. If the law can be made to discriminate "in favor," it can be twisted to discriminate "against."

This is a matter which affects not only the South but all of the United States. Apparently we can look to neither party for support of the principles of a constitutional republic, in which certain rights are guaranteed to the states, and government is vested in executive, judicial and LEGISLATIVE branches.

RICHMOND, VA. TIMES DISPATCH

The South Needs Time to Integrate

When some 14 Southern Governors, or their official representatives, meet in Richmond next Thursday, on call of GOVERNOR STANLEY, to discuss the recent ruling of the United States Supreme Court outlawing segregation in the public schools, they may try to agree on a statement to be presented to the court this Fall. Perhaps that statement will urge the highest tribunal in the land to allow a minimum of several years for the transition from segregated to nonsegregated schools.

Such a period of grace is absolutely essential to success, in areas where there is an appreciable number of colored people. Where the proportion of Negro school children is below 5 per cent it is probable that the transition can be made to work smoothly in a short time. Elsewhere the story is likely to be quite different.

Strong supporting evidence for this thesis is contained in an article by CABELL PHILLIPS published on May 30 by the New York Times Magazine. This article deals with the experience which the small town of Jeffersonville, Ind., across the Ohio River from Louisville, has had with integration over the past three years. All segregated schools were abolished by the Indiana Legislature, effective in 1951.

Jeffersonville, Ind., is in Clark County, and the county and town combined have a population of about 10 per cent colored. The prevailing attitude on the race question is comparable to that in Louisville or Richmond, says MR. PHILLIPS.

It is obvious, however, that the problem in Jeffersonville is far less acute than it will be in Richmond and in dozens of Virginia counties and cities, where the proportion of Negroes is vastly beyond 10 per cent.

Yet even in this Indiana town, MR. PHILLIPS concludes, on the basis of three years' experience with the practical outworking of integration, that "it is wise to make the change gradually, beginning with the lower grades and working up over a three-to-six-year period to the high school level."

This declaration conforms to the strongly held views of those Virginians and other Southerners who are studying the prospects facing the South, in the light of the recent Supreme Court decision. Any hasty forcing of the situation, before the ground can be properly prepared is likely to arouse such antagonisms and animosities as to end all hope of a satisfactory adjustment.

Another thing in the PHILLIPS article needs to be pondered. It is that fewer Negro schoolteachers are employed in Indiana today than was the case three years ago, when integration was voted by the State Legislature. In Jeffersonville not one of the 24 colored teachers is now employed in a full-time teaching capacity.

This is indeed tragic. These teachers, like their nearly 6,000 Negro counterparts in the public schools of Virginia, are fine citizens. It is important that they not be deprived of the positions for which they have trained themselves. The article to which we refer quotes a prominent Indiana school official as saying: "We just haven't had the nerve to try to put colored teachers into predominantly white classrooms."

Such has been the situation in this Middle Western State, and in a community of that State which is not more than 10 per cent colored. As we have pointed out before, there are fewer Negro teachers in Indiana and in all the other 30 nonsegregated States combined, than there are in Virginia alone at the present time.

The plight of the Negro teachers in Indiana is only one phase of the problem, but it is an important phase. It serves to point up the need for adequate time to fit a maximum number of colored teachers into the Southern schools.

For this and other reasons, the elements that are recklessly trying to pressure Virginia and the rest of the South into integrating all the public schools by next September, are the Negro's worst enemies.

Stanley Appoints Race Commission

GOVERNOR STANLEY has named a reasonably good bipartisan legislative commission to study the race problem in Virginia and recommend a course of action for the State, after the United States Supreme Court hands down its decrees outlawing segregation in the public schools.

Those decrees apparently will not be forthcoming until some time in 1955, since the court will not even set the date for argument on them until the opening of its October term. The decrees could affect drastically the school session which opens in September, 1955, and it is entirely conceivable that a special session of the General Assembly will have to be called prior to that time to deal with them.

This means that the 32-man legislative commission should begin its inquiry as promptly as possible, since the nature of the decrees could be such as to call for important decisions by the State Legislature prior to the opening of the schools slightly more than one year hence.

THE TIMES-DISPATCH has expressed the hope that GOVERNOR STANLEY would name a citizens' commission to study this problem, and that this commission would include both whites and Negroes. A commission composed of legislators and nonlegislators would have had certain advantages over one composed entirely of members of the General Assembly. It seemed desirable that the group include qualified representatives of Virginia's Negro citizens, who numbered 734,211 in the 1950 census out of the State's total population of 3,318,680, or between one-fifth and one-fourth.

It is taken for granted that Negroes will have an adequate opportunity to express themselves before the commission, along with other Virginians. Yet this cannot give them the feeling of participating in the group's decisions that membership on that body would have done.

The best thought of the State, both white and colored, will have to be brought to bear on this problem, for solutions are going to be far from easy. Something which might appear wise and feasible in a Southwest Virginia county with 2 per cent colored population isn't going to be at all possible in a Southside or Tidewater county with a population more than 50 per cent Negro.

Everybody concerned, including the Supreme Court, should remember that.

Why a Constitutional Convention?

It is encouraging that the only one of Virginia's 10 congressional districts which seems to want to call a constitutional convention to deal with the problem of segregation in the schools, is the Fourth District of Southside Virginia. This district is, of course, the one with the highest percentage of Negro population.

No appreciable sentiment for such a convention seems to have been expressed in the First District, which includes the lower Tidewater counties from the James River northward to the Potomac. These counties also are heavily populated with Negroes.

A constitutional convention would serve no useful purpose, and it is not clear why legislators and others from the Fourth District who attended the meeting last Saturday night at Petersburg think a convention would accomplish anything.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL LINDSAY ALMOND says he sees no reason to have a convention—although he has been emphatic in declaring that he believes it will be possible to work out the problem of integration satisfactorily within the law. He has also said that he does not think Virginia could give up its public school system under any such arrangement as those proposed in Georgia and South Carolina.

The Fourth District is the only one which, thus far, has convened a meeting similar to that brought together at Petersburg by CONGRESSMAN WATKINS M. ABBITT.

As a matter of fact, it appears that in several districts the Negroes will be admitted to the white schools without serious objections. These are the areas in Northern Virginia, the Shenandoah Valley and the Southwest where the percentage of Negro school enrollment is below 10 per cent—sometimes far below that figure. There are 32 Valley and Southwest counties, and all of them are below the 10 per cent level, as are Arlington and Fairfax Counties.

The cities with less than 10 per cent are Bristol, Buena Vista, Colonial Heights, Falls Church, Radford, Virginia Beach and Waynesboro.

All of which is clear evidence that the approach to the problem in Virginia is going to be an extremely varied one. With 34 counties, or most of them, reportedly willing to admit the small minority of Negroes promptly to the white schools, it would seem that the segregation pattern will break down in about one-third of the State as soon as the Supreme Court's decrees are entered, and the State Board of Education gives the word that integration is legal.

In such areas as the Fourth District, it will then become necessary to work out a plan that is within the law, and at the same time is reasonably acceptable to both races. This isn't going to be easy, but given good will on both sides and adequate time, it ought to be possible.

NAACP Pushing Dixie Too Hard

The announcement by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that it will petition local school boards throughout the South to eliminate all segregation in the public schools at the opening of the next session in September, isn't going to help toward a solution of the delicate interracial questions with which we Southerners are confronted.

The United States Supreme Court, which handed down the far-reaching segregation decision last Monday, evidently does not expect integration by next September. This was made clear when it directed that there be argument by counsel at the October term as to the time when the court's ruling abolishing segregation should be made effective.

September, 1955, is generally regarded as the earliest date when the court's decree will require the elimination of segregation in any of the 17 States affected. As a matter of fact, the court should allow much more time than that in some areas.

The NAACP's decision to press for integration a few months hence is in direct contradiction to the assurances given by DR. CHANNING TOBIAS, chairman of that organization's board of directors, in his keynote address on Saturday in Atlanta to NAACP leaders gathered there from the 17 States. DR. TOBIAS said:

> Let it not be said of us that we took advantage of a sweeping victory to drive hard bargains or impose unnecessary hardships upon those responsible for working out the details of adjustment. It is important that calm reasonableness prevail, that the difficulties of adjustment be realized and that without any sacrifice of basic principles the spirit of give-and-take characterize the discussions.

Scarcely had these words echoed through the hall, when the leaders of the NAACP who had heard them apparently decided to disregard them. They determined to petition every local school board in the areas where segregation has heretofore prevailed for abolition of segregation this coming September!

True, the NAACP is merely petitioning for such action, since the Supreme Court has entered no decree, and local school boards are under no compulsion to grant the organization's request. But it is dismaying that NAACP leaders are so out of touch with reality as to imagine that such petitions will have any appreciable effect except to irritate the members of the boards to which they are addressed.

It is altogether possible, even probable, that in a good many school districts where the number of Negroes is almost negligible, the few colored school children in the district will be invited into the white schools this Fall. However, this will not happen because the NAACP requests it, but because the members of the tegration are relatively simple. But in those areas where exist, and where years will be required those leaders can well afford not to work them out, the NAACP petition will merely prove annoying and irritating. The school board members will be justified in asking just what the point was in having the organization's board chairman hold out the olive branch on Saturday, if the conciliatory sentiments he expressed were slated to be tossed overboard on Sunday.

Since the Supreme Court has rendered the antisegregation ruling which the NAACP leaders sought, Moving Too Fast in D. C. Schools?

Officials of the District of Columbia have given the impression that segregation in the public schools of the District may be abolished at the opening of the next school session in September.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER has told the District commissioners that he hopes the nation's capital will be a model for other areas that have changeover problems growing out of the Supreme Court's ruling last Monday outlawing segregation in the public schools. However, there is nothing in the published accounts to indicate that the President insisted on complete integration by September.

Many who are familiar with the situation in Washington feel that the achievement of workable integration of the entire public school system there in the next few months will be virtually impossible. They feel that any attempt to move so rapidly is likely to encounter the gravest obstacles, and to bring extremely unsatisfactory results for both races.

It may not be generally known that there are more Negro children than white children in the public schools of Washington. The 800,000 people in the District were only 35 per cent Negro in 1950, but the school population was 51 per cent Negro. This is the largest proportion of colored public school children in any city in the United States with more than 100,000 population.

Yet, in the face of this delicate situation, there is serious talk of trying to integrate the schools of the District completely by next September. Any such scheme appears at this distance to be extremely unwise, and disruptive of good race relations.

Race relations in the District have revolved until recently about an almost rigid segregation pattern. Until a few years ago, Washington theaters, hotels, restaurants and recreation areas maintained a strict color bar, and there has been, and is now, considerable race feeling in the city.

Is it conceivable, in view of this background, that the District commissioners, the board of education and the other responsible officials think that in a matter of months the 49 per cent of white school children can be integrated with the 51 per cent of Negro children?

It has been authoritatively estimated that Washington has less residential segregation than any American city with a sizeable Negro population. This means that it is geographically difficult to send most Negro children to one school and most white children to another—an arrangement which has worked well in New York, Chicago and other cities of the North. It would seem, therefore, that children of the two races, in almost equal numbers, may be thrown together in the schools this Fall.

This appears to be a potentially dangerous plan, and one that has not had sufficient careful consideration from leaders of both races. If the earliest target date for integration were set for a year from September, there would be a great deal more opportunity for arriving at adjustments through planning and interracial conferences, and ultimate satisfaction with integration doubtless would be promoted. As a matter of fact, a year from September may be too soon.

Cautious Counsel in Mississippi

Much to their credit, the people of Mississippi are not rushing blindly into acceptance of the proposal to abolish the state's public schools as a "last resort" means of maintaining segregation.

Ever since the legislature proposed that the constitution be amended to permit abolition of the public school system, rumblings of opposition to this extreme plan have been heard. That opposition now seems to have crystallized in the formation by a group of educators and legislators of "The Committee of Friends of a Segregated Public School System."

As the name indicates, this group is not advocating integration. It simply refuses to be stampeded into an uncharted course of action that could create new problems potentially as grave as any it supposedly would solve.

Sponsors of the school abolition movement are said to be surprised at the extent of this opposition and are stepping up their efforts for a favorable vote in the referendum which they set for December 21 in the obvious nope that nobody would be interested in making a fight during the holiday season.

For our part, the surprising thing would have been a lack of enlightened opposition to this far-reaching proposal.

At best, doing away with the public schools and supporting a system of "private" schools with public funds would seem to be a subterfuge so flagrant that it could not last longer than the time required to test it in court. While this might buy a little time, it also would very probably put a damper on efforts to deal with the problem more realistically.

And at worst, the scheme could seriously disrupt and damage both a school system that has been generations in building and the education of boys and girls upon whom the future of Mississippi so largely depends. The consequences of this attempt to cloak a naked sham with legality cannot be accurately foreseen, and the attempts of its sponsors to assure the people that it would not harm their educational system sound less than wholly convincing.

Whether the opposition's doubts that the amendment "can win voter support" will be substantiated is problematical, in view of the prejudices and pressures involved. Thanks to the voices of caution now being raised, however, Mississippians will at least vote fully forewarned of the serious risks being courted.

Science Without Prejudice

The Giles County Medical Society has done itself and the medical profession a credit by admitting to membership the only two Negro physicians in that county.

For Dr. W. A. Lewis and Dr. D. M. Spotwood, the action is not only a recognition of their professional competence but an assurance that henceforth they will have, as one of them explains it, "access to all the scientific papers and findings of other physicians."

Thus will they be better equipped to pursue the humanitarian profession they share with their white colleagues. And in this respect, it would be difficult to challenge the medical society's conclusion that there "is no reason for racial prejudice in scientific endeavor."

Both Dr. Lewis and Dr. Spotwood seem to have long enjoyed the respect of the Giles medical community. "They were admitted," the society has stated, "on the basis of education, training, experience, standing in the community and the excellent job they are doing for our colored people."

That they merit such confidence is not to be doubted. Dr. Lewis has practiced in Giles county for 46 years. And Dr. Spotwood, whose experience there covers a briefer ten years, comments that he would "rather practice medicine here than anywhere else in the world."

Although Negro doctors have been admitted to white medical societies in some other Southern states, the Giles county group is the first to take this forward step in Tennessee. In so doing, it has set an example that medical societies elsewhere in the state could well follow.

In Mississippi, a Latter-Day Klan

Nowhere in the South are reason and understanding more needed in finding a peaceful solution to the school segregation problem than in Mississippi, where Negroes make up about 45 per cent of the total population.

Unhappily, however, the very anithesis of reason and understanding is reflected in a statewide organization which has been formed since the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

Ostensibly, the "citizens council" is out to keep down "agitation." As is so often the case with such groups, however, this one threatens to become the chief source of agitation itself. And in following a pattern ominously reminiscent of the Ku Klux Klan, it stands to add immeasurably to Mississippi's problem by using the school issue to reopen old racial sores.

As in the Klan, membership in the "citizens council"—which is being organized county-by-county—is secret. Its methods sound equally familiar.

The "council," one of its clandestine members has said for publication, will try to "anticipate moves by agitators and devise legal means for any problem that may arise." This means, the word "anticipate" suggests, that the latter-day version of the bedsheet brigade will take the initiative. And the type of "legal" action it has in mind may be judged from its announced aims to apply "economic pressure to trouble makers" and to maintain white primary elections.

The resort to such undisguised tactics of racial intimidation can only add more trouble to a situation that is going to be extremely troublesome at best. And not even in Mississippi can one problem be solved by using it as a pretext to create others.

Sitting It Out Will Solve Nothing

For the educators and officials of Tennessee, a piece of particularly timely advice has come out of the Atlanta meeting at which school superintendents and board of education members from 11 Southern states explored problems arising from the Supreme Court's segregation decision.

Advance in public school racial integration, Editor Harry Ashmore of the Arkansas Gazette told the group, "should be measured realistically in terms of good faith and understanding of the local situation."

"The important thing," he explained, "is to realize that at this stage an honest effort by communities with large Negro populations to work out a plan that is harmonious and fair within the requirements of the law is just as much an accomplishment as is voluntary and full compliance with the law by a community with a small Negro population."

For this reason, the author of the Ford Foundation report entitled "The Negro and the Schools" emphasized the need for the attorneys general of the Southern states to file briefs with the Supreme Court setting forth the local problems in each state and the time factor involved in any desegregation program.

* * *

Inasmuch as the Supreme Court has specifically invited such briefs for consideration before entering its final orders on the segregation decision, the course Mr. Ashmore urges would seem to be only a natural way to take advantage of an unusual opportunity.

The fact is, however, that at this very time there are reports from Capitol Hill here in Nashville that responsible officials are divided on whether Tennessee should even file a brief, much less what recommendations should be made.

Reportedly, a tentative proposal to begin integration at the first grade level and then move upward a year at a time has met such an unfavorable response that the whole question is being re-examined. And one body of opinion, it is said, holds that Tennessee would be better advised to submit no plan at all than to argue for one that might be found unworkable or undesirable. Moreover, the question of whether the state can speak for the local school systems with any degree of certainty has been raised.

* * *

Admittedly, these are thorny problems.

It is difficult to believe, however, that a solution to the broader problem is going to be made any the easier by assuming the role of spectator as the Supreme Court decides how its historic decision may be translated into practical terms.

The state is very much an interested party. And it is to its own advantage that, whatever obstacles encountered, it make known not only that interest but its present thoughts on esolving the problem at issue.

There is no reason the filing of a brief should be regarded as binding the state irrevocably to a specific course of action. It would seem, however, that a plan suited to Tennessee's needs would be more likely to emerge if the state itself participated in its formulation by outlining the local problems and then submitting recommendations based on the most responsible thinking at this time.

This is not guaranteed to produce a satisfactory answer, but it would at least demonstrate the "good faith" and "honest effort" of which Mr. Ashmore spoke. And it would dispel any erroneous impression that the erroneous party to the Su-

NEW ORLEANS, LA. TIMES PICAYUNE

Segregation Decision

Imponderables raised by the supreme court antisegregation school decision throw doubt on its long-term effect. As to the immediate future, the decision will do no service either to education or racial accommodation.

In the states where most United States Negroes live, the public school systems face the prospect of considerable turmoil for some time to come. In the course of efforts to preserve some of the lines of separation, the ensuing strife probably will react unfavorably on public school support and multiply problems with which the schools are already faced. At the same time the upsurge of interest in private schools may result in increasing the total financial burden of education on the people.

The disappointment and frustration of a majority of Southerners at the revolutionary overturn of practice and usage cannot immediately result in the improvement of race relations. In the South the people must be concerned with concrete results of the antisegregation decision rather than the theory of the court that segregation has an undesirable effect on the psychological and mental attitude of the Negro children. Those results pose the need of a policy under which education can go forward rather than retreat. Probably no such policy can be enunciated but, rather, will just have to develop.

We think it will be hard for many people to follow the court's reasoning. It said educational conditions and needs had changed since the 1896 decision that "equal facilities" satisfied the 14th Amendment. Since facilities are now in fact approximately equal, it would seem that the conditions of the amendment would be more fully satisfied than ever before. The court resorted to the doctrine that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." This, no doubt, was the basis for Sen. Russell's statement that the court was abusing its judicial power by making law instead of passing upon the law.

But neither cavil nor just complaint at the court's action helps to solve our problem. The court ventured deliberately into this area of policy redetermination and acted unanimously. By deciding to call for briefs and arguments on when and how its decision should be effected, it indicates it is as much lost as anybody about how to achieve its purpose with the minimum possible damage to education and disturbance of the people.

All the South can do—all that the states and localities can do—is shoulder the burden the court has placed upon them and work soberly to redirect their educational effort along lines that will be acceptable to all and at the same time will preserve its vitality.

Answer Gladly Given

Rep. W. Gilbert Faulk of Ouachita parish raised a question in the Legislature on Tuesday to which The Times-Picayune gladly gives its answer.

Referring to an advertisement against segregation bills pending at Baton Rouge which was placed by the Southern Conference Education Fund, the legislator said, "There may be some good reason why The Times-Picayune has to take such ads, but I am just calling it to your attention."

Yes, Rep. Faulk, there is a good reason.

Advertising columns of The Times-Picayune, as well as news columns, are open to opposing sides in controversies of public interest. Were they open to only one side, our readers would be denied the opportunity to form their own conclusions.

On Sunday, July 4, The Times-Picayune New Orleans States published an advertisement for parents of children attending private and parochial schools advocating the retention of separate schools for whites and Negroes.

On Tuesday, July 6, The Times-Picayune published the advertisement mentioned by Rep. Faulk, advocating integration of whites and Negroes in one school system. This advertisement was placed by Aubrey Williams and James A. Dombrowski, representing the Southern Conference Education Fund, Inc.

Rep. Faulk observed that "some of the New Orleans boys tell me that this (the Southern Conference Education Fund, Inc.) is a Communist front."

To the best of our knowledge, the fund has not been found guilty of violating any law of the United States. Several of its leaders have been accused by members of Congress of having Communist sympathies, but so far as we know none of them has been convicted in court.

Under the circumstances, the sound practice of considering a man innocent until he is proved guilty must prevail.

Editorially, The Times-Picayune has gone on record as believing that the decision of the US supreme court finding segregation unconstitutional was a bad decision.

Just because we do not agree with persons who advocate a point of view in conflict with our own does not mean that we should close our columns to their expressions.

America has grown great on differences of opinion, freely and honestly expressed. Suppression of opinions will hurt, not help, all of us.

When all men think alike, no one thinks very much.

Constitutional Amendments

For Tax Shift—Separate School Program

Propositions dealing with Orleans school taxes and segregation together with a minor playground proposal are discussed in this column on the constitutional amendments.

No. 14 provides that the secretary-treasurer of the playground district of the Calcasieu Community Center shall furnish a $5000 bond. We make no recommendation on this proposition.

14 The bond required heretofore has been considered too large and too costly. We haven't seen any authoritative explanation of why this trivial matter should be in the constitution.

No. 15 (along with No. 20) affects the shift of taxes from the Orleans levee board to the Orleans schools, and we urge its ratification.

15 This proposition affects only Orleans parish. It was originated and extensively considered in the city. It has the recommendation of a citizens' committee assigned to the problem of finding badly needed school revenue. All 20 Orleans representatives in the Legislature and seven out of eight senators supported it. No. 15 permits the school board to impose one and a half mills additional taxes from 1955 to 1959, and another mill and a half in 1960 and thereafter. The amendment would become effective only if No. 20, reducing the levee board taxes by similar amounts, is ratified.

The tax shift of a mill and a half next year will produce about $1,100,000 annually for the school board and this revenue along with the stepped up appropriations from the state and some additional revenue from larger city assessments, will enable the board to balance its operating budget. This millage transfer, we believe, will not impoverish the levee board, which now collects a tax of five and a half mills and has other revenue to make up total receipts ranging from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 a year. The additional millage transfer in 1960 will be largely a "wash item" so far as the levee board is concerned because in that year it will cease to pay the Dock Board about $925,000 a year as a contribution to the board's interest obligations on its debt.

The school building program will also benefit by the amendment. Authority to issue $3,000,000 of unissued bonds is renewed and the taxes will make possible another $11,000,000 of financing which also is authorized.

No. 16 is the segregation amendment and we recommend its ratification.

This proposition invokes the police power of the state, guaranteed by the Tenth Amendment of the federal constitution, to legalize the retention of separate white and Negro schools—this in the interest of "public health, morals, better education and peace and good order—and not because of race." It is intended to be the legal foundation for what Governor Kennon describes as a "parallel" rather than a segregated system.

16

Acts 555 and 556 of 1954 define the duties and procedures of the state board of education and the local school officials for regulating attendance and the assignment of pupils to schools. Apparently the validity of these acts is dependent in part on the ratification of No. 16.

The amendment, we believe, is entitled to the support of the electorate as a means of preserving the quality of education in the state as well as an effort to prevent friction and preserve order and good will among the people. Whatever may be the ultimate solutions of the problems raised by the supreme court decision, we are not relieved of the obligation to apply interim measures as seems wise to alleviate the difficulties that face the state.

Discussion of the constitutional amendments will continue from day to day.

Preacher goes to police—

Plot to blast Tallapoosa Negro school reported

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala., Oct. 26 —(AP)— A plot to "bomb segregation out of existence" by blowing up a new $200,000 Negro high school has been reported here by a Negro Baptist minister.

The Rev. M. Nunn, 60, told police he was asked to carry out the bombing last week by two unidentified men, one a white man and the other a Negro.

He said they told him the school bombing was part of a "master plan" which will be carried out in four other unnamed Southern states. They told him he had been picked to "lead the fight on segregation" in this area," Rev. Nunn said.

THE NEGRO MINISTER, pastor of the Great Bethel Baptist Church and a Tallapoosa County Negro leader, said he refused to take part in the scheme when the men approached him at his home Oct. 18. He reported the matter to police when they urged him again in a telephone message last Thursday.

Alexander City Mayor Joe Robinson said police are making periodic inspections at the Negro school and have been checking all strangers in this area.

He said the recently-completed school was built without federal funds.

Rev. Nunn said the two men first approached him as he was leaving the postoffice here. He said he invited them to his home when they asked him for "a conference."

HE DESCRIBED BOTH MEN as about 50 years old, well dressed and apparently well educated. He said they were driving a yellow 1948 sedan but he was unable to get the tag number.

They advised him to get two men to help him blow up the school, the Baptist preacher continued, and added:

"Remember this is a big thing and we will pay you well."

They also asked him to organize a group to distribute anti-segregation literature, Nunn said. He quoted them as saying they were out to make "converts" of Negro leaders in the South, and that "the plan" calls for "getting rid of Negro school buildings in this section" and thus force school authorities to end classroom segregation.

ALTHOUGH NO CONNECTION could be established with Rev. Nunn's report, two small Dallas County Negro schools were burned earlier this month in what State Deputy Tom Hall described as "arson cases."

Preacher Tells Of Proposition By 2 Strangers

'Master Plan' Due In 4 Other States, Plotters Explain

Special To The Advertiser

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala., Oct. 25—The Alexander City Police Department is checking on all strangers and making a regular patrol of the area of a new Negro high school following a threat the building would be bombed.

Mayor Joe Robinson told The Advertiser tonight he was taking "every precaution" to safeguard the school facility after two unidentified men, one a white man and the other a Negro, suggested a plan to a local Negro to bomb the structure.

The mayor said no federal funds were used in the school's construction and it was recently completed at a cost of $200,000.

Mayor Robinson said the threat was revealed to the Alexander City Police Department by the Rev. M. Nunn, pastor of the Great Bethel Baptist Church. Robinson said Nunn is a "respected Negro leader in Tallapoosa county.

Story Told Mayor

The mayor said Nunn told him this story:

New Alex City Negro School Threatened With Bomb Attack

Two men approached Nunn last Monday night as he was leaving the post office and they asked Nunn for a conference. He advised them to come to his home and it was there they told him of their mission.

They said they had singled out Nunn to do the "bombing job" because he had been picked to lead the fight on segregation in this section.

Their plan, as outlined to the pastor, was to "get rid of all the Negro school buildings in this section." Thereby they would force school authorities to abolish segregation in this section because there would be no school buildings for Negro children to use, Nunn said.

Four Other States

They also told Nunn this master plan also was to be put into effect in four other southern states, but they refused to name the states.

Nunn said he told the two men the Negro high school was one of the best in the state and had just been completed at a big cost with his own race contributing many dollars toward the building fund. "What about that?" he inquired.

Nunn said the white man replied, "Bomb it out of existence. Get two other men to help you and some night real soon blow the thing up. Remember this is a big thing and we will pay you well for this work."

Nunn added after listening to the pair for some time he told them their proposal was an insult to him and his race and invited them to leave his house.

Small Sacrifice

He said one of the men pointed out, "A sacrifice like this building is nothing compared to what will be given you when segregation is ended here in the schools and this will not be the only place where this thing will happen. We have already begun to work on this time program."

Nunn also was asked to sponsor a group to distribute segregation literature in this section. They told him they were out to make "converts" of Negro leaders of the South. He said he thought the two men were working for the Communist Party.

Nunn added he contacted the police department after he received a telephone call from one of the men Thursday following the first visit Monday. The police department has been on the alert since Saturday.

Both Well-Dressed

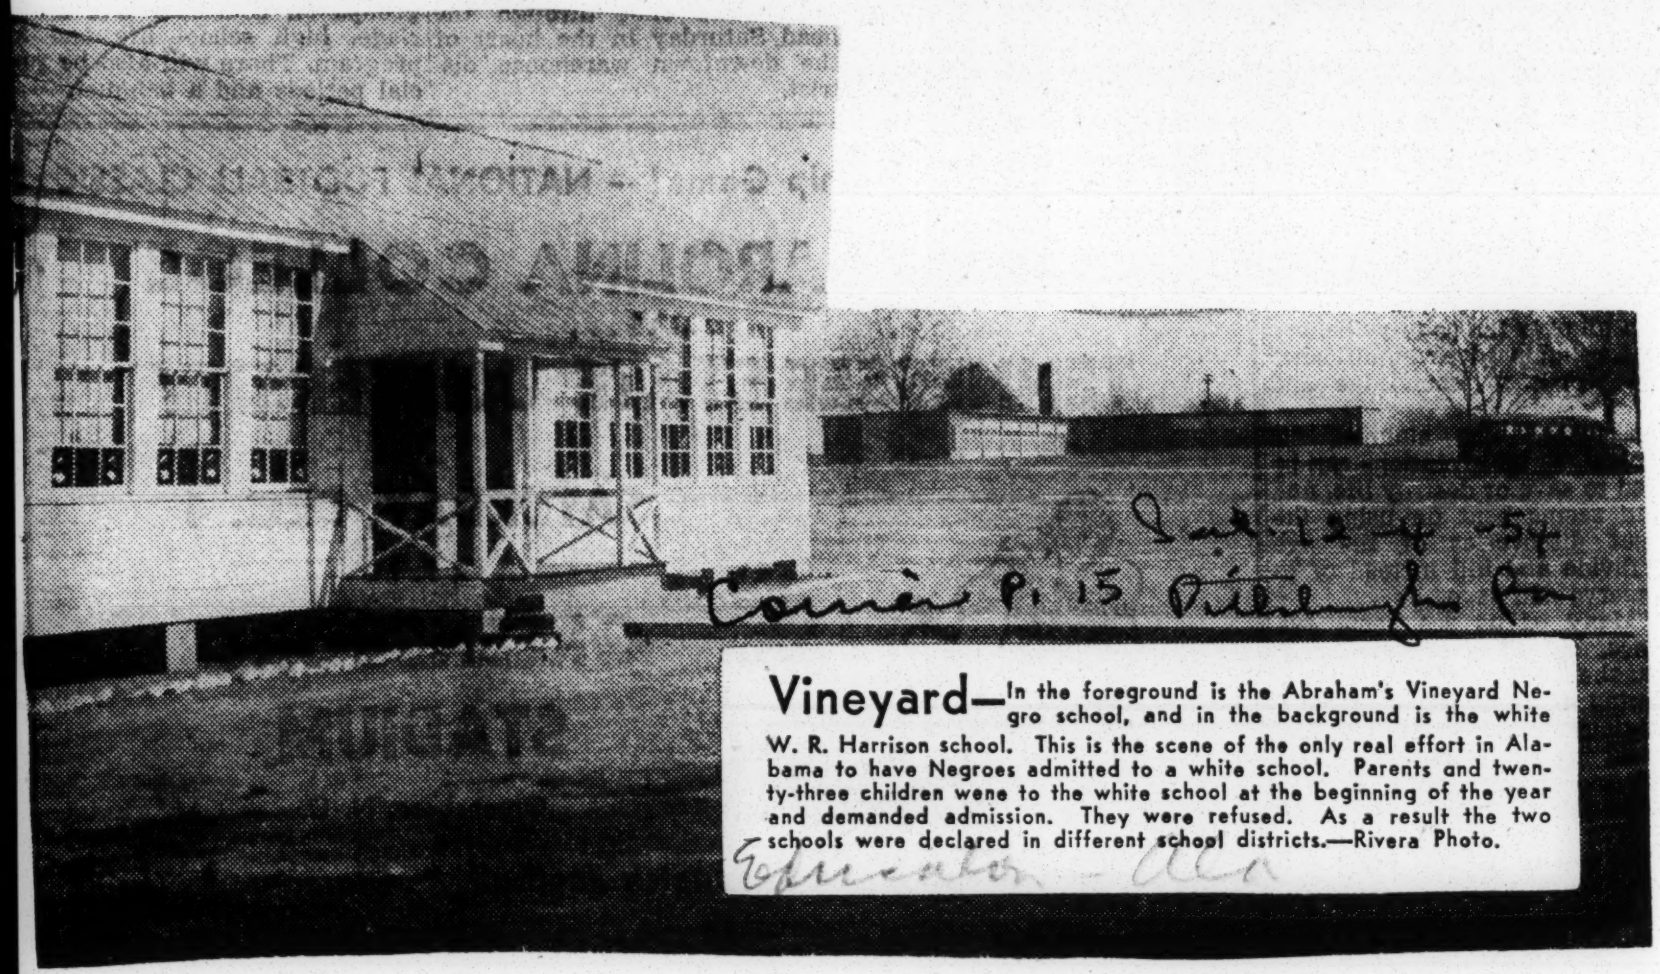
Nunn described the white man as being about 50, ruddy complexion, well-dressed and well-educated. The Negro was about the same age and well-dressed.

They were driving a 1948 Dodge sedan but Nunn said he could not obtain the license number.

Nunn is 60 years old and has lived in this section about 37 years.

There were indications the proposed bombing of the school here tied in with the burning of two schools in Dallas county earlier this month.

The fires at the two Dallas county schools were described as arson cases by State Deputy Fire Marshal Tom Hall after an investigation. Gov. Gordon Persons has posted a $400 reward for capture and conviction of the persons who set the two Dallas county fires.



Vineyard—In the foreground is the Abraham's Vineyard Negro school, and in the background is the white W. R. Harrison school. This is the scene of the only real effort in Alabama to have Negroes admitted to a white school. Parents and twenty-three children wene to the white school at the beginning of the year and demanded admission. They were refused. As a result the two schools were declared in different school districts.—Rivera Photo.

Persons Refuses 'Special Call'; School Situation Worries Ala.

Journal & Constitution Section 4-E

Governor and Nominee Folsom Both Oppose Abolishing Present System

By FRED TAYLOR

Staff Writer, the Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 16—Gov. Gordon Persons' refusal to call a special session of the Alabama Legislature to consider the school segregation problem left observers guessing what action would be taken now to meet the U.S. Supreme Court's decision on this touchy question.

The governor, who has been subjected to strong pressure for several weeks to call an extraordinary session, said he had no intention of convening the present legislators because they would not have sufficient time to adopt a workable plan.

They go out of office in little more than two weeks, with their terms expiring the day after the Nov. 2 general election when a new legislature will be formally chosen. Terms of its members begin Nov. 3.

Some think that Gov. Persons, whose term as governor runs through Jan. 17, might call the new legislature into special session in November or early December. Their reasoning is that since members of the incoming House and Senate would necessarily have to wrestle with the segregation problem anyway, regardless of any action by the outgoing legislators, they logically should be the ones to tackle it.

But the convening of the incoming legislature by the outgoing governor is considered unlikely, unless requested by the incoming governor.

Folsom Keeps Silent

Former Gov. James E. Folsom, Democratic nominee for a second term, is virtually certain to win over his Republican opponent, Tom Abernethy, on Nov. 2. And Folsom has not given the slightest indication he would like to see the legislature which will serve during his second term adopt a special session before he takes office.

Mr. Folsom, like Gov. Persons, does not want to see Alabama's public school system abolished. And this was another reason why the present governor refused to call a special session. He felt that its abolition would have been a certain result of a special session.

A legislative interim committee set up last year to study how to maintain segregation, in case of just such a decision as the Supreme Court handed down, asked Gov. Persons to call a special session to consider proposals recommended by it. A State Bar Assn. group worked with the legislative committee, which is headed by State Sen. Albert Boutwell, Birmingham lawyer, and joined in the recommendations.

ALABAMA

Chairman Boutwell said a "workable" plan was submitted several weeks ago to the governor. He said it did not call for outright abolition of public schools. But it embodied a constitutional amendment proposal to permit the abolition of public schools and pave the way for state-supported private schools to take their place.

Sen. Boutwell said that under this plan, parents would be given freedom of choice to send their children to all-white schools, all-Negro schools or to mixed schools.

Persons Gives Reasons

Gov. Persons, who said over and over that abolition of segregation in the classroom in Alabama is "unthinkable," outlined reasons for not calling a special session, in a letter to State Rep. Wallace D. Malone, Dothan banker. He is a "lame duck" member of the present House.

Rep. Malone said he polled 138 of the 141 members of the present House and Senate, and that 5 favored an immediate special session.

In his letter to Malone, Gov. Persons pointed out the short time until present legislators go out of office, adding:

"It is, therefore, manifestly unfair to expect the present legislature to adopt a workable plan in less than three weeks."

But he also emphasized to reporters that he would feel no hesitancy at calling a special session "on a day's notice," if he became convinced that a "workable plan" had been drafted. He hastily added he did not mean to infer that the Boutwell committee report was not workable.

Rep. Malone lashed back at Gov. Persons for refusing to call a special session, asserting he was ending his term in "shabby evasion" by not acting to help solve the segregation problem.

Governor's Explanation

Mr. Malone all but said he thought the governor's refusal was an attempt to let the issue ride until Folsom becomes governor in January.

Gov. Persons, is commenting on a statement by Rep. Malone that the present legislature could "handle the situation a lot better than the next legislature," had this to say:

"In the first place, many able members of the present legislature have been renominated by thir home folks to again represent them for the next four years.

"In fact, there will be 62 members of the new legislature who who have served in previous legislatures. The other members are fresh from the people. They know what the people want and it is unfair for you to insinuate that the new members and the returning members are less interested in solving the problem of sgregation than yourself."

Gov. Persons also made it plain that any legislation would be premature before the Supreme Court returns final decrees in the segregation cases. These are not expected for several weeks.

EDUCATION 1954

ALABAMA

REV.M. MUNN WOULD BOMB ALL NEGRO BUILDINGS TO ELIMINATE BIAS

Would Eliminate Bias by Bombing All-Negro Bldgs.

Munn
Pittsburgh, Pa.

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala.—(ANP)—A local Negro minister was supposedly approached last week by two men with a plan to blow up a new $200,000 Negro high school here.

According to the Rev. M. Munn, the minister, the scheme was part of a plot to "bomb segregation out of existence." He said the master plan calls for similar bombings in four other states. The Alexander explosion was supposed to touch off the chain reaction.

Sat. 11-6-54

THE REV. MR. MUNN is pastor of Great Bethel Baptist Church.

He said the men, one Negro and the other white, told him they were out to make "converts" of Negro leaders in the South and that "the plan" calls for eliminating classroom jim-crow by "getting rid of Negro school buildings in this section."

He said he was first approached with the scheme Oct. 18 while leaving the local post office. At the time, the men, whom he described as about fifty years old, well-groomed and seemingly educated, asked for "a conference" and he invited them to his home. There, they laid bare their plans, he said.

He was to get two men to help him blow up the school and organize a group to distribute anti-segregation literature, the pastor said.

The Rev. Mr. Munn said the men also told him to "remember this is a big thing and we will pay you well." They departed in a yellow 1948 sedan, but the minister said he was unable to get the license number.

* * *

THE NEWLY built school, which the minister was supposed to bomb, was built without Federal funds.

The Rev. Mr. Munn said he reported the matter to local police.

As a result of the minister's disclosure, Mayor Joe Alexander reported that police are making periodic inspections of the school. So far, they have uncovered nothing.

Plan to preserve segregation—

Teachers hear Boutwell group report

Birmingham classroom teachers today had been given a preview of the Boutwell committee school segregation plan. Sen. Albert Boutwell read the report to the teachers yesterday. It will be released officially Thursday.

The report recommends to the State Legislature three constitutional amendments to maintain segregation in Alabama's public schools.

The proposed amendments would:

1. Give the Legislature "flexibility" and freedom in handling operation of public schools, and would make mixed schools "possible" in Alabama.

2. It would make all school officials "judicial officers" of the state and thus protect them from legal action brought against them, and would also furnish school officials free legal counsel from the state attorney generals' office.

3. A third amendment would delegate to local school authorities the power and right to grant public aid to private schools. Sen. Boutwell described this third measure as "a last resort."

THE REPORT IS the result of six months of work by a six-member interim committee of the state Legislature. Their assignment was made last May when the Supreme Court of the United States ruled racial segregation in public schools unlawful.

THE REPORT scores compulsory integration in schools here as "intolerable and impossible" and raps what it calls "an attempt to use Alabama's children and schools as a means for "coercing integration." Any attempt to enforce compulsory integration in Alabama's schools could only have the "most shocking consequences," the report says.

The proposed Constitutional amendments would give white as well as Negro students the right to attend schools of their own race, or mixed schools, but it would not make attendance at mixed schools compulsory.

And, as a last resort, school boards could use the third amendment to implement a system of subsidizing individual white and Negro students in private schools.

INTEGRATION GOING SMOOTHLY IN PHOENIX WHERE BLACK, WHITE AND SPANISH CHILDREN ENROLL

Second Yar of Mixed Schools rPoceeds in Maricola Valley Without Single Hitch

GEAR REPORTS FEW PROTESTS TO NEW ARRANGEMENT

(By BOB LORD)

PHOENIX. — Thousands of Valley children returned to fully-integrated schools today, and administrators said the switchover was going "very smoothly."

Elimination of racial segregation was started in the Phoenix area a year ago when Phoenix Elementary and Phoenix High school districts began a program of permisive integration.

THIS YEAR, following rulings by Maricopa County Superior Court and the U. S. Supreme Court, segregation was abandoned altogether.

Dr. Harold L. Gear, superintendent of the high schools system, said he has received only a few protests about the district's integration program for teachers.

"OUR NEGRO teachers are apparently being well received by both white and Negro students," he said.

In Roosevelt district south of the Salt River, T. G. Barr, supt., said there has been "no difficulty."

EDUCATION 1954

GENERAL

Six Segregation States Plan Bid for Gradual Mixing

ATLANTA—(AP)—Despite a stern warning from South Carolina's elder statesman, Gov. James F. Byrnes, at least six states will ask the Supreme Court for gradual mixing of White and Negro children in classrooms.

The court will hear arguments Dec. 6 on means of putting into effect its ruling of last May 17 outlawing public school segregation.

Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Maryland, Kansas and Oklahoma will appeal for sufficient time and some degree of local option in working out the problem of complying with the ruling.

In response to the anti-segregation decision, integration already is under way in many of the 20 areas where segregation was practiced.

But it has proved painful in a few instances and segregation flared as an issue in Ohio where racial separation long has been illegal.

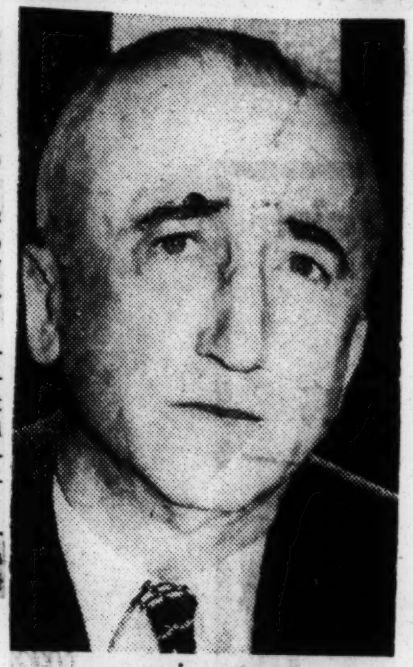
Taking note of disturbances which accompanied integration in Delaware and West Virginia, and the Ohio incident, Byrnes said that such events in areas with small Negro populations are strong arguments in favor of the continuance of segregated schools.

If there is such feeling in the border and northern states with their slight Negro populations, he said, far more serious situations will arise "in such counties as Clarendon in this state" where Negroes outnumber Whites about 10 to 1.

Meanwhile, pressure for immediate steps to end segregation mounted as new demands for admission to previously all-White schools came from Negroes in Alabama and Oklahoma.

The incidents to which Gov. Byrnes referred appeared to be subsiding in face of quick and determined action by authorities. Gov. J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware personally took a hand.

Boggs demanded that the Milford High School, center of mounting tension after a racial flareup, be reopened Monday "without incident," to both White and Negro students. "I must say frankly," he declared, "that law and order will be preserved."



GOV. JAMES BYRNES
... despite his warnings

Delaware has ordered integration of its schools, but the state school board said Milford did not comply with a directive requiring state board approval of integration plans.

Strikes by students in several West Virginia high schools over admission of Negroes apparently were all but over with no new incidents. West Virginia makes integration optional with local boards and several counties have de-segregated with no trouble. Others are awaiting final Supreme court action.

In Ohio, Gov. Frank Lausche said there are some instances of segregation and added "every child is entitled to be treated on an equal basis in our schools."

Most of the segregation states will not participate in the Dec. 6 arguments before the supreme court, a survey showed Saturday. But two of them, Arizona and New Mexico, which had partial segregation, have eliminated even that.

Kentucky will not appear, but officials have said the state will make every effort to comply with the court ruling when it is final.

Missouri is eliminating its few areas of segregation without incident and also will not appear.

Kansas likewise is integrating, but will ask the court to recognize its program and afford time for completion.

Oklahoma is preparing to end segregation, but needs a constitutional amendment to change its complex tax structure and will ask the court to recognize its financial difficulties.

South Carolina will not participate in the arguments.

Virginia will appear, but Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., would not disclose the nature of his remarks. He has said however that he believes no school child in Virginia will be compelled to attend school with another race. Gov. Thomas B. Stanley has frequently declared he will use every legal means to preserve segregation.

Somewhat in the same situation is Texas, whose attorney general, John Ben Shepperd, will either file a brief or appear personally. But Gov. Allen Shivers, who recently won renomination, has pledged that no White and Negro children will attend school together so long as he is governor.

Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia also will boycott the hearing on the ground that to participate might morally bind the state to comply with the final decree.

EDUCATION 1954 GENERAL

School Issue Becomes Confused In South, Milford Brings Bias Back

Defender Chicago Ill. Sat. 10-9-54 P.-3

The issue of segregated public schools, in the last few weeks, has become somewhat confused.

The scattered pattern previously set by schools which began integrating Negro and white students following the Suprome Court decision on May 17, has partially changed.

A few of the borderline Dixie schools that were once white, but began admitting Negroes when the 1954 school year started, are white once more.

Probably the only phase of the public school issue that has not changed in the last several weeks is the actual objective of the Supreme Court's decision that outlawed segregation of Negro and white children.

It is a matter of record now that Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Mississippi are bitterly opposed to integrating their schools, while cities such as St. Louis and Washington have made remarkable progress, without friction, in mixing Negro and white students in public school classrooms.

But there are cities that showed, at first, evidence that they would integrate immediately, or in the near future, that have had a change of heart.

In Milford, Del., last week the board of education decided to oust the 11 Negro students from the 10th grade of Milford high school, in what they termed "The interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole."

The action of the Milford board of education, said Wagner D. Jackson, president of the Wilmington, Del., chapter of the NAACP, was a "shameful and sickening" surrender to the illegal action of a lawless mob. But, in:

Washington

Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of District of Columbia schools, said that initial integration of Negro and White teachers and students has been "amazingly successful."

Oklahoma

Preparing to end segregation, Oklahoma needs a constitutional amendment to change its complex tax structure. Meanwhile, in El Reno, three Negroes have filed suit seeking admission to their hometown state junior college.

Georgia

An agency set up to find a way for Georgia to evade the court ruling last week asked the voters to end the public school system.

The agency is the Georgia Education Commission, created by the last legislature. Beginning to draft its report, it called for ratification in the November general election of a constitutional amendment to enable Georgia to pay educational funds direct to pupils instead of support to public schools.

The pupils would then pay their way in segregated private schools, Public schools with mixed classes would get no money. Sponsor of the private school constitutional amendment is Gov. Herman Talmadge, who has won every political race he has run as a champion of white supremacy.

Texas

In primaries last summer Texas and Georgia both named Governors who promised to retain color bars in public schools. Georgia's Marvin Griffin, who had the backing of Herman Talmadge, won the nomination by a landslide vote, assuring him of being the next governor of that state.

Gov. Alan Shivers of Texas won another term on a platform that pledged continued segregation in public schools. Things have not changed on that issue.

Florida

Being a state that would like to maintain a separate school system for Negro and white students, Florida is one of the six states that will appeal to the Supreme Court Dec. 6 for sufficient time and some degree of local option in working out the problem of complying with the decision.

In Tampa, however, W. J. Griffin, Grand Dragon of the Florida Ku Klux Klan, last week asked Klan district leaders throughout the state to help distribute petitions against school desegregation.

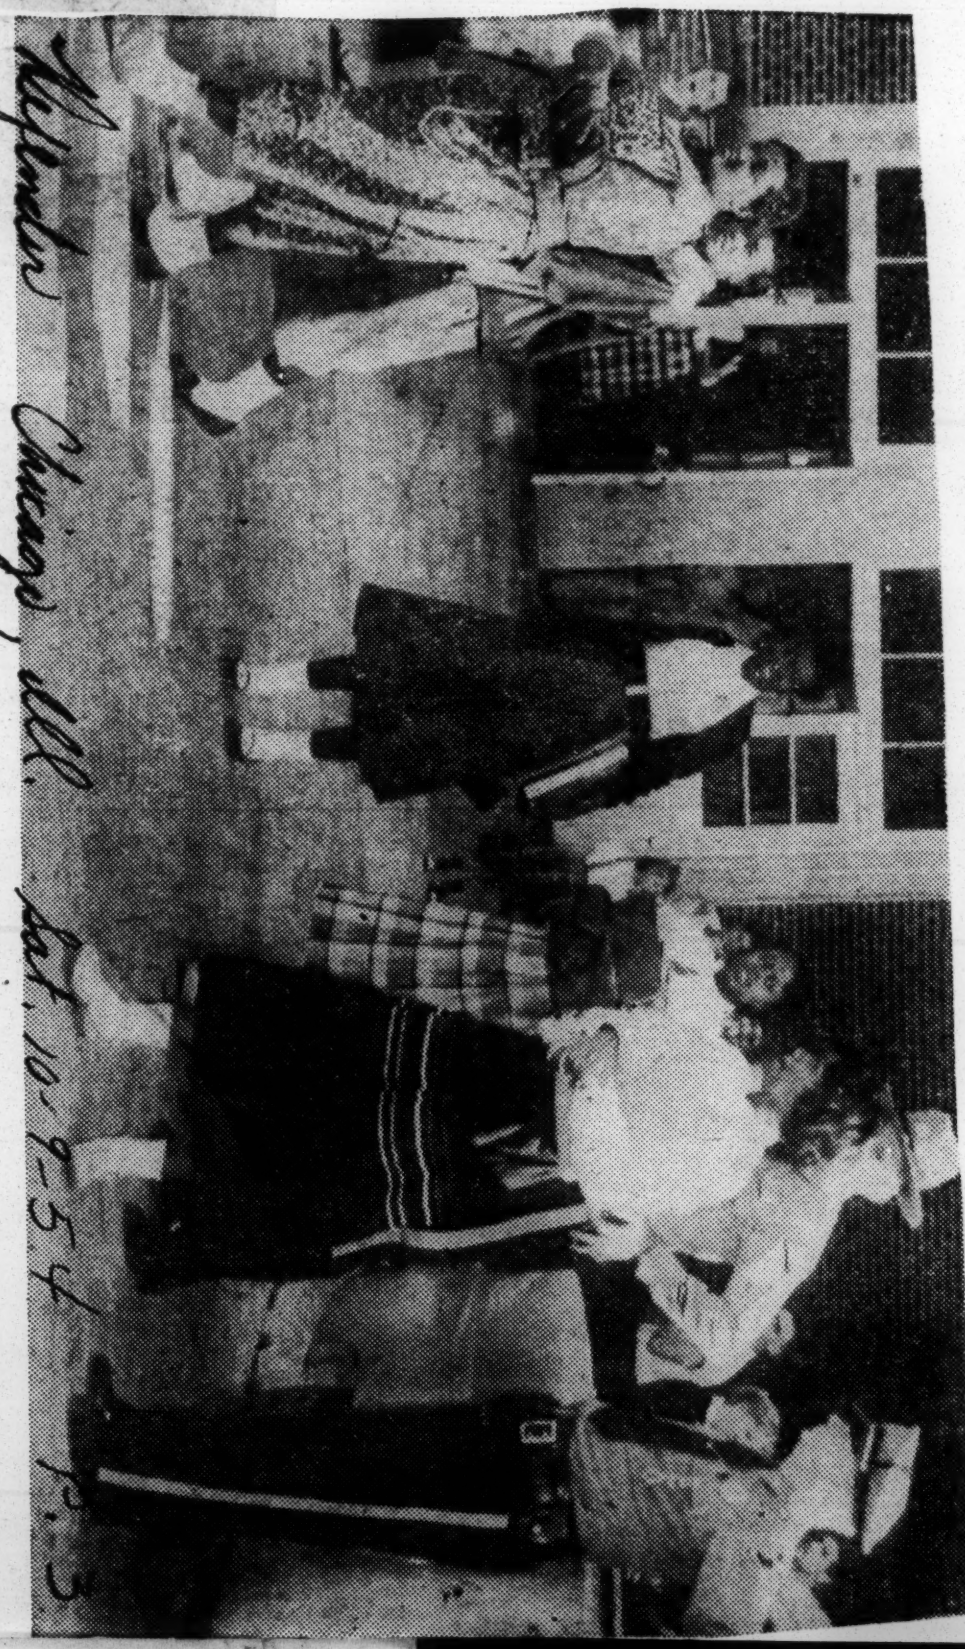
Other states planning to appeal to the high court for a slow end of segregation are Arkansas, Maryland, North Carolina, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia will boycott the Dec. 6 hearings on the ground that to participate might morally bind them to comply with the final decree.

Ohio

Stalled by a district judge's ruling, Negro leaders in Columbus last week planned to carry their fight for immediate school integration in Hillsboro, all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

U. S. Judge John H. Druffel declined to act on a request to stop "enforced segregation" in Hillsboro schools because any decision, he said, might prove contrary to a policy yet to be determined by the Supreme Court.



Defender Chicago Ill. Sat. 10-9-54 P.-3

STATE POLICE stood guard at Milford, Delaware, combined elementary-high school last week as Negro children left the building after attending classes. More than 1500 white pupils boycotted the school, where 11 Negro students reported to the high school.

Last Thursday, the Milford School Board decided to oust the Negro students "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole." INP.

EDUCATION 1954

GENERAL

School Issue Becomes Confused In South, Milford Brings Bias Back

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 10-9-54 P.-3

The issue of segregated public schools, in the last few weeks, has become somewhat confused.

The scattered pattern previously set by schools which began integrating Negro and white students following the Supreme Court decision on May 17, has partially changed.

A few of the borderline Dixie schools that were once white, but began admitting Negroes when the 1954 school year started, are white once more.

Probably the only phase of the public school issue that has not changed in the last several weeks is the actual objective of the Supreme Court's decision that outlawed segregation of Negro and white children.

It is a matter of record now that Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Mississippi are bitterly opposed to integrating their schools, while cities such as St. Louis and Washington have made remarkable progress, without friction, in mixing Negro and white students in public school classrooms.

But there are cities that showed, at first, evidence that they would integrate immediately, or in the near future, that have had a change of heart.

In Milford, Del., last week the board of education decided to oust the 11 Negro students from the 10th grade of Milford high school, in what they termed "The interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole."

The action of the Milford board of education, said Wagner D. Jackson, president of the Wilmington, Del., chapter of the NAACP, was a "shameful and sickening" surrender to the illegal action of a lawless mob. But, in:

Washington

Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of District of Columbia schools, said that initial integration of Negro and White teachers and students has been "amazingly successful."

Oklahoma

Preparing to end segregation, Oklahoma needs a constitutional amendment to change its complex tax structure. Meanwhile, in El Reno, three Negroes have filed suit seeking admission to their hometown state junior college.

Georgia

An agency set up to find a way for Georgia to evade the court ruling last week asked the voters to end the public school system.

The agency is the Georgia Education Commission, created by the last legislature. Beginning to draft its report, it called for ratification in the November general election of a constitutional amendment to enable Georgia to pay educational funds direct to pupils instead of support to public schools.

The pupils would then pay their way in segregated private schools, Public schools with mixed classes would get no money. Sponsor of the private school constitutional amendment is Gov. Herman Talmadge, who has won every political race he has run as a champion of white supremacy.

Texas

In primaries last summer Texas and Georgia both named Governors who promised to retain color bars in public schools. Georgia's Marvin Griffin, who had the backing of Herman Talmadge, won the nomination by a landslide vote, assuring him of being the next governor of that state.

Gov. Alan Shivers of Texas won another term on a platform that pledged continued segregation in public schools. Things have not changed on that issue.

Florida

Being a state that would like to maintain a separate school system for Negro and white students, Florida is one of the six states that will appeal to the Supreme Court Dec. 6 for sufficient time and some degree of local option in working out the problem of complying with the decision.

In Tampa, however, W. J. Griffin, Grand Dragon of the Florida Ku Klux Klan, last week asked Klan district leaders throughout the state to help distribute petitions against school desegregation.

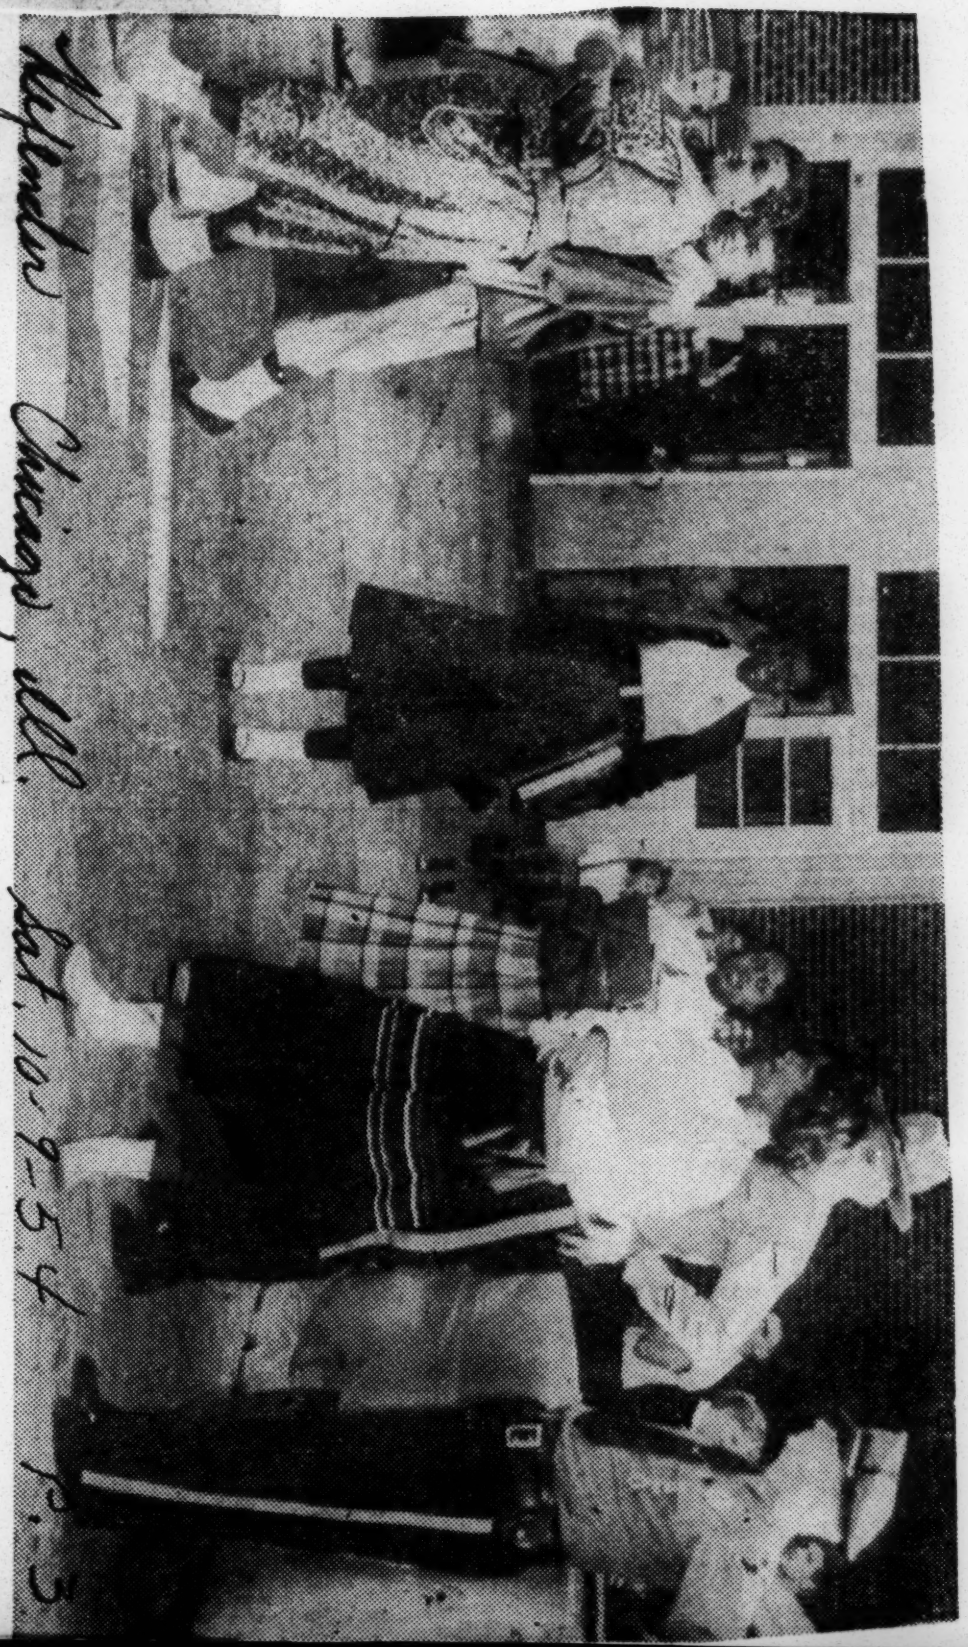
Other states planning to appeal to the high court for a slow end of segregation are Arkansas, Maryland, North Carolina, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia will boycott the Dec. 6 hearings on the ground that to participate might morally bind them to comply with the final decree.

Ohio

Stalled by a district judge's ruling, Negro leaders in Columbus last week planned to carry their fight for immediate school integration in Hillsboro, all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

U. S. Judge John H. Druffel declined to act on a request to stop "enforced segregation" in Hillsboro schools because any decision, he said, might prove contrary to a policy yet to be determined by the Supreme Court.



STATE POLICE stood guard at Milford, Del., combined elementary-high school last week as Negro children left the building after attending classes. More than 1500 white pupils boycotted the school, where 11 Negro students reported to the high school. Last Thursday, the Milford School Board decided to oust the Negro students "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole." INP.

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 10-9-54 P.-3

DESEGREGATION TROUBLES WIDEN

Milford, Del., Quiet, Violence Flares in Baltimore

(The Associated Press)

Passive resistance Saturday had forced 11 Negroes out of a previously all-white school in Milford, Del., but violence was threatened as demonstrations against mixing white and Negro students spread to six Baltimore schools.

This somewhat unexpected resistance in the so-called border areas was viewed by some leaders as an indication of what might happen in applying the Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools to the Deep South states.

A boycott, promoted by Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, kept nearly two thirds of the pupils out of Milford's Lakeview Ave. School where 11 Negroes were registered. Attendance jumped nearly back to normal Friday after a new school board rescinded an order admitting the Negroes.

White Slugger Fined

After one Baltimore demonstration a 24-year-old white man was fined $100 for hitting a Negro pupil leaving Southern High School. Jack Zimmerman was arrested on the spot and fined before the day ended for punching 14-year-old Leon Thompson.

Two other white men and a Negro were arrested in the same disturbance and were fined $25 each for disorderly conduct.

Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina was the first to point out recently that incidents were occurring in areas with relatively small Negro populations and might be multiplied in states with a greater percentage of Negro population.

Similar views were expressed by officials in Florida, Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina and Louisiana.

"Such episodes will spread wherever integration is tried, regardless of what kind of decree the Supreme Court hands down," said Louisiana Sen. William Rainach, chairman of a joint legislative committee to continue segregation.

Dissension Feared

"I'm afraid," he added, "the United States will head into the worst period of internal strife and dissension in its history unless the Supreme Court reverses its stand and permits each state to solve the destiny of its people in its own way." Rainach's committee is closely watching the Maryland and Delaware incidents and other integration steps.

Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin told the Supreme Court that immediate desegregation in Florida would "only result in translating the present passive intellectual differences in thought and emotional feelings to an active, positive and violent physical resistance."

He said in a brief that unless the state is given sufficient time to work out the problem "we frankly doubt whether we can save our public school system."

Ervin submitted the brief upon request of the court for views on how best to apply the decision of May 17 outlawing public school segregation. The court will hear arguments Dec. 6.

Resistance Predicted

Georgia's Democratic gubernatorial nominee, Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, shared Byrnes' view.

"Already, throughout the fringe areas of states where segregation is the law, we see strong evidences of revolt and opposition to this monstrous anti-segregation edict," Griffin said in accepting his formal nomination by the Georgia Democratic state convention. "If this strong opposition is found in Maryland, West Virginia, Delaware and even Ohio, you can be assured that the masses of the people of Georgia will resist it with all their power when the proper time arrives."

In North Carolina, Thomas J. Pearsall, chairman of the Governor's Advisory Committee studying segregation, commented on the Delaware and Maryland situations that the trouble "they are having there with their small Negro populations is just some indication of what we might have down here."

And J. A. Pritchett, member of a North Carolina Board of Education Committee on Segregation, said "I think that it certainly would indicate to the Supreme Court that the problem down here is far greater than anyone can anticipate unless they allow us a long time in my opinion to do it."

Trouble In North

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., leaders in Virginia's fight to circumvent the antisegregation decision, declined to comment directly. But Almond pointed out that the Delaware trouble is occurring in northern states that do not begin to have the problem that southern states have.

The Deep South states are continuing their segregation school systems pending the final Supreme Court decree, and some are laying plans to circumvent it by one means or another.

But Delaware, West Virginia and Baltimore began integration with the opening of fall terms of school last month. Desegregation began peacefully enough, but trouble soon developed.

It flared up suddenly in Baltimore Friday with demonstrations against mixing of white and Negro pupils at six schools.

Milford Order Rescinded

At Milford, Del., attendance was nearly back to normal at the Lakeview Ave. School after a new school board rescinded an order admitting 10 Negroes. Nearly two thirds of the pupils had boycotted the school most of the week.

The boycott was promoted at mass meetings spearheaded by Bowles and it spread to several neighborhood communities.

Delaware Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, who has urged residents to obey the law, declined comment "for the present."

But Vice President Richard Nixon, whom Boggs was entertaining at Wilmington, commented at a news conference:

"We in America must bring into reality the dream of equality in education, employment and other fields to show the rest of the world our sincerity of purpose so that they will feel free to join our society of free nations instead of the Communist regime. . . .

"Here in Delaware there are honest differences of opinion but I believe these will be reconciled so that the spirit and letter of the law can be carried out."

Picketing Halted

A judge brought a sudden halt to picketing which closed the Annabelle School near Fairmont, W. Va. for two days. A group of parents picketed in protesting admission of 13 Negro pupils.

Issuing an injunction, Judge J. Harper Meredith declared the picketing "a rebellion against the government, which cannot be tolerated." He added: "It cannot continue and I will not permit it to continue. If necessary, I'll fill the jail until their feet are sticking out of the windows."

A group of about 200 persons, protesting increased enrollment of Negroes at the Centerville Grade school near East St. Louis, interrupted a district school board meeting Thursday night and demanded the board's resignation.

A few Negro pupils have been enrolled in the Centerville school for years. The group's spokesman, Paul Chitty, said about 100 Negroes who formerly attended an all-Negro school now are enrolled at Centerville. The school board said it would meet Monday with a 10-member committee named by Chitty to discuss the situation.

Officials Warn Trouble Ahead In Deep South

Delaware, Maryland Boycotts, Violence Tagged Storm Flags

By The Associated Press

Passive resistance Saturday had forced 11 Negroes out of a previously all-white school in Milford, Del., but violence broke out as demonstrations against mixing white and Negro students spread to six Baltimore schools.

This somewhat unexpected resistance in the so-called border areas was viewed by some leaders as an indication of what might happen in applying the Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools to the Deep South states.

A boycott, promoted by Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, kept nearly two thirds of the pupils out of Milford's Lakeview Ave. School where 11 Negroes were registered. Attendance jumped nearly back to normal Friday after a new school board rescinded an order admitting the Negroes.

White Man Fined

After one Baltimore demonstration a 24-year-old white man was fined $100 for hitting a Negro pupil leaving Southern High School. Jack Zimmerman was arrested on the spot and fined before the day ended for punching 14-year-old Leon Thompson.

Two other white men and a Negro were arrested in the same disturbance and were fined $25 each for disorderly conduct.

Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina was the first to point out last week that incidents were occurring in areas with relatively small Negro populations and might be multiplied in states with a greater percentage of Negro population.

Similar views were expressed by officials in Florida, Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina and Louisiana.

"Such episodes will spread wherever integration is tried, regardless of what kind of decree the Supreme Court hands down," said Louisiana Sen. William Rainach, chairman of a joint legislative committee to continue segregation.

"I'm afraid," he added, "the United States will head into the worst period of internal strife and dissension in its history unless the Supreme Court reverses its stand and permits each state to solve the destiny of its people in its own way." Rainach's committee is closely watching the Maryland and Delaware incidents and other integration steps.

Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin told the Supreme Court that immediate de-segregation in Florida would "only result in translating the present passive intellectual dif-

Issuing an injunction, Judge J. Harper Meredith declared the picketing "a rebellion against the government, which cannot be tolerated." He added: "It cannot continue and I will not permit it to continue. If necessary, I'll fill the jail until their feet are sticking out of the windows."

Illinois Reaction

A group of about 200 persons, protesting increased enrollment of Negroes at the Centerville Grade school near East St. Louis, interrupted a district school board meeting Thursday night and demanded the board's resignation.

A few Negro pupils have been enrolled in the Centerville school for years. The group's spokesman, Paul Chitty, said about 100 Negroes who formerly attended an all-Negro school now are enrolled at centerville. The school board said it would meet Monday with a 10-member committee named by Chitty to discuss the situation.

ferences in thought and emotional feelings to an active, positive and violent physical resistance."

Public Schools In Danger

He said in a brief that unless the state is given sufficient time to work out the problem "we frankly doubt whether we can save our public school system."

Ervin submitted the brief upon request of the court for views on how best to apply the decision of May 17 outlawing public school segregation. The court will hear arguments Dec. 6.

Georgia's Democratic gubneratorial nominee, Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, shared Byrnes' view.

Evidence Of Revolt

"Already, throughout the fringe areas of states where segregation is the law, we see strong evidences of revolt and opposition to this monstrous anti - segregation edict," Griffin said in accepting his formal nomination by the Georgia Democratic state convention. "If this strong opposition is found in Maryland, West Virginia, Delaware and even Ohio, you can be assured that the masses of the people of Georgia will resist it with all their power when the proper time arrives."

In North Carolina, Thomas J. Pearsall, chairman of the Governor's Advisory Committee studying Segregation, commented on the Delaware and Maryland situations that the trouble "they are having there with their small Negro populations is just some indication of what we might have down here."

Long Time Needed

And J.A. Pritchett, member of a North Carolina Board of Education Committee on Segregation, said "I think that it certainly would indicate to the Supreme Court that the problem down here is far greater than anyone can anticipate unless they allow us a long time in my opinion to do it."

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., leaders in Virginia's fight to circumvent the antisegregation decision, declined to comment directly. But Almond pointed out that the Delaware trouble is occurring in northern states that do not begin to have the problem that southern states have.

The Deep South states are continuing their segregation school systems pending the final Supreme Court decree, and some are laying plans to circumvent it by one means or another.

Trouble Came Fast

But Delaware, West Virginia and Baltimore began integration with the opening of fall terms of school last month. Desegregation began peacefully enough, but trouble soon developed.

It flared up suddenly in Baltimore Friday with demonstrations against mixing of white and Negro pupils at six schools. Police narrowly averted violence at one.

A mob of about 400 whites, adults and teen-agers, threatened three Negro pupils leaving Southern High School. Leon Thompson, 14, was punched in the face and police arrested Jack Zimmerman, 24. The crowd tried to upset a police car which was taking the Negro boy and Zimmerman to a police station.

Students Rescued

A minister escorted another Negro boy from the school, and a young woman physical education teacher rescued a Negro boy and girl after they were surrounded by demonstrators. She drove her automobile into the crowd, grabbed the youngsters, and sped away with them. Mayor Thomas d'Alesandro in a public statement pleaded against any inflammatory action as the city's school board refused to change its course ending segregation.

Baltimore schools affected are in the poorer residential sections, occupied largely by day laborers, factory workers and domestic servants.

At Milford, Del., attendance was nearly back to normal at the Lakeview Ave. School after a new school board rescinded an order admitting 10 Negroes. Nearly two thirds of the pupils had boycotted the school most of the week.

Boycott Promoted

The boycott was promoted at mass meetings spearheaded by Bryant Bowles, President of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, and it spread to several neighboring communities.

Delaware Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, who has urged residents to obey the law, declined comment "for the present."

But Vice President Richard Nixon, whom Boggs was entertaining as Wilmington, commented at a news conference:

"We in America must bring into reality the dream of equality in education, employment and other fields to show the rest of the world our simcerity of purpose so that they will feel free to join our society of free nations instead of the Communist regime. . . .

Honest Differences

"Here in Delaware there are honest differences of opinion but I believe these will be reconciled so that the spirit and letter of the law can be carried out."

A judge brought a sudden halt to picketing which closed the Annabelle School near Fairmont, W. Va. for two days. A group of parents picketed in protesting admission of 13 Negro pupils.

Ga., 4 Others To Boycott DC Deliberations

Georgia and four other states will boycott the hearings on public school segregation set by the U. S. Supreme Court according to a disclosure made yesterday by Atty. Gen Eugene Cook.

Cook said he was authorized to speak for the top officials of Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina.

The other state which refuses to file briefs with the Supreme Court in the segregation cases is Alabama. This course was decided upon by officials of that state last Wednesday.

Quiets down elsewhere—

School row erupts in nation's capital

By The Associated Press

Demonstrations against mingling of the races in the public schools spread to the nation's capital today, while the tension of last week at nearby Baltimore eased as white and Negro pupils resumed classes.

The admission of Negroes to high schools in Washington was protested in demonstrations by hundreds of boys and girls, marking the first signs of trouble over the issue there.

A demonstration at McKinley Hight was ordered with the youngsters "just talking and laughing." After milling about for some 45 minutes the students were persuaded by Principal Charles E. Bish to re-enter the building and continue their protest meeting in a classroom.

At Anacosta High some 400 students jeered and booed two score Negro pupils.

THE ANGRY disturbances and violence of last Friday were missing as white and Negro pupils resumed classes at Baltimore. A crowd of several hundred demonstrated at Southern High School there Friday.

Escorted by ministers and parents, Negroes entered Southern this morning as police kept persons moving outside the school.

Eleven Negroes forced out of a previously all white high school in Milford, Del., by passive resistance, were expected to be transferred to a Negro school 18 miles away in Dover until a court rules on the case.

A hearing has been set Oct. 12 on a petition filed by Louis Redding, an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The petition seeks to force the school board to return the Negroes to the white school.

IN BALTIMORE there was no indication whether classes would resume Monday at Southern High School where a loud demonstration was staged Friday. City and school officials did not comment on the incident.

Bryant Bowles of Arlington, Va., head of an organization he calls the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, set up the demonstration in Milford that led the school board to remove all 11 Negroes from the school opened to them this year.

Some reports said Bowles might be planning more demonstrations in other Delaware communities to prevent racial integration in the schools.

AT DOVER, Del., a committee of citizens was formed to block the anti-integration movement. About 150 persons attended a closed meeting Friday night for the purpose of organizing a "vigilantes committee" to prevent "terrorism by lawless forces."

Miss Becky Keckenes, a 23-year-old physical education teacher, was hailed as the heroine of the Baltimore disturbance which flared up in protest against mixing white and Negro students at six schools.

Some 400 whites, adults and teenagers, threatened Negro pupils leaving Southern High School. Two Negro children were surrounded. Miss Keckenes walked through the crowd, placed them in her car and drove away.

"I'd do it again," she said afterwards. "What else can you do where human beings are concerned."

IN WASHINGTON, Americans for Democratic Action called on Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell to look into "parents' strikes against integration of the schools" and to determine "whether they have a common origin."

The ADA called attention to anti-integration actions in Delaware, Maryland and West Virginia and said they "cannot be tolerated by the community or by the responsible authorities."

Meanwhile the Deep South states are continuing their segregated school systems pending the final Supreme Court decree. Some are laying plans to circumvent it by one means or another

De-Segregation Row Hits Capital And In Baltimore

Violence Flares Amid Court School Hearing

BY UNITED PRESS

About 2000 white teen-agers "stormed" the Baltimore City Hall to protest racial integration in the public schools Monday as demonstrations were staged for the first time in the nation's capital.

High school students, shouting protests and anti-Negro slogans, clamored up the Baltimore City Hall steps after Mayor Thomas R. D'Alesandro ignored their demands that he come out and talk to them.

An emergency squad of police, led by Commissioner Beverly Ober, finally pushed back the unruly crowd after about 50 had entered the building. After a stormy 10 minutes, the demonstrators returned to the school grounds.

In Washington, white students staged peaceful but noisy demonstrations at Anacostia and McKinely High Schools. It was the first such incident in the nation's capital since segregation bars were lifted this Fall.

Taunts Hurled

Milling around the school yards, they taunted students inside to join them and waved signs reading: "Send Them Back to the Plantation;" "Back to Africa," and "We Want Segregation."

As Washington classes were dismissed in the afternoon, the strikers jeered at their departing schoolmates and passed the word to be ready for more of the same tomorrow.

Negroes Escorted Away

The demonstration at Baltimore's Southern High School broke up when 36 Negro students were escorted from the school by Elder James L. Johnson, a Negro minister.

Police followed the Negro students several blocks toward their homes. Behind them came a jeering group of about 200 white students and adults.

President Eisenhower had expressed hope last Spring that Washington would serve as a model for the nation in bringing white and Negro students into the same classrooms under the Supreme Court's historic anti-segregation decision.

District Congratulated

Integration had gone so smoothly until today that Mr. Eisenhower congratulated the District of Columbia commissioners last week on the way it was working out.

The Baltimore-Washington demonstrations were by far the largest thus far in the various cities where mixed classes are being tried out for the first time this year. Similar incidents have occurred in Milford, Del., and White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

The demonstrations broke out a few hours before the Supreme Court began its new term at which it will hear arguments on the manner of carrying out the order striking down racial barriers in public schools.

The Justice Department said its civil rights section is gathering information on the demonstrations to determine whether civil rights violations have occurred.

School officials in Washington suggested that the capital demonstrators were taking a cue from the Baltimore group. Superintendent Hobart N. Corning called on parents to "realize their responsibilities" and make their rebellious children get back to their classes.

There were two arrests in Baltimore. Charles Luthard, a white man, was charged with acting as an agitator and a Negro carrying a knife was seized.

At the Anacostia School, in Washington's "tenderloin" district, the crowd shouted "Chicken-Chicken" at students who deserted their ranks. Racial tensions in this Southeastern section always have been highest in the city.

The Rev. Jack H. Boelens of the Gard Memorial Presbyterian Church pleaded with the students massed outside of Anacostia to return to their classes.

"By standing out here you are

Students In Demonstration At Supreme Court Building

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6 (UP)— About 50 white high school students demonstrated before the Supreme Court Building today and nearly 500 others shouted down appeals to call off their "strike" against racial integration in capital schools.

The teen-age court demonstrators, many clad in dungarees, marched up Capitol Hill in a body, chanting, "We want our rights." Some carried crudely lettered placards reading, "On Strike," "This Isn't Communism," and "We Want to be Heard."

Capt. Philip H. Cook and members of his court police quickly dispersed the demonstrators. They moved across the street, but many soon left. A group of six remained on a street corner near the court building for about an hour.

Spurn Appeals.

At Anacostia High School some 500 students, chanting, "Send the Negroes Back," spurned appeals by classmates and 20 ministers, who beseeched them to end their three-day strike against racial mingling in Washington schools.

Elsewhere in the capital, public demonstrations appeared to be dwindling. Absenteeism still was high at Anacostia and Eastern High and at Kramer Junior High. Attendance neared normal at other schools.

The Anacostia strikers, faced with a warning of sharp disciplinary action, met in the stadium to hear "return to school" pleas from the clergymen, Principal Eugene E. Griffith, a number of classmates, and a local disk jockey.

One of the strike leaders shouted, "The way to return is to let the Negroes go to their school and we'll go to ours." At that, the strikers began chanting: "We will not go back. No! No! Send the Negroes back."

The demonstrations were sputtering out at nearly all other capital high and junior high schools. Anacostia has been the focal point of unrest throughout the demonstration. Elsewhere absentees had dropped sharply from an estimated 4,000 yesterday.

Baltimore Quiet.

In nearby Baltimore, authorities described the situation as quiet, with no demonstrations.

Bryant W. Bowles, of nearby Arlington, Va., organizer of a group that calls itself The National Association for the Advancement of White People, attended the Anacostia meeting. His group sparked the successful anti-integration strike at Milford, Del.

Bowles said he met with about 30 Anacostia students last night and told them he "would not talk to them because they were minors. I told them that I would talk to their parents, but only after they were off the streets."

A strike leader, 17-year-old Jimmy Tripp, told his fellow demonstrators that "we are backed up by the Anacostia Citizens Association, I think some ministers, and most of the parents." But he said, "We can't get out of hand."

A 17-year-old girl, Page Watson, told the strikers she was born and reared in South Carolina, moved to California and "cried" when she had to sit next to a Negro in school. But she said her father forced her to go to school and learn the "get along."

"I found out," she said, "that they are the same as you or anyone else."

The demonstrators appointed a committee of six boys and one girl to confer with Principal Griffith on a petition protesting enrollment of Negroes at Anacostia. The committee also met with Norman J. Nelson, assistant superintendent of education.

Robert Dean, committee chairman, said after the meeting that Nelson warned them sharp disciplinary action will be taken unless they return to school.

Halt 2,0[illegible] Studen[illegible] Baltimo[illegible]

D. C. Pupils Also Protest Mixing

By UNITED PRESS

About 2,000 white teen-agers stormed the Baltimore city hall to protest racial integration in the public schools Monday and demonstrations were staged for the first time in the nation's capital. High school students, shouting protests and anti-Negro slogans clamored up the Baltimore city hall steps after Mayor Thomas R. D'Alesandro ignored their demands that he come out and talk to them.

An emergency squad of police, led by Commissioner Beverly Ober, pushed back the unruly crowd after about 50 had entered the building. After a stormy 10 minutes, the demonstrators returned to the school grounds.

"OUTSIDE AGITATOR"

Police arrested two men, one a Negro and the other a white man they termed an "outside agitator."

Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of schools, and other city officials are known to have been concerned with the likelihood that persons from outside Baltimore have figured in the protest here. Segregation had apparently ended quietly and amicably with the regular fall enrollment on Sept. 7. Then, on Friday, there was a spate of rumor-spreading phone calls, and violence broke out at the Southern High School.

Southern High's principal, John H. Schwatka, at the school since 1926, said, "I don't have it documented, but the evidence to me is only too apparent that there is a preparation, a leadership, a coordinated time arrangement, to this whole thing."

NOISY PROTEST

In Washington, white students staged peaceful but noisy demonstrations at Anacostia and McKinley high schools. It was the first such incident in the nation's capital since segregation bars were lifted this fall.

Milling around the school yards, they taunted students inside to join them and waved signs reading: "Send Them Back to the Plantation;" "Back to Africa," and "We Want Segregation."

As Washington classes were dismissed in the afternoon, the strikers jeered at their departing schoolmates and passed the word to be ready for more of the same tomorrow.

One student who called to his friends to "get" two Negroes was picked up by police and taken to juvenile court.

The demonstration at Baltimore's Southern High School broke up at 2:30 p.m. when 36 Negro students were escorted from the school by Elder James L. Johnson, a Negro minister.

Police followed the Negro students several blocks toward their homes. Behind them came a jeering group of about 200 white students and adults. They stopped before the Negro students entered a predominantly Negro district.

The demonstrations broke out a few hours before the Supreme Court began its new term at which it will hear arguments on the manner of carrying out the order striking down racial barriers in public schools.

When classes reconvened Monday morning, students took up the protest, surging through the streets in a tumultous parade that grew as it progressed from school to school.

By the time the anti-integration march reached city hall, authorities had summoned 600 off-duty police to emergency duty.

From their shouts for the mayor to appear, it was clear that the demonstrators hoped to force Baltimore authorities to retreat from integration plans. This succeeded in Milford, Del., last week when white parents staged demonstrations.

NAAWP COMMENTS

The New York Times reported from Washington that Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People has said his group had taken no part in the student protests either in that city or in Baltimore. He explained that NAAWP would have no dealings with minors, but would be glad to help their parents protest integration "in any way short of violence."

The NAAWP is an organization formed following the May 17 Supreme Court ruling that segregation was unconstitutional as the result of legal action brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAAWP has a national headquarters in Washington.

"We are mighty proud of our record in Milford, Del.," Bowles said. "In all the time we have spent there, no one has swung a fist." Repeated demonstrations against integration in Milford re

Strikes Rise At Schools In Capital

Integration Violence Eases at Baltimore; Milford Awaits Suit

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A wave of student strikes in protest against integration of Negro and White pupils spread to nine Washington schools Tuesday while the situation in nearby Baltimore eased after several days of noisy demonstrations.

In the nation's capital, school authorities reported more than 2,800 student absent at one time or another from three high schools and six junior highs.

At one time about 100 White boys and girls congregated in front of the Supreme Court building where the historic decision outlawing segregation in the public schools was handed down last May 17. The students left quickly under police orders.

Six persons were arrested near Anacostia High where several hundred pupils gathered outside with signs such as "This is America — Not Africa." Two men were held on disorderly conduct charges and the others were released.

The Justice Department said it is "keeping an eye on the all-over situation." The District of Columbia started mixing White and Negro pupils three weeks ago without waiting for the Supreme Court's final order, expected some time next year.

At Council Bluffs, Ia., Vice President Nixon said his two daughters will remain in Washington public schools regardless of integration.

At Baltimore the integration situation apparently was returning to normal after several days of student strikes, picketing and mass protests. Schools over the city reported attendance on the increase.

At Dover, Del., nine of 11 Negro pupils turned away last week from Milford's all-White high school failed to report at Dover's all-Negro school.

A school official, who declined use of his name, said he understood the nine are boycotting classes until they learn the result of a court argument next Tuesday on an injunction filed by the National Association ofr the Advancement of Colored People to allow them to return to Milford.

DESEGREGATION: PROGRESS REPORT

By JAMES EWING
Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 25 — The South is taking its first steps in public school integration cautiously, slowly and with probably fewer "incidents" than most educators had been led to expect. This is the pattern evident from a survey of the seventeen segregation-practicing states and the District of Columbia.

In most of the South and in many parts of the border states, desegregation so far has been the exception and not the rule. The general attitude among state officials and educators has been to do nothing until the United States Supreme Court issues a decree implementing its ruling of last May 17 that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

Latest reports are that this decree will not be forthcoming until next spring, which would postpone compulsory desegregation until the autumn of 1955 at the earliest.

Among the cities and districts where desegregation has been started the transition has been generally smooth. Among these are Washington, which has undertaken a "pilot" program that will leave the district without racial restrictions within a year; Baltimore; parts of Kansas City, Mo.; Charleston; Fayetteville, Ark., and scattered cities in New Mexico, West Virginia, Delaware and Kansas.

Pattern Not Set

No pattern has been established, geographically or otherwise, with respect to the few scattered incidents that have occurred.

Delaware, for example, has proceeded smoothly with integration in some places, though there is trouble in the town of Milford, whose two public schools were turned over to the state Board of Education by the local school board this week. Protests against integration had caused the local board to close the schools and then to resign.

The most violent reaction to desegregation reported thus far, according to the Southern Education Reporting Service here, has been in the little resort town of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. At near-by Madison, W. Va., however, Principal E. C. Brown has reported that integration of eighteen Negroes into afternoon high school classes is "working out fine."

In describing the method by which Madison's Scott High School achieved integration smoothly, Mr. Brown explained that a number of parents of students there—as in the White Sulphur Springs protests, which caused an integration order to be rescinded—had encouraged their children to rebel.

Noting that the protesters were in the minority, however, Madison authorities left it to the student council and called an assembly of all the students to "talk out" the difficulties.

Response Generally Is Better Than Schools Had Anticipated

Seibel in The Richmond Times-Dispatch

"Around and around it goes."

Many states, particularly in the deep South, have adopted a "they shall not pass" attitude regarding Negro students who try to enter white schools, at least until the Supreme Court's decree is issued.

In Tennessee five Negroes tried to enter Memphis State College for undergraduate study. College officials refused them and they appealed to the State Board of Education. The board ruled that, pending the implementation decree, their admission to a white college would violate state laws and the Tennessee constitution, which prohibit mixed racial attendance in public schools.

The same provisions were cited by the Nashville Board of Education when two white professors at Fisk University for Negroes tried to enter their children in a near-by school for Negroes.

Efforts to Bar Negroes

In Baton Rouge, La., forty Negro children were denied entrance at an all-white school, as were seven who tried to enroll at Gretna, across the river from New Orleans. Similar efforts were tried without success at Dallas, at Fort Worth and several other Texas cities, and in Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida.

In most instances, the Negroes seeking entrance were represented by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Political action as a result of the court's decision has taken several courses. Attorneys general of Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, Kentucky and Alabama have declined invitations to take part in the arguments scheduled to start in December. They fear that it might make them a party to the suits pending against South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

States that have announced they want to file "friend of the court" briefs are North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Oklahoma and Tennessee.

Political Course

Most active politically since the segregation cases were taken to the Supreme Court has been Mississippi. This state held a special legislative session last fall to tighten local control of the state's dual system. The legislature is currently in special session again, working on a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing it to abolish public schools and set up private schools as a last resort.

In recent weeks, white citizens of Mississippi have been quietly organizing "citizens councils" in counties throughout the state to "encourage" Negroes to stay in their own schools, regardless of what the Supreme Court may decree.

In primaries last summer, Georgia and Texas named Governors who promised to retain color bars in public schools. Georgia's Marvin Griffin, who had the backing of white supremacy advocate Herman Talmadge, promised that "come hell or high water, races will not be mixed in Georgia schools."

Outcome in Texas

Gov. Alan Shivers of Texas won another term on a platform that pledged continued segregation in the public schools.

In Tennessee, however, Gov. Frank Clement won re-election overwhelmingly on a pledge to keep public schools public and promising only to try and work out the best solution after the decree is handed down.

Based on what has been accomplished in the initial steps of desegregation, it would appear that the South has generally made a good beginning. But it has been only a beginning — the biggest problems are still ahead.

Except for the District of Columbia, voluntary integration, in practically every instance, has occurred in states where Negro popuations are low and racial tolerance is generally good.

Still to be tested is the theory held by many who know the South well: that opposition by whites to integration increases in direct proportion to the percentage of Negroes to be integrated.

INTEGRATION'S TOUGH ROAD

Guardian p. 1

Boston mag.

BALTIMORE, Md. — To desegregate the South's public schools as rapidly as possible the NAACP will within the next three weeks place in the southern states at least four trained and experienced educational specialists to work full-time with organized groups and individuals" on school integration, it was announced by Thurgood Marshall, NACCP special counsel.

Atty. Marshall, who successfully argued the case for integrated public schools, recalled that the NACCP 1954 annual convention last June set September, 1955, as "the time limit within which we will seek (school) desegregation by negotiation and without litigation."

Sat. 9-25-54

He said all sections of the NAACP, local national, are "determined to use every resource possible within the fraoework of our American government to get desegregation in public schools. . . without the necessity of continued and prolonged legal action."

"Where local school boards refuse to negotiate in good faith and are determined to flaunt the law of the land . . . we have no doubt the colored citizens involved will then be forced to seek redress in the courts as a last resort."

In an address before the United Steelworkers convention at Atlantic City last week NAACP Walter White blasted Herman Talmadge, Governor of Georgia as "more useful to the Kremlin than the whole American Communist party in creating distrust of the white western world."

He referred scathingly to Governor Talmadge's open defiance of the Supreme Court decision banning segregated public schools and to the Southern governor's recent statement that he doesn't care what the Communists say about his defiance of the law.

The civil rights leader declared it "fortunate" that most southerners do not agree with Talmadge.

Guardian

Two public schools in Milford, Del. were ordered closed this week because of tension. Threats of violence were made to the local school officials. Police were assigned to guard the closed schools.

Sat. 9-25-54

Thousands of university students and other young people in Asia are scrutinizing each move of U. S. Southern states to defy the Supreme Court decision banning segregated public schools, Walter Carrington, a Harvard Law School student just returned from a trip through five Asian nations declared.

In addition to Singapore, Carrington visited India, Pakistan, Thailand and and Malaya. He related that when he arrived in Cairo, Egypt, one of the first things to catch his eye was a front-page newspaper story on Louisiana's defiance of the Supreme Court decision.

Although the judicial ban against segregated public schools helped American prestige "tremendously" in Asia, Carrington observed, Asian doubts regarding enforcement of the decision were constantly being "reenforced" by Southern moves to continue segrgated public schools, at any cost.

White high school students who staged a demonstration against colored students assigned to their school in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., have withdrawn their objections, according to an announcement in the Charleston, W. Va. daily newspaper.

Early last week, the White Sulphur Springs school board rtversed its decision to integrate local schools in line with the Spreme Court decision banning segregation in public education after white students and white parents demonstrated against the entrance of colored pupils into the formerly all-white high school.

EDUCATION 1954

GENERAL

14 Southern States Hold Fast on Integration Action

By BEN PRICE
Associated Press Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — This may be the last year for a way of life in which racial discrimination is legal.

Across the fringes of the south — Delaware, Maryland, Missouri and the District of Columbia — the color bars already are being dropped in the public schools.

Every major religious denomination in the region has taken a stand in support of the supreme court decision of last May 17 holding that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

But while the fringe states are acting, 14 of the 17 states affected by the court ruling plan to do nothing about the problem in the coming school year.

Until the supreme court spells out a plan in detail, none of the 'old south' states plans to do anything.

The end of World War II brought demands from Negroes that the south practice its "separate but equal" doctrine in the schools. More and more public money was put aside for Negro education.

By the time the supreme court handed down its ruling, the southern states were spending a higher percentage of income on public schools than any other section.

But if a program of integration were begun immediately, the simple problem of space would be acute, especially in rural areas.

Rural White children in the south as a rule go by bus to schools in town. Negro children go to country schools, many of them one-room affairs.

If the White children suddenly were dumped on these country schools, many of which already are overcrowded, there would be children hanging from the rafters.

In the face of these general facts, the question for most southerners is: "When and how?"

Two of the region's most widely recognized authorities on race relations, while cautioning against the specific application of a generality, believe that the White-Negro population ratio is the best index.

They are Harry S. Ashmore of Little Rock, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, and George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

They hold that desegregation probably will end first where the Negro population is lightest and last where it is heaviest.

Almost half the 1,328 counties in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Virginia have 10 per cent or less Negro population.

One fifth of these counties contain 40 per cent of the entire Negro population in the region. Most of the counties with the smallest Negro populations are in mountain areas — the Ozarks and Appalachians.

In the decade from 1940 to 1950, more than a million Negroes left these 13 states and went north. The increase in White population was 33 times as great as the Negro gain.

The Negro farm population declined by 1,300,000.

These statistics mean the south is growing Whiter and the Negro is being urbanized.

In 27 days of traveling I encountered an enormous variety of White opinion in the "Deep South," most of it pro-segregation and anti-supreme court."

Among Negroes — not the leaders, but the so-called little people — there was hope that segregation, the legal badge of inferiority, was on its way out.

No one section of the south could be called typical, but Arkansas comes close to it. The state is a sort of "south" in miniature.

The Ozark mountain town of Fayetteville intends to integrate nine Negro high school students this year.

In some deep south areas, a sharp conflict in White and Negro attitudes can be found.

A Georgia candidate for state office says that in some of the counties he has visited integration isn't even discussed — "everybody thinks the same thing, they just don't believe it can happen here."

A Nashville business executive asks: "why should they want to go to school with us if we don't want them to? This is a rule by a minority."

A Mississippi farm superintendent visiting in New Orleans says: "You ought to see my place. I work about 200 Negroes. They are happy where they are. They don't want to associate with me any more than I want to associate with them. We get along fine. They are good people and they know their place.

"So why should their children go to our schools, they've got their own churches, their own schools and their own way of life. If you mix kids up, the first thing you know they'll want to come into your home. Well, they aren't coming in mine — and my children aren't going to school with them."

Among Negroes — waiters, bellhops, cooks, porters and housewives — there is an air of quiet hope.

All of them expect a much improved life, perhaps not for themselves but at least for their children.

Probably the best summation came from a Negro air force sergeant on the plane from Nashville to Louisville. "We've always had a place in the sun down south," he said. "Now I reckon some of us would like a little of the shade, too."

EDUCATION 1954

GENERAL

Threats of Violence Close 2 Schools As Integration Rows Flare in 3 States

By The Associated Press

Telephoned threats of violence led to the closing of two public schools again Tuesday at Milford, Del., possible court action loomed at Hillsboro, O., and a strike of White students continued at Madison, W. Va.

Elsewhere in the South the segregation situation continued calm, with no incidents reported.

At Milford, Dr. Raymond C. Cobbs, school superintendent, ordered the schools closed after threats of violence if Negroes were allowed to attend classes in the previously all White high school.

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, of Delaware declined comment. A scheduled parade featuring the Milford High School band was canceled.

School doors were shut Monday after the school board learned of a protest march planned by anti-integrationists. Plans to reopen them were abandoned Tuesday.

Dr. Cobbs said:

"Members of the board of education since making an earlier announcement have received numerous calls threatening violence in case any Negro children attend school. In the interest of the safety of all the children the board hereby serves notice that the schools are closed until further notice."

Five policemen guarded the school and tension was reported mounting in the southeastern Delaware community.

Harry E. Mayhew, one of the four members of the school board, resigned, but did not discuss the reasons for his action. There was no immediate decision as to whether 11 Negro pupils will be allowed to take up their high school studies.

School Board President Dean Kimmell said that in addition to the telephone calls, a delegation of citizens opposed to integration came to his home, about midnight Monday and told him that some of their number had "gotten out of hand and there might be violence."

Kimmell said the school board members were not threatened at any time, but that the delegation indicated violence might take place if Negro pupils tried to enter the school.

At Hillsboro, a small southwestern Ohio city, Negroes planned to go to court in an effort to get their children into previously all-White schoolrooms.

Backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which wants to make the issue a test case for northern school segregation, Negroes expected to file an injunction in United States district court in Cincinnati, the court whose jurisdiction includes the area where the schools are located.

Hillsboro officials said, however, that there was no school segregation in their city of 5,000. The city has about 1,200 Negroes and officials said 67 Negroes were enrolled in elementary schools. Some Negro children remained away from school Tuesday.

At Madison, W. Va., School Supt. Clarence Tamplin reported a strike of White students was continuing and that the county board of education had made "no definite decision" on school segregation.

Some 15 or 20 students went on strike at Sherman High School at Seth, W. Va., Monday in protest against admitting three Negroes to the White high school. There are about 700 students in the school.

In the District of Columbia school officials took another step toward integration by permitting elementary pupils, now attending schools within old segregated boundaries, to transfer to schools serving new nonracial ones in which they live. New pupils this year already had been enrolled according to new, inter-racial boundaries.

School officials did not estimate the expected number of transfers. There was speculations that thousands might try to make a shift, including many Negro children who would seek to enter formerly all-White schools.

Parents Seen Main Block To Integration

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 11 (AP)—United States Commissioner of Education Samuel M. Brownell says parents, not children, are blocking racial integration in the public schools of the south.

"It's remarkable the way integration has been accepted by the youngsters," Brownell said last night on his arrival here. "I haven't found any major feelings of prejudice on their part, even in Washington."

He attributed recent flare ups among pupils in Washington, D. C., to parental inspiration brought on by a long tradition of segregation.

Brownell predicted that resistance to integration will wane eventually as people grow accustomed to it in the schools.

NAACP Encouraged, Virginians Are Told

MARTINSVILLE, Va., Oct. 11 (AP).—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was never more encouraged or more certain that the country is moving toward eventual desegration, the Virginia NAACP convention was told here yesterday.

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the NAACP, told the closing session of the convention last night good government will win out in the fight to end segregation. He said the "good people of any community, and they are in the majority," realize their responsibilities.

Marshal, who led the NAACP's successful fight before the United States Supreme Court to have school segregation declared unconstitutional, said "if they can desegregate schools in Baltimore, they can desegregate schools anywhere, including Biloxi, Miss."

Discussing the situation in Milford, Del., and in Baltimore, where students and parents protested the opening of integrated schools, Marshall said such things were to be expected.

"In Delaware, the school board gave in to the mob," Marshall said, "and when any government gives in to the mob, that is the end of democracy."

Marshall lashed out at Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of a pro-segregation movement. He said "you must be encouraged that good government in Baltimore took over and ran Bowles out of town."

Bowles was arrested yesterday in Dover, Del., on charges of conspiracy to violate Delaware school laws.

D. C. Pupils Invited To See Integration

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 11 (AP).—New Rochelle High School's student organization has invited representatives of five high school having desegregation difficulties to come up for a week to see interagation at work.

The invitations were mailed over the weekend to Milford High School, Milford, Del.; Anacostia, Eastern and McKinley High Schools, Washington and Southern High, Baltimore.

New Rochelle High has an enrollment of 1611. It keeps no record of race or religion but has an estimated 360 Negro pupils.

Deep South Banding Even Closer Against De segregation

ATLANTA—(UP)—Negro children returned to segregated classrooms at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., last week to avert open rebellion by White students and parents but at other points along the South's "border" public school segregation ended quietly and without flare.

In scattered areas of Missouri Arkansas, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia Whites and Negroes shared adjoining desks as local school officials bowed to the Supreme court's historic ruling ending segregation of the races in public schools.

The Deep South states, however, drew more closely together in their avowed opposition to desegregation.

In the nation's capital, there were no incidents to mar the first week of classes although one White student wondered "What we'll do about dances. Will they go to our proms?"

In Baltimore, the only section of Maryland to begin mixed classes, school officials reported receiving only three protests.

Missouri accepted Negro students at some schools as did Arkansas while Delaware chose to desegregate classes only in Wilmington.

Below the "border" states of Dixie, a virtually united front was presented to mixed school classrooms.

Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana announced they will boycott the Supreme court hearings at which further arguments are scheduled to be heard.

Mississippi's legislature joined Georgia's in approving a "private" school plan in the form of a constitutional amendment which will be offered to the people in a special election Dec. 21. Both plans would allow the state to grant education funds to private individuals.

The Louisiana legislature also has taken steps in that direction, approving a proposed constitutional amendment which would place the maintenance of segregation within the jurisdiction of the state's

EDUCATION 1954

GENERAL

RACIAL BARS DROP IN MANY SCHOOLS

Negroes Enter White Classes in Several Regions—Change Is Amicable

White and Negro children sat down in the same classrooms together yesterday for the first time in some parts of the country.

With racial segregation banned last May by the United States Supreme Court as unconstitutional, the bars were let down for Negro children in many heretofore white schools. First reports indicated that no friction had arisen.

In Baltimore, the historic change went into effect smoothly and amicably, with the pupils, especially the younger ones, apparently unaware of the importance of their role. White and Negro parents, escorting beginners to school, chatted of common problems here and there.

All Schools Involved

Negroes were enrolled in all of Baltimore's elementary and secondary schools, with the division of the races ranging up to about 50 per cent in one elementary school building. Of the many all-Negro schools that operated last year, not one remained.

White parents have refused to send their children to one former Negro school, but only on the ground that the temporary building was unsafe and unsanitary. They have invited Negro parents to join them in protest.

There is a shortage of school buildings and classroom space has been rented in some churches. Both Baltimore and Maryland have had white and Negro teachers, both on the same pay scale, for many years.

In the Maryland county schools, desegregation probably will await the conference this fall of States' Attorneys General with the Supreme Court on means to implement the court ruling. Maryland's Attorney General, Edward de Rollins, will attend and is preparing a brief to submit to the court by October.

In Virginia, the color barrier dipped a little to admit Negro students at Roman Catholic parochial schools in at least three cities and at schools on military posts. Eleven Negro pupils were enrolled in formerly all-white parochial high schools, but at the elementary level Negroes continued at separate schools.

In northern Virginia, Negro pupils started classe at two Catholic parochial grade schools in Arlington and one in Annandale. In Roanoke, Negroes were admitted to two Roman Catholic grade schools and a high school.

Fort Myer Affected

On military reservations, Negro pupils began attending classes at Fort Belvoir and Fort Myer, both in northern Virginia. This followed a practice in that area permitted for several years but previously used only at Quantica Marine Base where a 14-year-old Negro girl was admitted to class in 1951.

The principal of the Fort Myer school, Theodore Craig, a native Virginian, said he did not know how many Negro pupils would attend. He added:

"As far as we are concerned at this school, they are neither white nor black. They are children."

North of the Mason-Dixon Line, in Hillsboro, Ohio, fifty Negro children enrolled in two previously all-white elementary schools, according to The Associated Press. Only seventeen Negroes reported to a segregated school.

The Hillsboro Board of Education, which had asked for time for the construction of new schools, called a special meeting to discuss the situation. The town's junior and senior high schools have been integrated for twenty years.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had told the board that Negro children would report to the two elementary schools. The children were accompanied by adults as they enrolled.

Gradual Change Urged

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Sept. 7—State school superintendents and boards of education members from nine Southern States were advised today to "set their sights" toward a gradual elimination of public school racial segregation.

Cecil Sima, an attorney of Nashville, Tenn., who has often served as consultant to Southern Governors and educators in school matters, told the school officials that while the Supreme Court in its decision last May 17 had banned comuplsory school segregation, it had not ordered compulsory intergation.

"The South's segregated schools were, for the most part, a product of the practices and policies of the Federal agencies which regulated much of southern life in post-Civil War days," Mr. Sims said.

"In the light of this history of the growth of segregated schools and the absence of any language in the Supreme Court's decision that would order compulsory integration, I think school officials can set their sights toward gradual desegregation.

"But do remember that it is plain from the court's decision, and also plain on the basis of every clinical study of integration advances in other areas, that the South's opportunity to be creative in this field demands good faith and absolute integrity at every stage."

The meeting also heard an address by Attorney General Richard W. Ervin of Florida, who described some of the findings of a recent state-sponsored 'grass roots" survey to determine rural and urban reaction to the Supreme Court ruling on segregated schools.

Mr. Ervin said that 75 per cent of those polled, both white and Negro, felt that Florida would need a time period in which to adjust and prepare for public school integration, with the Negroes estimating a shorter time than did the whites.

Both speakers emphasized that there appeared to be no single state-wide formula for accommodating transition from segregated to integrated schools. They said that each local community or school district should work out its own solution, adding that this was probably the main factor for supporting a "gradual" solution.

States represented at today session were Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana and Kentucky.

Associated Press Wirephoto

SEGREGATION ENDS IN VIRGINIA SCHOOL: Mrs. Louisa M. Snee opens school year for third graders at the Fort Meyer (Va.) elementary school. Brenda Hines and Lillie Mae Gilliard, two of six Negro children entering military post's school, are in this class.

EDUCATION 1954

Supreme Court Acts On Integration Dec. 6

The Supreme Court yesterday set December 6 for the beginning of arguments on how to carry out its edict banning public school segregation.

The court announced also that the deadline for filing briefs in the case has been extended from October 1 to November 15. The delay was sought by several of the seven states which have decided to take part in the arguments.

When arguments open December 6—which the court found to be the first available date for the case—each party will be given one hour to state its views.

The seven states which have asked to do so are North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Oklahoma and Tennessee.

The school segregation decision was handed down last May 17, but the court said it would take up this fall the question of how segregation could best be put into effect.

Milford Schools Shut; Ohio Court Move Fails

Associated Press

Threats of violence kept two Delaware schools closed for the third day yesterday while officials struggled with the problem of integrating Negro students into white classrooms.

Two Milford, Del., schools were ordered closed until further notice after threats against Negro pupils were received by education board members.

[International News Service reported that Milford's eight-man police force and 30 state troopers were placed on emergency call and Police Chief Samuel G. Powell described the situation as "gunpowder without a match."]

Negroes failed in efforts to stop immediately alleged segregation in public schools in Hillsboro, Ohio. After Judge John H. Druffel denied a motion for a temporary restraining order he set September 29 for hearing petitions for a temporary injunction and a permanent injunction against the Hillsboro Board of Education.

The court denied the temporary restraining order because the defendants had not been notified such a suit would be filed.

In the South, Alabama legislative leaders recommended that their state join three other southern states that have moved to abolish public schools in order to maintain segregation. A special legislative committee recommended adoption of a constitutional amendment removing all reference to public schools in the state's constitution.

The amendment would open the way for state subsidized private schools. The theory behind the private school plan is that the Supreme Court could not regulate admission to "private" schools.

Legislative action considered or taken in Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama would have to go before the voters for approval. South Carolina voters approved the "private" school plan last year.

Resistance To Decision Is Unusual

Thurgood Marshall Cites Success in Numerous Districts

NEW YORK. — Resistance to school integration, as in Milford, Del., and in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., is the exception rather than the rule in communities which have taken steps to abide by the Supreme court's anti-segregation ruling of May 17, Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said here this week.

Mr. Marshall, who headed the battery of NAACP lawyers who argued the public school segregation cases before the Supreme court last December, cited successful integration in Baltimore, Washington, St. Louis and other border state cities.

"In West Virginia 12 counties have gone ahead with complete integration and 13 others have initiated programs of partial integration," he said.

"Schools in Dover, Wilmington and other communities in Delaware have been integrated without incident. The flare-ups in White Sulphur Springs and Milford are spectacular only because they are the rare exceptions."

According to a report received by the NAACP attorney from Dr. J. Kenneth Morland, a noted white southern sociologist who made an on-the-spot investigation, the trouble in the West Virginia city stemmed from resentment of the fathers of some of the white boys on the football squad against the presence of two Negro boys on the squad who apparently were headed for first team positions.

Reportedly those fathers urged the youngsters to organize a strike against the admission of Negro students.

Threats of violence in White Sulphur Springs were calmly met by Negroes who were prepared to defend their children. Dr. Morland told the story of an elderly Negro woman who reportedly loaded two guns, parked her car near the school, and openly vowed to shoot anyone who laid a hand on her children, saying that she was old and did not have long to live anyhow.

Mr. Marshall deplored the amount of newspaper publicity given to the exceptional cases.

"The big story," he said, "is that integration is being widely accepted in practically all the communities where it has been tried. The transition has been so smooth in Washington that the program of integration has been greatly accelerated."

In Carthage, Mo., Negroes have been welcomed to the formerly all-white high school and two have been elected to class office. The trouble spots have unfortunately been magnified out of all proportion to their importance."

Mr. Marshall and his staff of lawyers are preparing to present the NAACP recommendations for the Supreme court decrees at the hearing set for Dec. 6. In ruling segregation unconstitutional on May 17, the court called for further argument before handing down a decree on when and how to implement its decision against public school segregation.

GENERAL

Arguments On Methods to End Segregation Will Begin Dec. 6

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22 (AP)—The Supreme Court today fixed Dec. 6 for the start of arguments on how to end public school segregation. The timing raised a possibility that final decrees may not come until about the time for the spring wind-up of classes.

Announcing the December date, Supreme Court Clerk Harold B. Willey said this was the earliest time the argument could be heard. The court's argument schedules for October and November already were filled.

Unanimous Agreement.

The decision on the date was reached at a closed conference of seven justices. Justices Douglas and Minton have not returned from their vacations, but they communicated their agreement with the decision and thus made it unanimous.

The new arguments will pick up not only the question of how to order the end of school segregation which was unanimously declared unconstitutional last May 17. Another major question will be the timing in final orders for desegregation.

The court's opinion last May asked interested attorneys to discuss whether decrees should require admission of Negro children "forthwith" to schools nearest their homes, or whether there should be an "effective, gradual adjustment."

Attorneys also were asked to discuss whether in event orders were issued for gradual integration, the court should give detailed instruction, appoint a special master to study and recommend methods, or allow lower federal courts to devise detailed arrangements.

The five cases directly involved in the May decision—those from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia—have been allotted a total of 10 hours on the December argument schedule. Atty. Gen. Brownell was given an hour.

Seven states not directly involved in the decision have notified Willey they wish to file "friend of the court" briefs or take part in December's oral argument. They are North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Tennessee and Oklahoma.

Willey did not say how many of these seven intend to present oral argument, but he said all may do so if they wish and may have an hour each.

Under normal court routine, the justices listen to arguments in open session and then discuss the issue in later closed conference. Periods of a month or six weeks often elapse from the time arguments are heard until the court makes known its decision. Frequently the time lapse runs into months.

Some lawyers felt that in the segregation cases months may pass before final orders are handed down. They expect several of the arguments in December to stress the need for time in working out integration.

Dixie Trends—

SEGREGATION ISSUE REACHING INTO NORTH

Indians In New York Just Recently Integrated

100-YEAR ERA IS ENDING

By JOHN R. HENRY
International News Service Staff Writer

AUGUSTA, Ga., Oct. 23.—The racial segregation issue in public schools stretches today far beyond the borders of Dixie.

A Southern newsman, who now resides in New York, reports that the situation up there is hardly tranquil even if less publicized than the problem below the Mason-Dixon Line.

George Haslam of Savannah explains:

"All the trouble thus far occurred in Delaware, and, until then, most New Yorkers never described Delaware as a Southern state."

Own Problem

George Haslam, now a barnstorming representative of King Features Syndicate, long ago got a newsman's insight into the segregation problem while doing various editing jobs at Macon, Ga., and Wilmington, N. C., he said:

"You hear a lot of talk about the South and its segregation up North in New York, but it was only this fall that they ended a 100 year era of segregating Indian children from public schools."

He explained that New York state law heretofore required that separated schools be provided for Indian pupils.

Decision of the Supreme Court to abolish school segregation led New York state to permit Indians to attend public schools, according to Mr. Haslam.

He explained, however, that the sweeping verdict of the high tribunal has been little more effective in changing the accepted pattern of racial relations up North than it has in the South.

Incident Cited

Mr. Haslam cited a New Jersey incident, reported in the New York press.

It seems a group of reformists have pin-pointed public schools unattended by Negro pupils who live in the neighborhood, but must go to classes where the enrollment is predominately Negro.

Haslam predicts there would be similar crackdowns against any projected efforts to solve the school segregation problem in Southern cities by zoning methods.

Haslam is in Augusta, following a Southern itinerary for the first time since the high tribunal made its pronouncement last spring. He said:

"I've been talking with newspaper editors all along the route, and making a survey of their opinion as to the outcome of the de-segregation efforts."

No Change Seen

What's their prediction? Mr. Haslam said none of his informers believe there will be any material changes in the Southern educational pattern within the next 20 years, no matter how the court's forthcoming decree is designed to implement the basic decision.

Mr. Haslam added that, in his opinion, the North and East will feel the effects of the decision before the South does.

Georgia, Louisiana To Vote On Segregation Amendments

By RUSELL BRINES

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24 (AP)—Voters of Georgia and Louisiana decide Nov. 2 whether to take steps to block any federal effort to make them mix white and Negro children in their public schools.

They will vote on state constitutional amendments which, in Georgia, could end the public school system and in Louisiana would invoke the state's police power to continue segregation in public elementary and secondary schools.

The Supreme Court ruled May 17 that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional. But it delayed issuing an order to carry out the ruling until it hears proposals from interested states in December.

The segregation issue dominates an unusually thick list of 332 proposed constitutional amendments and referendum and initiative proposals in 37 states to be voted on next week. The voters will decide these at the same time as they decide whom they want to represent them in state jobs and in Congress.

Michigan votes on a plan to legalize bingo for nonprofit charitable organizations under legislative restrictions. The state also votes on an 80 million dollar bonus for an estimated 250,000 Korean War veterans and their dependents, with the average payment $270.

Louisiana decides on a 10 million dollar Korean bonus that would pay veterans between $50 and $250, with $1,000 death benefits to survivors.

In Nevada, the voters have been asked to decide whether to repeal a law outlawing the closed shop for labor unions.

A proposed constitutional amendment in Montana would permit a presidential preference primary there.

California decides whether to raise the maximum old age pension from $80 to $100 monthly and to deny the Legislature power to cut it. The proposition makes no provision for raising funds to meet an estimated additional cost of 74 million dollars during the first 12 months.

Texas votes on a proposed seven million dollar increase in the present 35 million dollar ceiling on state grants for old age assistance, for the blind and needy dependent children. Another proposal would extend social security coverage to certain employes of local government units.

Proposed bond issues for mental institutions, schools and other public projects total nearly 200 million dollars in five states. Other issues include internal tax changes, legislative alterations and a proposal to raise the Maryland governor's salary from the nationwide low of $4,500 to $15,000 annually.

Washington votes on a proposal to bar TV liquor advertising between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m. Four other states decide on liquor law changes.

South Carolina decides whether to eliminate from its Constitution an old clause requiring all office holders to swear they have not participated in a fued since 1331 and will not do so. The issue is whether to eliminate the clause on grounds it belittles the oath or whether to retain it for the novelty.

Pre-election speculation is that Georgia voters will support a proposed amendment authorizing the State Legislature to make grants of state, county or city funds to private citizens for educational purposes, relieving the state of direct educational obligations.

Laying Groundwork

The purpose is to lay the groundwork for eliminating the public school system, if this becomes necessary to avoid integration. South Carolina took a similar step in 1952, voting to eliminate a constitutional requirement for free public schools.

Louisiana is expected to approve a state constitutional amendment providing for separate Negro and white elementary and secondary public schools "in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, better education and the peace and good order in the state, and not because of race."

The idea is that, if the voters okay the plan, the state would be able to claim "police powers", given states under the U.S. Constitution's 10th Amendment, to offset the Supreme Court's antisegregation ruling under the 14th Amendment.

The high court has not ruled on any case involving this argument for continuing segregated schools. In 1917 it denied use of the police power to maintain segregation in a property zoning case.

The Louisiana amendment also would empower the Legislature to call a special election at any time to decide what to do when and if the Supreme Court issues an order to carry out its antisegregation ruling.

The last Louisiana Legislature passed measures denying state funds to any integrated schools, withholding recognition of graduation certificates from such schools, and authorizing parish (county) school superintendents to assign children in advance to public schools. Voter approval of the proposed amendment apparently is necessary to underwrite these measures.

Mississippi, meanwhile, votes on a proposed amendment requiring all applicants for voting registration to be able to both read and understand the U.S. Constitution, instead of having it read to them as is allowed now. During Legislative debate, it was said the amendment's purpose is to further reduce the number of Negro voters.

DIE-HARDS EXPIRE QUICKLY AS BALTIMORE ALERTS ITSELF TO SUPPORT INTEGRATION PROGRAM

One Striker Runs Out of Line to Save Hat of Negro Bystander Caught in Windstorm

ANGRY PARENTS URGE FUTILE STRUGGLE

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The threatened tidal wave of reaction against desegregation that began with strikes in Milford, Del., and spread to Baltimore and Washington, turned out to be nothing more than a ripple in a pond.

Although the Milford situation produced a victory for the segregationalists, much larger Wilmington experienced little difficulty at all as Negroes and whites sat in the same classrooms.

A four-day student strike against integration in capital schools appeared to be breaking up despite a Georgia congressman's advice to strikers to keep the strikes going.

Rep. Davis (D., Ga.) admitted he told students at Anacosia high school to strike, and at the same time castigated the Supreme Court's decision as an "outrageous attempt to force upon an unwilling people the personal and sociological views of the court."

But a warning by Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, drowned out the ranting of Davis. Corning warned early last week that any students who failed to report for classes by Friday would lose for the rest of the year the opportunity to play on school athletic teams, hold office in school clubs or represent their schools in musical, dramatic or other extra-curricular activities.

The warning struck home to many of the 2,700 students who were having a good time striking but didn't like the idea of being excluded from activities. Principal Eugene Griffith of Anacostia, which had 700 absentees at the beginning of the week, reported that "a flood of students have been returning to classes."

Meanwhile, in Baltimore, segregationalists went down to defeat on several fronts. Although the student strikes were given much publicity, the student bodies of the affected schools totaled not more than 20,000 of the 141,500 students in the city. Not more than 25 of 170 schools were affected by the rioters.

And there was every evidence that the rioters were kids out to have a good time, and were egged on by disgruntled parents. Swept up in the anti-racial ferver spread by adult white supremacists, they seemed to be enjoying the tumult and unrest. They carried placards and shouted insults at Negroes.

But when a Negro standing at a curb watching the marchers, lost his hat in the wind, it was a white high school student who jumped to recover it. After returning it to its owner, he rejoined the marchers.

At the Southern high school in Baltimore, members of the football squad collectively guaranteed the safety of its one Negro member if he came out for regular practice. The boy was a junior named Melvin Thompson. He played several minutes at right guard during the team's first two games.

Coach Lee Hodowitz said the squad originally had been 40 strong. It lost eight members over the segregation issue—they decided not to attend classes. The remaining 31 got together and assured Thompson in effect that if he came out to Swan Park for practice, they would "run interference" for him.

Other developments in Baltimore included:

1. A judge in superior court dismissed a writ obtained by two groups, including the NAACP, which would have compelled Baltimore school commissioners to provide segregated facilities.

2. Firm police tactics reduced to a minimum the picketing of schools. No arrests or incidents were noted.

3. The student leaders of Eastern high school assailed in a public statement other schools for clared that any individualSEM "debasing themselves" and declared that any individual, regardless of color, "can and will, add to the fine reputation of the school."

4. Police commissioner Beverly Ober issued an order over the city's three television stations that racial demonstrations against integration of schools be ceased or violators would be arrested. The statement said any person participating in racial demonstrations within two blocks of a school would be arrested.

Meanwhile, strikes in Delaware were condemned by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, who pointed out that his two daughters were attending school in the racially integrated system in Washington. He repeated his appeal to halt racial discrimination in a state-wide radio broadcast and later reiterated his opposition to the strikes in a speech in Omaha, Nebr.

Elsewhere on the national scene, the NAACP called upon Atty.-Gen, Herbert Brownell "to make it clear to all concerned that the full force of the federal government stands behind the local school boards involved in effecting a transition from segregated to desegregated schools."

The American Civil Liberties amendment, even though they oppose the law of the land.

"But when violence is used to enforce their will or individuals and organizations conspire to deny Negro school children their constitutional right to equal treatment, then the department of justice should initiate a speedy inquiry to determine if a violation of federal law has occurred and to punish those responsible if a violation has occurred."

In West Virginia, 25 counties have proceeded quietly to complete or partially complete integration and in only one was the new order abandoned. In Missouri, school integration was widespread and there were no incidents reported. Mexico and Arizona made the transition with little or no disturbance.

Commenting on the advance of desegregation, the staid New York Times wrote:

"The young men and women of Washington and Baltimore and a few smaller towns who have been demonstrating against desegregation are fighting a lost as well as a worthless cause. These youngsters deserve blame for their disorderliness and pity for their ignorance."

A veteran southern educator said last week that "there may be some rough stuff in the South before integration is fully accepted, but it will be in the nature of a last skirmish.

"I think pride is growing in fulfilling completely the democratic ideal as laid down in the Supreme Court ruling against segregation," said Fred McCuistion of Prairie Grove, Ark., "and I believe the day is rapidly passing when a man can get elected to an office on a platform based on racial prejudice—in the South or anywhere in the nation."

McCuisian is associate director of the Southern Education Foundation.

EDUCATION 1954

Quiet Talks Replace Pupil Demonstrations In Integration Issue

Student demonstrations and absences from school over the integration issue appeared to be on the wane today with orderly school-sponsored meetings replacing street crowds.

At McKinley High School, all but six students among the absentees went into the auditorium to hear Principal Charles Bish, Detective Joseph Longo and the bi-racial eight-student committee selected yesterday.

Mr. Bish, acknowledging he grew impatient with the absentees yesterday, told them with a smile today, "I'm in a forget and forgive mood right now."

Most Back at Eastern.

At Eastern High School, almost all the students appeared to be back in school. About 40 boys remained outside the school at the opening bell but quickly dispersed. Principal John Paul Collins announced that any varsity or junior athletes who did not return to school today would have to turn in their uniforms.

At Anacostia High School, first to demonstrate against integration, all the absentees responded to Principal Eugene Griffith's invitation to meet in the school stadium and talk things over. More than 400 of them were on hand for the start of the meeting.

Planning to address the meeting if he got Principal Griffith's permission was Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

Says He Was Invited.

Before going in to see Mr. Griffith, Mr. Bowles told newsmen that a "level-headed student," whom he identified as Charles Maxwell, called him yesterday and asked him to meet today with the absentee students.

Mr. Bowles said his only purpose in talking to the students was to plead for no violence and to ask them to keep off the streets.

"We will be their spokesmen after the streets are clear," he said. "It's their business if they want to stay away from school. It's their perogative. They are still free Americans."

Urged to Air Problems.

The Anacostia meeting opened with Art Lamb, television station WTTG disc jockey, telling the students that one way to settle the question was for every one to air their problems.

"It may sound corny to you," he said, "but democratic principles should be operating in a school house more than any other place."

Macfarland Junior High School, where some students refused to attend classes yesterday, was reported "all clear" by police today.

NEW OUTBREAKS ON SEGREGATION

School Pupils Stage Demonstrations In Washington and Baltimore

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The first sign of trouble in the nation's capital over mixing the races in schools developed Monday with hundreds of white students demonstrating at two Washington high schools.

Demonstrations against integration spread in Baltimore where two bands of marching students numbering several hundred, paraded through the streets. At least nine Baltimore schools reported demonstrations as classes started.

Washington Incident.

In Washington, some 400 of the 1,250 students enrolled at Anacostia High gathered across the street from the school and jeered their principal's pleas that they return to classes. The demonstrators booed 43 Negro students as they entered the building.

One striking student said admittance of 20 additional Negroes to Anacostia Friday caused the demonstration.

A similar demonstration was staged at McKinley High in Washington by about 150 boys and girls but they were persuaded to transfer their protest meeting to a classroom. The meeting broke up in confusion.

Several students criticized admittance of Negroes to McKinley with one girl declaring she was "afraid to walk down the hall. They walk right up behind me and say things I wouldn't repeat."

A majority of the students however, appeared to favor a suggestion by Anthony Green, one of the school's football players, that a committee be named to handle the situation. But dozens of students walked out when another student suggested that the pupils go home and stay out at least a week "if you want the rest to follow you."

District's Program.

The District of Columbia plan for ending racial segregation in schools had brought expressions of hope from President Eisenhower and others that it would become a model for other sections to follow in carrying out the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregation.

The shouting crowds of students in Baltimore made stops at the City Hall and called for Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro. Both crowds were scattered by police but they formed later and continued their marching. One of the groups covered a dozen miles by noon.

GENERAL

Against Segregation

The previous Democratic administration had talked and wrangled incessantly upon the subject of civil rights. It accomplished virtually nothing. When it was at the point of getting somewhere it seemed deliberately to throw the opportunity away.

The present administration has talked little but has acted consistently and vigorously to abolish segregation. Wherever executive action could be effective it has been used. In the Federal establishment in Washington, in defense plants, in the armed services, outstanding progress has been achieved. The government's example has been effective in creating a better atmosphere between Negroes and whites everywhere.

The historic Supreme Court decision, declaring unconstitutional segregation in the schools, has been rendered in the midst of these favorable changes. The decision itself stands above party. But the spirit in which it has been accepted throughout the nation can be attributed to the enlightened point of view which has rapidly been gaining ground.

GENERAL

Violence Flares Over School Integration

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 10-16-54

p. 3

...to implement the May ... Court decision in ...aryland and Delaware last week ...ve rise to violence, and in ...shington, where the Supreme ...Court convened last Monday, ...ite parents protested against ...e integration of high schools, ...inging threats of immediate fed...al action.

It was in Baltimore, Md., and ...ilford, Del., however, where vio...ence flared to immense propor...ions; Negro students were booed ...nd punched at Baltimore schools, ...nd police in Milford had to guard ...egro children returning home ...om school.

Even in Washington, the one ...ity that first lead the way to ...peaceful integration because it ...as the capital of the country and ...eadquarters for the President of ...the United States, white pupils ...went on strike at two high schools ...that were integrated last month ...at the beginning of the first school ...year since the Supreme Court is...sued its edict declaring segrega...tion in public schools unconstitu...tional.

At the outset, when the high ...court made its decision, it was ...more than apparent that some ...states, especially in the Deep ...South, would strongly resist inte...gration, while others would awai... ...further court action and, still oth...ers would move immediately to...wards complying with the decis...ion.

Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia ...and South Carolina are the four ...states most strongly resisting in...tegration.

Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, ...Tennessee, Kentucky, North Caro...lina, Virginia, Alabama and Flor...ida are states awaiting court act...ion and ready to ask the Supreme ...Court for more time to desegre...gate. The court is scheduled to ...convene Dec. 6 to hear arguments ...on implementing its decision.

...States moving towards integration are Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas, Missouri, West Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, along with the District of Columbia.

Following is a series of reports showing what steps have been taken in recent weeks to implement the decision and what has happened in those states where integration began during the current school year:

Alabama

Stubborn, deep with tradition and defiant towards all moves suggesting integration, Alabama does not intend to integrate this year or next if it can be avoided. This state is one of the few that will not participate in the Dec. 6 school segregation case hearings.

Arizona

Integration started in Arizona long before the Supreme Court ruling and it has gone off smoothly. The all-Negro high school in Phoenix has been closed and 500 Negroes are studying alongside whites in the city's six other tax supported high schools.

Thirty-six Negro teachers, formerly employed at one school, are instructing mixed classes at other schools. The city's elementary schools have been desegregated from the kindergarten to the eighth grade.

Taking the lead in desegregation in Arizona was the city of Tucson, however.

Arkansas

Arkansas has not publicly come out against integration but it is expected to file a brief before the Supreme Court asking that the court allow sufficient time for gradual desegragation.

Thus far, only two Arkansas school districts are permitting colored and white children to attend public schools together. Those districts are at Fayettesville and Charlston.

Delaware

While integration of schools in the northern part of Delaware is running smoothly, the lower part of the state has erupted into violence. The trouble here, however, is being agitated by a bigot and bad check artist. — William Bryant Bowles, 34 — who heads the National Association for the Advancement of White People, and Willis McCall, a backwoods Florida sheriff who shot down two handcuffed Negro defendants in the Little Scottsboro Case three years ago.

At Milford, school officials attempted to start integration by admitting 11 Negro children to Milford's high school. But after heated protests the school was closed. When it later reopened the Negro children were out again, back at their old school, segregated and alone.

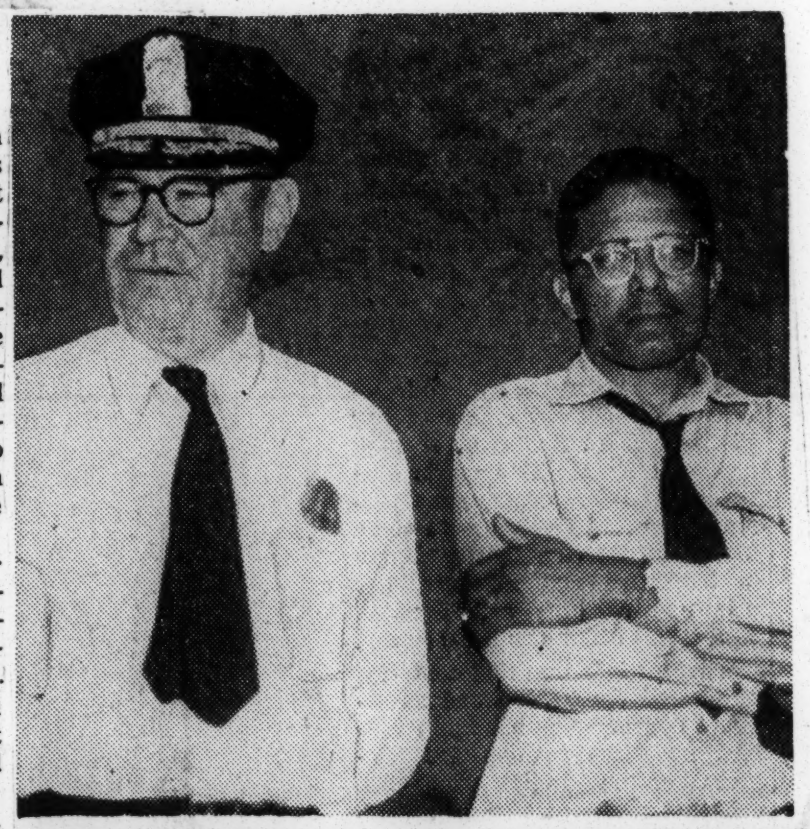
Strikes, riots and boycotts occurred later when the board of education was ordered to admit the Negro children to the white high school for the second time.

Missouri

Some form of integration of colored and white children is underway in every section of Missouri, and because the steps that have been taken were on purely voluntary basis, Missouri will take no part in further Supreme Court litigation.

Florida

In a brief to the U. S. Supreme Court, Florida contended last week that the state was not now ready for an across-the-board application of the desegregation ruling.



ANXIOUS FATHER W. C. Cammack (right) waits for his daughter to leave Anacostia high school in Washington, D. C. He is the father of Doris Cammack, one of 40 Negro students attending the school, which is torn by strike against integration. Cammack, who works for the National Security Agency, took time out from his job to escort his daughter to school and took up long vigil to wait for the end of school day. With him is Police Captain William T. Murphy.

Georgia Paces Resistance

Four Southern States Still Flaunt Banner Of White Supremacy Before Supreme Court

Editor's Note — In four Southern states you hear rebel yells again, this time over the Supreme Court's desegregation order. But in a majority of states, calm study is being given to ending discrimination. This third and final article on an AP segregation survey outlines the legal aspects of the problem.

By BEM PRICE

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2 (AP) — Four Southern states still flaunt the banner of white supremacy before the U.S. Supreme Court.

They simply say they are going to do their best to maintain their way of life no matter what the court orders them to do toward ending racial segregation in their schools.

Officials in the politicians in Georgia, South Carolina, Louisiana and Mississippi are raising the rebel yells, one hard fact stands out.

The South generally is giving lip service to the prospect of ending racial discrimination in the public schools.

Most States

Most of the states have adopted a wait-and-see attitude on implementing orders of the court on desegregation should be carried out.

The court held last May 17 that segregation in public schools for children of color was unconstitutional. It asked the interested states to return next month with plans on how best to end the 90-year-old practice.

The court ruling directly affected Delaware and the District of Columbia, both of which had compulsory segregation laws.

Most states have indicated they will wait for the court order before doing anything. Four others and the District of Columbia show varying signs of letting down the bars.

Defiant States

The four defiant states are among those in the South with the heaviest Negro population and the most outspoken politicians on the issue question.

The Legislatures of Mississippi and Georgia have recently voted to amend state Constitutions so that the public schools could be given or leased to private operators. The theory is that the court can't regulate admission to "private" schools and hence segregation could be maintained. The amendments still must be submitted to the people of the two states.

South Carolina voters approved such a "private school" law last year.

Louisiana's Plans

Louisiana has plans to invoke its police powers to maintain the 'good morals and general welfare" of its people by keeping white and Negro students apart in the grade schools.

While these states have attracted much attention, a state-by-state survey by the Associated Press and the Southern Education Reporting Service (SERS) indicates the majority are setting to work on a solution.

SERS was set up in Nashville, Tenn., recently with funds from the Ford Foundation to present factual reports on developments in the Southern education field. It is headed by C. A. McKnight, on leave as editor of the Charlotte (N.C.) News.

Georgia Loudiest

As a noisemaker on the segregation issue, few states can match Georgia.

Gov. Herman Talmadge has used the Negro as a stump-speaking point of departure for waving the white supremacy banner ever since he has been in politics. Before him his father, the late Gov. Eugene Talmadge, employed the same tactics.

The red-gallused governor has said Georgia would resist integration to the last.

During the recent campaign for Talmadge's job (he cannot succeed himself), the eight male candidates tried to outshout one another on segregation, each claiming he was best fitted to maintain it.

Candidates Promise

Some candidates promised to work for amendments to the U.S. Constitution abolishing the Supreme Court or giving the states the exclusive right to regulate school systems.

Another would move all Negroes out of Georgia.

Still another would give all pupils a choice of attending separate or integrated schools. Any student electing the integrated way would be given a psychiatric examination.

While some of the oratory was patently absurd, the fact remains that Georgia has acted to maintain segregated schools. Aside from approving the "private school" amendments, the general assembly has voted to cut off all financial aid to any school admitting members of the opposite race.

Citizens Council

While Georgia has made most of the fuss, a statewide secret organization known as "Citizens Council" was growing up in Mississippi's 82 counties.

A spokesman for the group — a state legislator — said the councils were composed "of freedom loving Mississippians who believe in separation of the races with liberty for both."

The purpose, he said, is to "anticipate moves by agitators and devise legal means for any problem that may arise." The spokesman added the council will recommend "application of economic pressure to trouble makers," that is, deprive them of jobs.

Membership Dues

Annual membership dues in the council costs $5. Part of the announced aims of the organizations are to maintain white primary elections and to mobilize public opinion against segregation.

The Mississippi Legislature's proposals, along with those enacted in Louisiana, also would permit local school superintendents to assign each individual student to a specific school. They could be assigned on the basis of race.

Lawyers in the South have pointed out two other ways to maintain segregation:

1. School districts could be rigged to assign Negro and white students to certain schools.

2. Where there are now two separate schools, white and Negro, a third could be created which would be integrated. It would be up to the student to select which he would attend.

Broadness Of Decision

In view of the broadness of the Supreme Court decision, can attempts at evasion stand in federal courts?

John T. Fey, dean of the School of Law at George Washington University here, points out that various Southern states had laws excluding Negroes from voting in primaries. The Supreme Court found that since the primaries were the real elections Negroes could not be barred.

Eventually, there were actions in some states to abolish all laws pertaining to the conduct of primaries. The party became a "private club," but in a Texas case Negroes were excluded from a primary on the "private club" theory and the local party organization was hauled into court. The court said the Negroes should be allowed to participate.

Fey Points Out

Fey, speaking before the school law conference at Duke University, pointed out various other means of attack on the evasions proposed.

Even if there is no discernable state aid to privately organized public schools, he said, they may be attacked on the theory of performance of a state function.

If state money is used to support private schools, he added, the attack may be directed at the unconstitutional use of public funds, and the creation of private schools could be attacked in suits based on impairment of teacher tenure contracts.

Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi has said he would have no hesitation in invoking police powers to maintain separate schools.

Legal Wheels

While the legal wheels are in motion to maintain segregation, White has appealed to the Negroes, who make up about 50 per cent of the state's population, to consider "voluntary" segregation.

He called a meeting shortly after the court decision and presented his plan. Ninety Negro leaders were present. Only one favored it.

Since that meeting, at which White proposed a 115 million dollar building program to wipe out white-Negro school building inequalities, other Negro leaders have cautioned patience.

Negro Leader Said

"There is no problem in Mississippi," said President J. D. Boyd of Utica Institute, a Negro school, "quite as urgent as that of providing adequate buildings for rural Negro children."

Such construction, said Boyd, "would settle 95 per cent of our problems."

Both houses of the Louisiana Legislature have passed resolutions condemning the court for a "usurping of power."

The legislature passed three bills. These invoked police powers to maintain segregation, provided that the State Board of Education should not approve any integrated school and gave school superintendents the right to specify which school a child could attend.

South Carolina Removed

South Carolina removed its section of the Constitution making a public school system mandatory last year at the urging of Gov. James F. Byrnes.

Byrnes said this would leave the legislature free to cope with whatever order the court hands down to end segregation.

Four states and the District of Columbia, meanwhile, have been moving toward implementation of the court's opinion even though no order has been handed down.

In Baltimore, Md., integration in the public school system, which is independent of the state, is proceeding on all levels this year. The state as a whole is waiting the court order before integrating but has indicated it will abide by the directions.

Delaware Asks

Delaware's Gov. J. Caleb Boggs asked the State Board of Education to proceed toward integration, and already nine school districts have carried it out. Wilmington, the capital and largest city, is integrating on the grammar school level. All are moving toward integration in 1955-'56.

In West Virginia, Gov. William C. Marland and State School Supt. W. W. Trent gave the counties permission to integrate if they wanted to this year. Six counties have done so. The two with the largest Negro populations are delaying until next year.

It was in West Virginia's Barbour County that the nation's first trouble with integration was encountered. White parents at a mass meeting objected to the move this year so violently police were called. The Barbour County Board of Education subsequently called off the integration move and plans to act next year. One school which opened with integration was forced by white pressure to segregate again.

Local Option

Missouri is another state with a local option system of ending segregation.

St. Louis and Kansas City between them account for two thirds of the state's Negro school population — 43,327 children. Both are beginning integration programs this year, to be completed by next Oklahoma probably is in the most peculiar position of all. While it has maintained separate schools it has a long history of racial tolerance.

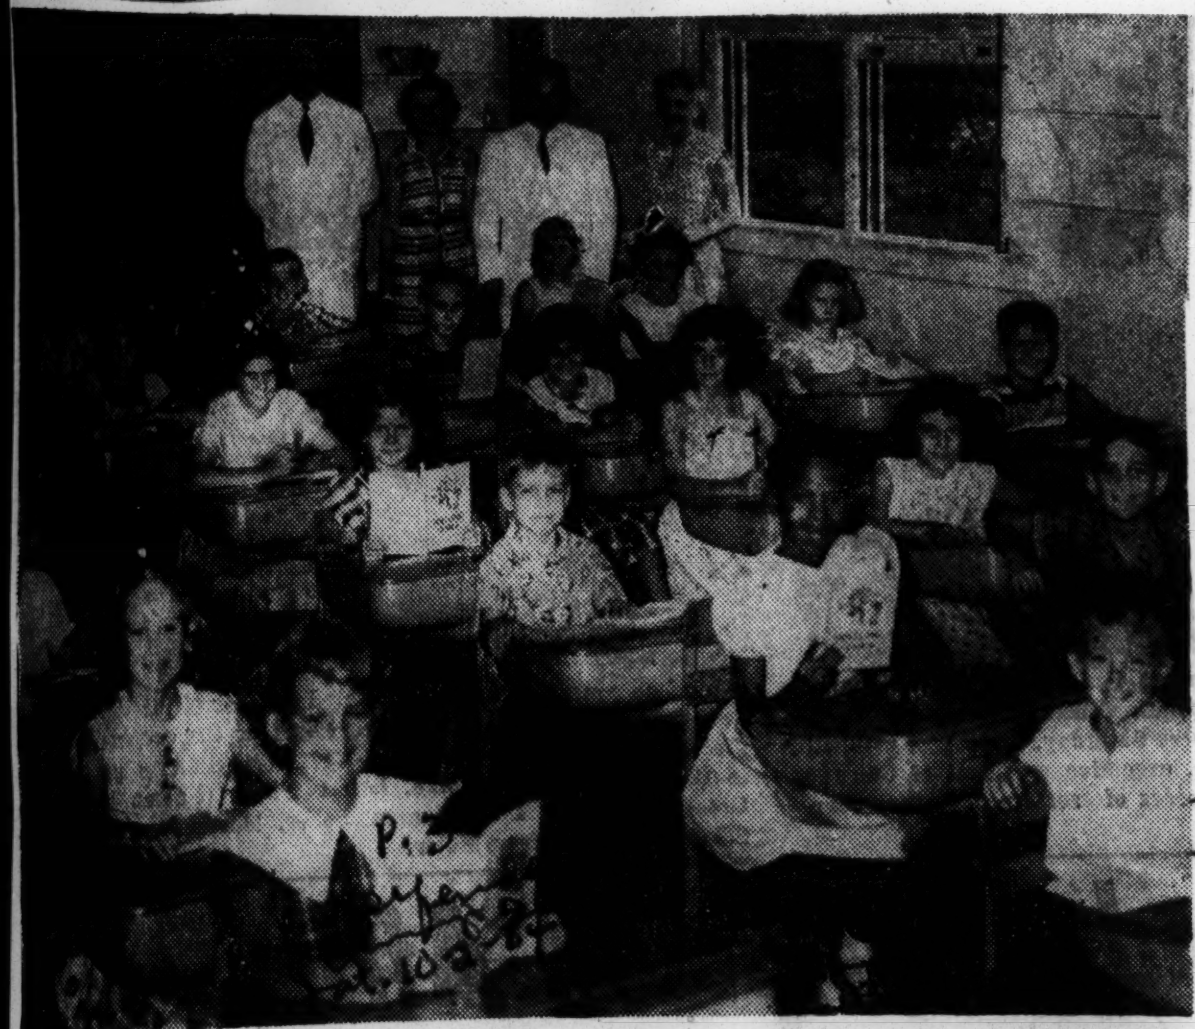
Eight other Missouri communities have begun partial integration.

The District of Columbia has 106,000 public school students, some 61 per cent of them Negro. All evening schools for adults have been integrated, and 1,900 Negro children have been transferred to previously all-white schools. The integration program in the District is to be completed by 1955.

Panarna Desegregating; School Hearing Dec. 6



FOURTH GRADE pupils at the Balboa elementary school in the Canal Zone. Integrated class has 36 students and is the smallest of two fourth grade sections at the school. Standing in the rear of classroom are S. E. Esser, superintendent of schools; Mrs. Marie H. Neal, Balboa principal Acting Governor H. O. Paxson and Mrs. A. H Long, fourth grade teacher

The Supreme Court announced last week that it will hear further arguments Dec. 6 on how to carry out its decision against racial segregation in public schools. But many states in the South have their own plan on how and when they will integrate.

But many states have already started integrating their schools not waiting for the Supreme Court to tell them how and when it should be done. In the Deep South, however, every effort is being made to pass new legislation designed to make it possible for states to maintain separate school systems for Negro and white pupils.

Of the 17 states (and the District of Columbia) cited in the Supreme Court decision, only a handfull continue to pose a problem while in contrast, thousands of miles away in the Canal Zone, Panama City, for the first time since early reconstruction days, sent Negro children to white schools without trouble.

During the past week new incidents arose in several of the southern states where segregated schools have become the issue of the century. Among them were:

Delaware

Delaware was one of the original states named in the Supreme Court decision on May 17. In Milford, Del., last week, a school board member resigned and two public schools remained closed in the wake of threatened violence over the proposed racial integration of Milford high school.

The second school closed by the school board was the Benjamin Banneker elementary and junior high for Negroes. Several days later, however, the state Board of Education was prepared to open the city high school Monday to both white and Negro students.

But as the state board moved in, the local board moved out, resigned after a meeting with the state board and clashed over procedure.

Neither group proposed to maintain segregation but the state board violently criticised the local for closing the schools because of threatened violence.

Alabama

A plan to abolish Alabama's compulsory public school system and let parents say whether they want segregated classrooms has been recommended by a legislative committee and a group of lawyers.

It would open the way for state subsidized private schools and strike from the state constitution the mandate that separate schools must be provided for white and Negro students.

The plan is part of a program at removing from the state constitution all reference to public schools.

Mississippi is using another plan, although somewhat similar, and directed towards the same end. Two weeks ago a weapon Mississippi hopes never to use and is not prepared to use in its fight to keep segregated schools was released from the legislature for public vote Dec. 21.

The weapon was a constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to abolish public schools. The legislature could then sell or lease public school buildings and lands.

Virginia

Delegate Armistead Boothe, of Alexandria, Va., came up with a proposed "Virginia Plan" that would give local authorities wide latitude in solving the segregation issue.

The plan contained three basic rules:

1. The state should strive for court recognition of the practical fact that the old Dominion needs "an indefinite time" in which to work out its school problems.

2. No child of either race should be compelled to attend a school with mixed classes, and

3. No teacher of either race should be assigned to teach children of another race.

Ohio

Five Negro mothers filed a suit in Federal Court challenging a school rezoning order in Hillsboro, Ohio, which said it segregated their children.

The petition, filed by Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the NAACP, contended the Hillsboro school board rezoned schools to "get around" the Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation.

In a statement issued last Thursday, Sept. 23, Gov. Frank J. Lausche said a wrong is being committed upon Negro children in a few school districts of Ohio, but hopes they will be rectified soon.

3 STATES ASK TO BE HEARD ON SEGREGATION

Washington, Sept. 15 (AP) — Three southern states told the Supreme court today they want to take an active part in arguments on how to carry out its decision barring segregation in public schools. The states, each of which has separate schools for whites and Negroes, are Florida, North Carolina, and Oklahoma.

Three others — Arkansas, Tennessee, and Maryland — notified Court Clerk Harold B. Willey they wish to file briefs as "friends of the court." Willey said he had yet to learn whether their attorneys general plan to participate in the hearing.

At Nashville, however, a spokesman for the state administration indicated Tennessee will not file a brief. He said the notice of intent was filed some time ago merely to protect the state's rights, in case it should decide to intervene.

3 States to Join Debate In Court on Segregation

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP).—The first step toward resumption of Supreme Court arguments on school segregation was taken today when attorneys for three Southern states filed notice they wanted to take part in the legal debate.

Attorneys General for Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma informed Harold B. Willey, Supreme Court clerk, they wish to present their states' views when new arguments are heard some time in the fall.

The question for debate then is how and when the tribunal should issue final orders for desegregation of white and Negro pupils.

Arkansas, Tennessee, Maryland and Texas also notified Mr. Willey they wished to file "friend of the court" briefs later. The clerk said it was not clear whether these four also wished to take part in the oral arguments, and he planned to ask them to clarify the point. If they wish to take part, they will be permitted to do so on the basis of the notices received.

A spokesman for the Tennessee state administration said at Nashville today that Tennessee filed its notice merely to protect the state's right to intervene, if it finally decided to do so.

The Supreme Court decision on May 17 that segregation of public school pupils violates the Constitution was given in cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The court left these five cases on its docket in calling for new arguments on how to put integration into effect. Thus attorneys in these decided cases may appear in the renewed debate without filing notices today.

Court observers were interested in the fact that apparently only three states not directly involved in the May decision had responded to Chief Justice Earl Warren's invitation to all states that require or permit segregation.

First Northern Bias Case Filed In Cincinnati, Ohio

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Supreme Court said Wednesday seven Southern states will begin arguments Dec. 6 on how to integrate Negro and white schools.

The court also gave states another six weeks to file briefs in connection with the case by extending the deadline for written arguments from Oct. 1 to Nov. 15.

In handling down its historic decision last May 17, the court specified that it wished to hear further arguments on how the edict should be carried out.

The seven states which so far have asked to be heard are North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Oklahoma and Tennessee. Several southern states, including Georgia, have announced they would not take part in the arguments.

Under court procedure, the justices will listen one hour to each state spokesman beginning Dec. 6. The court said the date was the first available for arguments. The justices convene for their fall term on Oct. 6.

Also on Wednesday a suit was filed in Federal court at Cincinnati by Atty. J. Russell Carter of Dayton, Ohio to rejoin the Hillsboro School board from carrying out segregation policies.

The petition for injunction was filed on behalf of five Negro children specifically identified and for "others similarly situated."

Also presented was a motion for preliminary injunction to restrain the board of education from enforcing its zoning ruling until final disposition of the case.

The court set the preliminary motion down for hearing next Wednesday.

The suit charged the children were forced to withdraw from the traditionally white Webster and Washington Schools solely because of race and color and made to attend schools for Negro children.

The action taken on behalf of the Negro children has been termed the first in Northern courts since the U. S. Supreme court handed down its decision banning segregation.

Court hears Negroes, four states—

Both action, delay urged in briefs on desegregation

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—(AP)—Attorneys for Negro parents in the public school segregation cases of four states asked the Supreme Court today to require integration not later than September, 1955.

The State of Arkansas suggested instead that the problem be tossed back to Congress for decision; South Carolina suggested that it go to the various state Legislatures, and Virginia expressed doubt that desegregation can ever be accomplished satisfactorily in some sections of that state.

Neither court decree nor executive order can force in those sections (of Virginia strongly opposed to integration) a result so basically opposed by a united majority," said a brief filed with the court by Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond.

The varied arguments were submitted in briefs which the court has asked by midnight tonight on how it should carry into effect its order of last May 17 that school segregation was unconstitutional. The court will hear oral arguments Dec. 6.

THE NEGROES' brief was filed on behalf of affected parents in South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware and Kansas. It said that most opposition to immediate action "stems from a desire that desegregation not be undertaken at all," and said that if the court fixes no time limit, it would be merely extending an invitation "to procrastinate."

Arkansas' brief, filed by Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry of that state, urged the court to send the cases back to Congress with "directions to take appropriate action."

He suggested that the court issue a supplemental opinion which he said should "point out in no uncertain terms" that the integration problem is one which should be solved by Congress under Section 5 of the Constitution's 14th Amendment.

That section says "The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision" of the 14th Amendment.

The South Carolina brief came from the board of trustees of school district 22 of Clarendon County. In addition to leaving the problem to state legislators, it said, the court should permit school authorities to present their problems to the district court.

THE COMBINED NEGRO brief contended, on the other hand, that all states having segregated schools were put on notice by the Supreme Court' May 17 opinion taht changes must be made, and said "there are no legal precedents justifying a plea for delay."

It asked that the cases be sent back to district federal courts with instructions:

1. That the process of desegregation by commenced immediately.

2. That the states be required to file periodic reports to the district courts.

3. That an outer time limit be set by which desegregation must be completed.

Integration Trends in 17 States Reported

Education Service Surveys Situation As it Developed Up to November 4

Four trends developed last month in the 17 states and the District where segregated schools had been required.

[Editor's Note—Developments of recent weeks have caused changes in the situation not reported here.

According to the November 4 issue of Southern School News, published in Nashville by the Southern Education Reporting Service, they were:

- Things were calm in three areas of earlier tension and student demonstrations—Washington, Baltimore and West Virginia. Only in Delaware was there continued unrest.
- Florida, North Carolina, Arkansas and Texas were ready to intervene in the high court hearings.
- Georgia and Louisiana voters went to the polls to decide whether they wanted constitutional amendments aimed at preserving segregated schools.
- The race issue was the subject of wide public debate, mostly in political campaigns, in Florida, Maryland and Virginia. Elsewhere in the region, things were quiet.

The regional reporting service was established through a grant of the Fund for the Advancement of Education after the May 17 Supreme Court ruling against school segregation. It aims to supply school administrators and other leaders with the objective news about integration developments in all communities concerned in the changeover from dual schools.

A state-by-state digest of the November Southern School News findings follows:

Alabama — Despite increasing pressure from legislative sources, Gov. Gordon Persons declined in October to call a special session of the Alabama Legislature to act on a report by a special legislative committee urging the amendment of the state constitution to pave the way for possible abolition of public education.

Arkansas—As the state of Arkansas moved ahead with the preparation of its brief in the school segregation cases, Education Commissioner Arch W. Ford revealed that Arkansas' position "will not be a radical approach or one of defiance . . . (but) a reasonable approach . . . (which will try to point out the problems, financial and otherwise, brought on by the decision."

Delaware—After the State Supreme Court stayed a lower court order requiring the readmission of Negro students to Milford High School, an uneasy truce prevailed throughout the tension areas in Delaware. Throughout the state, religious and other organizations began to take positive stands for the preservation of law and order.

District of Columbia — The desegregation of the District of Columbia school system had proceeded smoothly for three weeks when, on October 4, white students at Anacostia High School began demonstrations against desegregation. The demonstrations spread to two other formerly all-white schools and six junior high, but by the fourth day order had been restored and enrollment was normal once again.

Florida — Until Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin's brief was made public, the segregation-desegregation issue remained fairly quiet. In October, however, the question began to bob up in political campaigns and was the subject of increasing newspaper comment. Florida States Rights Inc., a group opposing desegregation, was chartered in Dade County.

Georgia—Just as the November issue of Southern School News went to press, the people of Georgia were going to the polls to decide whether to approve an amendment to their state constitution which would permit the substitution of a private school system for a desegregated public school system. The entire Georgia report in this issue is given over to a complete explanation of the amendment, and the arguments advanced by proponents and opponents. [Editor's Note. Georgia voters approved the anti-integration amendment.]

Kentucky—With Republicans and Democrats alike accepting the Supreme Court decision when it was announced, the segregation-desegregation issue was kept out of Kentucky politics in this election year. The "go-slow" policy of waiting for the Supreme Court to spell out its decrees appears to have satisfied most everyone.

Louisiana — The people of Louisiana, like those in Georgia, were also voting on a constitutional amendment as this issue of Southern School News went to press. Unlike the Georgia amendment, however, the Louisiana proposal would give legal sanction to segregation in the schools under the inherent police powers of the state.

[Editor's Note—Voters in Louisiana gave 5-to-1 approval to the amendment.]

Maryland—As October opened Baltimore made the Nation's front pages with stories and pictures of picketing and rioting. This issue of Southern School News carries a detailed, documentary account of the Baltimore unrest including this picture in retrospect: not more than a half dozen of 52 schools with mixed attendance were involved, and none of the schools with large percentages of Negro students; 97 percent of Baltimore's public school students were not involved in any way.

Mississippi—Although a statewide election is still some weeks off, a strong campaign in favor of a proposed "last resort" constitutional amendment authorizing the abolition of the public school system began to pick up steam in Mississippi in October. An advisory committee issued a question-answer brochure explaining the amendment.

Missouri — With reports in from 466 of Missouri's school districts, the pattern of desegregation comes into sharper focus. The full details will be found elsewhere in this issue, but in capsule form, here are the facts: 289 of the 466 districts have no Negro pupils; of the remaining 177 with Negro pupils, 110 have begun some form of desegregation. In no case has desegregation caused any incident.

North Carolina—Although he has not yet made public the details, Attorney General Harry McMullen says that the North Carolina brief will follow the line taken by Florida and ask the Supreme Court (1) to give adequate time to work out a desegregation program, and (2) to give Federal district judges broad discretionary powers to fix deadlines in the various school districts.

Oklahoma—Two legal attacks on racial barriers in higher education—one suit seeking admittance to a municipal junior college and the other challenging restrictions in Oklahoma College for Women—were the chief developments in Oklahoma in October. There was still no open opposition to ultimate compliance with the forthcoming Supreme Court decrees.

South Carolina — The Supreme Court decision and pending decrees prompted more talk than action in South Carolina last month. Both the outgoing and incoming Governors voiced grave concern over the probability of trouble if desegregation of the schools is attempted. South Carolina's white teachers urged the continuance of a system of free public schools, but did not take any definite stand on the question of segregation.

Tennessee—There was no change in Tennessee's policy of "watchful waiting" during October, and at month's end it appeared that the state would not file a brief before the Supreme Court. About the only action on the segregation-desegregation issue came late in October when the Tennessee conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People met in Nashville and adopted a three-point program calling for implementation of the May 17 Supreme Court opinion.

Texas — Attorney General John Ben Shepperd had a staff of six assistants at work on the brief that Texas will file with the United States Supreme Court, but otherwise October produced no new developments growing out of the May 17 decision.

Virginia—Under the leadership of State Sen. Garland Gray the Virginia Commission on Public Education announced plans for a public hearing on November 15—its first since appointment by Gov. Thomas B. Stanley to study problems growing out of the court decision. But Chairman Gray came in for some published criticism because of a speech he made.

West Virginia—As the end of October approached, it appeared that the unrest in three West Virginia counties where desegregation was tried had about run its course. Parents who were picketing the schools at Four States, near Fairmont, returned to their homes after a stern warning from a Marion County circuit judge. In Greenbrier County and Boone County where demonstrations were reported in the October issue, things were quiet.

Slight Integration Delay Acceptable, Negroes Say

But Only Until September, High Court Told; Southern States Call Quick Move Dangerous

By The Associated Press

Washington, Nov. 15.—Attorneys for Negro parents told the Supreme Court today they would accept a slight delay in the wiping out of racially segregated public schools, but only until next September, the start of the next school year.

However, six Southern states told the court that an abrupt switch would be dangerous and would disrupt their educational systems. The gravest concern was expressed by North Carolina, which said integration of the races might bring about "bloody race riots."

A suggestion that the actual racial integration of the schools be handled by federal district courts in the states was made by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon County, South Carolina, and the attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the segregation cases before the high court.

Broad Discretion Urged

The states urged that the lower courts be given broad discretion to direct the integration to meet local conditions. The attorneys for the Negroes asked the court to lay down strict limitations to avoid "any invitation to procrastinate."

Arkansas proposed that the court ask Congress to say how desegregation should be accomplished under the court's ruling of last May 17 that racial segregation in the schools violated the Constitution.

In handing down its historic decision the court decided to hear further arguments on how desegregation could be carried out. These arguments are scheduled to start December 6. Today was the deadline for filing briefs on which the oral presentations will be based.

Brownell Gets Invitation

The Supreme Court invited Attorney General Brownell to participate in the December arguments. His aides said today the Justice Department would file its brief, preliminary to the argument sessions, in a week or 10 days.

Both sides in the segregation cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas, and the District of Columbia have been allotted one hour each for oral argument. One hour each was also granted to states not directly involved in the original cases before the court—Maryland, North Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Tennessee, Oklahoma, and Texas. It is not known which of the attorneys general for each of these latter states will use the time allotted to them.

Some of the Southern states that filed briefs today said there was no constitutional bar to the court's using its discretion to permit gradual desegregation.

But attorneys for the Negroes said, "It would be paradoxical, indeed, if, in the instant cases, it were decided for the first time that constitutional rights may be postponed because of anticipation of difficulties arising out of local feelings."

The attorneys said piecemeal desegregation of schools would increase tension, and they urged that if the court decides on a gradual system there be "minimum safeguards" to prevent injury to Negro children. There must be safeguards, too, the attorneys said, against a gradual adjustment without any specific ending.

Split on Burial Case

In another action today the Supreme Court divided 4 to 4 on whether a cemetery may be sued for damages for refusing burial to an American Indian killed in Army service in Korea.

The tie vote upheld a decision of the Iowa Supreme Court that Mrs. Evelyn Rice, white widow of Sgt. John Rice, had no right to sue the Sioux City Memorial Park Cemetery for $180,000.

After graveside services, the cemetery notified Mrs. Rice that her husband's body would not be lowered into the grave. Burial was refused on the ground that the widow had signed a contract which restricted use of the cemetery to Caucasians.

The high court today agreed to hear another test case of the Government's loyalty program. This case involves Dr. John P. Peters, senior professor of medicine at Yale University, who was fired from his Government advisory post in June, 1953.

Dr. Peters, claiming his constitutional rights had been violated, sued for reinstatement to his job. Lower Federal courts ruled against him.

The physician said he was dismissed as a consultant to the United States surgeon general on the basis of secret information given by persons who were not under oath, who were not present at the hearing held in the case, and whose names were not disclosed to him.

September Integration Urged Over Dixie Plan

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (AP)—A group of Negro parents urged the Supreme Court today to end public school segregation by next September to prevent Southern states from "tapering off."

The brief was filed by Negro plaintiffs from four states who won the initial ruling against segregation last spring. The court now is reviewing arguments on how and when to implement its historic decision.

SEEK LATITUDE

Several Southern and border states affected most by the ruling countered with a request for "greatest possible latitude" in mingling white and Negro pupils.

Virginia said the high court's decision "raised over most of the Virginia scene the specter of impending educational chaos. . . . We anticipate continuing problems, and perhaps, prolonged social disorder."

Arkansas said immediate integration would have "a most disastrous effect upon the public school system" and "seriously disrupt" efforts by white and Negro leaders toward "solving the racial problem."

Today was the deadline for filing briefs on the question. The court has set the week beginning Dec. 6 for oral arguments on carrying out the integration program.

Most of the states affected by the order have urged the court to go slow in dismantling the racial barriers to avoid "violent opposition." The Negro group challenged the wisdom of such a policy.

"There is an impressive body of evidence which supports the position that gradualism, far from facilitating the process, may actually make it more difficult," their brief said.

"Our submission is that this (segregation), like many wrongs, can be easiest and best undone, not by 'tapering off' but by forthright action."

They asked the court to direct the states to achieve total integration of Negro and white schools by next September, or by September, 1956, at the "outside."

OTHER STATES

The brief was filed by the original plaintiffs from Kansas, Virginia, Delaware and South Carolina. The District of Columbia was the other original defendant but integration already has begun in the district under a "model" plan requested by President Eisenhower.

In addition to these states, briefs also were filed by several other interested states. The general theme was that the court should allow plenty of time for the states to carry out its order.

An exception was Kansas, which reported that integration is working smoothly there and that, as far as it is concerned, there is no need for a Supreme Court enforcement decree.

EDUCATION 1954 GENERAL NEGRO PARENTS
SUPREME COURT DECISION
DEC. 6, 1954

SEGREGATION DEBATE SET BY HIGH COURT

Commenced

To Be Dec. 6—Dixie States, Negro Parents Opposed

R 25

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—(AP) — Attorneys for Negro parents told the Supreme Court Monday they would accept a slight delay in the wiping out of racially segregated public schools, but only until next September, the start of the next school year.

However, six Southern states told the court an abrupt switch would be dangerous and would disrupt their educational systems. The gravest concern was expressed by North Carolina, which said integration of the races might bring "bloody race riots."

A suggestion that the actual racial integration of the schools be handled by Federal district courts in the states was made by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon County, S. C., and the attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the segregation cases before the high court.

The states urged that the lower courts be given broad discretion to direct the integration to meet local conditions. The attorneys for the Negroes asked the court to lay down strict limitations to avoid "any invitation to procrastinate."

Arkansas proposed that the court ask Congress to say how desegregation should be accomplished under the court's ruling of last May 17 that racial segregation in the schools violated the Constitution.

In handing down its historic decision the court decided to hear further argument on how segregation could be carried out. These arguments are scheduled to start Dec. 6. Monday was the deadline for filing briefs on which the oral presentations will be based.

Progress Report Issued on Integration in the South

A second progress report by the Southern Education Reporting Service on sectional reaction to the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation discloses four States "strongly resisting integration," seven "moving toward" it, and nine awaiting the High Court's implementing action on the question.

The service, a monthly compilation of factual data supplied by reporters and editors familiar with the problem in the various areas surveyed, devotes its October issue to 20 States, including the Deep South.

The entire September issue of its "Southern School News" was devoted to a documentary account of significant segregation events in the areas most seriously affected by the court's historic decision.

The newest edition cites as "strongly resisting" the mandate Louisiana, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina. Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Virginia and North Carolina are charted as awaiting new court action. Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas, Missouri, West Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, were reported "moving toward integration."

Its summarized reports on the varying situations in the above-named States follow:

"Strongly Resisting"

Louisana—Any doubts remaining about Louisiana's attitude toward particapting in the December Supreme Court hearing were dispelled by the attorney general, who announced: "We are not parties to any of the segregation suits now before the Supreme Court." The schools remained segregated. A proposed constitutional amendment declaring segregation a matter of "health and morals" and consequently under the "police power" of the state will be voted on November 2.

Georgia—After a warm political campaign, the people of Georgia nominated as their next governor a man who has pledged "Come hell or high water, races will not be mixed in Georgia schools." On November 2, Georgians will vote on a constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to abolish public schools. The state's attorney general reiterated the Talmadge administration's decision to boycott the Supreme Court's December hearing since, in his opinion, it would morally and legally obligate Georgia to support whatever action the court might take in the future.

Mississippi — The Mississippi legislature met in special session last month and approved a constitutional amendment to be voted on in December. The amendment—to be used only as a "last resort"—would authorize the legislature to abolish public schools. Gov. Hugh White said the state is not defying the Supreme Court, rather it is "simply exercising the same legal right to resist this most unfortunate decision that the NAACP exercised in contesting the unanimous court decisions of over half a century."

South Carolina—The state of South Carolina will not participate in the December hearing, but Clarendon County—a defendant in one of the five suits decided last May—will be represented. The state's 555,000 students, approximately 43 percent of whom are Negroes, enrolled in segregated schools. Meanwhile, a special legislative committe continued studying means to preserve segregated schools. A States Rights League was formed in Sumter County, and in Rock Hill, a small dominantly textile community, white and Negro students attended school together for the first time at the parochial school.

States Marking Time

Texas—Negro students in Dallas, Fort Worth and a few other communities attempted, unsuccessfully, to enroll in previously all-white public schools. The state attorney general said that a brief would be filed at the December hearing. The platform adopted by the Texas Democratic convention declared the Supreme Court's decision an "unwarranted invasion" of states rights.

Oklahoma—No change in the Oklahoma public school system developed in September, but race barriers fell in the state's colleges and parochial schools. The NAACP made no overt moves to attempt to force admittance of Negroes to public schools on a non-segregated basis, but backed two special suits pending in the courts.

Arkansas—Alone among the Deep South states, Arkansas reported two examples of public school integration. Charleston and Fayetteville absorbed small numbers of Negro students without incident, but elsewhere in the state, the schools remained segregated. Complying with a request from the state board of education, Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry said he would file a "friend of the court" brief with the Supreme Court.

Kentucky—In the border state of Kentucky, children returned to segregated schools But Governor Lawrence Wetherby said that the state is just waiting for the Supreme Court's final ruling, and that he will then "do whatever is necessary to comply with the law." Under consideration by state officials is a proposal to establish a "Division on Desegregation" as an arm of the state board of education.

Tennessee—Observers in Tennessee say first reports that the Volunteer state would file a brief before the Supreme Court ar now being discounted. Public school students enrolled in segregated schools in September, but in Nashville, white parochial schools were opened to Negroes.

Alabama—The list of Deep South states that are seriously considering constitutional amendments to evade, or delay the impact of, the Supreme Court opinion increased by one when a special legislative committee recommended to Governor Gordon Persons that sections of the Alabama constitution be rewritten to pave the way for abolition of public education in the state.

Florida—In the peninsula state of Florida, children went to school as in past years. Officially, the state government appeared to be assuming a "watchful waiting" posture. Actually, Florida officials have been busily studying the many problems posed by the Supreme Court opinion. Last month Florida officials received the results of a $10,000 opinion survey conducted in 12 representative counties. This survey will form the basis of the brief to be filed by Florida at the Supreme Court hearing in December—a brief which describes the manifold problems involved in transition, but a brief which declares that segregated schools can be ended in Florida equitably over an extended period of time with "tact and wisdom."

Virginia—The Commission on Public Education, appointed by Governor Thomas B. Stanley, met last month for the first time. It decided, among other things, to hold executive sessions unless public hearings become necessary. The composition of the committee—all white legislators—came in for some criticism from the state's newspapers.

North Carolina—As in most other states of the South, students in North Carolina returned to a segregated school system in September. Officials were not inactive, however. It was announced that the state would file a brief at the December Supreme Court hearing, and that the state's attorney general would present oral arguments before the court. There were other developments in North Carolina. Raleigh officials launched a survey to provide documentation of problems that would be involved in implementing the court decision. Teachers in Harnett County met in a non-segregated meeting for the first time. A delegation supporting segregation presented a petition to Governor William Umstead. And a non-stock corporation—the North Carolina Association for the Preservation of the White Race, Inc.—was formed in Durham.

"Toward Integration"

Arizona—Outside the South, but with a partially segregated school system in the past, Arizona entered the final phase of an integration program that was the center of national attention when it began in 1953. The program is scheduled to be completed in 1955.

New Mexico—In another southwestern state, the last three New Mexico communities permitting segregation terminated the practice this fall. The violence predicated by a clergyman—a threat that gained national attention—did not materalize.

Kansas—While segregated schools have been the rule in the South, they have not been uncommon elsewhere. In fact, a school system in Topeka, Kansas, was a defendant in the five segregation cases on which the Supreme Court based its May decision. Desegregation in Kansas was under way before the court issued its ruling, but it has been speeded up since. A survey conducted last month for Southern School News reveals that most of the 10 cities which had segregated systems are now integrating their schools.

Missouri—The majority of Missouri's 63,000 Negro students live in the state's two largest cities—St. Louis and Kansas City. Both have scheduled integration of high school classes in January, and integration of the elementary grades will follow next September. A degree of integration has already occurred in a few Kansas City schools. Eight other Missouri communities, including Neosho, the state's onetime Confederate capital, have integrated their schools.

West Virginia—Toward the end of September, Milford, Delaware, had captured the public's fancy, but there were also newsworthy incidents in two West Virginia counties. Near-violence occurred in Greenbrier and Boone counties as white students picketed schools newly opened to Negro students. Partially obscured by the headlines. however. was the fact that 12 of West Virginia's counties are completely integrated, 13 practically integrated, 18 waiting for further court action. Eleven of the counties have no Negro students.

Maryland—Baltimore, largest city of the border state of Maryland, with a public school population of 140,957—39 percent Negro—evolved a relatively new technique of integration. There was no deliberate mixing of the school population. Since Baltimore has seldom "districted" schools in the usual sense of the word, children were permitted to attend the school of their choice. Result of this "voluntary integration," according to preliminary enrollment figures, was that only 2.5 percent of the Negro students chose to go to formerly all-white schools.

Delaware—Newspaper and television reporters, and millions of interested citizens throughout the nation, kept their attention focused on a small community on the northern rim of the Southland. As the attorney general of Delaware was preparing the brief to be filed with the Supreme Court commenting on the "remarkably peaceful transition" to desegregated schools, a strong protest movement suddenly mush roomed in Milford, resulting in threats of violence, the resignation of school board members, and the temporary closing of the schools. In Wilmington, however, integration proceeded without incident.

Segregation Plans Highlight 232 Proposals

37 States Have Issues On Ballots

Washington, Nov. 2 (AP)—Two proposals to continue school segregation in the Deep South highlighted a record list of special issues decided today by voters of 37 States.

In all, they balloted on 232 constitutional amendments and special proposals, while also electing State and national officeholders.

The issues ranged from Michigan's fight over legalizing bingo for charitable organizations to a California plan for raising maximum old-age pensions from $80 to $100 a month.

Louisiana and Michigan citizens voted on special Korean War bonuses. In several states there was the question of whether to borrow millions of dollars for public projects. Fourteen states considered raising wages or changing working conditions for State officials.

Louisiana and Georgia voted on proposals frankly designed to bypass any Supreme Court order to carry out its May decision that segregation of white and Negro children in public schools is unconstitutional. The court is expected to decide how to implement this decision after hearing plans from interested parties in December.

Police Power Used

Louisiana voters had before them a proposed amendment to the State Constitution to provide for continued segregation in elementary and secondary schools, under the police power given the states by the 10th Amendment to the United States Constitution. The High Court's ruling was based upon the 14th Amendment.

The Louisiana proposal also called for a special election to consider the next step if one is deemed necessary.

In Georgia the issue was a proposal to permit the granting of State funds to individuals for educational purposes, thus paving the way for eliminating the public-school system in favor of State-supported schools.

Dueling Considered

South Carolina took a similar step to avoid integration by voting two years ago to eliminate a constitutional provision requiring free public schools.

In Mississippi, voters decided whether to require prospective voters to show ability to read the U. S. Constitution. The proposal admittedly was designed to reduce the Negro electorate.

Washington decided whether to ban TV liquor advertising between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m. South Carolina considered eliminating an old constitutional clause requiring officeholders to foreswear dueling.

Voters in Nevada were asked to repeal a law banning union-shop labor contracts. Montana considered an amendment permitting a presidential primary.

Survey reveals integration gains despite trouble spots

NEW YORK — (AVP) — A survey here by the New York Post shows that despite certain trouble spots integration is proceeding rapidly and, with success.

W. W. Haynes, principle, Charleston, Ark., public school, responding to an interview by the Post, said that "we opened the school from the first through the 12th grades and everything is working out just swell." Asked if there were reverberations in the town when the Milford, Baltimore and Washington situations exploded, he replied:

"Of course not. If you get to the root of the trouble up there, you'll find a bunch of paid agitators who were only interested in publicity and money. The people down here are interested in the education of our boys and girls as a whole. We pay no attention to what they are doing up there.'

—o O o—

A SURVEY of West Virginia revealed complete integration of colored and white children in 14 major counties, with partial integration in 10 others. The biggest threat of violence and one which fizzled completely, came from Hobbs N. Mex. A white Baptist minister named William Thoams Carter organized a segregation committee.

He claimed 6,000 signatures on a petition upholding continued segregation and said the town of 15,000 citizens would "erupt into violence" if the 400 colored pupil there were admitted to the white schools.

But nothing happened, according to Charles Mills, superintendent of schools for Lea county, of which Hobbs is the county seat.

Surveys in other states where integrated schools are being tried for the first time showed the same general results. Except for a few trouble spots, desegregation is picking up momentum.

2 States Vote on By-Pass Of Pupil Desegregation

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (AP).—Two proposals to continue school segregation in the Deep South highlighted a record list of special issues decided today by voters of thirty-seven states.

In all, they balloted on 232 constitutional amendments and special proposals, while also electing state and national officeholders.

The issues ranged from Michigan's fight over legalizing bingo for charitable organizations to a California plan for raising maximum old age pensions from $80 to $100 monthly.

Louisiana and Michigan citizens voted on special Korean War bonuses. In several states there was the question of whether to borrow millions of dollars for public projects. Fourteen states considered raising wages or changing working conditions for state officials.

Louisiana and Georgia

Louisiana and Georgia voted on proposals frankly designed to by-pass any Supreme Court order to carry out its May decision that segregation of white and Negro children in public schools is unconstitutional. The court is expected to decide how to implement this decision after hearing plans from interested parties in December.

Louisiana voters had before them a proposed amendment to the state constitution to provide for continued segregation in elementary and secondary schools, under the police power given the states by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution. The high court's ruling was based upon the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Louisiana proposal also called for a special election to consider the next step, if one is deemed necessary.

Voted in South Carolina

In Georgia, the issue was a proposal to permit granting of state funds to individuals for educational purposes, thus paving the way for elmiinating the public school system in favor of state-supported schools.

South Carolina took a similar step to avoid integration by voting two years ago to eliminate a constitutional provision requiring free public schools.

In Mississippi, voters decided whether to require prospective voters to show ability to read the United States Constitution. The proposal admittedly was designed to reduce the Negro electorate.

Washington decided whether to ban TV liquor advertising between 8 a. m. and 10 p. m. South Carolina considered eliminating an old constitutional clause requiring officeholders to forswear dueling.

Voters in Nevada were asked to repeal a law banning union shop labor contracts. Montana considered an amendment permitting a Presidential primary.

Two Southern States Vote School Changes

Georgia Amendment Gets 21,000 Majority; Louisiana Goes 5 to 1 for New Status

Washington, Nov. 3 (AP)—Two Southern states voted yesterday to keep Negroes out of white schools and a third voted to curb Negro voting.

Segregation was the top issue among the 232 constitutional amendments and special proposals put before the voters in 37 states.

Bond issues also figured largely in local and State elections, with Californians approving a $294,000,000 expenditure, including $19,580,000 in bonds approved by San Francisco voters.

The big issue in Georgia was a constitutional amendment permitting the Legislature to abolish the public-school system rather than end segregation.

Sets Up Private Schools

With only 264 precincts out of 1,810 still unreported, Georgians ha dapproved the abolition plan 190,645 to 169,488.

Under the Georgia plan the public schools would be turned over to private operators.

South Carolina's Legislature already has authority to abolish the school system.

Louisiana voted almost 5 to 1 for an amendment permitting the State to invoke police powers to maintain segregation in public schools. The law, however, does not apply to Catholic parochial schools.

The police-power amendment might provoke a new legal fight since the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees equal protection of the law. The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled against using the police power in a zoning case, but has never applied it in relation to schools.

22,000 Negroes Vote

Mississippians approved overwhelmingly—something like 19 to 1—a constitutional amendment setting up new voter qualifications.

When the amendment was debated on the floor of the General Assembly, it was labeled a move to curb Negro voting. There are 22,000 voters among the state's 980,000 Negroes.

The voter amendment requires applicants to apply in writing and to be able to read, write, and interpret the Mississippi Constitution to the satisfaction of the registrar.

Besides approving a $175,000,000 bond issue to assist veterans in getting homes and farms and underwriting a $1000,000,000 issue for school loans, Californians rejected an increase in old-age pensions from $80 to $100 a month.

Bonus Approve

Voters in the State of Washington turned down four measures, including one designed to prohibit liquor advertising on television programs from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

Voters in Louisiana and Michigan approved special bonus payments to Korean War veterans.

The fate of a Michigan amendment which would legalize charity-sponsored bingo games and other lotteries remained in doubt.

WASHINGTON NEEDS NO COMPLIANCE DECREE ON SCHOOLS SAYS OFFICIAL

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. p. 1

Fri. 11-19-54

Says Current Controversy Is 'Moot' Where DC Concerned

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — No decree is necessary for compliance with the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the local public schools, Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West and his assistants declared Monday.

In a brief filed in the high court for the Board of Education and top school administrative officers, the Corporation Counsel asserts that progress towards complete compliance with the decision that within less than ten months from the date of final argument, "the controversy so far as the District of Columbia is concerned will be completely moot."

Argument on the questions of when and how the court shall order its decision carried out is scheduled to begin December 6. According to the timeable of the Board of Education is due to be completed before the beginning of the next school year, Sept. 1, 1955.

PARENTS GROUP

The position of the Corporation Counsel differs from that of counsel for the colored children, their parents and the Consolidated Parents Group, Inc., who brought suit to compel the admission of colored children to the Sousa Junior High School.

George E. C. Hayes and James M. Nabrit, Jr., attorneys for the appellants urge the court to issue a decree enjoining the school board and school administrative officers from using distinctions based on race or color in the administration and operation of the local public school system.

SCHOOL BOARD

Their differences with the Corporation Counsel over the merits and demerits of the so-called "Corning Plan" for desegregation of the local public schools. The "Corning Plan" gets its name from Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, was drafted it. It has the approval of the school board.

The Hayes-Nabrit brief attacked the "Corning Plan" as containing "gradualist elements" that deny present constitutional rights to some pupils, caused administrative difficulties and presages more difficulties for the future.

The decision outlaying segregation in the public schools presented to the school board problems of considerable complexity, the Corporation Counsel states, but steps were worked out and put into effect the court's decision.

The Corporation Counsel sets out as an appendix to his brief six exhibits outlining the "positive steps" taken for complete desegregation of the public schools by Sept. 1, 1955.

GENERAL PLAN

There was "wide divergence of opinion" among members of the school board concerning the period of preparation for desegregation and some members are still not satisfied with it, he states, but the principles, general plan and timetable were all approved by a majority of the board.

Sun. 11-14-54

"Except for a brief and mild expression of emotions in four or five schools above the elementary level, the transition has proceeded without incident," he says, referring to the walkout of a relatively few white high school students in protest to the admission of colored students to formerly white high schools

In answer to the questions the court asked counsel to discuss on further reargument, the school board adhered to its earlier position that the decision does not require immediate transition to an integrated school system and urged that the District of Columbia case along with the cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas and Delaware be remanded to the trial courts.

The District of Columbia favors the Supreme Court issuing instructions to the lower courts to order the beginning of integration at the earliest practicable date, with complete integration to be accomplished by a definite future date to be fixed by the high court and with progress toward completion of the program to be periodically investigated by the lower courts.

If the court disagrees with the statement that the decision does not require an immediate changeover to an unsegregated system, the school board says no directive to it is necessary because the time schedule which it had put into operation to effect complete integration "is as short as can reasonably be devised to establish, in orderly fashion, a school system which complies with the decision."

So far as District of Columbia public schools are concerned, the brief adds, for all practical purposes, upon completion of the time schedule in the very near future, "the matter will be completely moot" and there will be no necessity for even the remand of this case to the District Court.

In addition to Mr. West, the brief is signed by Chester H. Gray, Principal Assistant Corporation Counsel and Milton D. Korman and Lyman J. Umstead, Assistant Corporation Counsel.

Accuses State Aides In Desegregation Row

Defender Chicago, Ill. p. 1

Sat. 11-20-54

NEW YORK — "Weak and indecisive state officials, unprepared and unwilling to meet their obligations, gave a present-day type of Ku-Kluxism a test tube in which to dramatize a plan to disrupt school integration in Milford, Dela." Dr. Alfred McClung Lee, Brooklyn college professor charges in the November issue of the Crisis, official organ of the NAACP.

Dr. Lee, in a report of a first-hand survey of the Milford situation made by him and Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at New York City college, gives a day-by-day account of the crisis as it developed there from Sept. 3 to Oct. 15.

He analyzes the forces of bigotry, headed by Bryant Bowles, self-styled leader of an anti-integration movement and emphasizes the importance of strong civic leadership in the transition from segregation to integration.

Another study, "Foes of Intergration in Baltimore and Washington," written by Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau of NAACP, traces the growth of the movement in those areas, reporting the anti-integration case prepared by Bryant Bowles and argued before Judge Cullen of Baltimore whose opinion declared that the Baltimore City School Board had acted legally in abolishing segregation.

Mitchell declares that "events in Baltimore and Washington show that. . .firm law enforcement at the first sign of trouble can prevent its spread."

EDUCATION 1954

GENERAL

U.S. Courts Urged to Handle Integration

Segregation's End Is Urged By September

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Attorneys for Negro parents told the Supreme court Monday they would accept a slight delay in the wiping out of racially segregated public schools, but only until next September, the start of the next school year.

However, six southern states told the court an abrupt switch would be dangerous and would disrupt their educational systems. The gravest concern was expressed by North Carolina, which said integration of the races might bring "bloody race riots."

A suggestion that the actual racial integration of the schools be handled by federal district courts in the states was made by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon county, S.C., and the attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the segregation cases before the high court.

The states urged that the lower courts be given broad discretion to direct the integration to meet local conditions. The attorneys for the Negroes asked the court to lay down strict limitations to avoid "any invitation to procrastinate."

In handing down its historic decision the court decided to hear further argument on how desegregation could be carried out. These arguments are scheduled to start Dec. 6. Monday was the deadline for filing briefs on which the oral presentations will be based.

Both sides in the segregation cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia have been allotted one hour each for oral argument. One hour each also was granted to states not directly involved in the original cases before the court—Maryland, North Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas.

By the United Press.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15. — Lawyers for the Negro parents who won the ruling against public school segregation in the South asked the Supreme Court today to put its order into effect by September.

In a brief, they agreed against any go-slow policy.

"There is an impressive body of evidence which supports the position that gradualism, far from facilitating the process, may actually make it more difficult," they said.

Want No Delay.

The brief was filed by the original Negro plaintiffs from Kansas, Virginia, Delaware and South Carolina. The District of Columbia was the other original defendant. Integration already has begun in the district.

"Our submission is that this (segregation), like many wrongs, can be easiest and best undone, not by 'tapering off' but by forthright action," the brief said.

Southern officials either have asked for a gradual transition or have acted to circumvent the court ruling.

Filed At Deadline.

The brief said Southern states will have had from May 17, 1954, to September, 1955, to make the necessary administrative changes for Negro and white pupils to attend the same schools.

The brief was filed on the deadline for such action. Some Southern states already had filed briefs and others were expected.

The week beginning Dec. 6 has been set for formal hearings on how soon and in what way schools should be integrated.

States present views—

Supreme Court gets variety of advice on framing decree for desegregation

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16—(AP)—The Supreme Court has received a variety of advice on how to frame a decree calling for integration of white and Negro pupils in public schools.

The advice ranged from a prediction by North Carolina that any sudden ending of segregation might set off "bloody race riots" in that state to a recommendation by attorneys for Negro parents that integration be ordered no later than next September.

Yesterday was the deadline for filing printed arguments on the controversial issue by states which maintain separate public schools and by other interested parties. The time was extended for filing of a brief by the federal government, now expected within 10 days.

The court has set the week starting Dec. 6 for oral arguments on the wording of a decree to carry out the court's May 17 decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

NORTH CAROLINA, through Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan, questioned the authority of the Supreme Court or any other federal court to order immediate admission of Negroes to public schools of their choice.

Attorneys for Negro parents who brought the original litigation derided arguments for gradual or piecemeal integration advanced by some states.

"Much of the opposition to forthwith desegregation does not truly rest on any theory that it is better to accomplish it gradually," they said. "In considerable part, if indeed not in the main, such opposition stems from a desire to desegregation not be undertaken at all."

These attorneys argued the Supreme Court should require integration not later than September of 1955.

North Carolina said an order "requiring immediate intermixture" of white and Negro children might result in the public schools of that state being abolished.

The North Carolina brief added:

"CONFLICTS in the classroom, on the playground, and between parents and teachers may lead to racial bitterness in a community and bring to North Carolina the bloody race riots which have disgraced cities and states where justifiable racial pride among both Negroes and white people have been ignored."

In general, Southern States urged that lower federal courts be given broad discretion to direct school integragation to meet local conditions. Arkansas suggested that the Supreme Court ask Congress to say how desegregation shall be accomplished.

Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin of Florida said that unless that state is given time to work out tremendous problems incident to integration "we frankly doubt whether we can save our public school system."

Maryland's attorney general, Edward D. E. Rollins, said his state was attempting to carry out the court's integration decision and should be "left alone to devise in good faith a timetable."

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. of Virginia asked that the court set no time limit for ending segregation, declaring: "Local officials should not be permitted to drag their feet, but they should not be asked to run so fast that destruction results."

School District No. 22 of Clarendon County, S. C., which spoke for South Carolina, urged the court to turn the problem over to lower federal courts without issuing general directions to them. Lower courts, this brief contended, are in a better position than the Supreme Court to inquire into local conditions.

In behalf of Texas, Atty. Gen. Ben Shepperd argued against any general order applicable to all school districts and states.

The high court, Shepperd said, should not "suddenly and abruptly" destroy long established school systems but should recognize "the traditions and usages which have prevailed in those states maintaining a segregated school system, such as Texas. . . ."

The District of Columbia told the court the school system in the nation's capital will be completely integregated by the beginning of the next school year. For its part, the District said, no order is necessary for compliance with the court's ruling.

Delaware, through Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young, urged the court "out of the bounty of its wisdom" to give states time to plan, educate and promote community acceptance and orderly physical fruition of desegregation."

High Court Urged to Permit Gradual End of School Bias

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The Supreme Court was urged today to permit a gradual solution of the problems arising from its historic decision last May that racial segregation in the public schools was unconstitutional.

It was advised that it should not formulate specific decrees to implement its ruling but should allow lower courts and local communities to work out integrated school systems.

Several states warned, in briefs filed with the high court, of probable hostile reactions if desegregation was ordered forthwith. Others said that such an order might close down their public schools.

Lawyers for Negroes who are appellants in the cases before the court asserted, however, that segregation should be completely ended by September, 1955. In the District of Columbia, they said, desegregation should be ordered forthwith.

The court had set today as the time limit for filing briefs in advance of oral arguments to begin on Dec. 6. Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia filed briefs today. Florida, Oklahoma and Kansas had filed previously.

The Department of Justice, asked to file as a friend of court, was given an extension of time. Simon E. Sobeloff, the Solicitor General, said its brief would be filed in a week or ten days. Although Tennessee was invited to file a brief, none was received.

Each of the states that filed briefs and the Solicitor General will be given time for oral arguments when the cases again come before the court next month.

The cases that will be heard came from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The arguments, as are the briefs that have been filed, will be on the procedure the High Court should follow to implement its constitutional ruling. In setting the cases for reargument at this term, the Court asked other states affected by its May decision to submit amicus curiae, or friend of the court, briefs. The briefs filed by North Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Maryland were in this category.

The Supreme Court's 9-0 decision last May held that public school segregation in the states deprived Negroes of the "equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment." It ruled that segregation in the District of Columbia was a denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

The court thereby set aside the "separate but equal" doctrine laid down by the high court in 1896. "Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal," it said.

Moreover, the court found, segregation has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system.

Except for South Carolina the briefs were filed by the attorneys general of the states involved.

A summary of the positions taken in the briefs filed today follows:

VIRGINIA

The power of the court to permit a gradual adjustment clearly exists and should be exercised in this case. It is not the purpose of an Appellate Court to frame detailed decrees and the Virginia case should be remanded to lower courts with very general instructions to formulate decrees that would permit the preservation of the local school system.

A major factor involved is community attitudes. An antagonistic attitud ealready has been evidenced in Prince Edward County, from which the Virginia suit came, and other sections of Virginia.

"Education now follows one pattern in the state; a plan for local variation must be devised. Time is needed for the preparation of such a plan; without such aplan Virginia's schools may be closed."

NORTH CAROLINA

The situation is of "vast importance" to that state. An "extremely delicate and dangerous situation" has arisen as a result of the court's ruling last May.

"From all information available, an attempt to compel the intermixture of races in the public schools of North Carolina would result in such violent opposition as to endanger the continued existence of its schools."

The court should not attempt to formulate decrees but should allow the "greatest possible latitude" to district judges in conducting hearings and formulating final decrees "if the objectives sought by this Court's decision are to be attained."

During earlier arguments, the late Justice Robert H. Jackson had suggested that to send the cases back to the lower courts without standards to guide them might mean a generation of litigation. "If so," the North Carolina brief said, "such a result is far preferable to a generation of strife outside the courts and chaos inside the schoolroom."

SOUTH CAROLINA

"A decent respect for the sovereignty of the states affected and a proper regard for the divisions of functions and responsibilities inherent in our system of government" require that the legislative and administrative branches of state governments should have time and opportunity to work out the problems.

"The courts cannot compel the enactment of legislation or adoption of administrative regulations; they cannot compel the levying of taxes or the making of appropriations. They may annul but they cannot create; they may prohibit but they cannot devise affirmative solutions and command their adoption."

Any attempt by the court to set up "criteria of desegregation" would be an invasion of legislative and administrative fields.

The court has, however, equity powers to permit "effective gradual adjustments" and should remand the cases to district courts for the formulation of decrees.

This brief was filed by attorneys representing the trustees of the school district in Clarendon County where the South Carolina case originated. They noted that, although the decision of the court might affect many states and school districts, as a practical matter, so far as South Carolina was concerned it will be effective only in School District No. 1, involved in the current litigation.

TEXAS

That state has had constitutional segregation for more than eighty years. Under the Texas system there is no discrimination but only separation of the races, and the Supreme Court's ruling that it was "the evil of discrimination and not segregation per se that is condemned by the United States Constitution."

If Texas has to abolish segregation it should be by gradual adjustment in view of the complexities of the problem. The court could not formulate an equitable decree applicable to every part of the vast state of Texas. It should permit the gradual adjustment and leave administration of the program to local school districts. This gradual transition would not be "a denial of relief or of the constitutional rights enunciated by the court." A decree would be assured that "will meet with no more than passive resistance by the public."

ARKANSAS

The court should not order immediate desegregation. Hostility to it exists in a majority of the 422 school districts in the state. "Unwilling or hostile" compliance would have an "undesirable effect" upon the state's entire public school system.

Tom Gentry, Attorney General, who filed the briefs, said that Arkansas' school system was "far down" in comparison with other states and the people could not "point with pride" to it. Improvement of the schools is the most pressing problem before the statte authorities and an order for immediate segregation "would disrupt the financing, management and control of the school system for many years."

MARYLAND

Segregation in Maryland was "well on its way out" before the Supreme Court's decision. Gradual adjustment should be permitted and, "if left alone to devise in good faith a timetable for the desegregation of every school in Maryland, the local authorities will be best able to solve the problem with the fewest possible ill effects." No specific decrees should be formulated by the high court.

DELAWARE

There has been significant progress in abolishing segregation in that state, but anti-integration demonstrations in Milford have demonstrated that "a significant percentage of the people in parts of Delaware are not ready to accept integration." The court should set a deadline for integration and let the lower Federal courts issue the specific degrees.

Lawyers representing the Negroes who were parties to the Virginia, North Carolina, Delaware and Kansas cases, said that there were "no applicable legal preeedents to justify a delay. The court should require segregation to end no later than September, 1955, and should make no provision in its decrees for any extension of the time limit.

"Surely the appellants' rights are not to be enforced at a pace geared down to the very customs of the Fourth Amendment and implementing Federal laws were designed to combat," the Negroes' attorneys said.

Vernon E. West, corporation council for the District of Columbia, said that the issue was moot here because of steps taken to carry out a desegregation plan. He said that an integrated school system will be in operation here by Sept. 1, 1955, hence no directive from the Supreme Court was necessary.

George E. C. Hayes and James M. Nabrit Jr., lawyers for the Negroes, demanded that an order be issued ending segregation forthwith and the case remanded to lower courts to formulate specific decrees.

U. S. Asks Court To Allow Time For Desegregation

Lines Up With Those Areas Seeking Gradual Adjustment

By LUTHER A. HUSTON
Special to The New York Times and The Courier-Journal

Washington, Nov. 24.—The Eisenhower Administration told the Supreme Court today that it should give states and local communities a reasonable time to end racial segregation in the public schools.

The court should not, the Government said, fix a deadline that all areas affected by its ruling that segregation is unconstitutional would be required to observe.

In a brief filed today, the Department of Justice warned, however, that "popular hostility" to desegragation was not a legal justification for failure to end it.

"Racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional and will have to be terminated as quickly as feasible, regardless of how much it may be favored by some people in the community," the brief asserted.

'Can Be No Local Option'

"There can be no local option on that question, which has now been finally settled by the tribunal empowered under the Constitution to decide it."

Specific decrees for ending segregation should be left to the lower courts, the brief asserted, under general rules to be laid down by the high court.

The Justice Department's brief thus supported the position taken by 10 states and the District of Columbia that a period of gradual adjustment to an integrated school system should be permitted. The states and the District already had filed briefs in response to the court's invitation.

Has Been Postponed

The tribunal announced last May 17 its unanimous decision that segregation was unconstitutional. It set for argument during the current term, however, the question of the nature and extent of the decrees it should formulate to carry out that decision.

Argument had been scheduled for December 6, but the court announced postponement last Monday because the Senate has not confirmed President Eisenhower's nomination of John Marshall Harlan of New York to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice Robert H. Jackson. The court said, in effect, that the issue should be settled by a full bench.

Since the Senate has postponed action on the Harlan nomination until the new Congress convenes in January, it is considered unlikely that arguments will be heard in the high court until well into the new year.

'Ground Rules' Offered

These are the "ground rules" the Justice Department told the court it should establish to guide the lower tribunals in formulating specific decrees:

1. The lower courts should enter orders directing the authorities in public schools subject to their jurisdiction to submit within 90 days a plan for ending segregation as soon as feasible.

2. Unless a satisfactory plan is submitted and approved by the lower courts, "appropriate orders" should be issued directing the end of segregation at the beginning of the next school term.

3. Upon submission of a plan, the lower courts should hold hearings promptly to determine whether it provides for transition to a nonsegregated school system as speedily as circumstances permit. In approving any proposed program, the court shall modify it as may be required and fix the earliest practicable date for completion of the program.

'Should Require Reports'

4. The lower courts should require progress reports during the period permitted to end segregation in order to insure against unnecessary delay in the execution of the program.

5. The Supreme Court should retain jurisdiction for the purpose of making such further orders necessary for carrying out its mandate, and to this end periodic reports should be required from the lower courts as to actions taken to enforce compliance with the high court's ruling.

That program would appear to conform to the ideas indicated by President Eisenhower at his news conference yesterday when he expressed the belief that the Supreme Court did not intend to be arbitrary in the procedures it would order for ending segregation.

The brief was signed by Attorney General Brownell and four other Justice Department officials.

The document was filed in five cases that are pending in the court. These cases come from specific school districts in South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

The court's rulings, however, were generally recognized as applying to 17 states in which segregated schools are mandatory by State law and several other states in which segregation is legally permissive.

The Justice Department borrowed language from the Supreme Court's opinion to state, "The formulation of decrees in these cases presents problems of considerable complexity."

'Solution Will Emerge'

Among them was the fact that many states will have to revise "State laws and regulations which were tailored to fit the needs of a segregated school system."

"Popular hostility" to desegregation created another problem with which school authorities will have to cope, the brief said.

"We do not believe," it added, "that there is warrant for presuming that responsible officials and citizens will tolerate violations of the Constitution. The solution to these problems, like all others in a democracy, will emerge from 'sober second thoughts of a community, which is the firm base upon which all law must ultimately rest'."

Dixie Groups Rap Attempts To Abolish Public School Systems

Few changes have taken place last week in the national move to integrate U.S. Public schools. But these "few" changes were by no means small.

Where there were riots, strikes and walkouts before, there are none now. Baltimore and Washington are once more quiet and students have returned to their classrooms.

In Mississippi and Georgia, two of the leading states displaying bitter opposition towards integrating public schools, supporters of segregation were having their troubles:

Mississippi

In Jackson, growing opposition to the constitutional amendment to abolish the public school system was been reported from certain sections of the state. A Mississippi labor faction was already gone on record as opposing the amendment and an organization is said to be forming to oppose its ratification by the voters in the special election Dec. 21.

The forces against the amendment have become so strong that Gov. Hugh White was prompted last week to call the 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee into special session.

First group to step out against the amendment was the Mississippi Federation of Labor. Gov. White said that labor's opposition was expected, however, because "anything for the Negro is its ticket."

Most of the school leaders are for the amendment.

Georgia

The Georgia Municipal Association in Savannah voted last week to endorse their "so-called private school" amendment after hearing Gov. Nominate Marvin Griffin plead with them to support it. This amendment, similar to Mississippi's, would abolish state and tax supported schools.

In Atlanta, however, the Georgie League of Women Voters are urging Georgians to defeat the amendment so as to preserve public schools.

The question of segregated schools was a matter of secondary interest to these women, at this time, who are more concerned with preserving the Georgia Constitution, keeping segregation if possible and obtaining Home Rule.

On the private school amendment, the league commented:

"Giving up our public education system to keep segregation in schools would be like giving up democracy to keep communism out of democracy. No end is so important that it justifies the use of any means."

Meanwhile, a statewide citizens group will be organized to fight the proposed amendment, according to former U. S. Judge M. Neil Andrews.

The fundamental objection to the state-subsidized private school system, said Andrews, would deprive Georgia's children of an opportunity for an education and at the same time deprive the people of control over their children's education.

Kansas

Stepping softly but taking long strides, Kansas school officials are moving rapidly toward integration of white and colored schools. In Topeka, a step-by-step integration program has caused scarcely a ripple in debate — much less a vociferous opposition.

Last week School Superintendent Wendell Godwin reported that 12 elementary schools in Topeka have been fully integrated, two more partially. That leaves only five school districts for completion of the program.

Maryland

In Baltimore, the issue of desegregation of public schools has come rapidly to the fore in the Maryland elections, following disturbances that reached a peak there two weeks ago, but now virtually have ended.

Washington

White high school students in Washington called off their strike against mixing white and Negro pupils almost two weeks ago, but last week they attended the same classes somewhat reluctantly, but resigned to face the fact that integration was here to stay, despite the cost.

Alabama

Members of Jefferson County's legislative delegation favor a special session of the legislature to devise ways of maintaining segregation in the schools. But they are for such a session only if a "workable" plan is submitted and the meeting of the lawmakers is limited to the segregation question.

EDUCATION 1954

GEORGIA EDUCATION COMMISSION

GEA Maps Private School Plan Fight

The Constitution

AUGUSTA, Oct. 6 (AP)—The Georgia Education Assn. mapped strategy Wednesday night to fight Gov. Talmadge's private school amendment in the Nov. 2 election.

p. 8

The teachers plan an organized battle at the polls to save Georgia's public school system, it was learned as more than 300 school supervisors opened a three-day curriculum planning conference here.

Thurs. 10-7-54

Although not on the program, J. Harold Saxon, the GEA's executive secretary, came here to solicit opposition of the supervisors to the private school proposal favored by Gov. Talmadge and Gov. Nominate Griffin.

Saxton gave a candid description of the private school amentment: "fantastic."

Atlanta, Ga.

"GEA is officially on record favoring the present segregated public schools and University system," Saxon declared.

"There is no rush. It is not necessary to change our state constitution in the November general election because it is generally agreed that this matter will be kept in the courts for a long time, and the people need more time to study and discuss the far-reaching implications of this proposed amendment."

Saxon posed three questions:

1. "What provisions are to be made for disposal of the near billion investment in the public schools and university buildings and equipment?"

2) "Is a 'private' school with any vestige of state, county or municipal control, supported by public tax funds granted to citizens for educational purposes, itself constitutional?"

3) "If this 'private school' plan is itself declared unconstitutional, what then?"

The GEA spokesman said he fears the amendment would damage the teachers retirement plan. Shown an Associated Press report of Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook's ruling that the amendment would not kill the teachers retirement system, Saxon replied:

"The attorney general has affirmed, as of now, protection of teachers retirement and employes retirement is frozen into the present constitution. The big question with teachers and other state employes is whether the provision of constitutional amendment No. 4, which states 'not withstanding any other provision of this constitution,' is in conflict with the provision freezing protection of teachers retirement and employes retirement in the present constitution. There are 40,000 members of the teachers and employes retirement system who are vitally concerned."

The GEA distributed a leaflet which states the private school amendment "definately gives the General Assembly, through grants to citizens, the oblique attack on our traditional separation of church and state."

Talmadge-Appointed Group Endorses Private School Plan

BY JAMES R. HOLLAND
For International News Service

A private school plan for maintaining segregation was recommended Tuesday by the Georgia Education Commission, an advisory group established to find means of circumventing the U. S. Supreme court ruling against separate schools.

The vote was 13-3 for a resolution urging the legislature to enact laws permitting the education of children "at state and local expense in supervised segregated schools" should the courts decree an end to segregated public schools.

Atlanta Journal

The resolution concluded the commission's summer long study of ways to maintain segregated schools.

Voting against the resolution were state school superintendent M. D. Collins, present House speaker Fred Hand and Roy Harris, a member of the board of Regents of the University system.

TO BEGIN TOUR

Dr. Collins, an outspoken foe of the private school plan, announced later that he will begin a statewide speaking tour Thursday to campaign against a constitutional amendment that would pave the way for the plan.

The amendment, to be voted upon in the November general election would permit the legislature to grant state money to private individuals for educational purposes.

Gov. Herman Talmadge has called the amendment "insurance" that might not be needed, and the private school plan a "last resort" in maintaining segregated schools. He is the leading backer of both.

Although the commission's work presumably was completed with formulation of its resolution, Governor elect Marvin Griffin, a staunch advocate of the Talmadge plan, said he will keep the group in being "for some years to come."

CITES FUND NEED

Harmon Caldwell, Chancellor of the University System of Georgia voted for the resolution, but cautioned that adoption of a private school plan would bring a need for more funds for the state's colleges.

The other points included in the commission's recommendation to the January session of the legislature were:

Retention of an Appropriations Act clause which automatically cuts off state funds from any school which is non-segregated and strengthening of laws covering assignments of pupils to schools and laying out of school districts.

The action came after Attorney General Eugene Cook told the commission that a Supreme coure decree against segregated schools would abolish free public education in the state.

He said the state's constitution does not permit the state to establish racially mixed schools, to collect taxes for them or to expend funds on them.

After the meeting, Dr. Collins declared: "The way to educate the mass is by the public school system. There is no sense in throwing it away."

Another dissident, Roy Harris of Augusta, commented: "I don't think this private school plan will work."

In effect, the plan advocated by Gov. Talmadge calls for the state to pay a direct educational subsidy to children to attend private segregated schools.

Gov. Talmadge Talks to Courier

Courier p. 11
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 11-20-54

Chief Executive Says Segregation OK by Citizens

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

ATLANTA, Ga.—Georgia's retiring Governor Herman Talmadge reiterated his oft-state belief that Negroes and whites in this state prefer segregated schools.

The Governor admitted, however, in an exclusive Courier interview, that it would not matter if Negroes did or did not want segregated schools, he and his successor, Governor-designate Marvin Griffin, "will do whatever is necessary to keep white people in white schools and Negro people in Negro schools—and that goes for the university system, too," he stated.

Talmadge

The son of Georgia's best-known ruling family, speaking in his best holier-than-thou voice, adjusted his "halo" and declared, "I have done more for Negroes in the past six years than all of my predecessors combined and any fair-minded Negro in Georgia will tell you that."

Mr. Talmadge told the Courier: "We're doing more for education in proportion to the income that we collect than any state in the union and only an extreme fringe, a woeful, woeful minority of both races want it (integration)," he claimed.

* * *

THE PERSONABLE chief executive was asked what significance he attached to the report that many Negroes voted for his gubernatorial candidate, Griffin, and also for the controversial "private school amendment."

"Proof, I think," he said, "Negroes don't want to go to schools any more than

"It will not be put into operation unless we have to and it will be put into operation if we have to," he promised.

* * *

THE LOW regard that the state and the Governor apparently have for the Supreme Court of the United States prompted a question on the change of heart since Plessy v. Ferguson.

We asked the Governor to explain just how the South could, with a straight face and a clear conscience, damn the very governmental agency which only sixty years ago granted them the "separate-but-equal" way of life.

Typical of the hard-crusted Southerners who will not discuss the legality or morality of the court's decision, Talmadge denied any knowledge of past acts of the court.

"I know nothing about what happened fifty or sixty years ago and I don't pretend to keep up with it. I do know, and the people of Georgia, both white and colored, know that a sociological factor like this (integration) will not work in this state. It's only an extreme fringe, a woeful, woeful minority of both races that want it. We're doing more for education in proportion to the income that we collect than any state in the Union."

IF, ALLOWED a gradual approach to the Supreme Court anti-bias decree, how long would Georgia want to comply, we asked.

"You're bringing up entirely speculative matters that I wouldn't want to comment on at this time," he said. "All I can do is tell you what the situation is now. It is not fancied or supposed. The Negroes of this state know it, the white people know it, and those who pretend to be at all realistic think about it the same as I do."

Unwillingly, the outspoken advocate of segregation admitted that perhaps he did expect to see integration in his native state before he dies. Asked if he thought he'd live long enough to see integration, the Governor replied, "I don't know. You're speculating on thirty or forty years — I'm talking about today."

* * *

THE GOVERNOR has forecast unrest and violence here if the Supreme Court attempts to force an integrated public school system.

We reminded the Governor that Georgia said violence would result if Negroes were permitted to vote in the Democratic primaries, but that nothing has happened. The Governor said that this is entirely different. He cited the demonstrations against integration in Delaware, West Virginia, Washington and Baltimore as proof.

"You can imagine what would happen in Baker County, Georgia, as a result of what happened up there," he said.

Veteran politicians of this state insist that the Governor will run for the Senate in two years. They also insist that he is the most influential political figure in Georgia and will not have too much difficulty winning. They contend that he who cusses the Negro most gets most of the votes and Talmadge has been hollering n——r long and loud.

white folks want to go to Negro schools."

We asked the Governor if he considered a vote for the private school amendment a vote for segregation. "That's true," he shot back.

Obviously convinced that the approval of the amendment has given him and his disciples of white supremacy the control that they wanted, Mr. Talmadge very magnanimously assured us that the amendment would be put into operation only as a matter of last resort depending upon what the Supreme Court does and what Negroes in the state decide to do with reference to the school system.

Mouths of South—Sons of Dixie are speaking out these days in favor of the integration of public schools. Left, Primus King, banker-minister of Columbus, Ga., checks a list of registered voters which appeared in the local paper. Center are Alec Rivera and Robert M. Ratcliffe (right), Courier news editor, who have been touring the South and sampling for Courier readers some of the thoughts of individual Southerners on the issue. At the right is Edwin A. Henry, president of the Augusta, Ga., NAACP and an insurance executive, who is seeking to arouse that town's Negro citizenry in the all-out fight for integrated schools.

EDUCATION 1954

Amendment Choices Fewer, But Confusion Still Possible

Journal & Constitution
Sun. 10-31-54 P. 9-B

Remember Ballot Numbers For Accuracy; Schools No. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

There won't be as many amendments on Georgia's general election ballot Tuesday as in years past. But there's plenty of chance of confusion over the ones that are on it.

For the first time, this year's ballot contains only statewide amendments and ones that effect the voter's local community. But by a fluke in the law, 11 of the so-called statewide amendments are really local ones.

And then there's the problem of the wording of the amendments. The best policy is to remember the number of the amendment you're interested in. Then the words won't baffle.

Take the hotly contested private school amendment, for example.

"Just to read the words on the official ballot, a person might not get much of an idea what it's about," said Neil Leach, who is conducting the election in Fulton County for Ordinary Eugene Gunby.

* * *

HE POINTED out that the wording on the ballot—the way it will appear all over the state—carries no reference to private schools. Nor does it begin with the words, "Notwithstanding any other provisions, etc.," which have been so much under discussion, he said.

The ballot simply reads:

"For the amendment to Article Eight of the Constitution adding a new section relating to education."

That is Amendment No. 4, the number it will carry on all ballots—both machine and hand—over the entire state.

* * *

THE ACTUAL amendment, the text of which does not appear on the ballots, reads:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution, the General Assembly may by law provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes, in discharge of all obligations of the state to provide adequate education for its citizens."

Over the state, polls are to be open from 7 p.m. to 6 p.m., unless local ordinances set the closing time later. In Fulton and DeKalb counties, for instance, the closing time is 7 p.m.

Some 46 amendment proposals will be voted upon all over the state. Only seven of them are general or statewide amendments, but the attorney general's office has ruled that 11 other local amendments should be voted upon by the entire state.

* * *

THE STATEWIDE amendments are numbered 1 through 7. The other local amendments which will appear on all ballots are numbers 13, 19, 20, 24, 27, 28, 30, 32, 33, 44 and 45.

Besides Amendment No. 4, the other six statewide amendments are:

* * *

1. AUTHORIZES the General Assembly to provide for "home rule" for municipalities.

* * *

2. PROVIDES for annual sessions of the General Assembly, instead of the present biennial sessions.

* * *

3. EXEMPTS property owned by religious groups from taxation where no income is derived from the property.

* * *

5. AUTHORIZES taxation for a firemen's pension system.

* * *

6. AUTHORIZES purchase of property, including resale to private interests, for slum clearance and redevelopment.

* * *

7. PROVIDES referendum procedure whereby county school boards may increase present 15-mill school tax limit up to 20 mills.

In DeKalb County, Amendment No. 27, which would remove the $2,000 homestead exemption for school tax purposes, will be listed in the No. 1 voting position at the extreme upper left corner of DeKalb machines.

The other amendments will be listed in their numerical order across the top of the machine.

Fulton County's two school amendments, Nos. 32 and 33, like the DeKalb school amendment, are among the 11 local amendments to be voted upon statewide. Fulton also has one purely local amendment — No. 31 — which is purely local and will appear only upon the Fulton voting machines.

* * *

THUS DEKALB County will have 18 amendment proposals across the top of its voting machines and Fulton County will have 19 amendments on its machines.

Mr. Leach said the Fulton machines will list the amendments in numerical order, rather than having the three local amendments in a preferred, left-corner position.

Amendment No. 31 will permit Fulton County to resume work in municipalities. No. 32 will remove the Fulton homestead exemption from Fulton County school taxes, and No. 33 will raise the Fulton school system's bond debt limit from the present seven per cent to 10 per cent of the tax digest.

Except for the four Fulton and DeKalb County local amendments previously mentioned, none of the other local amendments listed will affect the two counties.

In both counties, names of Democratic Party nominees will be listed across the machines in one line, directly under the referendum questions.

A third Republican Party line is immediately under the Democratic line. It lists only one candidate, Charles Moye Jr., under the name of Democratic Rep. James C. Davis, whom he is opposing for Fifth District Congressman.

GEORGIA

The congressional contest is the only opposed race in Fulton, DeKalb and Rockdale counties. Rockdale County uses paper ballots which will have only the 18 required constitutional amendment proposals.

* * *

PARTY LEVERS at the left of the machines in Fulton and DeKalb counties will turn down all the pointers over Democratic nominees, or the pointer over Mr. Moye's name.

Without using the party levers, the pointers may be turned down individually, as in primaries.

Or a person wishing to split his ballot may vote for Mr. Moye against Mr. Davis and yet vote for all the unopposed Democratic nominees. The simplest method would be to pull the Democratic lever, then switch the individual pointers in the congressional race before casting the ballot.

A person who wishes to vote for Mr. Davis, together with all other Democratic nominees, can do so simply by pulling the Democratic lever.

* * *

ON HAND-MARKED ballots the principle applies, except that a voter who wants to split Republican and Democratic must mark both parties. Then he scratches out the name of the Democrat he doesn't want, and writes in the name of his Republican choice.

The written ballot will have places to write in Republicans, independents and any other type candidate.

The 11 local amendments which the attorney general has ruled must be voted on by the whole state sum up this way:

* * *

13—TO ENLARGE membership of the Macon-Bibb County Board of Health and to empower the city and county to enact health, sanitation, plumbing and garbage collection and disposal regulations.

* * *

19—TO MERGE the independent Canton city school system with the Cherokee County system.

* * *

20—AUTHORIZE merger of the Athens and Clarke County school systems.

* * *

AMENDMENTS

24—MERGE the Douglas and Coffee County school systems.

* * *

27—AUTHORIZE removal of homestead exemption on school taxes on recommendation of the DeKalb County Education Board.

* * *

28—COMBINE the governmental functions of the city of Albany and Dougherty County.

* * *

30—AUTHORIZE merger of the Elberton and Elbery County school systems.

* * *

32—REMOVE homestead exemption on school taxes on recommendation of the Fulton County Education Board.

* * *

33—TO INCREASE the debt limit of the Fulton County Education Board from seven to 10 per cent of the assessed property of the district.

* * *

44—AUTHORIZE merger of Thomasville and Thomas County school systems.

* * *

45—PROVIDE that all Tift County shall compose one school district.

* * *

EDUCATION 1954

ELSE RETRENCHMENT

2 Amendments Called Vital to Fulton Schools

Journal & Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

The Fulton County school system faces "serious retrenchment in every phase of its school program" if voters Tuesday fail to approve two constitutional amendments offered by county school officials, Supt. Paul West warned Saturday.

Sun. 10-31-54

Mr. West said the amendments, numbered 32 and 33 on the ballot, must be passed if the the system is to avoid virtual elimination of entire educational services and departments. Also in the balance are more double sessions, overcrowded classrooms and possible loss of accreditation, he declared.

P. 8B

AMENDMENT 32 would remove the homestead exemption of $2,000 from the 15-mill school operating tax levied in the Fulton School District outside Atlanta.

It would not affect taxes of Atlanta residents nor other county tax levies, Mr. West explained.

* * *

AMENEDMENT 33 would allow for issuance of school bonds totaling 10 per cent of the school bond digest. The present legal limit on school bond indebtedness is 7 per cent of the digest.

This amendment is not a bond election, West pointed out. But if passed it will give the county board of education authority to call a future bond election.

Both the board of county commissioners and the present Fulton grand jury have endorsed the amendments. They also have been endorsed by public officials and civic groups in the Tri-Cities area.

Explaining definite reasons for the need of each amendment, West pointed out:

* * *

THE HOMESTEAD exemption is not a measure to gain additional funds. It is a measure to bring in enough revenue to replace an emergency allocation of $270,000 which expires this year.

The allocation was granted two years ago by the General Assembly to meet financial losses suffered by the system when 50 per cent of its students and 75 per cent of the district's tax digest were transferred under the Plan of Improvement.

The allocation was granted pending the time when county citizens outside Atlanta would remove the homestead exemption from the first $2,000 of the school operating tax.

* * *

PRESENTLY, because of the exemption, between 50 and 55 per cent of Fulton County homeowners outside Atlanta do not pay any school operating tax because their property tax assessments are $2,000 or less, West said.

Removal of the exemption would cost the average taxpayer about $15 additional yearly. At the maximum, it would cost $30 per year. It would bring in approximately $285,000—enough to replace the amount lost by the ending of the emergency allocation, West pointed out.

Without funds to replace that money, the system could not operate without serious impairment of services.

* * *

THE SYSTEM already has double sessions operating at the College Street School in Hapeville, and lunchrooms are being used for classrooms in the North Avenue School in Hapeville and in the Liberty-Guinn School area.

In addition, overcrowded conditions are necessitatiing the use of cafeterias and libraries for classroom purposes in at least half of the county schools.

To meet these needs, the county—once the amendment becomes law—plans a great building program. This would include high schools at Sandy Springs and in East Point, and new elementary schools at Alpharetta, in the Sandy Springs-Liberty Guinn area, the Dodson Drive area of East Point, and the Herschel V. Lee section of College Park.

The program also includes additions to College Park and Hapeville high schools as well as construction of nine other elementary schools, location of which has not yet been definitely decided.

School officials also pointed out that the planned changes in tax assessments in 1956 are too distant to offer any help. The system could not operate over that two-year period on limited finances without suffering serious impairments in services, West added.

Segregation Legislation For Schools Proposed

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

The Georgia Education Commission Wednesday proposed three legislative measures to preserve segregation in state schools, including one to imprison any state or local school official who pays out tax funds for non-segregated schools.

One of the three proposed bills would make it illegal to appropriate or expend any state or local funds in any school district which does not provide separate schools for white and Negro children.

P. 5

It would make it a felony for any state or local school official to pay out funds for mixed schools, subject to imprisonment for two years. The bill also provides that any official spending state funds in violation of that provision would be liable for damages in the amount of funds so expended.

Sun. - 12-5-54

The two other proposals provide for pupil assignment by local school superintendents, and for creation of school attendance districts by local school boards.

Drafted by Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and patterned after proposals made last summer by Rep. Charles Gowen of Glynn County, the pupil assignment bill would empower local school superintendents to assign pupils to schools within each system.

The superintendent could assign pupils "in such manner as in his judgment . . . will best promote the interests of education within the district and the educational interests of all pupils attending public schools therein, their health, morals, their physical and cultural development as well as the public health and morals."

This provision also says that "every such assignment shall be made consistently with the maintenance of good order within the district and each of its several public schools and maximum attendance in such schools."

Appeals could be made to the local and then to the state school superintendent and finally to the state board of education.

Borrowing a part of the "private school" plan is ratified in an amendment to the Constitution last month, this bill would authorize the state board to make educational grants to a pupil "in lieu of attendance in public schools" if the board finds it "necessary for public health, morals and good order."

The third proposal would give local boards of education power to lay out and create attendance districts to "best promote public education within the district," and to consider roads, school bus routes, distance, school population and other factors. The board would have the authority to require pupils to attend the school located in that attendance district.

EDUCATION 1954

GEORGIA

NEGROES
ATLANTA, GA.
AUGUSTA, GA.

Augusta's Negroes Apathetic Toward Fight on Jim Crow

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. p. 1
Sat. 11-20-54

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

AUGUSTA, Ga.—It is no secret that Negroes must get out and fight for school desegregation in the jim-crow-ridden state of Georgia if they want it.

And it's about time that someone arouse the colored citizens of Augusta because most of them appear quite willing to go along under the flag of second-class citizenship.

Negroes here could, and should, fall in line with their brothers and cousins in Atlanta and Columbus where bold moves are being made to obtain full integration.

Well-thinking Negroes here who are willing to press for desegregation of schools and full integration, say the over all Negro leadership here has not been successful, that many of the old-line residents refuse to fight for their rights and that the ministers, as a whole, have not taken a forthright stand against segregation.

• • •

EVEN THE president of the local branch of the NAACP, businessman Edwin A. Henry, finds opposition from some Negroes as well as from most of the whites.

This could be due to the fact that he is a newcomer to Augusta, having been a resident in the city for only five years.

• • •

Although the NAACP branch has a membership of 425 members, only twenty-five or thirty are active.

Less than thirty parents to date have shown a willingness to sign a petition calling on the Board of Education to follow the ruling of the Supreme Court.

It is generally believed that a majority of the Negroes in this area prefer integrated schools but there are some who go along with segregation.

• • •

ON THE teacher level, those who are fully prepared are definitely for integrated schools.

One reason why Negroes in Augusta should fight for integration is that whereas so-called white schools are comfortably populated, most of the all-Negro schools are overcrowded.

Ursula Collins Elementary School is packed with 1,900 pupils and only recently two children were injured in a stampede. Conditions are said to be deplorable at Charles T. Walker Elementary School where double sessions are being held because of overcrowded conditions.

• • •

AT LUCY C. LANEY High School, which was built in 1952, over 1,300 students are enrolled and 500 of these are ninth graders.

The building is inferior to those erected for white students and this school does not have a campus for playground activities.

The city of Augusta is located next door to fully integrated Camp Gordon

'We Won't Yield An Inch'-Walden

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. p. 1
Sat. 11-20-54

Leaders Standing Pat in Ga.

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Consensus of Negro leaders fighting to bring school desegregation and complete integration to the state of Georgia over the protests of Talmadge's machine is: "We won't yield an inch because we've fought too long to stop."

"The Negro in Georgia wants first-class citizenship and whatever that entails," said one of the leaders.

At the same time, it was pointed out that Negroes themselves must take the initiative in the move to open the doors of all schools to colored children.

The uninterested Negro who refuses to go to the polls and vote came in for a verbal lashing from these leaders.

Interviewed by the Courier were Walter H. (Chief) Aiken, Dr. Rufus Clement, Dr. William M. Boyd, John Wesley Dobbs, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, Prof. C. L. Harper and Atty. A. T. Walden.

ANY STATEMENT by state officials to stave off a school desegregation program in Georgia will be opposed vigorously by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declared Dr. William M. Boyd, a professor at Atlanta University and state president of the NAACP.

Courier

"We've fought too long to stop now," he added.

Referring to passage of the "Amendment 4" plan which gives the Legislature the right to substitute private schools for public schools, Dr. Boyd said he can't understand why qualified Negro voters won't get out and cast their ballots. He feels that a strong Negro vote would have defeated "Amendment 4."

"They want the fruits without sticking out their necks," he said.

Sat. 11-20-54

Dr. Boyd predicted a long battle through the courts over school desegregation because he doesn't expect Georgia "to throw in the towel" without putting up a bitter fight.

• • •

JOHN WESLEY DOBBS, Grand Master of Prince Hall Masons in Georgia and president of the Georgia Negro Voters League, voiced this opinion: "The people have to be educated. Once they do away with segregation on the trains, in the buses and in eating places in the South, it won't be difficult to desegregate schools here."

Mr. Dobbs gave the NAACP a lot of credit for the work it is doing to bring about integration in the schools, but he had a slap for Negroes in Georgia who refuse to go to the polls and vote.

"There is a lot of ignorance in this state," he said, "and it is not all on one side."

• • •

VERY POINTEDLY, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, world-traveler and churchman, said: "In the deep South the Negro will have to take the initiative in the fight for school desegregation.

"We'll have to insist that Negro children attend schools nearest their homes," he said.

Dr. Mays said further that "I don't think we have integration any place in this country today. An integrated society is non-discriminating.

Passage of "Amendment 4" in a recent statewide vote is seen by Dr. Mays as a mere threat to those seeking integrated schools, but he added that it is unfortunate that the voters saw fit to pass it.

Finally, Dr. Mays said "I don't think the State Legislature will abolish our public schools."

• • •

DR. RUFUS E. CLEMENT, president of Atlanta University and lone Negro member of the Atlanta School Board, has taken a fearless stand for desegregation and was one of the outspoken opponents of the now infamous "Amendment 4."

"The Negro in Georgia wants first-class citizenship and whatever that entails," declared the AU president.

The State of Georgia will do nothing about integrating its schools until it is forced to do so, he added. This statement is seen as a warning to Negroes in the state, many of whom have shown disinterested attitudes.

• • •

SAID Walter H. (Chief) Aiken, one of the nation's most outstanding builders: "Leadership for integration in the South is coming from the young white graduates of Georgia Tech, the University of Georgia, Oglethorpe, University of Alabama, Auburn, University of Florida, Vanderbilt, the University of Tennessee, the University of South Carolina, Clemson and many of the other universities and colleges in the deep South.

"This leadership is not coming from the teachers and professors in these schools, but from the students and graduates," said Mr. Aiken.

"They're tired of all of this foolishness," he pointed out.

Integration will take on form first in the entertainment and sports worlds, the noted builder said.

• • •

ATTY. A. T. WALDEN, nationally known civil rights lawyer, is certain of a long court battle in Georgia to force the state to follow the mandate of the Supreme Court, "but we won't yield an inch," he said.

If all eligible Negro voters in the state had voted recently they could have defeated "Amendment 4" which gives the Legislature the power to abolish public schools and set up private schools, Attorney Walden told the Courier.

The NAACP will await final action of the Supreme Court before announcing its legal attacks on Georgia's stubborn plan to hold on to segregated schools, according to the lawyer.

• • •

PROF. C. L. HARPER, retired principal of Booker T.

Washington High School in Atlanta and executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association, predicts that the State of Georgia will fall in line and abide by the Supreme Court's decision when the final plan is handed down.

He thinks the high court will give Southern States a period of time in which to work out the school integration program.

If the state does attempt a private school program, such a program would be overruled by the courts, Prof. Harper said. He said any court action against the State Board of Education would be introduced by the NAACP.

• • •

AS FAR as he knows, the state has not worked out any type of private school plan.

Prof. Harper said there are a few Negro teachers in Georgia who still favor segregation, but he pointed out that the Georgia Teachers and Education Association in its annual meeting in Savannah last April adopted a resolution calling for complete integration.

Because Negroes are confined to tight residential districts, there should not be more than three thousand colored students enrolling in so-called white schools in Atlanta, said Prof. Harper.

The well-known educator said Negroes in Atlanta and throughout the state will settle for nothing less than full integration.

NEGROES
COLUMBUS, GA.
ETC.

Cairo Meets Columbus— Dr. Thomas Brewer Sr., president of the Columbus, Ga., Civic Association, and influential leader, talks with some Egyptian army officers. Dr. Brewer attributes much of the improved race relations here to the fact that local business men can't tell Negro soldiers from many foreigners and do not wish to run the risk of losing the nine-million-dollar-a-month Fort Benning payroll.—Rivera Photo.

Teachers Afraid to Join NAACP

Columbus, Ga., Prepares For All-Out Campaign

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. p. 1
Sat. 11-20-54

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

COLUMBUS, Ga.—The Talmadges and their followers have failed to frighten men like Dr. Thomas H. Brewer Sr. and the Rev. A. D. Wilson.

Dr. Brewer heads up the Citizens Committee here, the organization that filed the Federal suit which resulted in Negroes smashing vote barriers in Georgia primaries.

This same organization, at this very moment, is attempting to force open Columbus' golf links to Negroes on an integrated basis.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson is president of the local branch of the NAACP which is spearheading the school desegregation fight in Columbus. The Columbus NAACP branch has secured 103 names to a petition calling for the Muskogee County Board of Education here to carry out the mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court. . . .

BOTH DR. BREWER and the Rev. Mr. Wilson know that state officials are going to draw out delaying tactics in an effort to stave off school desegregation, but they are preparing to go to court and there are plenty of fearless colored citizens here who will give them all-out support.

The Board of Education has not answered the NAACP's school integration petition, more or less waiting for action to be taken by Talmadge and his crowd after the Supreme Court hands down its final ruling.

Proof that Negroes in the deep Southern city of Columbus will fight for full integration is seen in the fact that Negroes of this county raised $10,000 which was used to force open the Georgia primaries to all citizens.

Courier

The battle to open the Democratic primaries to Negroes in Georgia is officially known as the Primus King case, and the "daddy" of this long court fight is none other than Dr. Brewer.

Sat. 11-20-54

THE CASE was filed in 1944 in the U. S. District Court in Macon, Ga. A decision for Primus King was handed down in 1945. The decision was appealed, but the Court of Appeals in New Orleans upheld the lower court in March of 1946. The U. S. Supreme Court refused to review the case, automatically opening the primaries to Negroes.

P. 2

Dr. Brewer merely smiles when ever he is asked about "Amendment 4" which gives the Legislature the right to outlaw public schools. "It'll blow up," says Dr. Brewer.

School desegregation is coming to Columbus and to all of Georgia one of these days, but when it does come, Dr. Brewer doesn't predict too much mixing of students here because of the usual pattern of racial districts.

* * *

THE BEALWOOD section, a Columbus suburb, would find about 300 colored pupils attending so-called white schools because these children go by white schools every day during their four-mile bus ride to attend an all-Negro school.

If there is a reluctancy on the part of Negro children to attend schools closest to them when desegregation takes place here, Dr. Brewer said the NAACP will be the force to encourage these children to forget their fears and abide by the law.

Quite a few Negro teachers in this area are afraid, Dr. Brewer said. "They're just afraid, period. We have 200 Negro teachers here and only fifteen are members of the NAACP."

Asked about other Negroes in the city and county who have shown a more or less disinterested attitude in the move for integration, Dr. Brewer reached back for one of his homespun lines and said:

"It's like milking a cow. Most people want the butter, but they don't want to churn the milk to get it."

There are 40,000 Negroes in the Columbus area. The city now has four Negro policemen and is about to add four more to the department.

* * *

IT WAS POINTED out that Negro and white nurses have been attending the same classes in the city hospital here for years.

Negro surgeons perform operations in the hospital.

The fact that the city of Columbus is located next door to fully integrated Fort Benning may, in the long run, have a lot to do changing the town interracially.

Nothing is said here now when white soldiers take their Negro GI friends into white cafes and diners, and Puerto Ricans in the Army uniform are mingling with both Negroes and whites.

W. H. AIKEN
..."they're tired of foolishness"

ATTY. WALDEN
..."we won't yield an inch"

JOHN W. DOBBS
... it's not all on one side

RUFUS CLEMENT
..."the Negro wants first-class"

DR. WM. BOYD
"we've fought too long to stop"

C. L. HARPER
. . . Georgia will fall in line

BENJAMIN E. MAYS
. . . "we'll have to insist"

'Won't Live to See Georgia Integrate'—Arnall

Would Rather Have No Education Than Mix With Negroes

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 11-20-54 P. 3

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

ATLANTA, Ga.—"No one alive today will live long enough to see mixed public schools in Georgia, ex-Governor Ellis Arnall told the Courier.

"I think the majority of peo-law now to cut off the funds ple in Georgia would rather for schools if they're mixed. If have no education than to go they don't have money, how to schools with Negroes. They'd could they have schools?" To rather have a tutor," declared a suggestion that Federal funds the former governor. He as- would probably be withheld, he serted further that "Supreme appraised that "that's not a drop Court or no Supreme Court, you in the pocket."

can't make them do it."

* * *

We asked Mr. Arnall how ON NOV. 2 the voters over-long would Georgia want to whelmingly approved a consti-comply with the anti-bias man- tutional amendment giving the date of the court should it de- State Legislature the power to cide to allow some states "grad- discontinue the public school ual compliance"? To this ques- system and substitute in its tion he stated without equivo- stead a system of "privately cation that "I don't think the operated state schools." people of Georgia want to comply or will comply, gradual or fast."

* * *

"IN MY JUDGMENT," the former Georgia governor said, "the people here would rather close the school system down before having mixed schools. I have talked with enough people to know that it's a deep-seated conviction that they don't want mixed schools and are not going to have them."

We asked the former Georgia chief executive to speculate on how long it would be before a program of integrated schools would be inaugurated in this state. He paused momentarily and then said, "This may come as a shock to you, but I just don't think you nor I, nor anyone that we know will ever live long enough to see mixed schools in Georgia."

He reminded the writers that "we've got a provision in the

Where there are just a few Jews, a few Catholics or a few Negroes, there is no problem, but when you get into Mississippi, South Carolina and Georgia, there is more friction because of the numbers of Negroes."

Arnall blamed the Negro voter for much of his treatment in the state. "The Negro doesn't vote intelligently in Georgia. I hate to say that, but the Negro leadership is so split up that a lot of them vote for their worst enemies. Talmadge had a candidate running who campaigned on the race issue and he was elected by only 33 per cent of the votes. If the Negroes had voted for the candidate who had a chance to win against the Talmadge candidate, he might have been elected. Instead of that, he split up and thereby dissipated their influence and instead of helping some of us who had tried to fight for fairness, they worked against us and it is very disheartening."

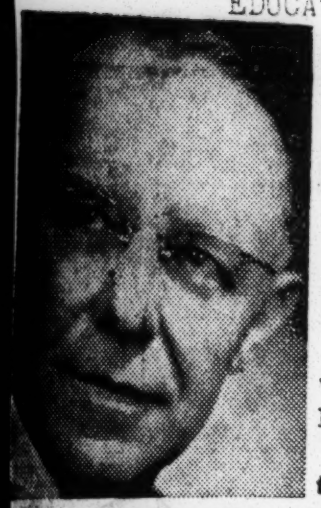
According to Arnall, this situation was brought about because of disputes among the Negro leadership "who wanted to lead the parade."

In conclusion, Mr. Arnall stated that the people of Georgia are willing to pay the price, whatever it is, to keep segregated schools. We asked him if they were willing to go to jail.

* * *

"I DON'T THINK they would go to jail because when you've got a state legislature that would change the law every time, how could you ever get convicted? Suppose, for example, they brought a case in Georgia saying that these schools were unconstitutional, that very minute the Legislature would change the law in some minor particular then it would have to go back into the courts. Then when they knocked that out, they'd change it again. So you can't ever put a state official in jail, Federal or state, so long as he is acting under the color of law, and as long as he has a new law each time that the Legislature gives him he is acting under the color of authority and the color of the law."

"I know that 99 per cent of the people down here will not tolerate mixed schools," concluded ex-Governor Arnall.



WM. B. HARTSFIELD
against private schools

'We Are Not a Violent People —Hartsfield

By A. M. RIVERA Jr. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

ATLANTA, Ga.—"I don't believe that there'll be any violence here if integration comes," Atlanta-born Mayor Hartsfield told the Courier.

The Mayor, who is regarded by many to be one of the most liberal top officials in the city's recent history, said, "There were some who said that there would be violence if the Negro was admitted to the primaries in the state, but there hasn't been any."

Mr. Hartsfield led a successful campaign against the private school amendment in his native Fulton County of which Atlanta is the principal city. The measure was approved, however, by a state-wide majority.

The amendment is an addition to the present constitution which authorizes grants to private persons should the public schools be discontinued.

The Mayor refused to venture an opinion on the future of the amendment except to say that it was his understanding that the proponents of the law claimed to want it in case the Supreme Court handed down a decision aimed directly at Georgia.

He disclaimed any knowledge of how or when the amendment would be administered. He intimated that he hoped that it would not be necessary to put it into operation.

On the question of the acceptance of integration by Atlantans, the Mayor said, "It will depend on how the Supreme Court goes about, but I don't expect violence, we are not a violent people here.

"I'm hoping that we'll get along, and we generally do."

It's the NAACP's Baby, They Say

Peach State Plans to Subvert Supreme Court School Verdict

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 11
Sat. 11-20-54

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

ATLANTA, Ga.—It'll be months, and maybe years, before the white rulers of Georgia and their prejudiced followers yield to the demands of the Supreme Court.

From the Governor on down to the poorest tenant farmer, there isn't a white man around who will permit himself to believe that Negro and white children should attend school together.

Even in the Byrnes-influenced state of South Carolina, the white lords of the land and the powers-that-be admit, reluctantly, that school desegregation is coming and that approximately 10 per cent of the children in the state will be integrated one of these days.

But, not in Georgia. The Talmadge influence has a firm grip over a majority of the citizens of Georgia. He rules their minds and he has them believing that Georgia will continue operating segregated schools for another fifty years. And, for your information, a lot of Negroes vote for Talmadge and his crowd.

* * *

A SMALL light of hope seeps through the darkness of Georgia despite the powerful Talmadge influence. Negroes remember that they weren't allowed to vote in the Georgia Democratic primaries a few years ago, but they vote in the primaries now, thanks to a courageous group of colored citizens in Columbus, Ga., who raised $10,000 and won a victory in the Federal courts.

When school desegregation does take place in Georgia, it will be the result of the driving force of the NAACP.

Negroes as individuals will tell you that they are for school desegregation and integration, but, as individuals, they are doing very little to defeat the Talmadge propaganda. They're looking to the NAACP to put Talmadge out of business.

"The school fight is the NAACP's baby," they tell you. And, the NAACP is ready to go to battle. It will be a long battle in the courts and it will cost a lot of money and that's

* * *

THE ISSUE of school segregation in Georgia is something the NAACP has been working on for years. A petition already has been filed with the County School Board in Columbus and school integration cases are pending against the Atlanta School Board and the University of Georgia.

The State NAACP has found it necessary to reorganize its battle plans since "Amendment 1" was passed giving the Legislature the right to set up private schools and abolish public schools. And, too, the NAACP is awaiting final action of the Supreme Court before announcing its battle formation.

White Georgians say they'll change the state's education laws as fast as the NAACP wins court victories. Such delaying tactics could keep the NAACP fighting for desegregation for years.

In defying the U. S. Supreme Court, state officials are dreaming up plans whereby they can continue segregating Negro children without referring to race.

NOT AS BAD AS LAST YEAR

1,359 Quit City High Schools; Indifference Held Top Cause

By JEAN BUTTS JONES

"Drop-outs" have decreased about 24 per cent in Atlanta high schools during the first quarter of this school year as compared with a similar period last year.

But the problem is far from solved.

Why do students leave school? What is being done to hold them there?

Most students leave school because of "indifference." Of the 1,359 white and Negro students who dropped out during 1954 in Atlanta, 399 were put in that category.

THIS "INDIFFERENCE" is brought about by continued truancy or a long-time plan to quit as soon as the law will allow it—at 16 years old. It is usually abetted by parents. Many students simply do not have an intelligence quotient high enough to be interested in school activities.

Following "indifference" closely in the lineup of the "whys" behind dropouts are: going to work (390 students), getting married (223 students), and physical disabilities (142 students). Other reasons are joining the service, committed to correctional institutions, and needed at home.

At many Atlanta high schools the problem is not so acute; at others it is starting. All the schools are trying to lower the "drop-out" number.

Smith High School is one determined to do something about its situation. Currently 70 per cent of entering eighth graders probably never will graduate if past records hold true.

* * *

AT LEAST one-fourth of these eighth graders, about 130 students, will not make the grade because of low intelligence quotients. For this group, Smith, as all the other high schools, has a program designed to make them the best possible citizens.

Emphasis is placed on learning to read, learning to handle money, and homemaking and health. In the seven years that G. L. Keith has been principal at Smith, only three special graduating certificates have been given to students in this category.

Therefore the Smith "stay in school" campaign is primarily designed to hit at the "indifference" and the "go to work" group. They are striving to find out why students are not interested, what will interest them, and give them those things.

School officials have emphasized how much actual money it costs a student to leave high school without a diploma.

* * *

ACCORDING TO United States Chamber of Commerce figures, a high school graduate earns about $78,000 in a lifetime and a non-graduate earns about $45,000. These figures would indicate that leaving school costs each pupil an average of $33,000. And the jump is even greater of course between drop-outs and students with a college diploma.

Smith's battles begins with the counselors. They are attempting to find out which students might fall into the "quitting attitude" group, and encourage and plan with them before they reach the age of 16.

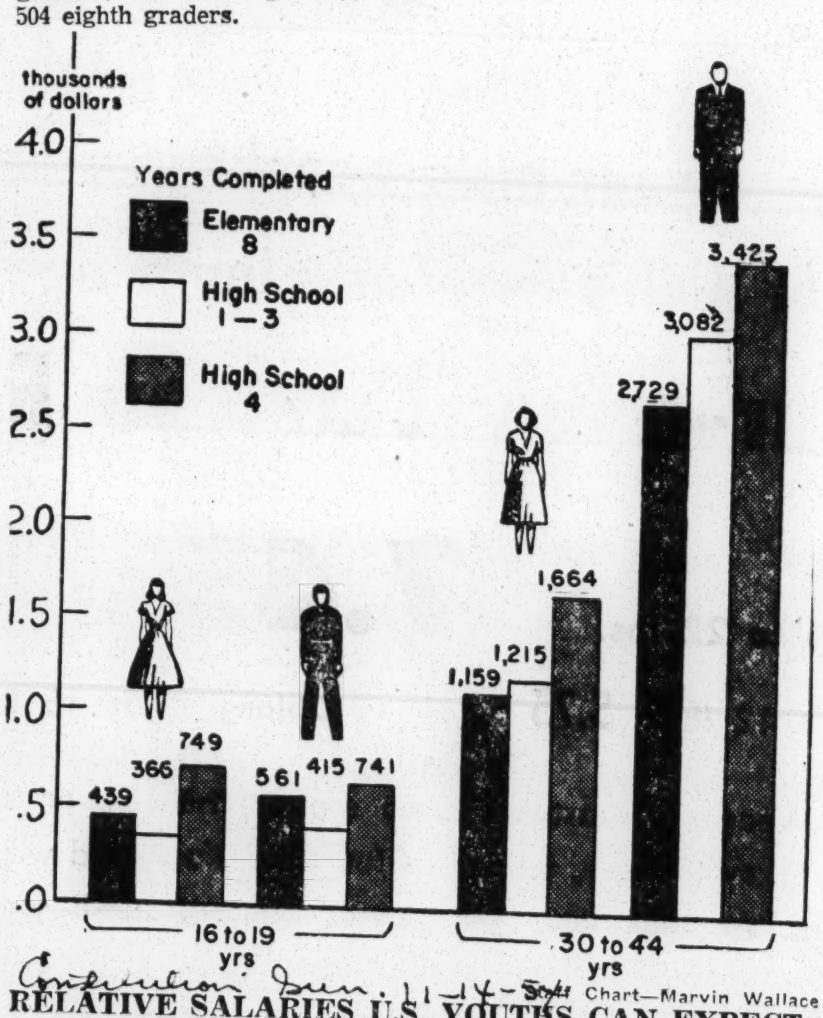
The activities program at the school—as all over the city—has been strengthened. The athletic program, for example, takes in all interested down through the eighth grade.

* * *

AIMING AT the lower grades, school officials recently started a Junior Student Council, a Junior Future Homemakers of America, a Junior Y-Teen, a Legislators Club, and plan a Non-Commissioned Officers Club.

At College Day programs, formerly for upperclassmen, speakers encourage younger students in school work. There are assemblies and PTA programs, and the school newspaper—a prize winner because of similar campaigns—is constantly bringing news and editorials before the students about what they lose by quitting.

This year there are 116 seniors at Smith; 121 juniors; 256 tenth graders; 296 ninth graders; and 504 eighth graders.



Chart—Marvin Wallace

RELATIVE SALARIES U.S. YOUTHS CAN EXPECT
Figures Furnished by U.S. Department of Labor

INTEGRATION — White and Negro students of Miss Joyce Melvin (right) work side by side in a home economics classroom at Kennett, Mo., where seven Negroes are attending Kennett High School. Students are Carol Thacker (left) and Helen Marie Gillespie.

Integration Proves A Success At High School In Kennett

Commercial Appeal
Memphis Press-Scim. P.21
Sat. 11-13-54

By GEORGE HARMON
Staff Writer

KENNETT, Mo., Nov. 12.—Negro students have been attending Kennett High School with white students for two months now and principal O. J. Armstrong said, 'We have not had one bit of trouble whatsoever."

The only Negro student in the senior class has been elected class treasurer. Most of the seven Negro students in the four high school classes are participating in some sort of extra-curricular activities with white students.

Supt. H. Byron Masterson said arrangements worked out by school officials and the Kennett School Board last summer for the small number of high-school-age Negro students in the community "have gone along satisfactorily."

With the exception of Malden, which is also in Dunklin County and which enrolled one Negro student in September, and Fayetteville, Ark., High School. Kennett is the only Mid-South community which has lowered racial bars since the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

More 'Liberal' Trend

School officials credit the smooth changeover to integration to the fact that Kennett and Dunklin County have only a small percentage of Negro population, that the School Board decided after a meeting with Negro parents to let the students choose between integration or segregation and the fact that high school students of today are apparently more "liberal" than their parents.

Kennett School District, which has never had a Negro high school, has transported Negro high school students in the past to Hayti High School in adjoining Pemiscot County. The School Board voted before the 1954-55 term began last September to contniue to run a school bus to Hayti and let the Negro students choose their own place of education. However, the board also voted to discontinue transportation to Hayti after the current term ends next spring.

Superintendent Masterson said seven Negroes are now enrolled in Kennett High School and about the same number ride to the Negro school in Hayti each day.

Mr. Masterson said a sampling of student opinion in Kennett High School "both before and after the Supreme Court decision" revealed students "seemed to be of the general viewpoint that Negroes should have the privilege of attending white schools."

About 2,100 are enrolled in Kennett's elementary school and high schools. Of this number, only about 170 are Negroes. The 163 elementary Negro students attend school on a segregated basis.

First concrete indication of student reaction to integration came when the senior class voted on its 1954-55 officers. They elected the only Negro senior, Charles Ivy, as treasurer.

To Attend Meeting

As a result of Kennett's integration, a non-segregated subdistrict meeting of the Future Homemakers of America will meet in Portageville next week with Negro students from Kennett attending alongside students from three other Southeast Missouri schools which remain open only to white students.

Miss Joyce Melvin, Kennett home economics instructor, said four of her five Negro home economics students will attend the Portageville meeting. It also will be attended by white students from Kennett, Portageville, Hayti and Caruthersville.

Miss Melvin said the decision to invite Kennett's Negro students to attend the meeting with white students from segregated schools was approved at a planning meeting by both students and faculty members of the four schools.

Miss Thelma Redman, Kennett student counselor, said integration has apparently "worked out very satisfactorily."

Grades Studied

Two Negro students are members of the high school girl's chorus, which is directed by Mrs. Emily Story, and they will appear in the public concert of the group scheduled next month.

Two Negroes signed up for the girl's basketball team coached by Bob Mason.

Miss Mary Jo Purcell, and English instructor, said Negro students had participated in the appearances of the school's pep squad, which she directs, at football games.

Two Negro students signed up for band instruction under director Denzil Williams but later dropped out.

Mr. Masterson said Negro students are encouraged to join in extra-curricular activities.

"The Supreme Court made the decision, and we have accepted the responsibility of giving our students a balanced school program regardless of race," he said.

As for scholastic performance, some Kennett teachers says the Negro students make generally lower grades, but they attribute this to a lower standard of prior education in segregated schools.

However, Miss Purcell said one Negro girl is one of the brightest English students.

EDUCATION 1954

IOWA

College Students' Convention Calls For School Integration

Iowa

AMES, IA.—A resolution calling for immediate de-segregation of the public schools was adopted by delegates to the Seventh Annual Congress of the U. S. National Student Association here.

The statement, voted enthusiastically by 700 student delegates representing every major college and university in the U.S., declared in part: "Segregation in education by race is unethical and unwise. It is now unconstitutional.

"The U. S. National Student Association pledged to seeking the elimination of such segregation, urges the swiftest possible integration of the races at all educational levels in all parts of the country.

"In the face of ethical concepts, legal requirements and global ramifications, there can be no justification for delay in the implementation of the Supreme Court decision."

The strongly-worded resolution, introduced by the chairman of the Great Southern Region, caught many of the youthful northern delegates by surprise.

Up to that time most statements on school segregation were rather weak and evasive due to an extraordinary precaution on the part of Northern delegates to avoid what they considered offending the southern delegates.

Kentucky's Negro Teachers Warned To Prepare Selves for Desegregation

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. P. 1 Sat. 11-6-54

Psychological Problem Stressed

Negro teachers must prepare themselves for desegregation of the nation's schools if the program is to succeed, Dr. Mozell Hill said here yesterday.

Dr. Hill, chairman of Atlanta University's sociology department, spoke at a meeting of the fifth district of the Kentucky Teachers Association at Central High School. The association represents about 1,800 Negro teachers in the state. About 450 attended the meeting.

Some Southern states may be successful in delaying desegregation, but they cannot hold out for more than five years, Dr. Hill predicted.

"It is a matter of whether the South is going to be lawless or obey the law," he said.

The Kansas-born Negro educator urged Negro teachers to prepare themselves for their role in the new program lest they "be pulled into an unwitting conspiracy to prove that desegregation is unworkable."

Negro teachers should prepare to be "psychologically" ready for new problems of teaching whites and Negroes, Dr. Hill said.

In line with desegregation, the fifth-district association passed a resolution urging boards of education to grant contracts to qualified (Negro) teachers before hiring new teachers.

Lyman T. Johnson, Louisville, who presented the resolution, said it was aimed at preventing a recurrence of "the Municipal College case."

The Louisville Negro college was closed in 1950 when the University of Louisville was opened to Negroes. Johnson said 17 instructors at the college were dismissed at the time, and only one was rehired at U. of L.

Desegregation Study Asked By Carmichael

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. Tues. 11-2-54 P. 1

Principals Are Urged To Discuss Problems

Principals of all City schools have been asked to discuss with their faculties the problems of desegregation.

City School Superintendent Omer Carmichael told the Louisville Board of Education yesterday he also will send a letter to all Parent-Teacher Association presidents asking them to discuss the matter with their members.

Carmichael said he wants the question to have "as unemotional consideration as possible."

To Make Written Reports

The principals and P.-T.A. presidents will make written reports to Carmichael. He will summarize the material and distribute the summary to community groups for further study.

The United States Supreme Court on May 17 ruled that segregation of white and Negro children in public schools is unconstitutional. The court has not yet set a time limit on desegregation nor said how it should be carried out.

School Board member Keith Spears said at the meeting that he thought "asking for problems admits there are some" and "I'm not sure there are any."

Carmichael replied, "It's going to be rough, there's no question about it. I haven't tried to minimize the problems. I think they're big. We have to prepare our teachers who will be the leaders (in desegregation)."

Declines To Make Study

Board President William C. Embry said the League of Women Voters has declined to make a study at this time of a teacher-salary survey made by the Public Administration Service, Chicago. The board has asked a number of community groups to study the report.

The league prefers to study the salary situation at the same time it studies the proposed merger of City and County school systems. The P.A.S. is making a survey of the merger and will complete it by June.

The league has consistently favored merger since it was first discussed several years ago.

Contract Is Canceled

To straighten out technicalities, the board approved a contract arrangement with one employee and canceled its contract with another.

Courier-Journal P. 1

The new contract is with R. J. Bell, a retired principal who assigns substitute teachers. Paying him a monthly salary violates a board policy that requires retirement of an employee on June 30 after his 70th birthday. Bell is over 70.

Tues. 11-2-54

The board's contract with Dr. Samuel J. Peavey, University of Louisville professor, will be canceled and a new contract signed with the university for his services in curriculum and supervision. The reason for this is that Peavey must receive his full salary from the university to get full benefits of its retirement plan.

I.H.C. Joins In Petition

Carmichael told the board the International Harvester Company has joined in a petition asking for annexation to the City School District. The petition was drawn up by persons whose children attend Adair School.

The area in question, already annexed by the City but not a part of the City School District, is bounded by Standiford Field on the south and east, Phillips Lane on the north, and the former City limits on the west.

International Harvester joined the petition on condition "there will be no increase in school taxes as a result" of annexation.

The School Board is authorized to ask permission of the voters to increase its tax rate from the present $2 per $100 valuation. Board members have indicated they probably will have to seek an increase sometime in the future.

Representatives of the petitioners will appear at the next night board meeting November 15.

Association To Discuss Desegregation Problems

Problems of desegregation will be taken up by the Fifth District Kentucky Teachers Association when it meets Friday at Central High School here.

Mrs. Edith M. Hurley, Philadelphia, will speak at the 10:15 a.m. session. She is a retired principal who has been active in educational and religious groups.

Dr. Mozell C. Hill, Atlanta, will speak at the 10:15 a.m. session. He is a teacher of sociology at Atlanta University and editor of Phylon, a quarterly review.

Wetherby's School Plan Is Rejected

Courier-Journal Thur. 11-4-54 P. 16

Marion County Board Makes Counteroffer

Louisville, Ky.

Special to The Courier-Journal

Lebanon, Ky., Nov. 3.—The Marion County School Board has rejected a proposal made October 25 by Governor Wetherby to get Bradfordsville children into school until courts can rule on the controversy.

The board offered a counterproposal that John Anggelis, Lexington attorney, said today has little chance of being accepted by the Bradfordsville parents he represents.

Anggelis said he had not been informed of the Marion Board's proposal, approved late last week by a 4-to-1 vote.

Will Study Offer

Governor Wetherby said in Frankfort today that he had received a copy of the counterproposal, but he had not studied it. He said he would, to "see if there's any action I could take."

The Marion board's proposal amounts to an offer that, if the the Bradfordsville parents would send their children to school as provided by the board when it ordered Bradfordsville High School closed August 21, the board will not use this action against the Bradfordsville parents in the lawsuit on the matter pending in Franklin Circuit Court.

When the board ordered Bradfordsville High School closed, it said high-school students should attend an independent high school in Lebanon, 10 miles away. But Bradfordsville parents went on strike against the order, refusing to let high-school students go to Lebanon and keeping elementary pupils out of the grade school at Bradfordsville. The strike will be 2 months old tomorrow.

Postponement Opposed

At the Governor's conference October 25, the Bradfordsville parents had agreed to a proposal that the board reopen Bradfordsville High School until the issue is decided in court. The Bradfordsville representatives agreed not to make the possible reopening of the school a part of their court suit.

It was this proposal that the Marion board rejected. A board statement said, "The plan of the board to consolidate Bradfordsville High School with Lebanon High School is a long-range plan which will provide the maximum educational facilities for all the children in the eastern part of Marion County in the future.

"We intend that this arrangement be a permanent part of the over-all school plan.

"The proposal offered in the conference with the Governor . . would mean adoption of a temporary expedient . . . (that) would not provide any permanent solution, but would merely postpone the initiation of a long-range plan . . ."

Additional Offer Made

In its counteroffer, the board offered to "provide as near a full nine-month term from the present time as the State Board of Education will approve and as arrangements with the Lebanon Independent District will allow."

The board also offered to accept 6-year-old students in the elementary school at Bradfordsville "if the State Board of Education will approve such emergency deviation from State regulation."

State law provides that first-year pupils not entered within 30 days of the beginning of the school term cannot be enrolled.

Louisiana

VOTE ON RACIAL ISSUE
SEGREGATION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

VOTE ON SEGREGATION TOPS LOUISIANA POLL

Commercial Appeal
Memphis, Tenn.

Tuesday Ballot May Be Straw In National Winds

BATON ROUGE, Oct. 30. — (AP)—Deep South Louisiana decides in Tuesday's voting whether to borrow time by resisting any final Supreme Court decree outlawing segregation in public schools.

Sun. 11-31-54

For the first time in modern history, Louisiana citizens will vote on a racial issue.

Proud of their equal school facilities, Louisianians from cotton fields in the north to the rice and oil belt in the Cajun South have never bothered with such problems, except in courts or the Legislature.

R. 20

On the voting machine ballot are 31 constitutional amendments, more than in any other state; with No. 16 the segregation question that could be a straw in national winds.

Louisiana will return to office without opposition United States Senator Allen J. Ellender and seven incumbent congressmen—all Democrats—and probably name an eighth, Representative F. Edward Hebert, who has a Republican rival.

The New Orleans representative defeated George W. Reese Jr., two years ago, 72,000 to 36,000. While Mr. Reese is running again, Mr. Hebert is virtually assured of going back in this one-party state.

Other incumbents are Representatives Hale Boggs, Edwin E. Willis, Overton Brooks, Otto E. Passman, James H. Morrison, T. A. Thompson and George S. Long.

Mr. Ellender, 16 years in the Senate, marched strongly toward his fourth term in a Democratic Primary by polling a 100,000-vote plurality over two opponents.

The big election decision is school segregation safeguards, and to slightly lesser extent, whether to have annual sessions of the Legislature and to approve $50 to $250 bonuses for Korean War veterans.

The segregation amendment ould continue segregation in ele- nentary and secondary schools in the exercise of the state po- ce power to promote and protect ublic health, better education and the peace and good order of the state, and not because of race."

Also, the Legislature would have the power to call quick special elections, if necessary, to dream up a new sidestep if the Supreme Court knocks out existing barriers.

At Annual Convention, Negroes Hear Plea For Patience, Charity In Race Questions

NEW ORLEANS—(RNS)—Patience and charity in regard "to the integration of the races in our schools" was urged by Msgr. Francis L. Baechle, pastor of St. Matthias Church here at the annual convention of the Knights and Ladies of Peter Claver, a Catholic Negro organization.

Msgr. Baechle said that the recent Supreme Court ruling against segregation in the schools was "something proclaimed by the successors of Peter in Rome for untold years, but what the Church could not practice in America because of untoward circumstances."

"For decades and more," he said, "Popes have sanctioned what we now have with us in Catholic segregated schools. But they did so only through necessity and very wisely. Otherwise, thousands of souls would have been lost to the faith.

"Better such schools than none at all. It was the only solution in a situation where the law of the land forbade otherwise, and the stake was the salvation of immortal souls.

"Now the law of the land is behind the Church. But we are faced with many tough problems in the situation, and patience is the word. It is a problem not only for the public schools but for all parochial schools. It will take a lot of doing and, literally, billions of dollars to implement the law."

Msgr. Baechle urged the delegates to pray for those lacking charity and "gently seek to change their attitude."

"Eventually, they must accept the situation," he said. "I think it will require at least a generation to adequately enforce the new law—a law which after all is said and done is nothing less than the law of Christ's charity."

* * *

FATHER GOETZ, S.J., who is chairman of the department of religion at Springhill College, Alabama, said "it is going to take a world of patience, understanding and love of neighbor before people can live in harmony."

"Even now, legislators are walking the floor at night to see what they can contrive to prevent you from taking your rightful place in the land of the free and home of the brave," he said.

"Laws are being dug up from dusty tomes, laws forgotten for decades. Unique, truly interesting applications of laws are being threatened—and will indeed be applied.

"You must have patience and great charity. Nothing good comes without a struggle. It is probably the best way."

Father Goetz suggested a five-year plan devoted to "cleaning of hands and placing your own house in order." He noted that the Knights of Peter Claver will be observing their golden jubilee in five years.

As part of the plan, Father Goetz urged group action to see that Negro neighborhoods are well kept and well ordered; that Negroes move, if possible, from slum property to better districts and own their own homes; that they fight juvenile delinquency; that family life be unified; and that the Family Rosary become a daily practice.

During the convention, Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison of New Orleans presented the keys to city to Dr. B. V. Baranco of Baton Rouge, Supreme Knight of Peter Claver.

The Knights attended a Communion Breakfast at St. Mary's Italian Hall here. It was believed to be the first time that a Negro group had held a function in that hall.

SEGREGATION STAND CLEARED BY FOLSOM

Alabamian Won't Force Negro Into White Schools

CULLMAN, Ala., Oct. 28. — (UP) — Democratic gubernatorial nominee James E. Folsom answered charges by his Republican opponent on segregation Thursday night saying, "I am not going to force Negroes to go to school with white people."

Mr. Folso missued a statement from his Cullman home after repeated challenges by Republican nominee Tom Abernethy. The GOP candidate had accused Mr. Folsom of failing to make a definite stand on the issue.

Without making specific reference to Mr. Abernethy, Mr. Folsom said, "In every county in Alabama during the primary as well as in my campaigning in the past three months, I have made my position on segregation plain, simple and clear."

He added, "I will sponsor an adequate school program that will provide modern and up-to-date classroom facilities for all of Alabama's school children, both colored and white.

"I have told the good people of Alabama time and again that I am not going to force Negroes to go to schoo lwith white people."

Mr. Folsom said theer are as many antiquated schools in Alabama for white students as there are for Negroes.

He disclosed that he and the Democratic nominee for state school superintendent, Dr. Austin Meadows of Huntsville, will attend the Southern Governor's Conference in Boca Raton, Fla., next month.

According to Mr. Folsom, one of the main purposes of their trip is "to develop plans for handling the school program in the light of recent United States Supreme Court decisions" outlawing segregation.

Mr. Folsom said, "The best minds of the South will be working on these school plans at the conference. I feel certain I will greatly benefit by participating in this conference. It is my intention to follow the leadership in this matter."

GOV. PERSONS SHOWS WISE RESTRAINT

The Birmingham News

Gov. Persons is showing wise restraint in meeting the situation growing out of the Supreme Court's school segregation ruling.

It is too early, this newspaper believes, to enact any changes in state law in this connection.

It certainly would be premature to move now in the direction of basically altering our public school system.

Until the Supreme Court issues its decrees as to specific application of its decision it will be impossible to know just what the immediate problems will be in Alabama.

Mississippi Roundup—

School Group Urges New Building Program

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 12 (U.P.) —The State Legal Advisory Committee on Segregation today proposed a long-range building program estimated to cost $117,000,000 as a means of keeping Mississippi's Negro and White children in separate schools.

The committee, although it voted unanimously for the program in "principle," said its support would be conditional on public accetance of a proposed constitutional amendment permitting the legislature to abolish public schools as a "last resort" method of maintaining segregation.

If the amendment is ratified in an election Dec. 21, the program as outlined by the committee will be submitted to a special session of the legislature in January.

James Ewing, president of Copiah-Lincoln Junior College and one of the members who drafted the program, said the building plan is a "must" if the committee expects the people to approve the amendment.

Gov. Hugh White appointed a committee to promote the ...dition proposal, warning that ...t of work is going to have ...be done" to assure its ratifica-

...building program would ... a plan of school equal- ... begun last year by a spe- ... legislative session. Building ... of the equalization pro- ... were postponed because of ... of revenue.

The full program, estimated by the State Department of Education to cost $117,000,000, would:

Allocate $3 a year per Negro child for 10 years in addition to the present $12 a year allocation for every educable child for building purposes.

Provide no allotment of state funds for retiring existing indebtedness of local school districts for the first five years of the construction program, in order to assure more rapid equalization.

...ton Advertiser and Durant News, ... was scheduled to be heard in Holmes County Circuit Court today.

Byrd alleges that Mrs. Smith exposed him to "public hatred, contempt and ridicule" in an editorial account of the shooting of a Negro.

Miss. Fed. Asks Voters to Keep Public Schools

Biloxi, Miss. — The Mississippi Federation of Labor called on all members to vote against abolishing the state's public school system in a referendum to be held Dec. 21. It also opposed a proposed constitutional amendment, to be voted upon Nov. 2, granting county clerks the exclusive right to determine the eligibility of citizens to vote.

Authorize Amendment

The Mississippi legislature recently authorized submission to the electorate of a constitutional amendment which would empower the legislature to abolish public schools. This action followed the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling that segregation in the Nation's public schools must be ended.

"We do not believe that changing from a public school system to a private school system is the correct answer for our school dilemma," delegates to the federation's 36th annual convention at the White House Hotel said. "We believe the one correct answer to our problem is a larger and more effective educational program with public financial support and supervision. The greatest need in Mississippi today is a better educational program, with better educational facilities for all the children of the state.

Step Backward

"To abolish our public school system and go back to private schools certainly would be going backward rather than forward."

The MFL urged its members to work to defeat the constitutional change relative to voting qualifications of citizens. The proposal, it said, is aimed at denying the ballot to "those citizens not fortunate enough to have received a good education."

Miss. Fears' Foes Will Defeat School Abolition Amendment

Proponents Wage All-Out Campaign To Put Over 'Last Resort' Proposal

By KENNETH TOLER

Bureau Chief, the Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 16—An allout campaign to voter ratification of a constitutional amendment ...abling abolition of public schools as a "last resort" ...t integration has been mapped by a 25-member ...l Educational Advisory Committee headed by Gov. ...White. It is up for final decision by the electorate ...special election Dec. 21 ...ing opposition to the pro... has alarmed the propon...

...k Gov. White told the ad... group this week that un... lot of work is done," it ...e rejected by the voters. ...opposition is coming ...the white-populated area of ...Mississippi and along ...Gulf Coast.

...re has been friction of long ...ding between the assertedly ...ial section of the North... ...the wealthy and heavily ...populated Delta along the ...ppi River. Indicative of ...the governor's state... ...that the opposition stems ...reports being spread in ...that the Delta wants to ...public schools."

...ople Opposition

...cussing the approach of ...position, the advisory ...created in January 1954, ...ake a means of by-passing ...the anticipated desegrega... ...decision of the United ...Supreme Court, has out... ...a "question and answer" ...ure as an offset. It touches ...ost of the points of the op... ...and is the amendment which ...would authorize the legislature ...abolish public schools state... ...by a two-thirds vote, or ...otherwise or separate district... ...ate or separate districtwise by ...simple majority.

...The brochure is a statement ...the six steps are available for ...against integration before it ...would become necessary to ...to play the "last resort"

...if that price prevailed in Mississippi, equalization will cost nearly $150,000,000.

Approval of the building program is designed to "cement" the school forces behind the amendment.

To present the virtues of the amendment to the people before the election, the advisory group has put on a full-time staff to broadcast favorable literature. It will also send speakers throughout the state.

The campaign will be financed without "outside" funds, with members of the advisory committee offering their services without cost. The only expenditures will be in mailing out reports of the committee, and necessary clerical help.

Attorney General J. P. Coleman has announced he would not file a brief in the scheduled Dec.

MISSISSIPPI

6 arguments before the Supreme Court on the method of implementing its May 17 integration decision. The state will remain hands-off so that any attack on its dual system will necessitate action directly against it.

The committee did authorize the attorney general and three other of its members to attend the Dec. 6 court session as "observers." Designated for that role were Mr. Coleman; House Speaker Sillers; Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin and Tom J. Tubb of West Point, attorney and chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee.

Another authorization by the advisory group was employment of an attorney to study the various civil rights statutes with a view to determining the "loopholes." That action was taken to accertain whether the "Citizens Councils" can function without being subject to federal scrutiny or action.

Spokesmen for the councils, being organized in all 82 counties, insist "violence" is not in its plans. However, "economic pressure" is.

Okay Building Program

After mapping the campaign, the advisory group went on record approving immediate inauguration of a $60,000,000 school building program. That action is based on belief that Negroes will go along on the present segregated basis provided their facilities are equalized with those of the whites.

The $60,000,000 bond issue, which will be presented to a special legislative session in January if the amendment is ratified, is about half what the State Department of Education estimates is needed to equal the dual system. The department estimated the cost of equalization at $117,477,978, based on construction costing $7.50 a square foot. It pointed out that the national average is around $10, and

List Six Delaying Steps

The six steps the advisory group lists can be taken to delay use of the public school abolition amendment for from 10 to 20 years are:

Continue segregation under the present state constitution which calls for separate, but equal, schools for the races until it is stricken down by direct action of the U.S. Supreme Court; assignment of pupils by districts; gerrymandering of school districts; application of military or police power; other applicable statutes and new statutes.

Speaker Sillers, who like other committe members contend abolition is not the objective of the amendment, said one section of it provides for "public schools" without the mention of race, segregation, separate or equal.

He said under that section, a district could set up two or three types of schools, and any attack would have to be on the school and not the over-all system. He said a district could provide her an all-white school; all-Negro school, and even an integrated school. His "delaying" theory is based on the fact that Mississippi has more than 2,000 school districts, and as many attacks would have to be made in individual suits.

While the advisory committee is drafting its campaign, a group against the amendment is likewise busy. It plans to ask a lot of questions as to "what is the blueprint" if dependent schools are abolished.

The opposition takes the position that the other steps should be taken before the people are called on to vest authority in the legislature to wipe out their tax-supported public schools.

EDUCATION 1954

MISSISSIPPI

ASSN. OF CITIZENS COUNCILS

MISSISSIPPI WHITES ORGANIZE CITIZENS COUNCIL TO FIGHT DESEGREGATION IN SCHOOLS

Pittsburgh Courier Sat. 11-6-54

p. 9 Oklahoma City, Okla.

Head of State Organization Vows They Will Repel and Nullify Supreme Court Power

"HE'S SERIOUS MAN," SAYS JACKSON PAPER

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — The newly elected executive secretary of the Association of Citizens Councils of Mississippi has been described by the Jackson Daily News as "a deadly serious young man."

In a special article on "big red-headed" Robert B. "Tut" Patterson, the paper said that you get the same impression when you first meet and leave him.

The paper said he is serious because, in his words, this question of maintaining segregation is something we all ought to be serious about. Otherwise, things we value the most here in the South will be gone.

Patterson's wife was described as slight and pretty and having all the charm you think of in connection with a "southern belle. They have a four-month-old son and two little girls, the oldest in the first grade, whom Patterson often refers to as eloquent argument against integration."

The Citizens Councils were formed in July, when Patterson and five other men in Indianola got together and formed the organization. According to the Daily News, "In other communities similar groups of civic leaders had gotten together with probably the same idea, but it was the original group at Indianola which was emulated in adjoining towns and began to spread until now Citizens Councils cover most of the Delta counties and embrace the breadth of Mississippi to the Alabama line, with three scattered groups in Arkansas and in Alabama."

The paper quotes Patterson as saying the organization is dedicated to the maintenance of "peace, good order and domestic tranquility."

According to Patterson, "CC members have the interest of the Negro at heart."

"We take care of them, feed them, educate them," he said. "I have 35 Negro families here on my place. You can go out and talk to any of them, and they'll tell you I'm the t friend they have. Had six of them go up north last year and stay several weeks and everyone of them came back and said they'd never leave the South again.

"Folk up there don't see why we don't integrate our schools. They don't understand the presure of numbers. If we integrated schools right here it would mean putting 20 white children into a classroom with 80 Negro children. That will never happen in Mississippi."

Patterson was quoted by the paper as saying "the only way we can keep segregation is to keep public sentiment against it, and to inform people of the facts."

Observers who preferred to remain anonymous said Patterson was the living personification of Johann Goethe's epithet: "There is nothing more frightful, than ignorance in action."

Mississippi Roundup—

Education Committee Backs School Ban Law

Post-Herald p. 3

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 28 (U.P.)—Mississippi may find itself without authority to operate any kind of school system unless the amendment permitting abolition of public schools is approved, the Legal Education Advisory Committee said today.

The amendment, up for public vote Dec. 21, is being presented as a last resort means of retaining segregation by permitting the Legislature to abolish the public school system and set up a state-supported private system.

Birmingham Ala. Ltr. 10-29-54

But it is prefaced by a statement saying that all other provisions in the state constitution regarding school operation notwithstanding "the Legislature may authorize the establishment, support, maintenance and operation of public schools."

This provision, said the committee in a statement drawn up for publicizing the amendment, is needed to continue operation of the present dual school system.

When the Supreme Court ruled against segregated schools, that ruling made sections of the Mississippi Constitution relating to school operation subject to being stricken down as federally unconstitutional.

Suppose, members said, a taxpayer went into court and contended he was being taxed for school support under the state constitutional provision that says separate schools shall be maintained for whites and Negroes.

Obviously, this provision is in violation of the Supreme Court ruling. Other provisions requiring operation of public schools likely would be stricken down with it, the statement said.

home, faked an automobile accident to cover up and burned the car.

LEAC IS SCORED ON SCHOOL PLAN

Times-Picayune

Group Playing Into Hands of Negroes,' Says Blass

Nov. 18 1954

WIGGINS, Miss., Nov. 17 (AP)—The Legal Educational Advisory Committee (LEAC) is playing right into the hands of Negroes, state Rep. Joel Blass declared Wednesday.

P. 34

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wants Mississippi to pass the constitutional amendment empowering the Legislature to abolish public schools, he said.

"If the amendment passes, Negroes will only have to sue for admission to white schools and the state supreme court will be compelled to allow them to enter," he said.

New Orleans, La.

Section A of the amendment provides for schools without reference to race and color, and nowhere in the amendment are there constitutional safeguards to maintain segregated public schools or prevent integration," he charged.

"It should rightly be called an integration amendment, since it gives the Negroes an entering wedge into white schools they do not have at present," he added.

'Already Enough Laws,'

The amendment will either force integration or private schools, the Wiggins legislator said. Blass is a leader of friends of segregated public schools which opposes the amendment.

While opposing integration, Blass and other SPS members believe the state already has enough laws to postpone integration 10-20 years and the "last resort" of abolishing schools should be left until last.

The amendment was the LEAC's first answer to the governor's request for a means of evading the US supreme court decision.

"The failure of the framers of the amendment to provide sure ways of preventing integration must be attributed to oversight or to a plan to bring about either integration or private schools," Blass said.

Convention 'Covered'

"Whatever the motive or motives, the very thing which is being boosted to preserve segregation is beyond a doubt the one thing that will bring either integration or a private schools system."

Blass said the recent state NAACP convention in Jackson made sure that newspaper reporters covered the convention so Mississippi voters would read the resolution opposing the amendment.

But the Negroes passed the resolution because they know their opposition will help pass the amendment, he said. In reality the Negroes favor the amendment since it is their shortest cut to integrated schools, he added.

Mississippi Told Special Term Out

JACKSON, Miss., No. 16 (AP)— Mississippi voters can approve the constitutional amendment empowering the legislature to abolish public schools or possibly watch their public schools die of starvation for one year, Gov. Hugh White said today.

There will not be a special session of the legislature to finance the second year of the 1954-56 period unless the amendment is passed, he thundered angrily.

"If that amendment doesn't pass, they (legislators) are not coming back," he shouted to the Legal Educational Advisory Committee.

A special session is necessary to finance schools fully for 1955-56, the second year of the 1954-56 period. A new legislature will meet in January, 1956.

Partially equalized schools are financed through the 1954-55 year, and about half-financed for the second year.

Gov. White's angry outburst followed a remark by Robert Farley, dean of the University of Mississippi law school and an LEAC member by being president of the Mississippi Bar Association. He said:

"If you insist that you'll do nothing at all if this amendment fails, you get the reaction that you're trying to force something down their (voters') throats."

A special session would be useless, Gov. White declared. Legislators in key positions, some of them members of the LEAC, will support a building program and plan to equalize Negro and white schools only if the amendment passes, he said.

If the amendment fails, the same men could block any financing of an equalization and building program, just as they did in the 1954 regular session.

The 1954 legislature financed partially an equalization program passed by the 1953 special session. It equalized Negro and white teachers' salaries but left building and other items until after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled on segregation.

Since the supreme court ruled segregation in public education unconstitutional, many legislators insist the abolition amendment is necessary as a weapon to prevent intergration.

Farley suggested that the LEAC try to work out a program of which all persons wanting could stand, regardless of whether the amendment passes. He urged Gov. White to reconsider his statement about refusing to call a special session if the amendment fails.

The governor refused and launched into his heated restatement of the threat.

If a special session is held, the LEAC will be ready with proposed bills to finance a 60 million dollar building program and additional funds for equalizing other items, reported State Sen. Earl Evans of Canton.

All LEAC members agree that tax raises will be necessary.

The LEAC pledged to support the building program if the abolition amendment passes.

Integration faces acid test in Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. — This is the front line. It is here that the question of integration faces the acid test. The reaction of the people is wonderful — they are not afraid.

Always there are those who like to impede progress by fighting shadows and conjuring up specters of what will happen in the future. Here, the people are face to face with stark reality. They have learned to laugh at intimidation.

One man told the story of a typical plan to terrorize. He operates a grocery store in a community where the town banker's word is supposed to be law.

THE BANKER called in the store owner to find out whether he was in favor of integration in the schools. When the store owner replied in the affirmative, the banker warned him that he would eventually be driven out of town by economic pressures.

At the time the store owner owed the bank a note. His first act, replying to the threat, was to pay the note in full. He then called a meeting of townspeople who vigorously supported integration in a rousing session.

The banker and the local sheriff had been invited to attend the meeting but neither of them would come in the place where it was being held. The sheriff was seen driving around the building but he did not get out of his car.

—o O o—

IN ANOTHER case a delegation visited the local school board to file a petition for admission to the public schools. The chairman of the petitioners is a stalwart fighter who has been seeking civil rights in Mississippi for years.

When the group entered the school board room the officials were bristling. Immediately, the chairman of the board wanted to know "why are you n---s in here trying to go to school with our white children?"

The spokesman for the group replied that there were no "n---s" in the room to his knowledge and that the purpose of the visit was to see whether the board intended to comply with the law of the land.

Seeing that the spokesman was not to be intimidated, the chairman of the board then turned his attention to a young man who was standing in the rear of the room.

—o O o—

"THAT N---r back there," said the board chairman, "is a sharecropper, what's he doing here with this organization of agitators?" He then said, "Boy, do you want to send your children to school with white people?"

The man who was addressed had a hard time getting his words out at first, but he finally replied that he did want his children to go to school without the stigma of segregation.

The school board was so taken aback that its members asked for a grand jury investigation of the delegation. Subpoenas were sent to the members of the delegation but no hearing was held by the jury.

In this atmosphere of lawlessness one would expect that there would be a tendency to go slow. There seems to be a greater determination to move forward.

It is very likely that the extreme position of the Mississippi officials will build a united and determined group in this state that would not have existed if there had been no opposition to the Supreme Court's decision.

Mississippi Roundup—

NAACP Leader Blasts Proposed School Ruling

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 8 (U.P.)— A Negro leader accused white supporters of a public school abolition proposal of "spreading ignorancea nd chaos" and sidestepping its disadvantages.

Clarence Mitchell, head of the Washington Bureau of the National Association For The Advancement of Colored People, attacked the constitutional amendment that wlil be voted on Dec 21 by Mississippians.

He told the closing session of the state NAACP convention here yesterday that proponents of the amendment "carefully avoid mentioning who would run" the private schools which would replace the public system if the amendment is used.

State leaders, who have hinged a school building equalization program on the amendment's passage, have maintained it would be used only as a "last resort" to block integration of the races.

"They do not explain that such a makeshift system as they propose would not fit the children to meet the competition of the world around them" Mitchell said.

Hamm, 27, a former Detroit newspaper reporter.

Hamm's T-33 jet plunged into a cotton field near Greenwood Saturday and scattered wreckage more than 100 yards. Witnesses said it plowed about 10 feet into the ground and exploded.

EDUCATION 1954 MISSISSIPPI AMENDMENT

Bitter Battle Rages in Miss. Over 'Private School' Proposal

Journal & Constitution

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 20—The lines are being tightened in Mississippi's campaign on an amendment to the state constitution authorizing the Legislature, as a last resort, to abolish the dual public school system to prevent its United States Supreme Court-mandated integration. The election is Dec. 1.

Tenseness of the situation was demonstrated during the week when Gov. Hugh White ordered two newspaper reporters from further attendance at his press conferences for using an "off the record" statement he made in an open meeting of a 25-member committee created to devise a plan for continuation of public school segregation despite the supreme court's decision.

Gov. White's statement was a rebuke to opponents for using as an issue his announced position not to call a special legislative session next year for needed funds for schools in the 1955-56 session unless the amendment is ratified by the voters. It was uttered after Dean Robert J. Farley of the University of Mississippi Law School and president of the State Bar Assn., suggested its withdrawal would better the cause of those campaigning for ratification of the amendment.

Dean Farley, a member of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, was outlining to the members that the strongest opposition he had encountered among voters was the "veiled threat" in the governor's statement made earlier that there would be no special session without the amendment. Unless there is a session next year, schools will be unable to open in September because support funds are short by $18,000,000 of the needed $34,000,000 for their operation.

Gov. White has said without the "protective" features of the standby abolition amendment to force Negroes to accept voluntary segregation, there will be no use to call a special legislative session because the lawmakers will not vote funds for an integrated system.

If the amendment is ratified, and works as a "persuasive" weapon on Negroes under fear of losing what schools they have, the plan is to call a special legislative session in January to vote $60,000,000 to launch a building program to begin closing the $118,000,000 disparity between Negro and white schools. At that time, the additionally needed $18,000,000 for operation of schools in the 1955-56 session would be voted.

When Dean Farley suggested that a withdrawal of that statement by the governor would help the cause of the proponents, Gov. White interrupted him to reiterate his former announced position and that he would not retract it.

Later, the governor enlarged on his position and use of his statement by opponents in which he sharply criticized them for using it in view of the fact that his administration (which began in January 1952) had voted $28,000,000 more for schools biennially than was provided by the former administration.

Gov. White then told newspaper reporters covering the committee meeting that his remarks were "off the record." However, first editions of newspapers following the meeting carried the governor's remarks which brought on the press conference banning.

Proponents of the amendment reported that is is gaining support and that its ratification seemed assured.

Those reports followed its endorsement by the Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation, by the four leading candidates for governor in next year's election and by the state's two United States senators, James O. Eastland and John Stennis.

Encouragement was also given proponents by refusal of the Mississippi Synod of the Southern Presbyterian Church to accept its General Conference recommendation to open its churches and schools to Negroes.

The proponents were also elated over action of the Mississippi conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in condemning the amendment and calling for its rejection.

Also taking cognizance of the NAACP's action was the opposition to the amendment under an organization known as "Friends of Segregated Public Schools" and headed by Miss Alma Hickman of Hattiesburg, former president of the all-white Mississippi Education Assn. That group is concerned in view of the possibility of the NAACP's action hurting the campaign of the all-white group.

Opposition of the "Friends of Segregated Public Schools" is based on the assertion that other "delaying" steps to prevent integration should be exhausted before the all-out authority is vested in the legislature to abolish public schools. That group does not favor integration, but first use of other steps, including the state's police power to continue the status quo.

MISSISSIPPI

INTEGRATION WORKING WELL—In Kennett, Mo., colored and white students in the home economics class of Kennett High School work side by side under supervision of the teacher, Joyce Melvin (right). Carol Thacker runs the machine at left while Helen Marie Gillespie receives instructions from the teacher.

Integration In Missouri Successful

KENNETT, Mo. (ANP) — School officials here are hailing an integration attempt as a success story. Colored students have been attending Kennett High School with white students for two months and Principal O. J. Armstrong said last week:

"We have not had one bit of trouble whatsoever. Reaction to the integration includes:

The election of Charley Ivy, the only colored pupil in the senior class, as class treasurer; two pupils accepted into the high school's crack girls' chorus which will appear in public concert next month.

* * *

TWO GIRLS play on the girls' basketball team. Students participate in appearances of the school's pep squad, at football games.

Kennett school district, in which pupils have never had a colored high school, has transported colored high school pupils in the past to Hayti High School in adjoining Pomiscot County.

The school board voted before the 1954-55 term began last September to continue to run a school bus to Hayti and let the pupils choose their own place of education.

Hiring of teachers desegregation step

ST. LOUIS — (ANP) — Naming colored to faculty posts at colleges and universities in the interest of desegregation was approved unanimously last Tuesday at the final session of the conference on equal educational opportunity, sponsored by the American Council on Education.

The meeting was the first of its kind since the Supreme Court decision of last May prohibiting segregation of races in schools. Leading educators from many parts of the country were in attendance.

Parents attack separate school scheme in Jersey

Afro-American P.3 Baltimore Md

TRENTON, N.J. — The first public hearing under the New Jersey anti-discrimination law since the Supreme Court decision outlawing jim-crow schools began here Wednesday with the airing of complaints of two parents against the Englewood Board of Education.

The parents charged the school board with fixing the school zone boundries to include most of the city's colored population in one zone, thereby forcing the colored pupils to attend a segregated school.

The hearing is being conducted by State Commissioner of Education Frederick Raubinger in the State House Annex.

The parents, Mrs. Susan Anderson and Mrs. Mary Walker, are being represented by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Jack Greenberg of the NAACP Legal Defense staff and Leonard Williams, local NAACP attorney, assisted by Deputy Attorney General Thomas Cook.

Witnesses for the parents testified that the newly drawn boundary lines segregate the colored school population into one school—Lincoln School—in the Fourth Ward, where the majority of the city's colored population lives.

Dr. John Milligan, deputy commissioner of education and director of the New Jersey Division Against Discrimination, held that the new boundary lines were not drawn in accordance with the anti-segregation policy of the anti-discrimination law.

He testified that there is only one white pupil among Lincoln Junior High School's enrollment of 130. Engle Street Junior High School has more than 500 pupils of whom about 10 per cent are colored.

Dr. Milligan pointed out that if the whole population in the area was white there would not be two junior high schools since it would be "uneconomical" to have two so close to each other, one of them a very small student body.

A single junior high school accommodating 1,000 pupils, could very well take care of the community, he s[illegible]

Nation's press hails desegregation action

NEWARK, N.J.—Liberal newspapers throughout the nation are hailing the immediate desegregation of America's schools in their editorial columns.

Typical of their reaction is the following editorial which appeared under the heading "Desegregation Begun," in the Sept. 14 issue of the Newark (N.J.) Evening News:

EVEN BEFORE the high court's decision against public school segregation becomes mandatory, steps toward integration of colored and white children are well under way everywhere outside of some southern states.

With the opening of the fall school term reports show desegregation—partly or wholly accomplished in orderly fashion in areas where heretofore segregation was practiced.

Most attention has focused on the District of Columbia where schools reopened Monday on a partial desegregation basis known as the "gradual approach," adopted by many other places.

It was thought there might be some trouble in the district as the result of demands by one group for full integration at once and the unsuccessful efforts of another group to restrain the Board of Eucation from putting its plan into effect.

—o O o—

HAPPILY, THERE was no disturbance whatever, with 3,000 colored pupils transferring to schools formerly all white. "We don't know of one single thing untoward happening" announced a school official.

Thus President Eisenhower's wish that the district would set a good example for the rest of the country was fulfilled. For the nation's capital to have failed in that respect would certainly have created an ironic and embarrassing situation.

BY CONTRAST in the nearby state of West Virginia fear of violence cause the Greenbrier County school authorities to rescind an order permitting colored children to register at schools nearest their homes.

A gathering of adults at White Sulphur Springs voted to remove by force any colored child from a school for whites. But it is what might be expected in a state of West Virginia's mob rule repute.

While in large centers the "gradual approach" is made necessary by organizational difficuties, that so many communities have adopted it may be attributed to the two questions on which the Supreme Court has asked for further argument before issuing final decrees.

Combined, the questions are whether the court should order that colored children "shall forthwith" be admitted to schools of their choice or should the court permit an 'effective gradual readjustment.

—o O o—

MEANWHILE the several defiant southern states are moving to amend their constitutions permitting transfer of their public schools to private operation as a means of circumventing the court's ruling.

Of course, before that can be done voter approval will have to be given. There may come the "rub," for the way in which the court finally decides to implement its decision could profoundly affect the outcome of the balloting.

In the end there is no reason to expect that the good sense of the people in these states will be reflected in an indorsement of Chief Just Warren's statement that "liberty under law extends to the full range of conduct which the individual is free to pursue." That is democracy.

Negro Mothers Say Jersey School Board Segregated Children

By the Associated Press

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 27.—Five Negro mothers testified yesterday their children were victims of discrimination in school assignments in Englewood.

They took the witness stand in a public hearing on charges that the Englewood Board of Education engaged in a policy of school segregation. Two of the mothers instituted complaints that resulted in the hearing.

Deny Racial Issue.

Two members of the board, retired Army Gen. James H. Stratton and Arnold W. Cramer, testified racial questions never entered into discussions of school zoning by the board.

The board is accused of segregating Negroes in its Lincoln school zone. John P. Milligan, director of the State Division Against Discrimination, testified school zones had been discriminatory in the past and that a rezoning last summer increased segregation.

Mrs. Mary Walker, one of the complainants, said she registered her youngest son, Theodore, at Liberty School last May. She said she was told the rezoning required that he go to Lincoln School.

Cites Other Pupils.

The other complainant, Mrs. Suzanne Anderson, said she tried to register her son, James, at Liberty School in 1949, but that after he attended the school for a month he was transferred to Lincoln School. She said white children who lived near her on the same street went to Liberty School.

Thomas J. Brogan, attorney for the board, said Mrs. Andersons son was sent to Lincoln School through "inadvertence," and that the board was willing to correct its error.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, charged "it was more than an inadvertence."

Frederick M. Raubinger, commissioner of education, who presided, adjourned the hearing until Monday.

Parents Say Newly Drawn Boundary Lines Segregate Negro School Population

Trenton, N. J.—The first public hearing under the New Jersey Anti-discrimination law, since the Supreme Court decision outlawing Jim Crow schools began here Oct. 20 with the airing of complaints of two Negro parents against the Englewood Board of Education.

The parents charged the Englewood school board with fixing the school zone boundaries to include most of the city's Negro population in one zone, thereby forcing the Negro pupils to attend a segregated school.

The hearing was conducted by State Commissioner of Education, Dr. Frederick Raubinger, and held in the State House Annex.

The parents, Mrs. Susan Anderson and Mrs. Mary Walker, were represented by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Jack Greenberg of the NAACP Legal Defense staff and Leonard Williams, NAACP atorney of Trenton. New Jersey Deputy Attorney General Thomas Cook presented the case for the state and the parents.

Boundary Lines

Witnesses for the Negro parents testified that the newly drawn boundary lines segregate the Negro school population into one school, the Lincoln School, located in the 4th ward where the majority of the city's Negro population lives.

Dr. John Milligan, Deputy Commissioner of Education and Director of the New Jersey Division Against Discrimination, held that the new boundary lines were not drawn in the best interest of the anti-segregation policy of the New Jersey Anti-discrimination law. He testified that there is only one white student in the Lincoln Junior High School of one hundred thirty Negro students. The Engle Street Junior High School has more than 500 students of which about 10 per cent are Negro.

Two Junior Hights

Dr. Milligan pointed out that if the whole population in the area was white there would not be two junior high schools since it would be "uneconomical to have two junior high schools so close to each other, one of which had a very small student body. A single junior high school, accommodating 1,000 pupils, could very well take care of the community, he said.

The Lincoln elementary school is under capacity. The Cleveland elementary school is overcrowded. The boundary lines were drawn, the school board attorney, former Judge Thomas J. Brogan, argued, to relieve the Cleveland school. He pointed out that last year the Cleveland enrollment was 702 and 622 this year.

Tried To Get Change

Dr. Milligan testified that while the new lines reduced the enrollment at the Cleveland school, the enrollments of the Roosevelt and Franklin school, both all-white, were increased. The Lincoln school was left with six vacant classrooms. It is possible to "eliminate a racially segregated school", the director of the Division of Discrimination said, if the lines were different. He testified that he tried to get the Englewood Board to change the lines last August, but he was unsuccessful.

He said he regretted having to be the first Director of the Division Against Discrimination to call a public hearing on charges of discrimination against a school board. "I regret what has been done here", Dr. Milligan asserted, "and I regret I failed at conciliation."

School Bias Charges Aired at N. J. Hearing

TRENTON, N. J.—The first public hearing under the New Jersey Anti-discrimination law, since the Supreme Court decision outlawing Jim Crow schools, began here Wednesday with the airing of complaints of two Negro parents against the Englewood Board of Education.

The parents charged the Englewood school board with fixing the school zone boundries to include most of the city's Negro population in one zone, thereby forcing the Negro pupils to attend a segregated school.

The hearing is being conducted by State Commissioner of Education, Dr. Frederick Raubinger, and held in the State House Annex.

The parents, Mrs. Susan Anderson and Mrs. Mary Walker, are being represented by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Jack Greenberg of the NAACP Legal Defense staff, and Leonard Williams, NAACP attorney of Trenton. New Jersey Deputy Attorney General Thomas Cook is presenting the case for the state and the parents.

Witnesses for the Negro parents testified that the newly drawn boundary lines segregate the Negro school population into one school, the Lincoln school, located in the 4th ward where the majority of the city's Negro population lives.

Dr. John Milligan, Deputy Commissioner of Education and Director of the New Jersey Division Against Discrimination, held that the new boundary lines were not drawn in the best interest of the anti-segregation policy of the New Jersey Anti-discrimination law. He testified that there is only one white student in the Lincoln Junior High school and one hundred thirty Negro students. The Engle Street Junior High School has more than 500 students of which about 10 per cent are Negro.

Dr. Milligan pointed out that if the whole population in the area was white there would not be two junior high schools since it would be "uneconomical to have two junior high schools so close to each other, one of which had a very small student body. A single junior high school, accommodating 1,000 pupils, could very well take care of the community, he said.

The Lincoln elementary school is under capacity. The Cleveland elementary school is overcrowded. The boundary lines were drawn, the school board attorney, former Judge Thomas J. Brogan, argued, to relieve the Cleveland school. He pointed out that last year the Cleveland enrollment was 702 and 622 this year.

Dr. Millian testified that while the new lines reduced the enrollment at the Cleveland school, the enrollments of the Roosevelt and Franklin school, both all-white, were increased. The Lincoln school was left with six vacant classrooms. It is possible to "eliminate a racially segregated school," the director of the Division of Discrimination said, if the lines were different. He testified that he tried to get the Englewood Board to change the lines last August, but he was unsuccessful.

He said he regretted having to be the first Director of the Division Against Discrimination to call a public hearing on charges of discrimination against a school board. "I regret what has been done here," Dr. Milligan asserted, "and I regret I failed at conciliation."

Dr. H. Harry Giles, Professor of Education at New York University and Director of the Center for Human Relations, who has made a 6-year study of the Englewood situation, testified that the present zones make it impossible for the school population to get the best possible use out of the existing school facilities and at the same time reduce the present predominance of Negroes in the Lincoln school. He recommended that the Lincoln and Liberty zones be consolidated into one. All pupils from kindergarten through the third grade could attend one school and those from the 4th to the 6th attend the other.

A State witness, Carl W. Glatt, who investigated the complaints of the two Negro parents, testified that despite the state law which prohibits the identification of pupils according to race, a small "c" was placed on the enrollment cards of Negro children in the superintendent's office.

EDUCATION 1954 NEW JERSEY PRES. OF BOARD OF EDUC.
ENGLEWOOD,N.J.

Board President Sees No Provision For Integration

TRENTON, N. J. — (ANP)—The president of Englewood's Board of Education stated at a hearing here last week that he knew of no provision in the New Jersey constitution requiring the board to integrate Negro and white pupils in schools.

William J. Fitzpatrick made the declaration during the third and final day of a public hearing on charges brought by two Negro mothers of Englewood that the board segregated Negroes by manipulating its zoning districts.

The women filed the charges with the State Division of Discriminaton asking that body to nullify school boundaries drawn up by the board last summer.

They charged the board segregated Negroes at its Lincoln school.

Another official, Dr. Harry L. Stearns, Englewood superintendent of schools, testified that the school zones were drawn up on a mathematical basis. He said that it was done to eliminate overcrowding, and that use was therefore made of Lincoln school.

But Fitzpatrick's attempt to justify segregation through flaws in the constitution tended to reflect the board's position on the issue.

Under questioning by Deputy Attorney General Thomas B. Cook, Fitzpatrick stated that the board never discussed desegregation or segregation at its meetings. Defense Atty. Thomas J. Brogan then objected to Cook's questioning, siding with Fitzpatrick that there was nothing requiring the board to integrate the races.

Atty. Cook snapped back that Fitzpatrick's contention was a matter of law to be decided by Frederick M. Raubinger, commissioner of education. Raubinger presided over the meeting.

The Supreme court decision banning segregation in education, said Cook, requires school boards to integrate the races.

The hearing was adjourned after the attorneys decided to sum up the case in written briefs.

No explanation was given for the move.

Baptist Minister Is Segregation Head

HOBBS, N. M.—An irate Baptist minister and 500 Hobbs parents pledged Friday to keep their children from attending public schools in this southeastern New Mexico town if the board of education eliminates segregation.

The pledge movement came to a head Thursday night when several hundred persons attended a meeting called by Rev. Bill Carter Baptist minister, who is the leader of the "segregationists." Carter said 500 "mothers and fathers" signed pledges and that more would probably sign later in an effort to force a reversal by the board.

The fuss was raised after the Hobbs school board issued an order eliminating segregation in its schools. Carter said the board acted too hastily to carry out integration and that it should wait further instructions from the U. S. Supreme court.

Carter has an August 28 hearing scheduled on his pending suit to force the board to show cause why it should not delay its action on the order until it receives supreme court recommendations.

Carter said he didn't believe the pledges will interfere with this autumn's school term.

tem, which, while it has desegregated the higher grades, still has segregated classes in the lower grades. However, segregation in the lower grades is expected to end shortly.

At Hobbs, where a furor over the non-segregation schoolboard order has raged for weeks, sparked by the Rev. William Carter, a Baptist minsiter, who, although claiming he was "just a moderator" for the issue, had publicly predicted that this New Mexico community would "explode into violence" if segregation ended.

During the earlier days of this controversy he claimed to have 8,000 signitures of the 15,000 population of the town on a petition which urged the continuation of segregation.

The minister even after the day of registration had passed quietly on its way warned: 'There is definitely going to be trouble."

However, on the Sunday before the day the schools opened at Hobb's, he, at the close of his sermon urged his congregation and the members of the Hobbs Segregation Committee who were present, to pray—'Find God's way to settle our problem" and after the first school day was over Rev. Carter issued a press statement:

"I thought the people would abide by the law."

"There was no trouble whatsoever," said Charles L. Miller, superintendent of the seven-school system."

5 Southwest City Schools To Integrate

BY CHARLES H. IDDINGS

Sante Fe, N. M. (ANP) — Classes opened calmly in newly-integrated schools in the cities of Las Crecas, Clovis, Artesia, Carlsbad and Hobbs, where the school boards had voted to end segregation in line with the United States Supreme Courts recent ruling outlawing the practice.

Only the Roswell, N. M., sys-

Gloster B. Current Stresses Importance of a 'Positive Approach to Integration'

Albuquerque, N. Mex.—Local authorities can make or break the efforts of their community to conform with the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the schools, an NAACP official asserted here Sunday.

Gloster B. Current, director of branches for the NAACP, said experience since the Court's decision has shown that "where the authorities take a positive approach to integration in their policy, integration can be successfully accomplished without too much friction."

Mr. Current praised New Mexico schools for their successful integration this fall and noted that "reports coming into the NAACP national office from Missouri, West Virginia, Arkansas, Delaware and other states where desegregation is taking place clearly indicate that most people are accepting the change gracefully."

He addressed a meeting on NAACP program and action sponsored by the local branch of the Association.

Called 'Crack-Pot'

Referring to efforts of Bryant Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancemeit of White People, to stop school integration by promoting school strikes and other agitation, Mr. Current characterizedized Mr. Bowles as a "crack-pot".

"Bowles' activities and those of others like him," Mr. Current declared, "are but a dying gasp of those who would circumvent the decision of the United States Supreme Court by violent means."

He called for an "all-out effort by NAACP branches in the South to give greater support to raising the necessary funds to end segregation and discrimination in every phase of American life."

Americans "of every race" were urged to join the NAACP and "take part in this fight to secure first class citizenship for all."

Integration Depends on Local Folks

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.—Local authorities can make or break the efforts of their community to conform with the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the schools, an NAACP official asserted here Sunday.

Gloster B. Current, director of branches for the NAACP, said experience since the Court's decision has shown that "where the authorities take a positive approach to integration and affirmatively state their policy, integration can be successfully accomplished without too much friction."

PANEL DISCUSSED NEW YORK SCHOOLS — Interviewing Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the Urban League of New York, on WCBS radio last week were Ted Poston of the New York Post and Benjamin Fine, education editor of the New York Times. Question asked on the panel was: "Are New York City's schools entirely free of racial discrimination?" Seated around the microphone can be seen Fine, Lewis and Poston. Standing and helping the discussion move along is Martin Weldon, moderator. — (ANP)

Oppose Desegregation of Yonkers N., Y., Negro School

Albany, N. Y.—Decision has been reserved by Dr. L. A. Wilson, New York State Commissioner of Education, following arguments pro and con on the closing of an all-Negro school in the City of Yonkers. The school was ordered closed as of June 29 by the Yonkers. Board of Education and the pupils assigned to two other schools.

The Yonkers branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People endorsed the Board's action and was represented at the hearing here on July 28 by Miss Olive J. Hamilton, vice president.

Opposing the desegregation order was a group of Negro parents for whom W. Scott Davis, attorney, was spokesman. Mr. Davis and his group contended for retaining the 82-year-old school and extending the district lines to include white residential areas. They filed a petition with the State Commissioner of Education to that end. Arguing for desegregation was the corporation counsel of Yonkers, J. Raymond Hannon.

Residential Segregation

In a resolution passed on July 23, the Yonkers NAACP endorsed the action of the Board "in its decision to close School No. 1 in the City of Yonkers which has become a segregated Negro school as result of residential segregation in the community."

Further, the branch offered "its cooperation in helping the board to implement its decision" and called "upon all citizens and residents of Yonkers" to support and cooperate with the Board in "the elimination of racial segregation in the public schools."

How Integration Came About In One Small Town

NEW YORK — (ANP) — From a source close to the scene of action comes one of the most interesting stories of the school desegregation program which news services did not carry.

In one of the small towns which decided to go along with the Supreme court decision without further delay, the schools were thrown open to both races in such a lightning like move, the people most likely to resent the integration had little time to think about the matter.

But because racial attitudes previously had been sharply drawn, Negroes in this small town felt what was coming. So that very same day, quietly they went through the town visiting all the hardware stores buying up all the guns and ammunition available.

Next day, whites, infuriated over the desegregation move, rushed into the same stores seeking guns and ammunition, only to find there was none. Quietly and without further ado, they went home and had nothing to say at all about the mixing of whites and Negroes in the public schools.

100-year-old segregation in N.Y. schools ended

ALBANY, N.Y. (ANP)—Segregation ended in New York schools after a 100 years of rigid enforcement.

The segregation in this case concerns Indians — not colored persons as is usually the case.

The state said 1,535 school children moved out of small, ram-shackled schools on the reservations, in use since 1846, and into the public schools.

— o O o —

ACCORDING TO the education department, the idea has nothing to do with the recent Supreme Court decision against racial segregation. It has been in prospect for many years, the department said.

"It is a good educational policy to have Indian children in school with white children," said Commissioner Lewis A. Wilson.

"It is of great benefit to Indian pupils in learning the language and customs of the people with whom they live and conduct their business," he added. "It will benefit the white children by enabling them to learn about Indian culture."

Until now, some 30 white teachers and six Indians have been teaching in the Indian schools. The curriculum is the same as in other schools, with a few Indian songs and crafts added.

All classes have been in English, the lanaguage spoken by most Indian children in their homes.

Dixie Pupils See Integration Work; Pin Riots on Adults

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.—(ANP)—Ten white boys and girls here last week to see how integration works blamed the riots in Baltimore and Washington on adult "ruffians" and "agitators."

The boys and girls from the two cities which experienced some difficulty in integrating schools, arrived last week to see first hand the integration of 1,200 white children and 200 Negroes in New Rochelle high school.

Guests of local pupils who contributed $300 to travel funds and who are providing overnight lodgings and meals in homes, the group will also tour New York and meet Dr. Ralph Bunche, UN

Progress Of Freedom In ISA To Be Forum Theme

Sun. 10-3-54 p. 1

Herald

NEW YORK CITY — "The Progress of Freedom in the U. S. A." will be the over-all theme of the Twenty-third Annual New York Herald Forum, to be held on Monday and Tuesday evening, Oct. 18 and 19.

The first session, to open at 8 p.m. on Oct. 18 at the Hunter College auditorium, 69th St. between Park and Lexington Aves., will be devoted to discussions of progress toward integration in the schools since the May 17 Supreme Court decision directing the end of racial segregation in education. Key figures in the controversy over segregation and educational and civic leaders directly concerned with the problem will participate in the discussion which will include a consideration of segregation in New York City Schools.

The second session, to begin at 8 p.m., the following evening in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, will be concerned with national progress under the first Republican administration in twenty years. Five Cabinet members will be present and will be questioned by experts from various fields. The Democratic and Republican candidates for governor of New York and Senator from New Jersey will also be on the program.

The first session, on progress in integration, will be concerned with such issues as the meaning of the Supreme Court decision for the South and a consideration of the South's resources for meeting the challenge presented by the decision and the leadership available for exploiting these resources. First-hand reports will be presented from Delaware and Washington as well.

The program will open with a dramatization of the fight against segregation that led to the Supreme Court decision, presented by two of the central figures. The decision itself and its meaning for the South will be discussed by Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of the "Little Rock, Ark., Gazette" and author of the recently published study, "The Negro and the Schools," sponsored by the Ford Foundation for the Advancement of Education.

The South's resources for meeting the challenge posed by the Supreme Court opinion will be discussed by George Mitchell, director of the Southern Regional Council; who will consider such community organizations as churches, farm cooperatives and labor unions, and Philip G. Hammer, former executive director of the Committee for the South, who will deal with the economic aspects. C. A. McKnight, director of the Southern Education Reporting Service will speak on "Latent Leadership in the South."

Case studies and reports on some community solutions will be reported on by such speakers as Dr. Herman Long, director of Race Relations of the American Mission Association of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches; Harvey S. Stahl, superintendent of schools of Claymont, Del.; Mrs. Pauline Dyson, a teacher at Claymont's all-Negro elementary school; Jeanne Rogers, education writer for the "Washington Post and Times Herald"; Margaret Butcher, a member of the District of Columbia Board of Education and a teacher at Howard University; and Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, the president of the Federation of Citizens Associations of Washington, D. C.

Segregation in the New York City schools will be considered by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate psychology professor at City College, who has charged that there is such segregation, and Arthur Levitt, president of the Board of Education, who has ordered an impartial investigation of Dr. Clark's allegations by the Public Education Association, a lay civic group.

Dr. Charles Johnson, president of Fisk University, will be the concluding speaker at the first session, which will include a muscal interlude by the Interracial-Fellowship Chorus directed by Harod Aks.

Washingtonians among Tribune Forum orators

NEW YORK — Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, Howard University professor and member of the Washington, D.C., board of education, was among speakers at the 23rd annual Herald Tribune forum held Monday and Tuesday here.

Others included Mrs. Pauline Dyson, teacher at Claymont's (Del.) all-colored elementary school; Jeanne Rogers, Washington newspaperwoman, and Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, Washington.

Fisk President And Dr. Herman Long Rate High Honor

Globe Nashville, Tenn.

Thurs 10-14-54

Famed New York Daily To Present Array Of Prominent Leaders Next Week, To Voice Opinion On Ways And Means To Put Supreme Court's Decision Of May 17 Into Effect; Some Will Deal With Progress Of Eisenhower's Administration

Dr. Charles S. Johnson, President of Fisk University, it was revealed the past week, rates the high honor of being chosen as the closing speaker on the Herald Tribune's 23rd Annual Forum, to be heard in New York City next Monday and Tuesday, October 18 and 19.

In addition, Dr. Herman Long of the Fisk community, who is Director of the Race Relations of the American Missionary Association, sponsored by the Congregational Christian Churches, is to appear on the program which is sponsored by the New York Herald Tribune, one of the nation's most noted daily newspapers.

Dr. Johnson, already a national figure of great importance, recently won high acclaim when he took a firm stand in opposition to educators who hide behind the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution when they are investigated with regard to charges they have, or have had, affiliation with the Communists.

Under the Fifth Amendment the [illegible] answer any questions about his Communist affiliations because it "might incriminate him." Dr. Johnson holds that in these serious times, such an answer disqualifies such a person for service as a teacher in our schools and colleges.

Globe

Mae W. Stabler, Director of Information for the Herald Tribune Forum sent to the press the past week a release dealing with his year's program. It tells about all the notables who will be speakers. Heretofore the Forum has been broadcast over many radio stations, and it is probable this is to be the case this year. The Forum will discuss the momentous Supreme Court decision on racial segregation in public schools, which would seem to assure its being heard over a network of radio stations. The release from the Herald Tribune is as follows:

Nashville Thurs

"The Progress of Freedom in the U. S. A." will be the over-all theme of the Twenty-third Annual New York Herald Tribune Forum, to be held on Monday and Tuesday evenings, Oct. 18 and 19.

The first session, to open at 8 p.m., on Oct. 18 at the Hunter College auditorium, 69th St. between Park and Lexington Aves., will be devoted to discussions of progress toward integration in the schools since the May 17th Supreme Court decision directing the end of racial segregation in education. Key figures in the controversy over segregation and educational and civic leaders directly concerned with the problem will participate in the discussion which will include a consideration of segregation in New York City schools.

The second session, to begin at 8 p.m., the following evening in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, will be concerned with national progress under the first Republican administration in twenty years. Five Cabinet members will be present and will be questioned by experts from variosu fields. The Democratic and Republican candidates for governor of New York and Senator from New Jersey will also be on the program.

The first session, on progress in integration, will be concerned with such issues as the meaning of the Supreme Court decision for the South and a consideration of the South's resources for meeting the challenge presented by the decision and the leadership available for exploiting these resources. First-hand reports will be presented from Delaware and Washington as well.

Thurs 10-14-54

The program will open with a dramatization of the fight against segregation that led to the Supreme Court decision, presented by two of the central figures. The decision itself and its meaning for the South will be discussed by Harry S. Ashmore, Executive Editor of the "Little Rock, Ark., Gazette" and author of the recently published study, "The Negro and the Schools," sponsored by the Ford Foundation for the Advancement of Education.

The South's resources for meeting the challenge posed by the Supreme Court opinion will be discussed by George Mitchell, Director of the Southern Regional Council; who will consider such community organizations as churches, farm cooperatives and labor unions, and Philip G. Hammer, former Executive Director of the Committee for the South, who will deal with the economic aspects. C. A. McKnight, Director of the Southern Education Reporting Service will speak on "Latent Leadership in the South."

Case studies and reports on some community solutions will be reported on by such speakers as Dr. Herman Long, Director of Race Relations of the American Mission Association of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches; Harvey E. Stahl, Superintendent of Schools of Claymont, Del.; Mrs. Pauline Dyson, a teacher at Claymont's All-Negro Elementary School; Jeanne Rogers, education writer for the "Washington Post and Times Herald;" Margaret Butcher, a member of the District of Columbia Board of Education and a teacher at Howard University; and Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, President of the Federation of Citizens Associations, of Washington, D. C.

Segregation in the New York City Schools will be considered by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, Associate Psychology Professor at City College, who has charged that there is such segregation, and Arthur Levitt, President of the Board of Education, who has ordered an impartial investigation of Dr. Clark's allegations by the Public Education Association, a lay civic group.

Dr. Charles Johnson, President of Fisk University, will be the concluding speaker at the first session, which will include a musical interlude by the Inter-racial-Fellowship Chorus directed by Harold Aks.

N.Y. school invites four from Southern Pupils to observe harmony in an integrated school

BALTIMORE

Four "outstanding" pupils at Southern Higs School, here, have accepted an invitation from New Rochelle (N.Y.) High School to learn how white and colored youngsters get along together in a well integrated school.

The pupils leave Baltimore Sunday morning and will be guests of the New York school for a week with all expenses paid by their hosts.

Three high schools in Washington where anti-integration disturbances occurred recently were also extended invitations to visit New Rochelle High and accepted.

Baltimore's most violent demonstrations occurred around Southern High which has an enrollment of 1,700, 39 of whom are colored.

—o O o—

THE NEW Rochelle school has an enrollment of approximately the same number as Southern but has 360 colored pupils. A former president of their General Organization was Jesse Arnelle, now a basketball star at Pa. State University.

The invitation to the Southern students was accepted by John E. Schwatka, principal of the school.

"We're happy to have them go," Mr. Schwatka told the AFRO. "They're all outstanding students."

—o O o—

HEADING THE group will be Robert Rodgers, a veteran of 13 months in Korea who is now attending school under the G. I. Bill of Rights.

The other three pupils are Betty Manalansan, secretary of the student council and a commercial student; Carole Peters, a member of the band and a drum majorette, and Wayne Woolford, a class representative and member of the school's newspaper staff.

Mr. Schwatka has asked that New Rochelle reciprocate by sending a delegation of four students for a visit at Southern High and Willis Thompson, principal of the New York school agreed, although no date was set for the exchange trip.

An invitation was also extended by the New Yorkers to the principal of the Milford, Del. high school where demonstrations forced colored pupils to withdraw.

The principal there, however, declined the offer, stating that his school's problem rested not with the students but with the parents from "small rural areas" surrounding Milford.

Show Dixie Whites 'How'

Fly Integration Foes Up North for 'Look'

ATLANTA, Ga.—While Disturbances and near race riots in Baltimore, Washington and Milford, Del., have been capturing front-page attention, a Mid-Western newspaper, the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, in conjunction with the Minneapolis Urban League and the Minneapolis Superintendent of Public Schools, has quietly brought Southern educators to Minneapolis to observe and participate in an integrated educational program, in the hope that they will gain an insight as to the possibilities of having children of different racial backgrounds in the same schools.

Putting the newspaper's private plane at the disposal of the Minneapolis branch of the Urban League, the project started Saturday, Oct. 9, when the pilot put down at Atlanta and picked up Mahlon T. Puryear, the League's national vocational guidance secretary. From Atlanta the Star and Tribune plane flew to Winston-Salem, N. C., where two officials of the Winston-Salem Board of Education, three representatives of the Forsythe County public schools, and Samuel Harvey, executive of the Winston-Salem Urban League, came on board.

Dr. Ralph Brimley, Forsythe Superintendent of Schools, joined the party in Minneapolis. The group left for Baltimore, where two members of the city's Board of Education joined the party and proceeded to Minneapolis.

muttered as she faced a cluster of cameramen, "I came here to find out if white girls dance with Negro boys at a high school prom in an integrated school."

A visiting boy told the teacher who was planning their program: "We can see the Empire State Building any time, but right now we'd rather see how the football team works with both white and colored on it."

A question from another of the girl visitors, went like this: "Tell me, if we had a colored teacher in our school, would she be likely to mark the white students fairly and would we work as well for her as we would for a white teacher?"

Soon afterward she was led with the others into the classroom of Mrs. Carol Stewart, a Negro biology teacher, whose students were dissecting earthworms. Emerging sometime later from the classroom, the Southern girl looked thoughtful.

"You know," she said, "a small frown creasing her pretty face, she's a much better teacher than my own biology teacher at home."

Robert E. Rodgers, 23-year-old Korean War veteran and a stu-

Students From Integrated Schools Visit 'Model' Type

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 18 (U.P.)—Ten students from newly integrated Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., schools received a first-hand lesson in race relations today at New Rochelle High School, where 25 per cent of the pupils are Negroes.

The students, one of them the son of an Iowa congressman, came here from schools where some white students have held demonstrations to protest against mixing with Negroes.

They were invited to New Rochelle High by the faculty and students, and the students took up a collection to pay their guests' expenses during their four-day visit.

Six students from the capital and four from Baltimore visited classes this morning. They observed with interest as the 1600 white and Negro children in this New York City suburb studied together without a sign of friction.

Among the visitors was 16-year-old Alan Gross, son of Rep. H. R. Gross (R., Ia.), a senior at Washington's McKinley High School where a violent anti-integration demonstration was held. Alan did not participate in the demonstration and attended classes regularly but was chosen to carry back to his schoolmates the story of peaceful race relations at New Rochelle.

Also here from Washington were Richard Caulk, 17, a student at McKinley High, and Betty Harris, Ann Hooten, Jack Linden and Robert Hunt. Two boys and two girls came from Baltimore's Southern High, scene of one of the noisiest demonstrations.

After his first glimpse of the mixing of races here, Wayne H. Wolford, 18-year-old Baltimorean, said it was a matter "more or less" of getting used to the idea.

"You just don't think anything of it here," he said.

Southern Pupils See Integration

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y. — In this prosperous Northern city of 70,000 persons, 10 white boys and girls from integration-troubled high schools in Baltimore and Washington, arrived here last week to examine the integration of 1,200 white children and 400 Negroes in New Rochelle High School.

The visitors were guests of the local pupils who contributed $300 travel funds and are providing overnight lodgings and meals in their homes.

Recent demonstrations against the integration of Negro and white children in public schools of Washington and Baltimore, prompted New Rochelle students to invite the Southern youths to observe successful integration. Six of the visitors were from Washington, and admittedly, were among the strikers at Anacostia and McKinley high schools. The other four students were from Southern High school in Baltimore.

At the very outset of their visit last week, the students from the South made it plain that they didn't come to see the UN or the Empire State Building or to spend their time having pictures taken.

From their questions to Willis Thomson, principal of New Rochelle, it became evident that the matter which principally concerned them was the social relationship between white and Negro in the classroom, on the playing field and on the dance floor.

One pretty white Southern girl

Complete Desegregation Unlikely, Editor Says

New York, Oct. 18 (UP)—Harry S. Ashmore, executive edi[tor] of The Arkansas Gazette, said tonight it would be "un[reasonable] to expect vast and uniform change" in the South's [segregation] practices as a result of the Supreme Court's deci[sion] against segregation in education.

Speaking at the annual New York Herald Tribune Forum, the Little Rock editor said:

"I think it is fair to say—despite some significant differences in prevailing practices—that there is not now any essential difference in the white attitude toward the Negro in the two regions (North and South)."

Says Nation Segregated

Ashmore, one of a series of speakers discussing the problems of racial integration, said America is still a segregated society, not only in the South but everywhere.

"The great tides of out-migration which have produced a significant drop in the proportion of Negroes to white in the Southern states have produced an equally significant increase of Negroes in the great cities of the non-South," he said.

"And everywhere these migrating Negroes have been herded into segregated neighborhoods—which, of course, has had the effect of consigning the great majority of their children to wholly or predominantly segregated schools."

Says Resistance Declines

In the North, Ashmore said, "the moral fervor of the abolitionist movement has long since burned" just as in the South the "dedicated resistance to change which once characterized the heirs of the Confederates" has greatly diminished.

Ashmore said he expected to see the gradual emergence of a pattern in which there will be "pockets of integration in most of the Southern states and pockets of 'voluntary' segregation still existing in all of them."

Don Rice

arrive to see for themselves—Willis Thomson, principal of the New Rochelle, H. S. High School, getting acquainted with students from Baltimore's Southern High School on their arrival in Pennsylvania Station yesterday. The visitors, who will spend a week at the New Rochelle school to see how non-segregation works, are, left to right, Carole Peters, sixteen; Betty Manalansan, eighteen; Robert E. Rodgers, seventeen, and Wayne H. Woolford, seventeen.

Baltimore Students Here To See Integration Work

By Margaret Parton

Four students from Baltimore's segregation-troubled Southern High School arrived in New York yesterday and were escorted to New Rochelle, where during the next few days they will see for themselves how white and Negro youngsters can mingle peacefully in classrooms and on the playing fields.

The delegation from Southern High School came to New Rochelle at the invitation of Willis Thomson, principal of New Rochelle High School, after 2,000 white students from the Baltimore school rioted in protest against the integration program recently inaugurated there. Six more students from three Washington high schools which have also resisted integration, will arrive by air today to join in the visit.

Waiting at Pennsylvania Station yesterday afternoon were Mr. and Mrs. Thomson, Robert Forbes, who teaches courses in human relations and history at New Rochelle and who originally had the idea of inviting Southern students to come North and see for themselves.

and ten high school students who, with their families, have volunteered to act as hosts. In the group there seemed an almost nervous determination that they weren't planning to "propagandize anybody."

"We're not going to use propaganda on these young people in any way," said Mr. Thomson firmly. "We just hope they'll see for themselves that integration can work, and that they'll carry back to their schools a message of harmony and peace."

A young girl nodded solemnly. "I'm not going to even mention it unless they bring it up," she said.

"We don't want to hammer anything at them," one of the boys maintained.

Someone mentioned that it was the Southern parents, and not their children, who were leading the anti-integration fight, but one of the boys immediately took issue with the significance of this.

"The parents won't be around very long," said the youth. "So it's the young people we've got to reach—they're the important ones."

Betty Manalansan, seventeen, said one reason she had been chosen a member of the delegation was that she had not taken part in the anti-integration demonstration. Asked why she had volunteered for the trip, she said simply: "I just believe that all people are equal."

The other students, Carole Peters, eighteen; Robert E. Rodgers, twenty-three, and Wayne H. Woolford, seventeen, said they had come with open minds.

"I've come here just to look and listen and make up my own mind," said Mr. Rodgers, an Army veteran who was in Korea. "I plan to keep my eyes open, and I certainly don't plan to get into any arguments about segregation."

This determination seemed to be common to both sides, and the group drove off in a flurry of suitcases and general amiability.

The ten visiting students have a busy week ahead which includes attendance for two days at New Rochelle classes, and trips to the New York Herald Tribune Forum, the United Nations, a Broadway show and possibly West Point. They will also meet with the New Rochelle Council of Unity and with Phi Sigma Beta, an interracial high school fraternity.

Dewey Talk Tonight Will Open Forum

Session to Deal With Integration

Leaders of government, education and special citizens' groups will convene at 7:45 o'clock tonight at Hunter College Auditorium, 69th St. between Park and Lexington Aves., for talks and panel discussions on "Steps Toward Racial Integration," theme of the opening session of the twenty-third meeting of the New York Herald Tribune Forum.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey will deliver the opening address, keynoting the Forum's over-all theme of "Progress of Freedom in the United States." He will be introduced by Whitelaw Reid, president and editor of the New York Herald Tribune, after Mr. Reid's welcome to the more than 2,000 Forum guests.

Five members of President Eisenhower's Cabinet will head the discussions on the subject of the Forum's second and final session, "New Objectives in Government," to be held at 7:45 p. m. tomorrow in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria.

After the opening address this evening, Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of "The Arkansas Gazette," will speak on the general theme of racial integration in a talk entitled, "Democracy's New Test."

The local situation in Washington will then be discussed by a three-member panel including Jeanne Rogers, education writer for "The Washington Post and Times Herald"; Mrs. Henry Bartlett, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, and Margaret Just Butcher, member of the Washington, D.C., Board of Education.

Approaches to Integration

A second panel will follow, outlining the current situation in the South. The speakers will include George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council; Philip G. Hammer, president of Hammer & Co., consulting economists, Atlanta, Ga., and C. A. Knight, executive director, Southern Education Reporting Service.

After a musical interlude supplied by the Interracial Fellowship Chorus under the direction of Harold Aks, a third panel will explore the various approaches to the integration problem. Speaking from the teacher's standpoint will be H. E. Stahl, Superintendent of Schools, Claymont, Del., and Pauline Dyson, a Claymont elementary school teacher. Representing student ideas will be two high school girls from a Southern city, while Herman H. Long, director of the race relations department of the American Missionary Association at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., will discuss the community aspects.

The fourth and final panel of the first session will deal with segregation in New York schools. The speakers will be Arthur Levitt, president of the New York City Board of Education, and Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College.

Final speakers of the evening will be Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, who will talk about the time element in integration in Southern schools, and Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who will discuss steps to be taken in the future.

Forum To Be Broadcast

The program will be broadcast to the metropolitan area by WNYC and WNYC-FM, while special sections of the Forum will be broadcast nationally by the American Broadcasting Co., the Mutual Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Co. networks.

All sessions of the Forum will be recorded by the special events section of the Voice of America for rebroadcast as part of special documentary programs for English-speaking areas and for translation in digest form into thirty-four foreign languages.

In addition, the nation's overseas information services will make widespread use of the first session's report on progress toward integration since the May 17 opinion of the Supreme Court directing the end of racial segregation in education.

Tomorrow's final session will be introduced by Allen W. Dulles director of the top-secret Central Intelligence Agency, who will speak on "Freedom's Progress Here and Abroad."

5 Cabinet Members to Talk

The five Cabinet members who will answer questions on the government's standpoint will be Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; George M. Humphrey, Secretary of the Treasury; James P. Mitchell, Secretary of Labor; Ezra Taft Benson, Secretary of Agriculture, and Herbert Brownell jr., Attorney General.

The state campaign issues involved will be discussed by New York's Democratic and Republican candidates for Governor, Averell Harriman and Sen. Irving Mr. Ives; and by the New Jersey Democratic and Republican candidates for United States Senator, Charles R. Howell and Clifford P. Case.

An address by Lewis L. Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, on "The Atom's Promise" will be rebroadcast by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Forum Reviews Desegregation

NEW YORK, Oct. 18 (AP).—Desegregation of the schools—perhaps the biggest problem of the South today—dominated the opening sesison of the 23d annual New York Herald Tribune Forum tonight.

Here is what some of the 17 speakers on the subject had to say:

George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council—"Unsegregated education would help and would speed the needed economic changes in the South. He listed these as land-ownership, secure land tenure, industrial opportunity, good opportunity, good education and technical education."

"But, there is no denying that it is going to be resisted in many counties tooth and nail."

'CAN AND WILL WORK'

Mrs. Pauline Dyson, Negro teacher of a Claymont, Del., elementary school which was segregated until recently—Integration can and will work "when this great Nation of ours forgets boundary lines." When her school was integrated two years ago, following a Delaware Supreme Court decision, she told her Negro pupils to remember that white children also would have a readjustment problem and warned them to be on their best behavior.

H. E. Stahl, superintendent of schools in Claymont—after he had ordered desegregtion in Claymont in line with the State Supreme Court decision, "the State Attorney General and the State Superintendent of Schools . . . intructed me to drop the colored children because the case was going to be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court. oy,no r lDhmh..'Tz-reg-e m m mb

"Their request was refused. I told them the children had already been admitted; that we were dealing with human beings, people with feelings and souls, not just a legal case."

CHANGE MADE QUICKLY

Mrs. Henry Bartlett, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, Washington — "Within hours after the Supreme Court opinion was handed down, the (Wasington) school administration's desegregation plan was in operation.

"This appears to have been contrived by pressure primarily from local branches of several national groups. Without impinging upon their motives, the question can be raised as to the appropriateness of these pressures in a governmental function."

Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette—"Ours is still a segregated society, not only in the South but everywhere in the Nation . . . with only minor exceptions, the walls of social segregation stand outside the South as well as in it."

D. C. and Baltimore Students Visiting Biracial School

By the Associated Press

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct 19.—Six Washington (D. C.) and four Baltimore high school students attended a non-segregated school here yesterday to see how it works.

Their busy day included a visit to a Negro teacher's classroom and news conferences.

The Baltimore group arrived Sunday to spend the rest of the week; the Washingtonians flew in yesterday and must leave Thursday to take an exam back home.

All are guests of families whose children attend New Rochelle High.

The Baltimore pupils opened the day by blaming professional agitator sforthe demonstrations against integration at their school, Southern High.

Disorders "Subversive."

Robert E. Rodgers, a 23-year-old Korean war veteran, called the demonstrations "subversive" and said they were "too well organized" and "planned for mass confusion" to have been staged by students themselves.

"I have seen such agitation in Japan but I never believed it could happen in America," he said.

His schoolmates, Carole Peters, 16; Betty Manalansan, 18, and Wayne Woolford, 17, told of "false rumors" and "vicious lies" that spread uncertainty among students and parents alike.

All turned out to be untrue, they said.

Miss Peters said she believed "professional rioters" aided by grownups who have no children in the school turned a peaceful month of successful integration into a series of disturbances.

Visit Biology Class.

The group visited a biology class being taught by Mrs. Carol Stewart, a young colored teacher from Washington.

The group didn't get to see much of Mrs. Stewart's teaching, however. Class already was under way when they came in and it was interrupted time and again by news photographers and others.

The Washington visitors are Richard Caulk and Alan Gross of McKinley high, Betty Harris and Lack Linden of Anacostia and Ann Hooten and Robert Hunt of Eastern.

Gross is the son of Representative H. R. Gross, Republican, of Iowa.

Said Miss Hooton:

"I want to see how the athletic program, dramatic productions and social programs work. I particularly want to see the Dances."

Miss Harris wanted to find out how New Rochelle managed to make its integration program work.

The local high school keeps no racial data on its students, but about a quarter of its 1,611 pupils are estimated to be Negroes.

The students are to visit some factories today to see industrial integration at work, then visit U. N. headquarters.

Visiting Dixie Students Blame Bowles & Co.

Special to World-Telegram and Sun.

NEW ROCHELLE, Oct. 19.—Much of the trouble in Southern schools has been provoked by fanatics like Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, according to one of 10 students from Washington and Baltimore observing integration at New Rochelle High School.

Bowles, meanwhile, was denied the platform of the National Assn. for the Advancement of the Colored People and a stinging rebuke was given to the man who had invited him to speak.

Last week, Melvin Tapley, president of the NAACP branch at Peekskill, said Bowles had accepted an invitation to address a state conference there.

Yesterday, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, the NAACP's board chairman, wired Mr. Tapley that the meeting had been postponed until another time and place, not announced.

Pupils of Bias Schools Given Object Lesson

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 18 (UP).—Ten students from newly integrated Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., schools received a first-hand lesson in race relations today at New Rochelle High School, where 25 percent of the pupils are Negroes.

The students, one of them the son of an Iowa Congressman, came here from schools where some white students have held demonstrations to protest against mixing with Negroes.

EXPENSES PAID

They were invited to New Rochelle High by the faculty and students, and the students took up a collection to pay their guests' expenses during their four-day visit.

Six students from the capital and four from Baltimore visited classes this morning. They observed with interest as the 1600 white and Negro children in this New York City suburb studied together without a sign of friction.

Among the visitors was 16-year-old Alan Gross, son of Rep. H. R. Gross (R., Ia.), a senior at Washington's McKinley High School, where a violent anti-integration demonstration was held. He was chosen to carry back to his schoolmates the story of peaceful race relations at New Rochelle.

After his first glimpse of the mixing of races here, Wayne H. Wolford, 18-year-old Baltimorean, said it was a matter "more or less" of getting used to the idea.

"You just don't think anything of it here," he said.

CHECKS ACTIVITIES

Richard Caulk, of Washington, said he was particularly interested in seeing how the white and Negro students carried on their social activities, their clubs and extra-curricular activities.

He said he thought the mixing of whites and Negroes worked well in Washington during the first three weeks of the school term. Then, he said, "trouble makers" began to cause dissension.

Willis Thomson, principal of New Rochelle High School, said there would be no attempt to "propagandize" the visitors. "They will present the Southern point of view to our students, and we hope our students will benefit from it," he said. "People are afraid of the unknown. We hope when they know the consequences of desegregation, it may influence them."

Ten Southern students, visiting New Rochelle High School to observe unsegregated school life, are invited by Richard Humphrey to watch football practice.

Robert Forbes (tallest), a teacher at New Rochelle, N. Y., high school, introducing four students from Baltimore's integration-troubled Southern High School to Paul Shipp, a fifteen-year-old Negro student of the New Rochelle school. Carol Peters, sixteen, is shaking hands with Paul. Other Baltimore students are Robert Rogers (left), Betty Manalansan and Wayne Woolford (right).

Soon afterward she was led with the others into the classroom of Mrs. Carol Stewart, a Negro biology teacher, whose nose-wrinkling students were dissecting earthworms. Emerging some time later from the classroom, the Southern girl looked thoughtful.

"You know," she said finally, a small frown creasing her pretty face, "as a matter of fact, she's a much better teacher than my own biology teacher at home."

Better Than "Own Teacher"

Ten Students Visiting New Rochelle Probe Mixed Social Relationships

By Margaret Parton

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 18.—Ten students from integration-troubled high schools in Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D. C., plunged into a study of integration at New Rochelle High School today and made it quite clear that they were far more interested in getting down to brass tacks than they were in posing for photographs or going on sight-seeing tours.

"I didn't come here to get my picture in the paper," one pretty girl muttered as she faced a cluster of camera men. "I came to find out if white girls go with Negro boys at a high school prom in an integrated school."

"We can visit the Empire State Building any time," one of the visiting boys told a teacher who was planning their program, "but right now we'd rather see how the football team works with both white and colored boys on it."

A Quiet Talk With Principal

At that, it was not until after lunch that Willis Thomson, the principal, who had invited the recently - integrated Southern schools to send delegations to see for themselves how integration works in New Rochelle, was able to segregate the visitors in his office for a quiet talk.

Six of the students, those from Washington, had only arrived by air a few hours earlier. They were: Betty Harris, eighteen, and Jack Lindon, seventeen, of Anacostia High School; Ann Hooten, seventeen, and Robert Hunt, seventeen, of Eastern High School; Richard Caulk, seventeen, and Allan Gross, sixteen, of McKinley High School. The latter is the son of Rep. H. R. Gross, R., Iowa.

With them were four students who arrived on Sunday from Baltimore: Carole Peters, sixteen; Betty Manalansan, eighteen; Robert E. Rodgers, twenty-three-year-old Korean war veteran, and Wayne H. Woolford, all from Southern High School.

All of the Baltimore students seemed to have been chosen for their impartial attitude on racial questions, but some of the Washington students admitted that they had stayed out of their schools in protest against segregation.

Jack Lindon, of Washington, evidently spoke for some of them when he said: "We just feel that this thing shouldn't be rushed into—maybe it should be started with the primary grades instead of the high schools, and anyway our colored maid at home says that her children are quite happy to be equal and separate."

Much of the trouble at Anacostia, he said, had been stirred up by outside agitators like Bryant Bowles, leader of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

"But when Bowles wanted to talk to us, we wouldn't listen to him because we were afraid he might be a Communist," he said, adding hastily that "anyway, we don't go along with what he says, because you can't buck the Supreme Court."

Social Relations the Issue

From their questions to Mr. Thomson, it became evident that the matter which principally concerned them was the social relationship between white and Negro in the classroom, on the playing field and on the dance floors. Quietly they listened, first to Mr. Thomson who told them that "in New Rochelle we have learned to think of people as human beings," and then to Robert Forbes, a teacher of courses in human relations and history, who outlined the program for their five-day visit.

Tomorrow they will begin a series of activities ranging from class-room attendance to a visit to the United Nations.

A question from one of the visitors pretty well put an end to the discussion: "Tell me," she asked, "if we had a Negro teacher in our school, would she be likely to mark the white students fairly and would we work as well for her as we would for a white teacher?"

Negro Recommendations Ignored By School Board

DURHAM, N. C.—Five Negroes recommended as qualified to fill a vacancy on the Durham School Board failed to get the support of the board at its Oct. 11 meeting. Ignoring the recommendations of several Negro organizations, the board appointed Herman A. Rhinehart, a local white bank executive, to the board.

The five Negroes recommended during the summer, following the resignation of a board member, were James T. Taylor, of North Carolina College's psychology department, twice a candidate for City Council; Dr. C. Elwood Boulware, civic-religious leader and NCC mathematics professor, currently serving on the Durham Youth Board; John H. Wheeler, civic leader and president of the Mechanics and Farmers Bank; Asa T. Spaulding, vice-president and comptroller of North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company and recent candidate for the Board of County Commissioners; George W. Cox, vice-president and agency director of North Carolina Mutual.

A Durham local paper staff writer, Russell Clay, stated: "Rhinehart's was the only name placed in nomination and he was selected by unanimous voice vote . . ." He said also: "The action of the board required only a matter of seconds . . ."

Editor Wants Segregation

RALEIGH, N. C. (ANP)—Expressing the opinion that fraternizing of Negro boys and white girls in the upper teenage brackets is dangerous to race relations, a Southern editor last week came up with a plan providing for separate schools for boys and girls as a means of solving school segregation problems.

Dr. Clarence Poe, editor-board chairman of Progressive Farmer, a monthly farm publication, expressed that view in an editorial in the July issue of the magazine.

Commenting especially on the probable mixing of pupils of both races on the high school level, Dr. Poe asked:

"Will it not impose the most dangerous strains on race relations in cases where young men of one race and young women of the other—both in the upper age brackets—are brought together under new conditions?"

He then suggested that separation of boys and girls of high school age would "probably help" in many cases.

It "seems plainly inevitable," he added, "that there will be a certain perecntage of colored children in numerous southern white schools.

He also suggested a geographical districting plan, based on the preponderance of members of either race in the respective district, and the consent of children and their parents to attend schools of their choice.

N.C. county grants desegregation hearing

NEWTON, N.C. — The local school board has agreed to grant a hearing to officials of the Catawba chapter of the NAACP at its first meeting in November, although no date has been set for the hearing.

The chapter had called upon the county board to "take immediate steps to organize the public schools under your jurisdiction in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court May 17."

A letter from W. M. Turner of Long Island, president of the branch, which accompanied petitions signed by 130 persons, said the NAACP is offering its services in devising and implementing a program of desegregation."

N.C. Seeks Time To Desegregate

RALEIGH, N.C., Nov. 14 (AP)—North Carolina today told the U.S. Supreme Court that if school desegregation is put into effect immediately it may result in abolition of public schools and cause "racial bitterness."

The state suggested that plenty of time be given in carrying out desegregation. It urged that federal district judges who know local conditions be given wide authority to implement the change-over in the light of those conditions.

GUIDANCE

In effect the state asked the high court not to frame one all-encompassing decree to take care of all problems raised in localities.

Rather, asked the state, let federal district courts frame standards to fit local conditions.

The state referred to the late Justice Jackson's suggestion that to send the cases back to lower courts without standards for guidance in further proceedings would mean a generation of litigation.

"If so," said the brief, "such a result is far preferable to a generation of strife outside the courts and of chaos inside the schoolroom."

North Carolina said, "It must be frankly stated at the outset that this brief is not intended to present any solution to the extremely delicate and dangerous problem which has arisen" by reason of the Supreme Court's decision.

The Supreme Court ruled last May 17, that segregation in public schools was unconstitutional. It will hear arguments beginning Dec. 6 on what kind of a decree it should issue putting its ruling into effect.

188 PAGES

The brief contained 188 pages, including 141 pages of exhibits. It was signed by Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan and Asst. Attys. Gen. T. Wade Bruton, Ralph Moody, Claude L. Love and I. Beverly Lake.

Although North Carolina was not party to the original cases in which segregation was ruled unconstitutional, it had until tomorrow to file a brief, as a friend of the court, on how desegregation should become effective.

A major part of the state's exhibits were concerned with answers to questionnaires sent to county and city school superintendents and police officials.

In essence the questions were: Would immediate desegregation work and would it work without violence? An overwhelming majority of answers were that it would not work in North Carolina and that it would lead to violence, the brief said.

North Carolina's brief said a decree which may be workable under conditions prevailing elsewhere may have grave and far reaching consequences if applied in this state.

Give integration trial
Marshall tells Tarheelia

By J. B. WARREN

LUMBERTON, N.C. — "Give integration a trial in your schools and it will work," Clarence Mitchell, head of the NAACP's Washington bureau, declared in the closing speech of the 11th annual convention of the North Carolina NAACP Conference of Branches.

Speaking Sunday afternoon in First Baptist Church, the Rev. [illegible] pastor, headed the three - day session. Mitchell urged Negroes to stop to shout freedom but to "press forward and seal toward our goal."

Mr. Mitchell cited the U. S. Supreme Court's school desegregation decision and the Emancipation Proclamation. Mitchell cited examples to show that it is possible to have law and order in Washington as well as in the South.

— o O o —

Despite desegregation of the schools over the objections of a few bigoted citizens when law enforcement officers will do their sworn duty.

Mr. Mitchell reviewed the voting records of North Carolina congressmen and urged citizens to register and vote in greater numbers in order to elect men who will vote for measures deemed best for our needs.

"We need a strong statute against job discrimination, assurance that 'For White Only' signs will not be tacked on doors of public schools, housing projects, hospitals, recreation centers and parks," Mr. Mitchell declared.

— o O o —

WHILE HURRICANE Hazel roared through the state Friday evening, more than 600 persons who filled the church to see and hear Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, sat alternately in rapt attention and uncontrolled laughter.

In a serious veln, Mr. Marshall asserted that no colored church had turned away any person who professed Christianity, adding that "other churches should open up and admit God and the colored man at the same time."

Chiding southern governors who say integration will "never work" in their states, "They said the same thing," he declared, "when we were fighting to get colored people into the lily - white primaries. It did happen and no one was hurt."

— o O o —

ASSERTING THAT the same would prevail with integration, he cited the case of a governor who was clamoring for the maintenance of segregation while, at the same time, he has a son in an integrated parochial school as a good example of "political double talk."

Speaking of the so - called "problems of integration" posed by the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Marshall said, "There is no problem about this thing called integration — if the old folk, colored and white, will leave it to the children to settle."

He cited the cases of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Milford, Del., Baltimore and Washington as examples of how well the youths were progressing until their elders stirred up hatred and violence.

— o O o —

HE WARNED colored people not to look for "miracles" to happen and set them in the schools without effort or even some degree of discomfort on their part. "Use the weapon at hand — the courts of the land — to obtain our freedom."

Participating in the welcome program Friday night preceding Mr. Marshall's address were the Rev. J. J. Johnson, pastor of First Baptist Church; the Rev. J. A. Thompson, president of the Robeson County NAACP branch;

O. C. Jones, Dr. A. J. Johnson, chairman of the civic committee, and A. D. Sandberry, city manager, who welcomed the delegates to the city in the absence of Mayor R. A. Hedgepeth, who could not attend because of illness.

— o O o —

SPEAKER AT Saturday's session was Gloster B. Current, NAACP director of branches, who conducted clinics on local branch action, including the strategy on approach to local school officials and implementation of the court's ruling.

Also on Saturday, Kelly M. Alexander, state president of the NAACP, was re - elected for his seventh consecutive year and Durham was chosen as the site for the 1955 convention. All other officers were also re-elected.

The Rev. L. W. Wertz presided over the election meeting.

N.C. teachers group hails high court's school ruling

RALEIGH, N.C.—North Carolina's colored teachers are not going along with the myth that integration will make their jobs insecure.

Any impression that they were —and some foes of integration have deliberately tried to create such impressions—got a setback Saturday from an official statement issued by the North Carolina Teachers Association, through its executive committee.

The group not only voiced complete accord with the justice and timeliness of the May 17 Supreme Court ruling, but pointed to the obligation of teachers, as good citizens and professional educators, to lend their support to an orderly compliance

— o O o —

THE STATEMENT follows:

On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an unanimous opinion, declared that racial segregation in public schools violated provisions of our Federal Constitution.

This decision, with its vast implications for cultural and social change, will undoubtedly rank in history as a milestone on the road of progress toward our American ideals of justice and equality for all men.

As the North Carolina Teachers' Association has not had a formal meeting since this decision, it seems appropriate that some expression should be forthcoming from the executive committee of our association, whose duty it is to act in [illegible] in the interim between conventions.

— o O o —

THE FOLLOWING statement is in recognition of this duty:

1. We heartily endorse the court's decision as being just, courageous and timely.

2. We urge our membership to support and assist in the implementation of the court's decrees (whenever forthcoming) for the following reasons:

a. All good citizens have a solemn obligation to abide by the law. As professional educators our obligation in this regard is even more impelling;

b. The world situation, in which democracy is being challenged by anti-democratic philosophies, demands that America live up to its promises and ideas.

c. America's great potential can never be realized as long as racial barriers can be used to separate and divide our citizens.

3. We believe in, accept and endorse the following statement from the resolution adopted by our National Education Association at its 1954 convention, held in New York City:

It is the conviction of the association that all problems of integration in our schools are capable of solution by citizens of intellingence, saneness and reasonableness, working together in the interest of national unity for the common good of all

Urge N.C. city to mix schools

CATAWBA, N.C. — Officers of the Catawba branch NAACP last week announced the filing [illegible] parents urging the Catawba County School Board and superintendent to call a meeting to discuss the implementation of the Supreme Cout decision outlawing public school segregation.

W. M. Turner, farmer and president of the local NAACP chapter, said the petitions were sent by registered mail to the school officials on the eve of the 11th annual convention of the state NAACP conference in Lumberton, Oct. 15-17.

— o O o —

THE GUEST speaker at the conference was Thurgood Marshall who spearheaded the Supreme Court fight against dual schools.

The action by the civic branch is probably the first of its type on record in the western or highland section of North Carolina. Certain areas of Catawba County are said to enjoy better than average race relations.

State Asks Supreme Court For Gradual Desegregation

Atlanta Observer / Raleigh, N.C.

High Court Urged to Give Federal District Judges Authority to Supervise Change-Over; Warns That Any Other Course Could Result In Destruction of Public School System and Racial Bitterness; State's Brief Proposes No Specific Plan For Ending Public School Segregation

WSJ. 11-15-54

North Carolina today asked the U. S. Supreme Court to go slow in effecting its segregation decree, and urged that Federal district judges be given authority to supervise the change-over.

Give us plenty of time, the State asked, and give district judges who know local conditions authority to implement the decree in the light of those conditions.

An alternative to gradual desegregation, the State said, could be destruction of the public school system and "racial bitterness."

The State referred to the late Justice Jackson's suggestion that to send the cases back to lower courts without standards for guidance in further proceedings would mean a generation of litigation.

"If so," said the brief, "such a result is far preferable to a generation of strife outside the courts and of chaos inside the schoolroom."

The State's position was set forth in a brief, filed in the hope the Supreme Court will use it for guidance in formulating methods for ending public school segregation. No specific plan was proposed.

There are 188 pages, including 141 pages of exhibits, in the brief. It was signed by Attorney General Harry McMullan and Assistant Attorneys General T. Wade Bruton, Ralph Moody, Claude L. Love and I. Beverly Lake.

Except for a few statistical tables, the exhibits consisted of answers to questionnaires sent to city and county school superintendents and police officials. In substance, an overwhelming number of the answers said immediate desegregation would not work in the State and would lead to violence.

When the Supreme Court invited briefs from states not directly involved in cases which led to the desegregation decree, such as North Carolina, it suggested several ways of effecting the decree.

One way would be specific decrees, with compliance required "forthwith." Another would permit "gradual adjustment," and the third would permit district judges to frame decrees.

North Carolina spoke out strongly for the gradual process, handled by district judges. A blanket decree covering all states would be impractical, this State argued, because conditions in North Carolina are different from those in other states and vary within the State itself.

"If the public schools and the public peace are to be preserved," the brief said, "the decrees to be entered in the South Carolina and Virginia cases (which brought the desegregation ruling) must be framed to fit the conditions in the actual communities.

"Only a court conversant with local conditions and granted wide discretion can tailor the decree to fit the local variations."

As an example of the differences, the brief noted that recent demonstrations against integration occurred in Delaware, where there are 13 Negroes to every 87 white people. In North Carolina the proportion of Negroes is one of four.

Atlanta Observer

Even if every other condition were precisely the same, the intermixture of one Negro child with 99 white children in North Dakota is obviously a far different problem for a school administrator from the problem of commingling 71 Negro children with 29 white children in Northampton County, North Carolina, or 45 Negro children with 55 white children in Mississippi," said the brief.

WSJ. 11-15-54

Other Differences.

Besides the proportion of Negroes to whites in the State, the brief said there were three other "major differences" that distinguish North Carolina from most of the states outside the South. These were listed as "the intermixture of white and Negro homes throughout rural areas, the general reaction to this court's present interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment, and the number of Negro teachers employed."

Northern states with the largest Negro populations have the Negroes almost entirely confined to the cities. And the Negroes are "concentrated principally in certain areas through the natural tendency of people to live in close proximity to other people like themselves.

"As a result, school district lines can be drawn so that there are relatively few Negro children in certain schools and relatively few white children in other schools." In such areas, the brief said, the questions presented are "largely academic."

The questions in North Carolina, said the brief, and the answers are complicated by the fact that "most North Carolinians, white and colored, do not live in cities but live in rural areas where the residences of white and Negro neighbors are interspersed."

On the major "difference" of general reaction, the brief said, "in North Carolina the opinion conflicts with deep seated convictions and has been generally regarded as extremely unfortunate.

"Of course, this court may not allow its decisions as to the interpretation of the Constitution to be guided by public opinion, but, in determining the decree to be issued, a court of equity is not required to shut its eyes to reality, especially when the victims of an unwise decree will be children."

As to the last "major difference," the number of Negro teachers employed, the brief said that the State, with about the same Negro population as New York, "employs five Negro teachers for every Negro teacher employed by New York. New York with six Negroes out of every 100 persons in its population, employs fewer than two Negroes for each 100 school teachers. North Carolina, with one Negro out of every four persons, employes more than one Negro teacher out of each four teachers."

More Negro Teachers.

Questionnaires sent to school superintendents showed that 128 out 131 "believe they would find it impracticable to use Negro teachers," said the brief. At the present time, the brief noted, "North Carolina employs more Negro teachers than any other State in the Union. The average Negro teacher in North Carolina has more college training and is better paid than the average white teacher."

If immediate integration is ordered, said the brief, "at least the following dangers will result in North Carolina. . ."

"(1) Public schools may be abolished; (2) If the public schools are not abolished, the presence in the same classroom of white children and Negro children may well bring about daily confusion, physical conflicts, ridicule of one group by another, and other conditions which will make it difficult for children to study and teachers to teach;

"(3) If public schools are not abolished, parents financially able to do so may send their children to private schools, and public schools will come to be regarded as a dole to paupers, repulsive to everyone, black or white, having that pride and self respect essential to good citizenship in a democracy;

"(4) Conflicts in the schoolroom, on the playground, and between parents and teachers may lead to racial bitterness in a community and bring to North Carolina the bloody race riots which have disgraced cities and states where justifiable racial pride among both Negroes and white people has been ignored."

School Bus Problem.

Referring to the questionnaire answers of school superintendents and police officers, the Tar Heel brief said the opinions expressed by them" indicate that the mixture of the races in the school buses is the most difficult problem confronting" them as a result of the high court's decision.

It pointed out the State operates 7,200 public school buses and transports 452,000 children to and from school each day. Over 6,000 of these buses are driven by high school students and no adult now rides on most of them.

About 2,000 are used for transporting Negro children, 5,000 for transporting white children, and 85 for Indian children.

"To require that Negro children and white children be commingled forthwith on these buses, without adult supervision and police protection, is to invite conflicts on the bus, which will make riding on them so hazardous few parents will consent to their children's using them. This is a substantial danger a court of equity may well consider in formulating its decree."

The diverse conditions within North Carolina also were discussed. In addition to a high proportion of Negroes in the East compared with the West, the State also has about 30,000 Indians.

"The racial loyalties of the Indians of North Carolina are as strong as those of either of the other races, perhaps stronger," the brief noted. "The Indians will be as resentful of any compulsory integration of their children with the children of other races as will be the people of either the white or the Negro race."

To illustrate the diversities within North Carolina, the brief noted that the 1950 census showed only 10 Negroes in Graham County, in the West, compared to 18,189 in Northampton, where whites number 10,182. "A decree which would be an annoyance in Graham County could well bring disaster in Northampton," the brief said.

The brief quoted from studies showing that in elementary schools in the State 1.69 per cent of the white children in school were under the normal age for their respective grades while 3.42 per cent of the Negro children were in that category.

"Obviously, it would create more numerous and more serious administrative and instructional difficulties to put in the same classrooms with white children the thousands of Negro children in Northampton County, one-third of whom are retarded, than it would cause to put into the classrooms of Graham County a single Negro child or even two Negro children, even if both of them should happen to be in the retarded one-third."

The brief asked the court to take "judicial notice" that nearly every school building is crowded to capacity. If a substantial number of Negro children are admitted to a white school, white children will have to go elsewhere.

"Thus, a decree requiring a school board in North Carolina forthwith to admit Negro children to the schools of their choice, will, if a substantial number of them choose a school now used by white children, necessarily require the school board to deny to white children presently enrolled in that school the right to continue to attend it."

The brief discussed the development of the State's public school system.

It stated "North Carolina, today, is educating more Negro children and employing more Negro teachers than any other State in the union. She is educating them in a statewide school system, which means that, except insofar as local tax supplements provide additional benefits, every child in North Carolina, regardless of race, residence or economic status, studies the same subjects and uses the same textbooks . . ."

It said the State's "firm belief that separate schools for the races will train both white and Negro children to live together in mutual respect and friendship, while mixed schools in North Carolina will cause racial conflicts is the result not of emotions and prejudice, but of sober, earnest thought by those who have desired to see her children educated so as to be prepared to demonstrate to all the world that two racces as fundamentally different as the Anglo-Saxon and the Negro can live side by side in freedom, peace, and mutual respect . . ."

As for the future, the North Carolina brief noted the people of the State are "determined to maintain their society as it now exists with separate and distinct racial groups in the North Carolina community. They strongly oppose creating conditions in the public schools which tend to amalgamize the white and Negro races."

It added the people "also believe that the achievements of the Negro people of North Carolina demonstrate that such an educational system has not instilled in them (Negroes) any sense of inferiority which handicaps them in their efforts to make lasting and substantial contributions to their State.

No 'Overnight' Process.

"A social order which is the product of three centuries, and a public school system which is the product of one century of conformity to the constitution as interpreted by this court and by Congress, cannot be transformed overnight into an entirely different social order and education system notwithstanding the great respect which the people of North Carolina have for constitutional government and for this court."

The State of North Carolina contended that a decree directing a school board of a State to admit Negro children forthwith to the school of their choice within the limits of normal geographical school districting would exceed the authority of a Federal court. However, it said if the high court has such authority to issue such a decree, it is not required to do so "but in the exercise of its equity powers (it) can permit a gradual adjustment from the existing school system to a system not based on color distinctions."

It also stated if the court has such authority, it should not do so "if such a decree is to be a pattern to be followed in other cases arising in other states and other school districts."

In stating that the North Carolina brief did not intend to present a solution to the problem, Atty. Gen. McMullan and his assistants wrote:

"This brief is submitted for the purpose of showing the unparalleled gravity of nullifying the Constitution and laws of North Carolina affecting its most cherished, important, and expensive enterprise, its public schools, and for the purpose of stating sincerely and emphatically that the subsequent decrees of this court in these cases should allow the greatest possible latitude to the district judges in conductiong subsequent hearings and in drafting final decrees, if any of the objectives sought by this court's decision are to be attained."

The questionnaires to school superintendents, signed by Dr. Charles F. Carroll as State Superintendent of Public Instruction and McMillan, consisted of 18 questions and covered matter ranging from opinions on the results of immediate and gradual integration to school population. In the brief, identity of the superintendent is referred to by a code number. The letters of transmittal pledged anonymity.

McMullan's questionnaire to sheriffs and chiefs of police asked them for an estimate on the attitude toward segregation and also asked about the possibilities of violence if immediate integration was ordered. Typical questions and answers:

Likelihood Of Violence.

"Do you think there would be likelihood of violence among racial groups of students which would seriously interfere with the operations of schools in your city or county?"

Answers: Yes, 193. No, 6. Don't know, 1.

"Do you consider your present police force sufficient to preserve the general peace and order in your jurisdiction if such intermixing of white and Negro children in the public schools were to occur?"

Answers: Yes, 14. No, 182. Don't know, 3.

Asked about the prospects in their school districts if integration were ordered "forthwith," seven of the 165 superintendents answering said they believed the attempt would be accepted peacefully and 145 said they thought it would "seriously impair their conduct of their schools." Other answers:

125 thought "serious complications" would develop in school bus operations, 148 thought "serious problems" of discipline would be created, 135 thought it would be hard to get enough properly trained white teachers and "only three" thought "it would be practicable to use Negro teachers."

North Carolina was not a party to the original cases in which segregation was declared unconstitutional in the May 17 decision. Along with other Southern states, however, it was invited to submit a brief, as a friend of the court, on how it thought the segregation decree should be carried out. Today was the deadline for such briefs.

Oral arguments on the implementation decree will begin in Washington on Dec. 6. North Carolina will take part.

Ohio Pupils Quit; Ousted

CLEVELAND (INS)—Twenty students were expelled from Patrick Henry Junior High School in Cleveland last week when they refused to attend classes because of a racial incident.

The white pupils complained to school officials that Negroes of the student body had threatened them, and in the past had injured and roughed them up.

Cleveland School Supt. Mark C. Schinnerer said no reports of personal injuries in the school or on the grounds had been reported to him.

THE SITUATION developed when about twenty-five pupils refused to enter the building after classes had started.

Five of the group later entered the school but many of the others gathered at a student's home and drew up petitions which said they would not attend Patrick Henry "as long as our lives are endangered."

There was no violence in last week's incident. Although the expelled students charged that they all had been victims of violence at one time or another, having been beaten or wounded with knives.

About half of the 1,200 students at Patrick Henry are Ne-

Ohio parents sue for integrated schools; face counter-suit for boycotting JC unit

COLUMBUS, Ohio — (NNPA) A suit to force one of Ohio's remaining jim-crow public school systems to admit colored students without discrimination, and a counter-suit last week by the school board to force colored parents to send their children to the all-colored school, highlighted this state's slow move toward complying with the United States Supreme Court decision.

The school board of Hillsboro, whose traditional "colored school" was burned down last summer by an irate white citizen who later was sentenced to prison for the act last week appealed to the courts to force the colored parents to cease keeping their children at home "illegally."

The parents have refused to send the children to school until the State Supreme Court has ruled on five suits they have filed to enjoin the Hillsboro School Board from enforcing the zone lines, claimed by the parents to have been set to force colored children out of the white schools.

—o O o—

LESS THAN a week after Phillip Partridge, former county engineer, had been sentenced to one to 15 years for setting fire to the jim-crow Lincoln-Elementary School in Hillsboro, a new attack on school segregation came from a white member of the Cleveland school board.

In a meeting of the board Monday — packed with colored parents and leaders there on another mission — board member Alfred A. Benesch demanded an end to the "special type of zoning" which, he said, segregated colored and white children in Cleveland as effectively "as Washington, Baltimore and Mississippi."

Mr. Benesch charged that housing concentration forced large numbers of colored children to go to certain Cleveland schools and that white pupils were then given "voluntary transfers" out of these schools, so that eventually several of the city's largest schools had become solidly colored, while others were almost lily-white.

—o O o—

THE SUPERINTENDENT of education, Mark G. Schinerrer, retorted that he would not accept any suggestion by the board to change boundary lines. "I would no sooner change boundaries to force white children to go to school with colored pupils than I would change them to keep colored children from going to school with whites," he said.

Gov. Frank J. Lausche laid the blame for the continuance of segregation in Ohio schools to the lack of adequate laws on the books to prevent it, in a speech at the state convention of Democrats last week.

Call For Decision In Ohio School Segregation Case

CINCINNATI, O. — (ANP)—N. A. A. C. P. legal defense attorneys, in a petition filed with the U. S. Court of Appeals for the sixth circuit, called for a decision in the Hillsboro school segregation case now, instead of two weeks after the U. S. Supreme Court issues decrees based on its May 17 decision striking down "jim crow" public schools as unconstitutional.

The petition asks that district judge John Durffel act immediately on a request for a preliminary injunction restraining the Hillsboro school board from forcing Negro children to return to the segregated school.

FALL TERM

The case is the result of Negro children of Hillsboro attempting to enroll in two previously all-white schools in the fall term. They were registered and attended classes for a week before their parents were advised by the school board that the children would have to return to the previously all-Negro school because the board had instituted for the first time school zone lines.

New zones were drawn in such a way that all streets on which Negro children live, regardless of the location of the streets within the city, were included in one zone.

On Sept. 21, a petition was filed with the district court seeking a temporary restraining order to keep the school board from forcing the children who had registered at the two white schools to return to the Negro school.

HEARING SEPT. 29

The petition was denied by Judge Druffel who called for another hearing. At the conclusion of the hearing Sept. 29, the jurist ruled the suit was "premature," and that the school board has the right "until the Supreme Court establishes a formula, to use their best judgment as to how it is going to be taken care of."

Legal defense lawyers argue that the high court decrees will have no bearing on their case because none of the five cases before the Supreme Court involves the issue of refusing to allow Negro children to remain in the school after the school board voluntarily allowed them to register.

They aso contend that further delay will deny the children their present right to attend the school nearest their home.

Argument on the Supreme Court implementation decrees, scheduled for Dec. 6, has been postponed pending confirmation of Justice John M. Harlan.

Ohio Education Association supports teacher integration

COLUMBUS, Ohio (ANP) — In its final session here last week, the Ohio Education Association, for the first time in its history, passed a resolution calling for non - discriminatory hiring of school teachers.

The measure, passed without a single dissenting vote, states: "We encourage the employment of teachers on the basis of personal qualifications, training and experience without regard to race or creed."

THE ORGANIZATION has previously considered similar resolutions but this was the first one that carried the words, "without regard to race or creed."

In another note of progress, the Ohio School Survey Committee had in its list of proposals, "Immediate elimination of any discrimination in hiring teachers because of race or religion."

Barbee W. Durham, executive secretary of the Columbus NAACP stated:

"We count these happenings as real progress and we know that they come as a result of the May 17 Supreme Court decision. We hope the administrators will catch the spirit and put them into practice."

BLACK AND WHITE TEACHERS IN SEMESTER SESSION AT DOUGLASS

Auditorium Filled to Capacity to Hear City Superintendent Swanson Speak

CAPITOL HILL INSTRUCTORS FEATURED

Sixteen hundred teachers both black and white mingled together. That was the picture at the new Douglass High school Monday up to Tuesday noon, when all of the instructors in the Oklahoma City system were called together for a teacher's pre-conference get-together, during which time they heard an address from Dr. J. Chester Swanson.

"My, but this is the most beautiful school structure I have ever seen," declared two young ladies, who did not disclose where they were employed, as they passed through the fine structure and observed the arrangement of Oklahoma City's most modern school.

Superintendent Swanson addressed himself to the subject "The State of the School System" and "The Shortage of Money," and during his address he told the teachers they should endeavor to do something for every child.

The auditorium was filled to its capacity and 150 additional chairs were placed for the huge audience, and the Little Theatre rooms were opened for additional seats. The loud speaker system made it possible for every one to hear the various talks anywhere in the buildings.

A skit staged by two Capitol Hill instructors dealing with the importance of belonging to some type of professional organization, which was very well received.

The social hour found the teachers both black and white scattered all over the cafeteria, drinking cokes, coffee and eating doughnuts, and it was really a democratic scene with white and black teachers scattered all over the room, eating together.

During the program in the auditorium Miss Evelyn Strong presented two of her star pupils, Miss Carol Boyd and Leonardo Debose, who both sang to encore.

Those who have not visited the new Douglass High school should drift out that way immediately. The football diamond will not be in use this year, but will be ready for the 1955 season.

Desegregation Laws Urged

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. —(NNPA) — Immediate drafting of legislation to desegregate public schools in Oklahoma was urged Wednesday night by the education committee of the legislative council.

"We recognize the Supreme Court has spoken and we are preparing to comply," said Representative Ben Easterly, of Alva, committee chairman.

STATE LAWS

The committee was the first legislative group in Oklahoma to recommend changes in state laws to comply with the decision of the United States Supreme Court outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

The chief recommendation called for submitting to voters as soon as possible a constitutional amendment which would remove the financial obstacle in the way of desegregation. Colored schools are now financed by a 4-mill levy on a county-wide basis, and white schools by 20 mills levied district wide.

The proposed amendment would provide a 5 mill levy on a county-wide basis, the proceeds from which would be distributed to all school districts on the basis of average daily attendance. This would replace the 4 mills provided in the constitution for separate colored schools.

BOARD OF REGENTS

The committee also asked the Board of Regents for Higher Education and the State Board of Education to prepare immediately to end segregation in public education.

The legislators followed the recommendations of the Oklahoma Education Association, the state superintendent of public instruction, and the Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations on the proposed desegregation amendment, and supported the Oklahoma Education Association on four other major phases of its legislative program.

Ask Immediate Integration At Oklahoma City

OKLAHOMA CITY. — (INS) — A demand for immediate integration of Negro students into white schools in Oklahoma City was made by the NAACP last Thursday.

A 500-signature petition asking compliance with the desegregation order of the U. S. Supreme Court "at the earliest possible moment" was filed by the group with the Oklahoma City school board.

The board tabled the petition but Dr. J. Chester Swanson, school superintendent, said he would ask the NAACP for specific suggestions regarding integration.

C.E. HATCHER, L.L.B., ED.D.
SUPT., OF SCHOOLS, SASAKWA, OKLA.

The Legal Effects of the Supreme Court's Decision on Segregation in Oklahoma

By O. E. HATCHER, L. L. B., Ed. D.
Superintendent of Schools, Sasakwa, Okla.

The Supreme Court of the United States last May pronounced one of its most momentous decisions since Roger Brook Taney handed down the Dred Scott decision of 1857, which held that Negroes were not citizens. The question then arises, what is the legal effect of this decision purporting to rule out legalized segregation in the public schools of the United States and particularly Oklahoma?

The State of Oklahoma is one of those states where segregation is deeply rooted in tradition and local custom. Segregation of Negroes and whites for educational purposes has been the policy and practice which ante-dated statehood and continued from the time Oklahoma became a state in 1907 until the first Negro student enrolled in the University of Oklahoma, a traditionally white school in 1948. Such a policy could only have developed and been maintained in practice by the operation of powerful social, economic, and legal controls. Both statutory and constitutional provisions were enacted to perpetuate compulsory segregation in Oklahoma schools. It appears that this effort has been wasted.

The court decided in effect that "separate but equal" school facilities were incompatible with the United States Constitution. Then the court postponed until this fall any ruling as to how their decision was to be implemented. This procrastination in effect served a two-fold purpose. One was to avoid any emotional instability by supplying a "cooling off period" that would allow the wise and humane forces of both races to gain the ascendency. The other, to allow time for state legislatures to replace or implement the old legal structures for operating and maintaining mixed schools.

The Constitution of the United States is a product of historical evolution. Its heritage is traced through the whole effort to federate thirteen separate states. It is the organic and fundamental law of the land; the supreme and paramount law; the basis and regulating principle of government. Article III of this constitution makes provision for "the judicial power of the United States to be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." The Supreme Court thus owes its existence, rank and original jurisdiction to the Constitution.

The Supreme Court has power, in a proper case, to declare any law—national or state—invalid as in violation of the United States Constitution.

The Thirteenth Amendment was adopted December 18, 1865, and achieved the final freedom of the Negro from physical bondage. It guaranteed personal liberty to every individual within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States.

Approximately three years later the Fourteenth Amendment enlarge the rights of Nergoes by conferring citizenship upon them and guaranteeing Negroes the equal protection with the whites under the law. This amendment not only added much to the dignity of American citizenship and the security of personal liberty: it brought into focus the whole problem of segregation of Negroes in public schools versus the principle of freedom and equality enforced in our fundamental law. It is under this amendment that the Federal Supreme Court was asked to rule on the constitutionality of all laws pertaining to or requiring segregation in public schools.

All civil rights cases where the individual was denied the "equal protection" of the law came within the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts, including school privileges.

The legal effect of the Supreme Court's decision is to establish equality before the laws of the states, and that no discrimination be made against the Negro because of his color. It is designed to protect that Negro from unfriendly legislation, legal discrimination, implying any inferiority in civil society, or depriving them of any educational rights enjoyed by others, or any discrimination subjecting them to a subject race. The decision eradicates color from our educational system.

It should be pointed out that Oklahoma's school code has never discriminated against any race, but prescribed a rule applicable alike to white and colored citizens. However, everyone knows these legal provisions in question had their origin in the purpose, to compel the Negroes to keep to themselves while going to school.

The fundamental objection raised to the state's segregation laws in matters educational was that it interfered with personal freedom; stultified the development of personality by emotional blocking with resultant feelings of inferiority or superiority, and engendered hate and resentment on the part of the segregated minority group.

"Personal liberty" consists of the power of locomotion, directed by free will to change situations, or remove one's person to whatever school one's inclination may direct, without restraint. If a white and black citizen choose to send their child to the same school, it is their legal right to do so, and no government proceeding on grounds of race alone, can prevent it without infringing personal liberty.

A state can no longer prescribe as a rule of civil conduct, that white and Negro children cannot attend the same school. Our laws are now color blind, and neither knows or tolerates classes or castes among its citizens. So are our schools. Citizens will not enjoy their educational and civil rights solely upon the basis of color or race.

The destinies of the Negro and white races are indissolubly linked together in Oklahoma and the interest of both requires that race hate and race prejudice not be perpetuated under the sanction of law. The surest guarantees of peace, strength and security of this state is to eliminate injustices wherever found. The enjoyment of educational privileges and other civil rights solely upon the basis of race or color was eliminated by this recent decision.

Ratcliffe, Rivera Poll Educators

South Carolina's Principals OK School Integration at Confab

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. stat. 11-13-54

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA Jr.

BEAUFORT, S. C.—A majority of the principals of Negro elementary and high schools in the stubborn state of South Carolina is in favor of integration.

The Courier took on the almost impossible task of polling the principals here at Robert Smalls High School where they had been called into special session by white officials of the State Education Department.

The question of school desegregation was not discussed at this meeting but Courier writers buttonholed as many of the principals as possible and asked this question: "Are you in favor of integration?"

* * *

EIGHTY-FIVE out of a possible 130 principals were asked the question.

Eighty answered yes.

One gave a yes and no answer.

Four refused to give any answer.

Several principals, when questioned, shouted: "Yes! I'm in favor of it. Put me down as standing for integration."

And, several others, in firm voices, said: "Sure, I'm for it. It's long over due. We should have had integration forty years ago."

A FEW of the principals who gave an affirmative answer added: "I am a law abiding citizen."

And, there were few who found it necessary to scratch their chins and ponder the question.

The principals quizzed by the Courier were not asked to give their names because a teacher or principal taking a firm public stand for integration is flirting with his job. Several teachers were fired in Clarendon County after they participated in school suits.

The white bosses in the state capital will tell you that some of the Negro principals have volunteered the information that they prefer segregation.

* * *

IT IS understandable that some of the principals who said "Yes" to the Courier also had said "No" to the white bosses with the big whip.

The Negro who labors under second-class citizenship in the South has been finding it convenient to lie to the white bosses for years, as far back as the days of slavery.

But, when the Courier polled these principals, there were no whips over their heads and they were not being pressured. The Courier believes they were telling the truth.

S.C. leaders brace for integration war

By JOHN H. McCRAY

SPARTANBURG, S.C.—Preparations for a full-scale legal battle to effect public school integration in South Carolina was the major work of the 14th annual state NAACP conference here last weekend.

The three-day session set up a 21-man permanent legal committee for this purpose, and hinted that it was now ready to tackle any cases arising out of circumstances.

Supervised by chief NAACP counsel Thurgood Marshall, the legal arm is headed by state NAACP chief counsel Harold R. Boulware of Columbia. All committee members are colored excepting John Bolt Culbertson of Greenville.

—o O o—

IN ADDITION to Boulware and Culbertson, other members are:

Attorneys John H. Wrighten, Charleston; James M. Hinton Jr., Columbia; W. Newton Pough and Squire Morgan, Orangeburg; Donald James Sampson, Greenville; Ira W. Claiborne, Charleston; Cleveland Stevens, Loris; Ernest A. Finney Jr., Conway; W. W. Bennett, Florence; E. D. Turnage, Darlington; Vernoid R. Bunch, Georgetown; E. A. Parker and W. B. James, Sumter; L. C. Jenkins Jr., A. A. Kennedy and Willie T. Smith, Columbia; Frank E. Cain, Bennettsville; John E. McCall, Cheraw; Matthew J. Perry, Spartanburg, and Edgar E. Thompson.

—o O o—

PRESIDENT JAMES M. Hinton said the committee's purpose "is to carry out the legal problem of the NAACP in South Carolina."

The national board chairman Dr. Channing H. Tobias, speaking from the subject, "The World After," keynoted the convention Friday night.

J. E. Williams of Spartanburg presided at this session. Dr. W. H. Young of Anderson introduced Dr. Tobias. The Rev. W. Wilson of Spartanburg and Mr. Hinton were among others on the opening program.

—o O o—

THE APPROXIMATELY 200 delegates from 95 branches devoted most of Saturday to group discussions on implementing the May 17 ruling.

The Rev. E. E. Gaulden of Newberry presided over the organization meeting for the conference on which were the Rev. Bruce P. Williamson and Dr. H. C. Oglesby, both of Spartanburg.

The lawyers' conference, held in the offices of the N.C. Mutual Life Insurance Co. here, was headed by Mr. Marshall, who arrived Saturday morning from Lumberton, N.C., where despite dangers from Hurricane Hazel, he spoke to a capacity audience by candlelight. Attorney Culbertson served as consultant.

ADULT BRANCHES, with Mr Hinton presiding, conducted a panel discussion on segregation Speakers included Martin Tim in, a Mr. Tokenvetch and Dr Lewis K. McMillan of Orangeburg. Simultaneously, youth councils of the organization wer holding discussions.

Robert L. Carter of the national office addressed the combined sections just before dinner on implementation of the court's ruling in South Carolina schools.

Saturday afternoon, the Rev. J. A. DeLaine of Lake City presided during a panel on church help in implementing integration. Speakers included: the Rev. Maxie S. Gordon, pastor of First Calvary Baptist Church, Columbia and retired Benedict College professor, and Dr. J. E. Briggs, also Columbia. The pair substituted for the Rev. B. T. Sears of Spartanburg and the Rev. E. E. Richburg of Summerton.

—o O o—

MR. MARSHALL conducted a question-answer forum instead of making a formal address for which he was scheduled. Highlight of the forum was Marshall's declaration that colored teachers need have no fear of losing jobs under integration. "Statistics show that there is a shortage of colored teachers," he said.

At the youth session Saturday night, Herbert L. Wright, national youth secretary, was the speaker. Henry P. Hurchinson, state advisor of youth councils, presided.

A workshop was held in the Woodward Recreation Center Sunday morning; participants leading panels included: Mrs. Ruby Hurley, southeastern region secretary with offices in Birmingham, Ala., Matthew J. Perry and Herbert Hill, national labor relations assistant.

—o O o—

THE ANNUAL conference worship services were held in the host Thompson St. Church, the sermon being delivered by the branch president, the Rev. James M. Hinton. The final session was held in the Memorial Auditorium Sunday afternoon. with an estimated audience of 3,500 persons present.

Mr. Marshall as the principal speaker. Mr. Culbertson also addressed the group.

Greetings came from the Rev D. R. Bedenbaugh in behalf of local pastors; Mrs. Madge Perry Harper, in behalf of the Palmetto Education Association, and Mayor Neville Holcombe.

The Rev. Mr. Sears and the Rev. T. R. Frierson were also on the program, presided over by the Rev. Mr. Hinton.

—o O o—

MR. MARSHALL outlined the school fight and NAACP plans to carry it to completion. He made light of apposition contentions that integration will lead to violences in the South and is unworkable.

"They said the same thing when we fought for the right to vote in white primaries," he said. "They said it again when we were opening southern universities and colleges. But they were wrong then. They are wrong now."

A number of resolutions came out of the conference, all touching on phases of integration.

One called for a boycott of the new Sears and Roebuck store here which local NAACP leaders charged with hiring only five colored workers. The store's manager, however, reported 22 such persons employed, "on a basis of need and not race." The convention meets at Aiken in 1955.

—o O o—

MR. HINTON was re-elected president, along with the following other officers:

Robert A. Brooks, Aiken, and J. Arthur Brown, Charleston, vice presidents; Mrs. A. W. Simkins, Columbia, re-elected secretary; Mrs. H. E. Frederick, Orangeburg, re-elected assistant secretary; Levi G. Byrd, Cheraw, returned as treasurer; S. J. McDonald Sr., Sumter, chairman emeritus.

A. J. Clement Jr., Charleston, chairman board of directors; Dr. B. T. Williams of Sumter was re-elected defense fund treasurer, and Henry P. Hutchinson of Charleston, acting youth advisor. The Rev. A. C. Redd of Columbia was re-chosen executive secretary.

Bishop Reid Says Negroes Must Help Make Integration Work

CONWAY, S. C. — Before reading appointments at the Northeast conference, the second of the six annual conferences of the African Methodist Episcopal church to be held, Bishop Frank Madison Reid told 2,000 worshipers and ministers gathered in Bethel AME church at Conway to "Remember we have got a part to play in making integration work."

He said "we must live in better homes, make our communities more attractive and above all save some money so as to be assets economically to the South and our nation."

Although the seat of the annual conference sessions was almost in the path of Hurricane Hazel, an overflow attendance crowded the church and grounds to hear a powerful morning message delivered by Bishop Reid. The Rev. W. D. C. McClary, host pastor, was reappointed to Bethel A.M.E. church, the seat of the conference

Bishop Reid congratulated the conference and stated that all financial reports showed gains over last year.

Bishop Reid in his charge to his ministers before reading appointments said, "Remember we have got a part to play in making integration and Democracy work. We must live in better homes, make our communities more attractive, and above all save some money so as to be assets economically to the South and to our nation.

"Children are dependents upon parents, beggars are wards of society and never direct the policy or thinking of anything. But the way we live and conduct ourselves politically, economically, ... identified as men and women, Christian citizens of today and tomorrow."

Speaking about Communism, he declared that "Communism robs persons of their manhood, their faith in God and makes them wards of a materialist government, thus there can be doubt about our hatred as a race of people of any idea of Communism.

"We love America and every idea of her democracy, and predict that the day is not far off when to the four freedoms proclaimed by the late President Roosevelt, that is to the "Freedom of Speech, Freedom from Want, Freedom from Fear and Freedom of Religion" will be added Freedom in Education at which time our America will become a model for all peoples of the world."

Lawyers form group to chart school desegregation in S.C.

SPARTANBURG, S.C. — A legal committee to chart a course toward ending segregation in this state as formed here last week during the annual convention of the South Carolina Conference of NAACP Branches.

Organization of the committee was announced Saturday by Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP legal counsel, following a business session of the three - day convention, during which the Rev. James M. Hinton was re elected president.

Other officers elected were R. A. Brooks and J. Arthur Brown, vice presidents; Mrs A. W. Simpkins, secretary; Mrs W. E. Frederick, assistant; Lev G. Byrd, treasurer;

ARTHUR J. CLEMENT, elected chairman of the board to succeed S. J. McDonald Sr., named chairman - emeritus; Dr. B. T. Williams, defense fund treasurer, and H. P. Hutchinson, acting youth adviser.

Mr. Marshall said the lawyers held a closed session in an effort to decide what they could do to help in combating attempts of southern state officials to circumvent the Supreme Court decision against segregation.

They reached agreement on tactics, Mr. Marshall said, but added that the strategy for meeting these attempts to circumvent the ruling would not be revealed. They also are prepared to meet threats to abolish the public schools, he said.

— o O o —

THE NEW committee, headed by Harry R. Boulware, Columbia attorney, was formed as the result of a motion adopted by convention delegates.

A full division of workers also will be formed "to do nothing but protect colored teachers," Mr. Marshall said.

Answering a deluge of questions about the legal ramifications of segregation, Mr. Marshall emphasized that the Supreme Court's ruling that segregation is unconstitutional was in fact a decision binding upon all Federal courts.

"And everyone knows that there is no appeal from the Supreme Court," he added.

Asked about residential segregation, Mr. Marshall declared:

— o O o —

"YOU SHOULD live where you want to live. I object to the oft-repeated statement that we 'want to be with our own people.' We'll never break down segregation in any other form before we end residential segregation."

"What will happen to colored teachers if segregation is ended?" he was asked. He replied:

"How are you going to replace colored teachers?" adding that with the current terrific teacher shortage southern states will have no choice but to keep colored teachers on the payroll.

He had a word of assurance for colored parents, telling them that the Federal courts will continue to back them up if they want their children educated in schools right along with other children.

— o O o —

SCOFFING AT various pro and con surveys that have been made on desegregation, Mr. Marshall said survey staffs can "bring back any kind of answer you want" and laughed at assertions that the NAACP does not represent the people of this state.

"Over $50,000 has come from South Carolina to the NAACP" to aid in the people's fight against segregation, he asserted.

For "ethical reasons," he declined to answer a question about how long it will take for full desegregation to be effected, but declared that the NAACP is prepared under any and all circumstances to meet any and all attempts to circumvent the decision.

Obey High Court, Committee Urged

The American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 11-27-54

Speakers say plan flouts Constitution

By RUFUS WELLS

RICHMOND

...ing a legal way to do ar... – circumvent the ...n Court's anti - segrega... ...ing – the State Commis... ...Public Education held its ... hearing at the ... Monday before an un... ...ce of 2,000.

...heard scores ... what course ... take in the light ... school ruling. Some ... urged immediate ... to the ruling and ... defiance.

...members of the Virgin... ...ature advocated the ...

...of a triple school plan ... school for colored, one ... only, and a third sys... ...be operated on an inte... ...lines.

...were Senators Frank S. ... of Richmond, Robert ... of Lively and Delegate ... I. Allen Jr. of Rich...

...told the commission ... proposal would be an ex... ...ension of the States' ... dual system of educa... ...It added that the white ... "who generally pay most ... taxes anyway" would pre... ...this system to any other.

—o O o—

...ING FOR the Virginia ... League, M. Ralph Page, ... attorney, said "there ... honorable course Vir... ...can take – immediate and ... compliance "with the ... Court decision."

...that prompt desegre... ...would mean "we chil...

...dren of slavery are to be brought finally and completely into the nation."

Dr. Zebulon Vance Robertson representing the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, said his church wanted the State to avoid any action that would "circumvent" the high court ruling. He said enforced segregation is out of harmony with Christian principles.

—o O o—

W. J. STORY Jr., superintendent of schools in South Norfolk, asked for eight minutes speaking time and said the "large majority of citizens of both races in South Norfolk prefer segregated schools."

Story said that segregated schools could be maintained there "on a voluntary basis" if ... not for a small minority ... both races.

"This amalgamation or integration, or if I may say mongrelization of races is strongly opposed by the people of South Norfolk, a city of 25,000 persons."

—o O o—

A DUAL - SCHOOL system was recommended by State Senator Robert O. Norris, who described the high court school ruling as "so nebulous" that it is impossible to express a legal opinion concerning it.

He continued:

"I have always been a friend of the colored people. I want them to have every opportunity of economic advancement this country affords.

"I sincerely believe that segregation in the public schools where a large colored population resides, is in the best interest of both races.

"The court has not said that voluntary segregation is unlawful. It might be necessary to establish mixed schools only where there is a demand for them. Also a school for whites and one for colored."

Sen. Norris said he believed that few children of either race would attend the integrated school. He advocated an annual census of children to determine the school they preferred, and that the school boards provide for three schools "wherever there is a demand."

"If these principles are carried out, it cannot be said that Virginia has defied the Supreme Court of the United States," he concluded.

Following Sen. Norris was the Rev. W. L. Ransome, who spoke on behalf of the Order of the Eastern Star, the Richmond Civic Council and First Baptist Church, of which he is pastor.

He said:

"It seems to me the State should change its attitude. We can arrive at no intelligent solution to a problem unless we approach it with the proper attitude. Our State officials have vowed to seek means to circumvent and nullify the law, rather than means of complying with it.

"The State should set the example for its citizens. Not all citizens favor circumventing the law. It is not a question of how many want segregation. It doesn't matter how many persons sign petitions favoring segregation.

"Our first step should be to adopt the right attitude. It is hard to do anything you've already decided you don't want to do. Let's obey the decision — for 57 years the colored citizens obeyed the separate but equal decision, until they could change it. Let the State obey this decision.

"Let children go to the nearest school.

"We should stop labeling schools for colored or for white. We should observe the results of integration in border and southern states, in Maryland, the District of Columbia and in Kansas. We should appoint teachers on the basis of merit wherever they are needed."

"Let us integrate. The State may build levees to hold back the tide of progress, but they will not hold. They may delay it but the longer the delay the greater the devastation."

—o O o—

THE NEXT speaker, Amos C. Clark, field secretary for the Richmond Civic Council, pointed out that the commission was appointed for the purpose of circumventing the decision.

"Therefore you obviously have closed minds, and I cannot speak to your minds, but I appeal to your open hearts. The ages will wipe out any puny efforts of man to subjugate his brother. Children of neither race are born with racial prejudices, so the first grade should be the best place to start integration of pupils.

—o O o—

R. H. PETTIS, speaking for certain residents of Charlotte County, said his people were "bitterly opposed to integration and could not conceive of mixed schools. If it is thrust upon them they will not tolerate it. I would mean he end of the public school system."

Pettis pointed out that the county population is about half white and half colored, and that schools have been just about equalized.

"If there is any deficiency," he added, it can be attributed to the efficiency of the white Parent Teachers Association as against the colored Parent Teachers Association."

Pettis expressed the opinion that "even Russia" could not force mixing of schools in Charlotte County. "The people will not permit it," he concluded.

John C. Parker, of Franklin, speaking for "battalions of citizens" in South Hampton, Isle of Wright and Nansemond counties, said there was a "strong wind of public opinion" against integrated schools in these areas.

"We shall not condone any methods of violence, but we want the question met, and met with firmness."

Parker termed as "insidious" the argument that the question of mixed schools should be left with the children, and added:

"It is not for children to decide. They (the children) need the best advice of adults. You might carry the argument further by saying that we leave the schools to children and there wouldn't be any schools at all."

—o O o—

MRS. SARA Pateon Boyle, of Charlottesville, representing the Council for Social Action, said that advocates of racial integration in Virginia actually outnumber those supporting segregation but usually are silent about their feelings.

She continued:

"Change is something we often need but seldom ask for."

Speaking for the NAACP, Oliver W. Hill, attorney, said in part:

"We urge you to recommend to the Governor and the State and Division Boards of Education and to the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia, the acceptance of the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court and to cooperate in good faith in a program for immediate desegregation of the public schools of this Commonwealth.

'Maybe There'll Be a Few House Burnings, Even A Beating or Two,' But Integration Is Assured

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

COLUMBIA, S. C.—When South Carolina is carried across the threshold of integration, she'll be kicking, fighting, snorting fire and yelping an assortment of rebel yells, but she will go, white and Negro leaders told the Courier recently.

Many old line residents of this state believe that segregation's last stand will be fought right here, probably near the century-old scene of the first attack against the Union.

White and Negro leaders from South Carolina's mountains to the sea admitted to the Courier in a state-wide sample of opinion that nothing can stop integration from eventually becoming a reality in this state. The big difference of opinion is when.

A hard core of articulate and determined Negroes, led by the NAACP, have galvanized their forces for a winner-take-all battle to achieve an early and speedy implimentation of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision, while whites are burning the midnight oil to abort, delay and limit the application of the decision.

Aside from some spectacular pre-fight shadow boxing, events here are much in a state of suspended animation. However, recent weeks have witnessed significant developments which point to some definite conclusions:

(1) The old South's paragon and spokesman, Gov. James F. Byrnes, has apparently abandoned his idea of scuttling the public schools of S. C. to preserve segregation;

(2) School officials will rely on "voluntary segregation" in most areas which they hope to "encourage" by ruthless economic pressures and programs of intimidation;

(3) Their big hope is riding on a $200,000,000 consolidation program which Negroes are already calling "too little and about twenty-five years too late."

In Manning, S. C., a sleepy little town in Clarendon County, we visited William Parker, the principal of the new high school. He was cordial but obviously not overjoyed over our visit. He answered routine questions about the cost and size of the buildings, number of teachers, etc., but he was non-committal on the question of integration except to say that some of the students "don't think too seriously about it (integration), some don't believe it will come, some say they are ready for it now and some say they don't want it."

One of the teachers told us that the "teachers here are ready mentally for integration, but they do not want to rush into it because they are not financially ready to take consequences, if any." She explained that most of the teachers are in debt either paying for clothes, a car or a house.

* * *

IN CLARENDON County the Negroes comprise approximately 75 per cent of the population and the whites have or control 90 per cent of the wealth.

The teachers claim that the banks and other agencies have already started a subtle campaign of intimidation. Business firms are threatening seizure and foreclosure practically on the day payments are due, they say.

South Carolina has a notorious record of atrocities designed to "keep Negroes in their place," and though these incidents have decreased measurably since World War II, there is a feeling in some quarters that insistence to integrate the schools might result in a recurrance of racial violence.

* * *

BILLY FLEMING, co-owner of a chain of funeral establishments in the county and non-compromising NAACP leader, said, "I do not expect any violence and if Jimmy Byrnes would keep his mouth shut we wouldn't have any trouble integrating the schools."

Most of the Negroes in South Carolina's black belt do see violence, but regard it as the price that must be paid for first-class citizenship.

In Springtown, S. C., a leader who asked that his name be withheld, said "I don't expect too much violence, but a few house burnings and a beating or two."

Sam Williams, a farmer in Smoakes, S. C., was asked if there was much interest among the tenant farmers and those who rent farms. We explained that apprehension had been expressed about the position that these people would take because of the precarious relationship they had with white land owners. His succinct reply was, "when you're down, son, you can't fall."

Farmer Timothy Stephens said: "There was a time when we were just like rabbits, all they (whites) had to do was rustle the bushes and we'd take off." He admitted that "there are still a few of them around, but not as many as there used to be."

* * *

AT THE LIBERTY Hill AME Church in Summerton, birthplace of the Clarendon case, the Rev. E. E. Richburg denied that the case was NAACP inspired. He pointed out that originally the case was instituted as a transportation suit to get buses and the NAACP was not interested.

NAACP help was sought and gotten when "we asked for equal facilities."

Out of this action grew the Clarendon case. The Rev. Mr. Richburg told the Courier that Negroes in Clarendon County are determined with a single-minded devotion to have integrated schools and will not be satisfied with anything less than complete integration.

Perhaps the most significant change that the Negro has undergone in the South in recent years is the fact that he no longer looks with suspicion toward educated Negroes. Mr. Richburg explains it this way. He said, "Negroes have been victims of such much political hocus-pocus, economic slight-of-hand and abuse, that they have been forced to depend on their own leadership."

* * *

FLEMING STATED that white farmers have told their tenants not to patronize his funeral homes. He said further that the state highway patrol does not call him in case of highway fatalities and the local police use his competitor for murder cases. "Fighting for one's own race is damn good business, I have found," Fleming said.

The second most significant racial development in this state is the interest in civil rights in general and integration in particular shown by the clergy. Much of the interest can be traced directly to Bishop Frank Madison Reid, AME prelate in South Carolina.

He has instructed the pastors under his direction that it is their duty to fight for full rights for all people. Last year he revoked the assignment of a minister who expressed the belief that segregation was the best thing for the Negro.

It was Bishop Reid to whom Governor Byrnes made the offer to "sell" the Negro public schools of the state in the event the Legislature voted to operate "private schools."

* * *

THE GENERAL feeling today throughout the state is that if Byrnes and the Legislature could close the Negro schools and continue to operate the white schools, that he probably would try it and that he might get much support, but that whites do not want their schools tampered with.

The best indication to date that Byrnes is ready to soft pedal previous threats to abolish public schools was revealed in a published report in the influential Columbia daily, the State. Speaking about the 3 per cent sales tax and the school bond program, Byrnes said, "My hope was, the only hope I saw, that by giving equal facilities we could stave it (non-segregation) off for five or ten years."

Byrnes Is 'Dead'—Friends of Greenville, S. C., lawyer John Bolt Culbertson, top photo, say he's losing his mind, because he defies threats to him and his family by speaking out against segregation. Byrnes and Talmadge "are 'dead' and don't know it." Bottom photo: Courier News Editor Robert Ratcliffe questions a housewife on integration on Charleston's (S. C.) famous Battery.—Rivera Photos.

A school official in Orangeburg told us that Byrnes told him he did not mind Negroes going to Clemson, the state's all-male college, but that he did not think that they should be admitted to the co-educational University of South Carolina.

* * *

IN ORANGEBURG, J. J. Seabrook, president of Claflin College, told the Courier that private colleges in the state provided for 66 per cent of educational facilities. An official at South Carolina State College admitted that some 300 applications from high school graduates had to be turned down because of lack of dormitory and classroom space.

This situation is generally blamed on the fact that the graduate school and the school of law require space and teachers all out of proportion to the demand.

A full faculty is maintained to teach six law school students who are divided between two classes.

South Carolina's last hope to render inoperative the court's anti-bias decree is seen in the feverish fight to build as many schools for Negroes as they possibly can before the order is handed down.

H. P. Bomar, director of finance for the State Board of Education, and V. L. Cannon, assistant state agent of Negro schools, told the Courier in an interview, that even with integration they could see 90 per cent of the school children accepting voluntary segregation.

* * *

THEY BASED this belief on the fact that the state's mammoth consolidation program will give Negroes new schools in practically all of the newly created 103 school districts.

Before the Clarendon case was was brought before the court, South Carolina had between twelve and thirteen hundred school districts with hundreds of one and two-teacher schools.

Negro school officials contend that though consolidation is the answer to some problems, it also creates new ones. They also charge that teachers are being dropped in the shift and blamed on consolidation when the real reason is that the new schools are not being built large enough.

The Sanders Elementary School in Laurens is a good example in point. Here a twenty-teacher school was built to accommodate 1,059 students. Though the school enrollment is expected to rise, nothing can be done to relieve the already overcrowded condition.

* * *

CANNON AND Bomar asserted that the state has spent over $10,000,000 in the purchase of school buses and that about 10 per cent of this fund went to Negroes.

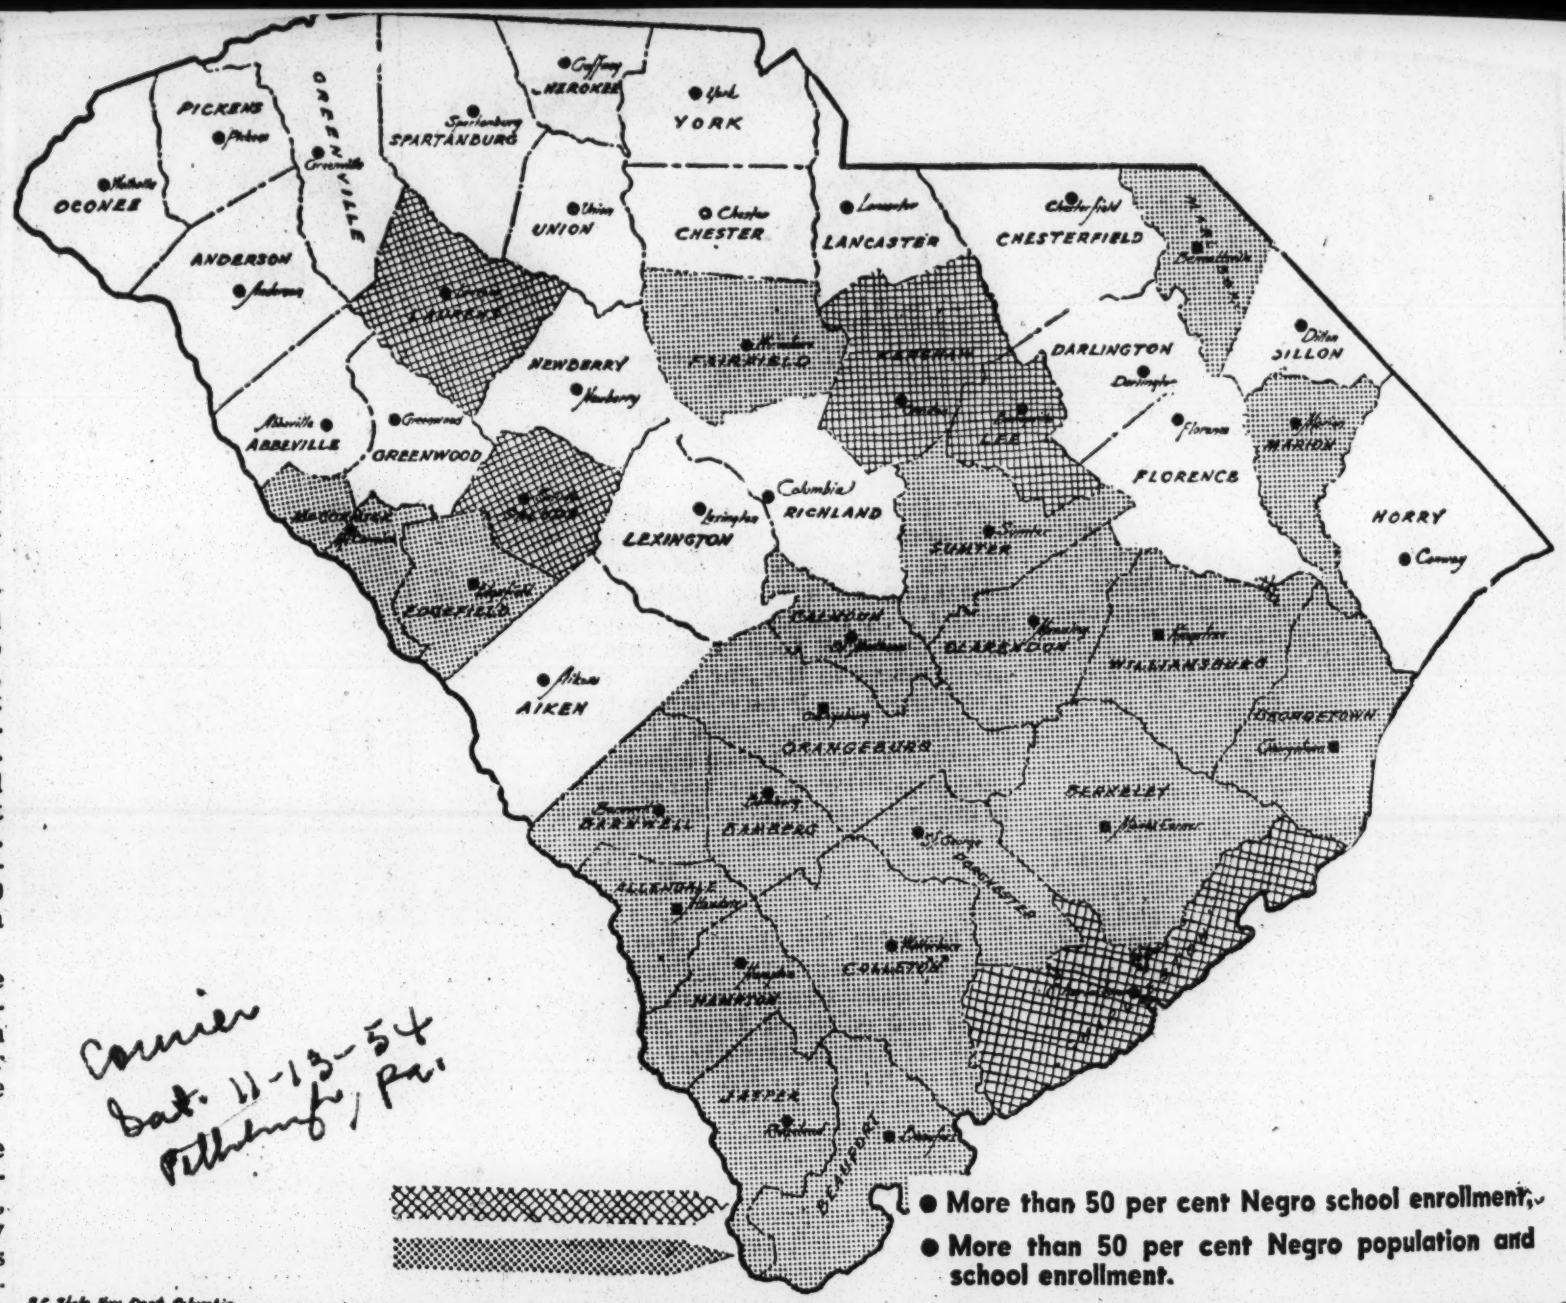
They also allege that 67 per cent of the $200,000,000 would go to the construction of Negro schools. Negro school officials, on the other hand, say that when the state earmarks $400,000 for a Negro school and $150,000 for the whites it looks good for the record, but they insist that this is not the whole story. They contend that the local officials float a bond for $900,000 and the whites end up with a million-dollar structure.

E. R. Crow, director of the State Educational Finance Commission, estimated that within two years the facilities for white and Negro children in the state will be equal.

What influence this will have on defeating integration is unknown but one thing is certain, South Carolina will probably have more new school buildings than any state in the union. Bomar said "If we here in the State Department attended all of the dedications of new buildings we'd be on the road continually."

The real question here is apparently "immediacy vs. gradualism." The white are fearful that the Supreme Court will demand a schedule of compliance that will not have a face-saving cushion for their sensitive Southern pride.

Negroes, on the other hand, fear that the court will allow the South to spin around in a special orbit of do-nothing for many years to come.



Courier
Dat. 11-13-54
Pittsburgh, Pa.

● More than 50 per cent Negro school enrollment.

● More than 50 per cent Negro population and school enrollment.

Reason for Fear—This tells better than words why the white man in South Carolina is so fearful of the Negro. Out of forty-six counties the white is the dominant race, population wise, in only twenty-one counties.

EDUCATION 1954

STUDENTS OBSERVE INTEGREATION AT NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y.

At New Rochelle High

Herald Tribune

School Invites Students North To See Integration at Work

Oct. 10-12-54

Special to the Herald Tribune

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 11.—New Rochelle High School has invited four high schools where strikes and other demonstrations have broken out over the segregation issue to send student representatives to come and see how white and Negro youngsters get along in an integrated school.

New York City

The invitations addressed to the principals of the four schools where attempts to carry out the United States Supreme Court decision ending segregation have caused trouble were offered in two letters. One was signed by Robinson Brown, president of the General Organization, or student council, and Robert L. Forbes, faculty adviser, and a covering letter was sent out by Willis Thomson, principal of New Rochelle High School.

Week's Visit Offered

Each principal was urged to make arrangements to send four students from his school to New Rochelle for a full week's visit with all expenses paid by students and parents in New Rochelle.

p. 9

One school asked to participate was the Milford (Del.) High School, where threats of violence and strong opposition to integration of eleven Negro pupils forced the election of a new school board which ordered the Negroes back to an all-Negro school in Dover.

The other schools invited were Southern High School, in Baltimore, where 2,000 white teenagers "stormed" City Hall to protest racial integration, and Anacostia and Eastern High Schools, in Washington, where strikes and demonstrations were a blow to hopes of carrying out President Eisenhower's wish that the District of Columbia set a pattern for other cities in carrying out the Supreme Coutr ruling.

Have Held Office

There are 1,600 students in New Rochelle High School, and Mr. Thomson estimated that 25 per cent of these are Negroes, who, as far as any one can remember, have always been welcome in the public schools here. The Negro teen-agers take part in the athletic and social programs, and have been elected to various student offices. Mr Thomson recalled that one recent student, Jesse Arnelle, now a basketball star at Pennsylvania State College, was president of the General Organization at New Rochelle High in 1950.

To illustrate the enthusiasm the people of New Rochelle have shown fo the project, Mr. Thomso nsaid that sixty-five families who have children in the high school have already volunteered to tak the visiting students into their homes for a week.

Dixie Student Views Mixed in New Rochelle

World-Telegram & Sun

New York City

Visitors Get Primer In Race Relations

By CAROL TAYLOR,
Staff Writer.

NEW ROCHELLE, Oct. 18.—Ten students from southern high schools here for an informal primer in race relations at New Rochelle High School expressed mixed views on integration today.

"It's more or less getting used to the idea," said Wayne H. Wolford, 18, from Southern High School in Baltimore. "You just don't think anything of it here."

Mon. 10-18-54

But Robert Hunt, 17, of Eastern High School in Washington wasn't so sure.

p. 3

"They seem to be putting the full burden of making it work on the white people," he said.

Begin Week-Long Study.

The boys are members of a contingent of 10 students from schools that had a rocky time of integration. At the invitation of students and faculty here, they began a week-long study of New Rochelle High School which has a 25 percent Negro enrollment.

Carol Peters, 18, from Baltimore, was plainly impressed by what she saw this morning.

"I watched a Negro girl in an English class," she reported. "She was plainly accepted and liked. She joined in the discussions and talked very freely."

The girls were especially interested in how local students handled the subject of socializing. They questioned New Rochelle girls closely on how integration worked in dramatics and dance classes.

Invited by Principal.

Another Washington boy, Jack Linden, 17, from Anacostia High School, felt desegregation shouldn't have been "jumped right in on us. I think our superintendent of schools wanted to set an example and it just didn't work out to his hopes."

Invited by Willis Thomson, principal at New Rochelle, the Baltimore students arrived yesterday and the Washington group today. They were met by Mr. and Mrs. Thomson and Robert Forbes, human relations and history teacher who conceived the idea of inviting the southerners to stay with local families while they inspected the school.

Professional Racial Agitators Blamed for School Row

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. —(AP)— Four Baltimore high school students, here to see how White and Negroes get along in a northern school, Monday said professional agitators had fomented trouble on their own campus.

Meanwhile, six other White boys and girls flew up Monday from desegregation troubled Washington, D.C., schools to join them at New Rochelle High. All were invited by local pupils.

The Baltimore quartet arrived Sunday from Southern High School.

"I've come up here just to look and listen and make up my own mind," said Robert E. Rodgers, a 23-year-old Korean war veteran.

Monday the Baltimore student said of the demonstrations at his school:

"I have seen such agitation in Japan but I never believed it could happen in America."

The Southern High episodes were "too well-organized" and "planned for mass confusion," Rodgers declared, to have been staged by students.

Terming the demonstrations "definitely subversive," he said Polytechnic High in Baltimore has had Negro students for a year without any trouble, and that Southern High, with only 36 Negroes in a 1,700 enrollment, went along quietly for a month.

He said women passed out printed cards to his fellow students urging them to "stay on strike."

Carole Peters, 16; Betty Manalansan, 18, and Wayne Woolford, 17, spoke of "false rumors" and "vicious lies" that spread fear and uncertainty among the student body and parents.

They said there were stories of fatal stabbings, of an attack by a Negro boy on White girls and that the school itself had burned down.

All turned out to be untrue, they said.

The Washington students are Richard Caulk, and Alan Gross, of McKinley High; Betty Harris and Jack Linden, of Anacostia, and Ann Hooten and Robert Hunt, of Eastern.

RACE CRITICS LOSE AT NEW ROCHELLE

Visiting Pupils From Cities to South Hail Integration

Seen in Action at School

LETTERS CONTRADICTED

Experience of Harmony and Fairness Being Taken Home to Washington, Baltimore

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 21—Vitriolic words from states south of here were flung today at the Washington and Baltimore high school pupils who have been learning how 1,200 white children work and play with 400 Negroes at New Rochelle High School.

Undismayed by a dozen critical letters, the youthful white visitors hailed the integration as a success they would try ot duplicate in their own schools. Some confided that they had learned to look for the color of a football player's uniform instead of his skin.

Fifty educators and civic leaders sent letters commending the week's study. So did Rochester (Eddie Anderson), the Negro actor.

The six visitors from three Washington high schools went home by plane today because of urgent examinations and football games. Willis Thomson, principal of New Rochelle High School, said the four from a Baltimore school would depart by train this week-end at an hour kept secret to avoid home-city demonstrations by segregation fanatics.

Answers to Carping

Some letter writers said the visitors and New Rochelle had no conception of the "real Negro problem." Mr. Thomson was called a "half-and-half principal" who thinks he "knows better than God."

"Why don't you read the ninth chapter of Genesis and learn that God separated the races?" one writer asked Mr. Thomson. "Sure you can break down the inhibitions of people by gradually exposing them to sin—getting them used to it. If you had any moral stamina you would refuse to head a group that mixes blacks and whites."

The departing Washington pupils felt differently.

"If there was ever the slightest doubt within me that integration would work, it has been completely dissolved here," Ann Hooton said. "I hope I will be able to convey to the students at home the ideas I have gathered and help them to understand that integration is not just 'a problem' but a moral, Christian and democratic advancement."

Betty A. Harris said she had "learned to be more lenient with the Negro race." Robert Hunt said the experience was "beyond greatest expectations" and Richard Caulke thanked all races for a glimpse of "unrehearsed work and play."

Reminder of an Advantage

"Your school has been integrated for many years and the kids of each race have grown up together," Jack Linden said. "You probably never knew of the word integration prior to the rebellion in Delaware. I truly don't believe that your school was the best example of integration in that respect, but I admire you greatly."

Allan Gross, son of an Iowa Representative in Washington, said: "The thing that impressed me most was that any student, Negro or white, would stand up at any time and speak his mind openly without fear of discrimination or violence."

The visitors attended school classes, observed two Negro teachers at work, saw meetings of the interracial Phi Sigma Beta fraternity, watched football scrimmages, had "cokes" at a students' rendezvous and toured factories and department stores that have Negro and white persons working side by side.

Mr. Thomson reported that four New Rochelle pupils would accept an invitation to visit Baltimore schools.

Baltimore and Washington Students Observe Integration at New Rochell

Visitors from Washington chat with Ralph Humphrey, a member of varsity football team. Left to right: Betty Harris, Anacostia High; Richard Caulk, McKinley High; Ann Hooten and Bob Hunt, Eastern High, and Jack Linden, Anacostia.

Invitation Accepted

Southern Students Go To See Integration At Work

By WILLIAM S. RUKEYSER

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y. — (INS) — Students from for desegregation-torn southern high schools arrived in New Rochelle Sunday for a week-long, expense free view of racial harmony at New Rochell high school

The Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., students will be guests of their northern school fellows who made voluntary contributions to finance the tour in the hope of lessening racial tension.

ABOUT 25 PERCENT of the New Rochelle high school's enrollment is made up of Negroes who have been welcome at all school activities as long as anyone can remember.

Robinson Brown, 17, president of the N. R. H. S. General organization said: "We hope to bring these students up here not to propagandize New Rochelle high school but simply to show them how we live and play together."

NEW ROCHELLE Mayor Stanley W. Church commented: "I think it's a wonderful thing. It will show these southern students how people of all races can work well together. We live our lives here and just don't think about prejudice."

Other observers regarding this gesture as of historic national importance, pointed out that this action by the New Rochelle high school students, in response to desegregation riots in Washington, Baltimore and Milford, Del., constituted evidence of the workings of the American system based on individual initiative.

THEY EMPHASIZED that the offering of New Rochelle hospitality was a self-help move, which preceded governmental action. This invitation, it was stressed, was extended prior to action by the U. S. Supreme Court in announcing detailed procedures for integrating white and Negro students in southern schools.

Sixty-five families have opened their homes to the invited guests, though only ten students have thus far accepted.

THE STUDENTS are representatives from Anacostia, Eastern and Southern high schools in Washington and Southern high school in Baltimore. Milford high school also was invited to send delegates, but Milford superintendent of schools Ramon Cobb declined, saying: "Our problem in this school was not caused by the students in any way."

He blamed parents for the demonstrations at the high school which forced the election of a new school board which ordered the school's 11 Negro students back to a segregated school.

* * *

THE FOUR schools which accepted the invitations also were the scene of student riots against integration.

The four students from the Baltimore school, who arrived Sunday afternoon, are Betty Manalansan, Carole Peters, Robert E. Rogers and Wayne H. Woolford. The Washington schools will send two students each.

* * *

THE VISITORS will attend classes at N. R. H. S. for a week and will tour New York City.

The idea for the project was originated by the N. R. H. S. human relations club and was approved by the student body at a mass assembly. Letters of invitation to each of the five schools were sent by Robert Forbes, faculty adviser to the club. Willis I. Thomson, N. R. H. S. principal, contacted each of the principals.

Principal John H. Schwatka of Southern high school in Baltimore, in a confirmatory telephone call to Mr. Thomson, asked that the New Rochelle school reciprocate by sending a group of students to Baltimore. Mr. Thompson agreed but no date was set for the exchange visit.

PUPILS FROM SOUTH PIN BIAS ON ADULTS

Ten Youths Tell of 'Agitators' in Baltimore and Washington on Arrival at New Rochelle

WILL STUDY INTEGRATION

Visitors Are Here to Examine Northern School's Methods and Carry Findings Home

By MERRILL FOLSOM

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 18—Recent demonstrations against integration of Negro and white children in the public schools of Washington and Baltimore were attributed to adult "ruffians" and "agitators" today by pupils from those schools.

Ten white boys and girls from high schools of those cities arrived to examine the integration of 1,200 white children and 400 Negroes in New Rochelle High School. They will carry back the "success story" of this prosperous Northern city of 70,000.

The visitors are guests of the local pupils, who contributed $300 travel funds and are providing overnight lodgings and meals in homes.

"Don't blame the pupils for demonstrations against nonsegregation," Robert E. Rodgers, 23-year-old Korean War veteran and a student at Southern High School of Baltimore, told New Rochelle Principal Willis Thomson.

"A few parents started agitating, so pupils stayed away from school. It was as simple as shooting off a gun to start a herd of cattle running."

Other visitors from the South told of being called "chicken" and threatened by adults and by anonymous telephone callers if they "dared go to school the next day" with Negroes.

They related that Southern High School has 1,700 pupils, thirty-four of them Negro, and only 150 children went to school one day.

'Overnight' Attempt Criticized

Of the Washington schools represented today, McKinley visitors said demonstrations there had been because 450 Negroes were among the 1,100 pupils, Anacostia visitors because seventy-five Negroes were among 1,300 pupils and Eastern visitors because 900 Negroes were among the 1,900 pupils.

Some visitors said the integration should not have been attempted overnight but instead over the years, as New Rochelle has done. But, they explained, outmoded Negro school buildings had to be abandoned at once or be rebuilt.

Betty Harris, 18, of Anacostia, said she could understand how Negroes played football, went to classes and shared the lunchroom here with white students, but she wondered how they fared at school dances.

Robert L. Forbes, human relations teacher, said Negro and white students did not dance together, although they attended the same parties and collaborated in managing clubs and the interracial Phi Sigma Beta fraternity. He said two Negroes had been president of the General Organization.

One visitor said the Negro maid in his Washington home had children in school and was perfectly happy with the old segregation, and another remarked that nonsegregation made Negroes boisterous and act superior.

"It's just a normal compensating mechanism," Mr. Thomson advised. "We find that our noisiest pupils, white or colored, are just giving vent to inferiority complexes."

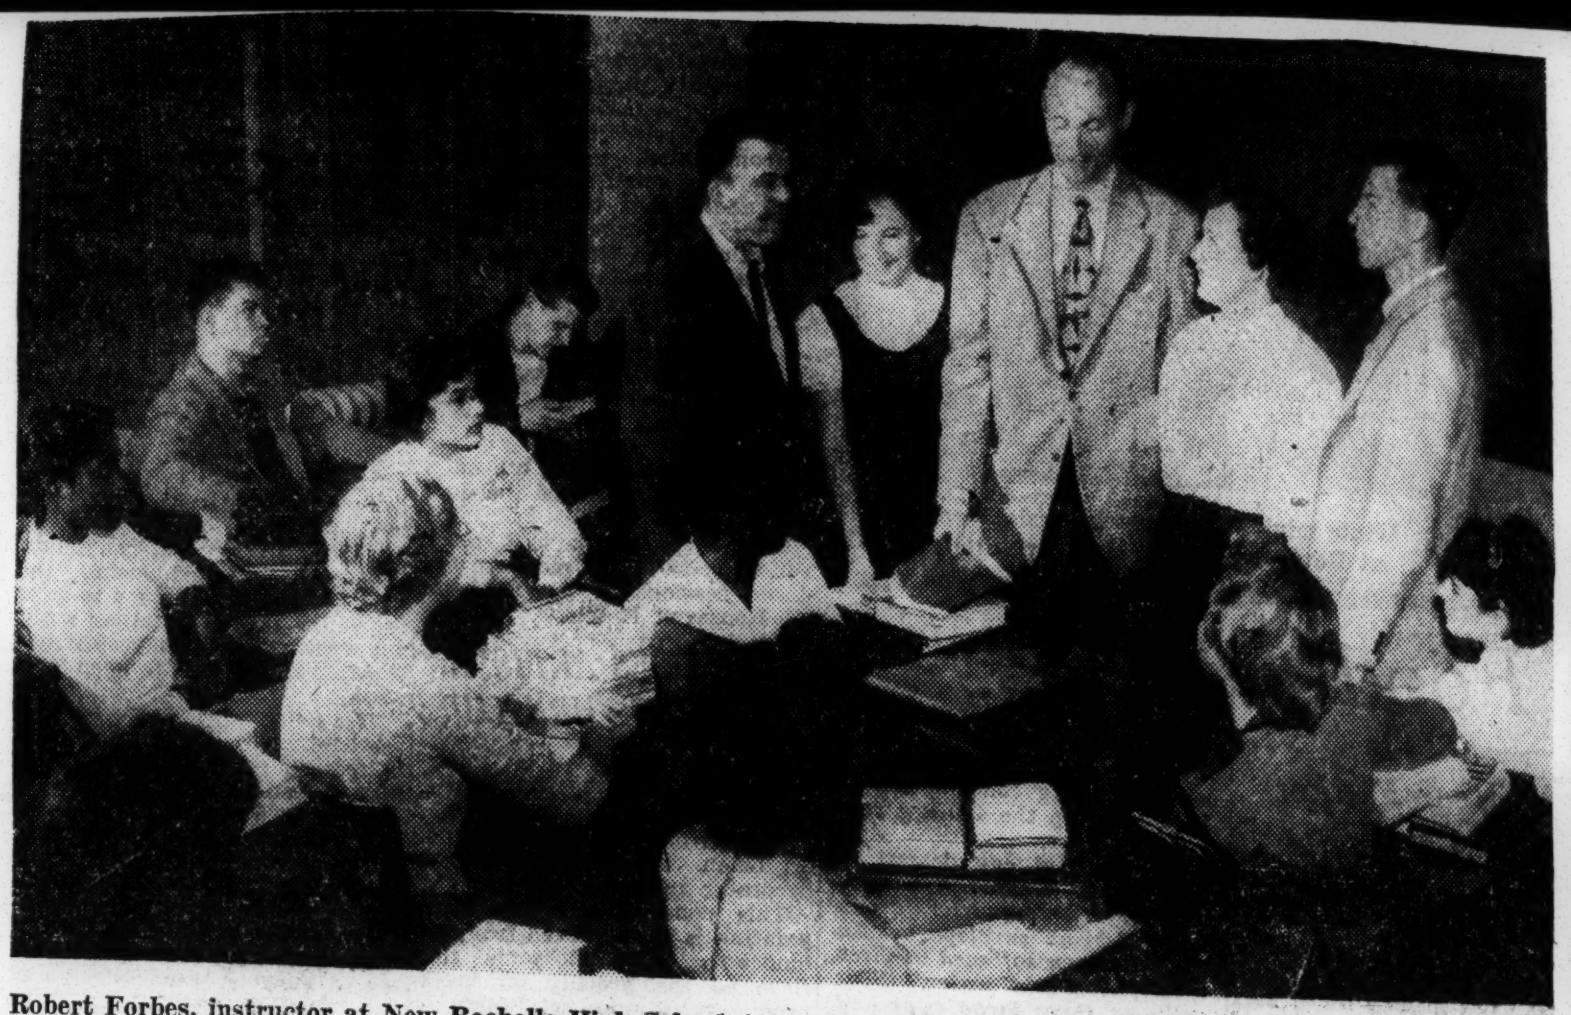
Guests at New Rochelle Home

Mr. Rodgers is the guest of Larry Blau of 50 Elk Avenue, whose father is a certified public accountant. The home, like most used for the guests, is a modern, spacious place. All are homes of white pupils.

Carole Peters, 16, of Baltimore, will stay with Marlene von Voitlander at Fort Slocum, where Marlene's father is an Army officer. Miss Peters, daughter of a confectionery store proprietor, was born in Tennessee and said that since infancy her parents had told her "we're all born equal, no matter what the color."

Other visiting students are Wayne H. Woolford, 17, and Betty Manalansan, 18, both of Baltimore, and Ann Hooten, 17; Richard Caulke, 17; Jack Linden, 17; Allan Gross, 17, and Robert Hunt, 17, all of Washington. The Gross boy is a son of Representative H. R. Gross of Iowa. All were chosen by faculty and student groups.

Newsreel and press photographers took most of the visitors 'time today. The guests attended a forum in New York tonight, and tomorrow they will attend classes here, have lunch in the board room of a bank, visit a factory and department store, have "cokes" at a students' rendezvous and visit Tom Paine's old home.



Robert Forbes, instructor at New Rochelle High School, intr oduces four students from Southern High School, Baltimore to his class. Left to right: Robert Rodgers, 23; Betty Hanalansan, 18; Mr. Forbes; Carol Peters, 16; Wayne Woolford, 17

The New York Time

The Wednesday program includes a tour of the United Nations headquarters, a meeting with Dr. Ralph Bunche, a trip up the Empire State Building, boat travel around Manhattan Island, a show on Broadway, visits to museums and a visit to Hayden Planetarium. After more visits to classes, the Washington students intend to return home Thursday because of examinations and football games, but the Baltimore visitors may stay through the week.

"Don't expect to find our school perfect," Mr. Thompson cautioned. "If you go away feeling it is the worst school you ever say, it would be preferable to having propaganda shoved upon you."

New journal based upon the segregation story

— O —

NASHVILLE, (Tenn.) — The first issue of "Southern School ... a monthly newspaper devoted exclusively to the segregation story, was published here today.

The publication appeared in ... as a 16-page tabloid ... the eve of a new school term ... the southern and border states ... the changing pattern of segregation has been left in an uncertain state by the May 17 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court declaring segregation unconstitutional.

"Southern School News" is published by the Southern Education Reporting Service, a non-profit agency established by a group of southern newspaper editors and educators headed by Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

— O —

THE PROJECT is financed by a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education, an independent agency established by the Ford Foundation. The newspaper was written by SERS correspondents in 17 states and the District of Columbia, all of them working newspapermen and women.

The reports revealed only one move toward desegregation in the area normally considered as the South — at Fayetteville, Ark., where nine colored high school pupils are scheduled to be absorbed into a white school.

But they detailed many steps to comply with the Supreme Court opinion in the border states of Missouri, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and in the District of Columbia.

"Cannot Justify Segregation By Religion," Says Rev. Hobart

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (SNS) — The Alfred W. Hobart, pastor, Unitarian Church of Birmingham, Alabama, in Mountain Brook, recently delivered a powerful sermon in which he warned his hearers that there is no religious ground for justifying segregation.

"Segregation cannot be supported on religious grounds. It cannot be justified by any teachings of Jesus, or any of those who were near Him," the pastor said.

He warned his hearers that if they support segregation they should admit frankly that it is because they dislike Negroes and want to keep them separate, and then square this with the love and universality of the religion of Jesus if we can.

Rev. Hobart used the parable of the Good Samaritan to illustrate his point by showing how a foreigner, a member of a despised group, was put in the hero's role and the unheroic figures were respectable Jewish types.

P-TA ACTION URGED ON SCHOOL PROBLEMS

National Consultant Speaks At West Memphis Meeting

Special to The Commercial Appeal

WEST MEMPHIS, Oct. 20.— Miss Dema Kennedy of Chicago, consultant of the National Congress of Parent and Teachers Associations, told a group of East Arkansas P-TA leaders here Wednesday that P-TA can identify the needs and suply the leadership of our present schools.

Speaking at a District Five conference of Arkansas Congress of P-TA at the West Memphis primary school, Miss Kennedy said," Current problems are too acute to waste time with rumor sales and other activities when legislation should provide funds for our schools.

"The country is looking to P-TA for leadership on its many problems of crowded class rooms, increased teachers salaries and outdated facilities. There is a growing realization that P-TA is an adult educational movement that provides an opportunity for parents teachers and other community leaders to study the needs of our children.

"P-TA groups can identify the needs which may be inadequate recreation, clearing up unwholesome movies, comic books, radio and television shows or any other immediate needs. These situations may be analiyzed to find what can be done and who is responsible.

"The P-TA has the greatest opportunity and responsibility for serving the children and youth it has ever had and now is the time to do something about it."

About 100 P-TA leaders from schools in Crittenden, Cross, Poinset and Mississipi counties attended the conference.

Mrs. J. R. Sink of Newport, president of the Arkansas Congress of P-TA, pointed out the highlights of state plans to the group and Mrs. J. W. Miller of Joiner, district director, presided at a business session.

Texas Governor Declares Dixie Through Crawling

Advertiser p-1

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 5 (AP) — Texas Gov. Allan Shivers said tonight that for "the last time" the big national political parties have made the South crawl in humiliating submission.

He called on the 17 states to join in a battle for state's rights, "the last great safeguard of our personal liberty."

The 47-year-old Texas governor, one of the leaders in the Southern revolt against Adlai Stevenson in 1952, said the South had been too long ignored by one great party and too quickly forgotten by the other.

His challenge came in a speech prepared for delivery at a testimonial dinner honoring Gov. Robert Kennon of Louisiana. Kennon was another Southern Democratic governor who supported Republican Dwight D. Eisenhower for the presidency.

Shivers recently won renomination as governor on a platform calling for a new crusade by the South and Southwest to win party recognition at the 1956 Democratic National Convention. In his speech tonight he spared neither party in his sharp criticisms.

Shivers said both parties have followed the "divisive practices" of emphasizing class, color and creed in all their decisions.

"The evils of which we speak are present in both of the major national political parties," Shivers said. "The South has been too long ignored by one, too quickly forgotten by the other. In both parties the habit is to ask the people of the South and West to underwrite any program which, in the final analysis, is almost wholly controlled by the interests of a narrow geographic area in the North and East."

Shivers said he has no desire to abandon the two-party system but wants to work through the existing parties "to bring to an end the present cynical and self-serving exploitation of class, color and sectional interests which characterize both parties.

For too long and the "last time," Shivers said, the legally-chosen officials of the Southern states "have been forced to crawl in humiliating submission before the national conventions.

"The South henceforward is unlikely to commit its support without demanding the full measure of recognition and participation to which it is entitled," Shivers said.

At the recent state convention in Texas, Shivers called on the South and Southwest to team up and pool their strength to match the North-East bloc in national party affairs. He widened this appeal in his speech here, saying the same threats to basic rights apply to citizens in all the states.

Shivers added:

"The effort to impose central government control over free elections gained momentum through the effort to make the right to work a privilege conferred by the central government was concealed in the measure to establish federal power over employment practices. The effort to make central government's power superior to the rights of private ownership of property was expressed in the seizure, without compensation, of the submerged lands of Texas and Louisiana.

"Even today, a major effort is being made to establish the basis for federal control of the producing economy by usurping control over the energy resources, and in this effort the oil and gas resources of the Southwest are the prime target for federalization."

ANOTHER SCHOOL ADMITS NEGROES

MIDLAND, Texas — Following the policy of Dallas Catholic schools, St. Ann's Catholic school here has enrolled Negro students this year.

Negro families were put on the waiting list at a Catholic school in Dallas and students will be admitted as soon as space is available.

School Policy

Race Issue Study Begun By Va. Unit

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 13 (AP).—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley today told his newly formed Virginia Commission on Public Education he still planned to use every legal means at his command to preserve segregation in public schools and expressed confidence the General Assembly would be able to come up with some "right answer."

Appearing at the organizational meeting of the 32-member legislative group, Stanley suggested it proceed as quickly as possible with its work and schedule any public hearings it plans at places within easy reach of citizens who wish to appear.

Prior to the Governor's address, the group met in an hour's secret session and elected State Sen. Garland Gray, of Sussex, chairman of the study commission and Delegate Harry B. Davis, of Princess Anne County, vice chairman. Davis is chairman of the House Education Committee. John B. Boatwright, jr., director of the Division of Statutory Research, was named secretary and his assistant, G. M. Lapsley, was named recording secretary.

A five-member nominating committee proposed Gray, Davis and Boatwright to the group and they were elected unanimously. The nominating committee was made up of Sens. Curry Carter, of Staunton, Albertis S. Harrison, of Brunswick, and Delegates W. Tayloe Murphy, of Warsaw, Roy Smith, of Petersburg, and John H. Daniel of Charlotte County.

Stanley told newsmen he was pleased at the interest shown by commission members but neither he nor anyone on the commission would say immediately what the approach to the segregation problem would be.

Potomac Paragraphs

Virginia P-TA Urges Study of Integration

RICHMOND, Oct. 21 (AP).—The Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers yesterday adopted a resolution urging its member units to "build understanding through study and discussion of the problems relevant to the Supreme Court decision on integration."

The passage of the resolution came after a heated and prolonged debate in the closing session of the Congress' forty-ninth annual sesion here.

Two earlier resolutions pertaining to public school segregation fell by the wayside when the study and discussion resolution passed.

The first motion called for reaffirming "the belief of the Virginia Congress that the public school system of Virginia must be continued and that no consideration should be given to abolishing compulsory attendance laws."

The motion, offered by Mrs Hank Wolfe of Westhampton P-TA in Richmond failed when William J. Storey, Jr., South Norfolk superintendent of schools, countered with a substitute motion that the Congress go on record as requesting the Governor and his Legislative Committee to do all within their power to continue a sound public school system."

Storey's motion also included a stipulation that the Congress should voice the opinion that "every legal effort should be made to operate the schools as they now are."

Convention delegates in general agreed when the motions failed they should not commit the entire membership of the organization on "so sweeping a policy."

Va. Assembly Polled On Segregation Plan

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 24 (AP).—Virginia's General Assembly apparently feels strongly some equivalent to segregated schools should be maintained if legally possible, according to legislators' replies to a questionnaire from Del. Armistead L. Boothe of Alexandria.

About one third of the 140 legislators replied to the 10 questions submitted. Boothe found a 7-1 majority of those answering "seem to wish" to retain the provision of Virginia's constitution requiring the state to establish and maintain free public schools.

School Official Told To Go Ahead With Building

ORANGE, Va.—(NNPA)—Orange County Superintendent C. J. M. Kyle was directed Tuesday to go ahead with purchase of a site near here for a 350-student colored elementary school, the next project in the county's school building program.

The county board abandoned plans for the school last May after the United States Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation in public schools.

The school board voted to obtain a site for the school but made no specific plans for its construction.

About fifteen acres will be needed for the school which will serve the western half of Orange County. The Lightfoot Elementary School, opened last November, takes care of colored elementary pupils from the eastern half.

Available for construction of the new school is a $200,000 State Library Fund loan which was applied for four years ago. Also available is more than $100,000 in State school grants.

Virginia Wants Gradual Approach To Integration

NORFOLK, Va. — (ANP) — Virginia legislators, educators and other white leaders in various sections of the state are moving toward the position that each locality in the state should be allowed to settle the issue of school integration as it thinks best.

The latest legislator to express this view was delegate Armstead Booth of Alexander, who discussed the problem in an address prepared for delivery to white teachers of District L, Virginia Education association, at Center theatre here last week.

Boothe suggested that local governments take steps at once to exhibit their good faith to "implement the Supreme court's decision just as gradually as the realities of life in Virginia permit."

He proposed that laws requiring segregation in public meetings or on common carriers be repealed in areas where no social problems would be created thereby. Local governments, he said, could be given autonomy so that "the wishes of the people can be respected and the desires of none be forced on the other."

Boothe explained that under this formula "local boards can take into consideration the intensity of racial feeling in various areas, if it is discovered on good edidence after honest investigation that the intensity of racial feeling is so explosive that integration be avoided." He called attention to the flare-up in White Sulphur, W. Va., and Milford, Del.

The legislator pointed out that the governor's commission would meet Nov. 17 and that little was left to formulate a Virginia plan for meeting the decision of the high court.

County Bodies Continue Work On Segregation

RICHMOND, Va. —(NNPA)— County bodies in Virginia continue to take action which is regarded as purely academic and cannot be expected to have any bearing on the hering before the United States Supreme Court on the question of the changeover from segregated to non-segregated schools.

Such action is in the form of resolutions addressed to Governor Thomas B. Stanley and urging that segregated schools be maintained in Virginia, despite the ruling of the Supreme Court that segregation in public education is unconstitutional.

The executive board of the League of Virginia Counties, meeting in Charlottesville last week, authorized distribution of its resolution on the decision to all Virginia county boards of supervisors, with the suggestion that they send similar resolutions to Governor Stanley.

Several county board have already adopted similar resolutions. Whether there is a concerted movement on the part of county boards to pass such resolutions with the expectation that they will strength the hand of Lindsay Almond, Jr., the Virginia Attorney General, when the Supreme Court hears further argument on how the segregated schools should be integrated could not be learned.

The resolution of the League of Virginia Counties calls for the early appointment of a legislative commission composed of the "ablest leadership" of the Virginia General Assembly to study problems raised by the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

It also expresses the belief that abolition of segregation is not in the best interest of either colored or white people and might "seriously hamper" public education in Virginia.

William B. Spec, executive secretary of the league, told a reporter Thursday that the execution board was not asking on urging counties to petition the Governor with the same or similar resolutions but was reporting its action to members counties and inviting them to express their own views to the Governor, if they feel inclined to do so.

Governor Stanley lately has declined to say whether or when he will appoint a study commission. Shortly after the court handed down its decision on May 17 he said he would appoint a bi-racial commission. Later he indicated several counties, which have gone on record as opposing integration, that, instead, he may appoint a legislative study group to chart possible courses for the State to take to get around the decision.

The Governor also has said there is no need to hurry in setting up a study group since the terms of the decree will not be known until after the court hears further arguments.

New Stand Is Taken on Racial Issue In Fairfax

Post Times Herald Thurs., 11-18-54 P. 21

Stormy Hearing Leads to Vote Favoring State's Ultimate Decision

Washington D.C.

The Fairfax County supervisors yesterday voted 6 to 1 to rescind a resolution in which they had urged that a "maximum of local option" be permitted in effecting racial integration of public schools "to insure orderly compliance with the law."

The action came after a stormy hearing set off by presentation of a petition signed by 2843 county residents, demanding recall of the resolution on the ground it implied the board's approval of an integrated school system. About 120 persons were on hand, most of them in support of the petition.

Mrs. Anne Wilkins, sponsor of the resolution calling for local option in compliance with a Supreme Court ruling that segregation in public schools is illegal, cast the only vote against the motion to rescind.

She did not, however, oppose an ensuing motion that the board follow the policy to be set by state officials in implementing the court's decree.

The hearing brought some sharp denunciations of the Supreme Court opinion. Kenneth J. Hooley, a Franklin Park businessman, called it "the most disgraceful, Marxist type of court decision in the history of our country."

At one point, when the Rev. T. Dabney Wellford, an Episcopal minister, urged opponents of integration to consider their stand in terms of the "will of God," Hooley declared: "I am sorry to see our religious leaders handing the people the image of Christ in the spirit of Karl Marx."

Charles Pickett, a Fairfax attorney, said the court's decision was in "absolute defiance" of the Constitution. "It completely ignores the Tenth Amendment, which gave us the right to control our school system," said Pickett.

Another sponsor of the petition to rescind, Mrs. Margaret Perent, said, "There is no reason why 87 years of tradition should be abandoned because of a decision by nine men of mediocre ability."

A handful of spectators expressed approval of the board's earlier resolution, most of them contending that it did not specifically put the board on record as opposing or favoring integration.

In another nearby Virginia development, the Tenth District Woman's Democratic Club announced it had sent the Governor's commission studying segregation a resolution affirming the club's support of "the Constitutional guarantee of free public schools and of present state laws requiring compulsory attendance until the age of sixteen . . ."

Prince William, Wythe Outline School Views

Post Times Herald Washington D.C. 11-18-54

RICHMOND, Nov. 17 (AP).—Supervisors of Prince William and Wythe Counties have forwarded to Gov. Thomas B. Stanley copies of their resolutions opposing school integration.

The Wythe board urged that a system of free public schools be maintained under direction and financial support of the State, with each locality having the right to participate in the system or abolish it. The resolution also urged that each locality be allowed to choose from several State-approved plans and the compulsory attendance law be amended to exempt a child whose parents or guardian objects to integration.

Prince William's board said it felt abolition of segregation would result in "irreparable harm" to both races. The resolution said integration is "equally unconstitutional" in that it requires a person against his will and contrary to social concepts to attend an integrated school.

Arlington Issues Fact Sheet On Integration

World Birmingham, Ala.
Sat. 11-20-54

WASHINGTON— (ANP) — The Board of Education in Arlington, Va., just across the river from the District of Columbia, last week released the first in a series of fact sheets on public school integration.

The five-page report was issued upon advance of the integration committee, which recommended that citizens be informed on every move on integration. The Board did not discuss the sheet but urged all citizens to study it.

About three and a half pages of the pamphlet was devoted to excerpts from the Supreme Court decision on integration, and of provisions from the Virginia constitution on segregation, as well as recent rulings by the Virginia attorney general and the state superintendent of public school instruction on integration.

The one page devoted to enrollment figures disclosed that there were 1,165 Negro pupils enrolled in the five Arlington public schools as of the latter part of September, as compared with 19,350 white students in the 39 schools. The Negro enrollment, therefore, is slightly less than six per cent of the total.

The board further authorized its chairman, Elizabeth Campbell, to present its views on integration at a public hearing to be held in Richmond, Nov. 15.

Mrs. Campbell met Monday night with the 30member committee on integration appointed by the board last June, to work out final details on the county's integration program to be presented at the meeting.

The Richmond hearing will be held by a 32-member commission of members of the general assembly, appointed in August by Gov. Thomas B. Stanley.

Segregation Group To Meet in Virginia

Star P.A.-28
Washington, D.C.

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Nov. 20.—State Senator Garland Gray yesterday called a meeting of the Executive Committee of the State's school segregation study commission for next Wednesday in the State capitol here.

Senator Gray, from Waverly, declined to say what the Executive Committee might do at the session—its first since the commission adjourned its lengthy public hearing here Monday night.

In other related matters, the Rural Baptist Brotherhood of Greensville County dissented strongly from the Virginia Baptist General Association's resolution that urged Baptists to abide by the court decision.

The strongly pro-segregation resolution reached Gov. Stanley's office today, one day after the State-wide Baptist association went on record in a Norfolk meeting as counseling acceptance of the Supreme Court's verdict.

Greensville County is in the heavily Negro populated southside section of Virginia.

A check of the commission's files showed the government bodies of at least 52 Virginia counties have gone on record against integration.

Virginian assails governor's attitude toward integration

Afro American P. 18

MADISON HEIGHTS, Va. — Robert L. Abbott of this community, last week, addressed an open letter to the Governor of Virginia in which he urged that the governor and his Commission on Public Education be called upon to take a favorable attitude toward school integration.

Baltimore, Md.

The letter, in part, read:

Honorable Thomas B. Stanley

Dear Sir:

This is American Education Week. Some of the things the schools' program should stress are: good health, good citizenship, cooperation between the school and home, and how to get along with others.

Virginia's American Education Week will be climaxed by an open meeting of Commission on Public education in the States Capitol. For what purpose? This Commission of hand picked legislators (all white) is supposed to represent your best brains.

11-11-54

AFTER THE court's decision you called for calmness and promised to work toward "a plan which will be acceptable to our citizens and in keeping with the edict of the court." Now you are doing just the opposite.

You are using your face to overthrow the government. The Supreme Court's decision is the law of the land.

Communists are being sent to prison for trying to overthrow the U.S. Government. Did you ever hear of the "Smith Act?" You are teaching our children to try to beat the law, violate the ruling of the highest Court in the land.

— o O o —

WHY HAVE OPEN HEARING? First you said you wanted open hearings to find out how Virginians feel about segregation. Second, you wanted open hearing to evade Supreme Court decision.

Hearings are not necessary for either. Open hearings will be attended, with a few exceptions, only by opponents to the court's decision. Many white citizens who favor compliance with the court's decree are afraid to speak for it because of possible social ostracism.

Many a white person will tell a colored person or groups of colored people his true feelings, but would not dare to make the same expression before whites. Even most colored citizens are afraid to make public expressions of their true opinions for fear of economic sanctions.

Through the years of toil and turmoil many Americans have learned to say in front of the white man, what the white man wants to hear.

— o O o —

PRACTICALLY every colored person depends on the white man in some way and he knows that if he antagonizes the employer, or the banker, etc., he may find himself stranded. So he will sign or say anything to please you.

2) Colored people are not worried about the results of your Commission findings, they know that the decision was unanimously rendered and you and all of your legislators cannot change a word of it.

Next, you say you are having the commission meeting to find ways and means to evade the Supreme Court's decision. To me it is a reflection on the abilities of the legislators you picked, that you must now call on the masses to go to Richmond and help your "Brain Trusters" of prejudice.

— o O o —

MR. GOVERNOR, what you are doing is building up false hope in the minds of the "die hard" prejudiced virginians, some of them would rather their children be ignorant than go to school with colored children.

When this hope is shattered by the final decree, the "sugar-coated" pinn will be harder to swallow. White and colored neighbors once friendly are already eying each other with suspicion.

You are dividing us on a lost cause. You are making it harder for us to accept the inevitable.

What you fear is a myth. Surveys of integrated schools show that the students do not intermarry. Most white virginians were nursed by colored women. They profess to love their "Mammy," their children play with the white children, they get along fine until some adult poisons the white child's mind against the colored.

— o O o —

HOW SOME of the white people can say what they say and act like they do against colored people, then go home and eat their cooking is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. Governor, did it ever occur to you that your salary is partly paid with money from colored taxpayers? Since the colored citizen is helping to feed you, don't you owe him some representation in your acts? Some even voted for you. The tax collector emands money from the colored hand as from the white.

How many would have believed five years ago that colored and whites persons would ride in same day coaches and buses in the South without incident? Five years from now we will laugh at our foolish fears of integration today.

The quality of forbearance is not strained.

Tolerance Stressed at School Talks

Richmond Parley Hears Mrs. Stone And Whitehead

Portland Oregonian 11-16-54

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 15 (AP). Two members of the General Assembly today urged Virginia's school segregation study commission to adopt a tolerant approach in trying to work out a new education policy for the State.

Washington Post 11-16-54

Dels. Robert Whitehead, of Nelson County, and Kathryn Stone of Arlington, said any policy should avoid extremes on both sides and adhere to a line giving wide authority at the local level.

New York Times 11-16-54

The two were among the leadoff speakers at a hearing before the 32-member legislative commission created by Gov. Thomas Stanley to wrestle with the problems stemming from the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

Some 1500 persons were present in the 4600-seat Mosque Auditorium. There was no segregation and Negro and white groups sat adjacent to each other.

Mrs. Edmund D. Campbell, Arlington County School Board chairman, urged that local school boards be granted considerable autonomy in putting the Supreme Court decision against segregation into effect.

Mrs. Campbell said "we believe that the system of public education in the Commonwealth of Virginia should continue to be maintained and supported and the compulsory school attendance laws of the state should be continued in force."

Whitehead, antiorganization Democratic leader, reiterated his belief that the best course for the state would be a middle-of-the-road policy.

"If we in Virginia adopt a reasonable middle-of-the-road course," said Whitehead, "it is my belief that we can go forward with our school program and reasonably serve the needs of our people, both white and colored.

"If that is done, and leadership on the state and local levels is wise, I believe that for the foreseeable future separate schools will be the rule and mixed schools will be the exception."

Portland Oregonian

Whitehead said the adoption of any educational program should not be without regard for two fundamentals.

Washington Post

"The first is that the State of Virginia as a state owes to its children—all of its children—irrespective of race or color, class or creed and regardless of place of habitation or economic condition, the solemn duty to provide a system of public free schools.

New York Times 11-16-54

"The other fundamental is that the manner in which the public schools shall be operated should be left to the discretion of the local school authorities so that the type of operation wil fit the needs of and be accommodated to the conditions prevailing locally."

At the outset of the hearings at which 143 persons requested time to speak—and which was expected to run into tomorrow—Commission Chairman Garland Gray of Waverly warned the audience that no cheering or clapping would be permitted.

But the rule was quickly broken when Mrs. Stone spoke and some members of the audience applauded after she called for a solution worked out in "the Christian tradition."

She urged the commission to do nothing to upset the traditional public school system and to set its sights on a policy that would provide local jurisdiction for dealing with the school problems.

State Sen. Frank Richeson of Richmond suggested a tripartite school system wherein there would be schools for whites, Negroes and for those who want to mix together."

Richeson said the court decision had hit the South "like an atomic bomb" and that integration at this time would retard the state's progress by 50 years.

Del. George Allen, Jr., of Richmond, said that he had queried a cross-section of 600 citizens and found the majority opposed to integration. Allen suggested a policy whereby school buildings were leased by the localities to non-profit corporations which would then set up rules and regulations for admission.

Allen said he felt private enterprise "can operate anything as efficiently as the state can."

Del. Arthur Richardson of Dinwiddie County said he did not believe "the better minded, more free-thinking colored man wants to integrate." And he added there wouldn't be enough police in Virginia to enforce the decision should an attempt at immediate integration be made.

Washington D.C. 11-11-54

A 32-member commission of State legislators, appointed by Gov. Stanley, will conduct the hearings beginning at 10 a.m. Monday in the Mosque, Richmond, to determine how the State may comply with the May 17 decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in schools.

Joseph Leverenz, member of the School Board, reported on a recent meeting of the School Board Association and the Virginia Education Association in Richmond, at which the segregation problem was the principal panel subject. He said the concensus of the meeting was that local school boards refrain from taking a position at this time. Mr. Leverenz did suggest, however, that observers be sent.

When his suggestion failed to receive action, Supt. T. C. Williams said after the meeting he planned to attend as an observer. Board Chairman Joseph Everly said individual members might also attend "on their own—they would pay their own expenses."

Alexandria Puts Off Segregation Stand

Washington D.C. Post

Representatives of the Alexandria school department will appear as unofficial observers at a public hearing on segregation scheduled Monday in Richmond, Va.

O. A-22

After receiving a suggestion that either the superintendent or one or more board members be designated as observers, the School Board last night declined to take any formal stand on the

'Get into integrated bar associations,' dean uraes

Afro-American, Baltimore, Md.

RICHMOND

Minority group lawyers were urged recentiy during a meeting of the Old Dominion Bar Association by George M. Johnson, dean, Howard University School of Law, to participate in an integrated bar association.

Dean Johnson spoke to a semi-annual meeting of the organization at Norfolk, Va.

Said Dr. Johnson:

"There are now 25 states in which all members of the profession in good standing are organized into one "integrated bar."

Sat. 11-20-54

"It is significant in these days when so much concern is being manifested over integration in public education, that integrated bars exist in such states as Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Kentucky Louisiana. Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

"The regulation of the practice of law is controlled largely by the several states. Each state has its own rules for determining who shall practice within its borders, and for disciplining those authorized to practice.

— o O o —

"WHEN IT is remembered that many of these regulatory and disciplinary matters are under the direct or indirect control of bar associations, it is surprising that more lawyers do not take an active interest in the work of these associations."

"On the other hand, where an integrated bar exists as it does here, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, the failure of lawyers in good standing actively to participate in the work of that bar association, would seem to me to require some kind of justification or explanation.

"I do not know how many members of the Old Dominion Bar Association are also active in the affairs of Virginia's integrated bar.

"I do now that members of the Old Dominion Bar Association have played, and, at this very moment are playing vital roles in the formulation and clarification of the American jurisprudence of civil rights.

— o O o —

THIS KNOWLEDGE assures me that you have not assembled here in this semi-annual convention simply because you are happier in racial isolation.

"You know all too well the stultifying effect that racial segregation has had upon colored Americans in every walk of life.

"Patterns of r a c i a l segregation restrict the area of professional activity for colored lawyers. These and similar problems must be met and solved. It may be that the integrated bar of the Commonwealth of Virginia is not an effective medium for the serious discussion and resolution of these problems.

It does not follow, however, that our lawyers should not take a more active part in the work of the integrated bar, especially as it relates to such matters as standards of legal education, discipline of lawyers and the attitude of the public toward lawyers generally.

Desegregated Meeting Favors Segregation

RICHMOND, Va. — In this city of paradoxes, 3,000 Negroes and whites sat side by side last week breaking state Jim Crow laws to listen to marathon arguments — mostly against de-segregation of public schools in Virginia.

The meeting, called by the Governor's All-white 32-man commission to study desegregation of public schools, was left in a state of shocked prostration after Mrs. Clifford B. Chambliss, of Suffolk, a beautiful Negro woman took the stand and calmly told the crowded hearing room:

"I am the mother of seven little mulattoes who can boast of having one of the wealthiest white grandfathers in Nasemond County. I daresay that many Negro women are watching your children tonight as you sit here and listen to all the arguments against integration —you can be assured that you can no longer deceive us. Stop deceiving yourselves."

Two Negro ministers representing the Baptist association of Richmond, Revs. W. L. Ranson and Amos C. Clark, flatly denied an assertion that Negroes in Virginia think segregation would be better for the children of both races.

Another minister, Rev. C. C. Scott, told the commission that "Since the commission was appointed to circonvent the court's decision there is no such thing as appealing to open minds. All we can do is appeal to to open hearts."

In general, most of the long list of clergy, white and Negro who testified stood firm on ending segregation as a principle of Christianity but a white school superintendent bitterly assailed the ministers asking them where they were before May 17. Most of the witnesses favored a continuance of the traditional pattern of segregation.

Virginia Opponents Of Integration Say They're Expanding

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 20.—In Virginia only one organization dedicated to preserving segregation of white and Negro races in the public schools has gained headway in recruiting members since the Supreme Court's school segregation decision last May.

It seeks a legal answer to the problem of maintaining segregation without defying the Nation's highest tribunal.

If there are any secretly-formed vigilante movements—such as in some areas further South—they have not come to light.

The defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties was chartered by the State Corporation Commission October 26. It now has 15 chapters, all but one in the heavily Negro-populated 4th Congressional District. Its membership is said to exceed 2,000.

Membership Outlined.

The membership includes legislators of the area, doctors, lawyers, merchants and school teachers.

"I think the name is accurate of its purposes." said Collins Denny, jr., of Richmond, attorney for the group. Its members, he said, expect to make it a permanent organization aimed at fighting Federal encroachment on States rights. He mentioned as a possible target the Federal government's entrance into education.

"It's going to stay on the broad, legal, public basis," Mr. Denny said. It will be no "1924 style Ku Klux Klan" nor will it be "secret, undercover, devious."

Asked if he thought there might be moves in Virginia by other groups to bring pressure, economic or otherwise, on Negroes and whites who agitate for integration of the Negro and white races in the schools, Mr. Denny answered:

"We may have some of that in Virginia before we are through. But in no sense is this an organization to propagandize a move of that kind."

Plan Kept Secret.

"I believe we could succeed proceeding under present decisions, to effectively maintain segregation," Mr. Denny said.

He refused to disclose the tack his plan takes, pending final decrees from the high court on its decision, but he said there would have to be some changes in the law.

"My own opinion is that the compulsory education law must go," he said.

Asked if the constitutional requirement for State schools would have to go also. He admitted this would be more of a fight, because some localities with smaller Negro percentages would perhaps rather accept integration than do away with the constitutional requirement for State schools.

"But we will not have an instance in Virginia of compelling a child to attend an integrated school, Mr. Denny said.

Va. Hints Open Defiance Of Court Ruling

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—The State of Virginia, in its brief filed Monday, hints at open resistance to the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

One of the five cases, in which questions of how and when the court shall order its decision carried out, came from Prince Edward County, Virginia, and the Virginia brief was filed for the school board of that county.

The decision, says the brief, has raised over most of Virginia "the spectre of impending educational chaos." If immediate "amalgamation of the races" is ordered in Price Edward County's public school, "the spectre becomes a reality," the brief adds.

If reasonable time is allowed for the decision to be weighed and alternatives considered "without the heat of the emotion created by unreasonable haste," the brief asserts, the children of Prince Edward County may still go to school. This is a hint that the schools will be closed before they are racially mixed.

Virginia has no plan for complete solution of the problem, the brief states. "We do not foresee a complete solution at any future time," it says.

"Neither court decrees nor executive orders can force in those sections a result so basically opposed by a united majority."

Arlington Unit Takes Race Issue Stand

By Ralph Reikowsky
Staff Reporter

The Arlington County Board yesterday said the State of Virginia should "pursue a course which will continue to preserve states' rights" in the matter of school segregation.

The position taken by the county board was opposed to that taken by the Arlington County School Board, which said Virginia should not attempt to circumvent the Supreme Court ruling on school segregation.

County board member Alvin F. Kimel said the county board's position was the same as that taken by Virginia's Gov. Thoma B. Stanley, who opposes school integration.

Resolution Text

The text of the resolution, offered by George M. Rowzee, follows:

"In view of some apparent misunderstanding concerning the Arlington County Board's position in regard to the hearing held by the Governor's Commission on Public Education in Richmond on November 15, I would like to propose the following motion, which I believe will state clearly the position of the board and its individual members on the question (integration) being studied by the Commission:

"1. That the Commission be urged to pursue a course which will continue to preserve states' rights.

"2. That any plan finally adopted shall be uniform throughout the entire state.

"The purpose of the second part of this motion is to avoid confusion on the part of future residents who contemplate moving into Virginia."

School Board View

During the Richmond hearing, Elizabeth Campbell, chairman of the School Board, speaking for the Board urged the Commission to maintain public education and compulsory school attendance.

Mrs. Campbell also said the Commission should not recommend any move legally inconsistent with the Supreme Court's ruling and urged that local school boards "be given maximum latitude as to the methods to be used to carry out" that ruling.

Rowzee said yesterday the "School Board was not representative of Arlington at the hearing." His motion was seconded by Robert A. Peck.

The county heads yesterday also asked for a survey of traffic on Wilson and Washington blvds. to determine whether the proposed extension of Fairfax drive from Glebe road to Falls Church should have a higher priority in the county's road building program.

The County Recreation Council recommended to the board that the recreation center at 4811 N. 3d st., damaged by fire during Hurricane Hazel, be razed and a new building be constructed on the site. The board asked that the council submit a plan for the proposed building at the board's December 11 meeting.

VA segregation ended

White House reports

WASHINGTON (NNPA) —The Eisenhower Administration has ended racial segregation in the Veterans Administration, the White House has announced.

In a final report to President Eisenhower, Harvey Higley, administrator of veterans' affairs, declared that not only has segregation been abolished in all VA hospitals and domiciliaries, but VA experience with the integration of patients "has been most satisfactory."

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, made public an exchange of letters between the President and Mr. Higley. Mr. Eisenhower highly commended Mr. Higley and all who cooperated in eliminating segregation in VA facilities and declared that "Americans everywhere can take a great and justifiable pride" in his accomplishment.

—o O o—

THE TEXT OF President Eisenhower's letter to Mr. Higley follows in part:

"In making the success of your program possible, our people have once again demonstrated their social maturity and their determination to have in America fair play and equal opportunity. In your accomplishment, Americans everywhere can take a great and justifiable pride."

The text of Mr. Higley letter to President Eisenhower follows, in part:

—o O o—

"EXACTLY ONE year ago this month the Veterans Administration, in keeping with your policy to eliminate segregation in all federal activities, launched a concerted program designed to wipe our racial barriers in VA hospitals and domiciliaries.

"It now gives me great pleasure to inform you not only that segregation has been eliminated in all of our hospitals and domiciliaries, but also that our experience with the integration of VA patients has been most satisfactory.

"Although we have moved steadfastly to accomplish this goal, I do want to assure you that the medical well-being of our patients was uppermost in mind at all times and no step was taken that was in any manner detrimental to the health of those for whom we provide care.

—o O o—

"OF THE 166 hospitals and domiciliaries the VA operated a year ago, some degree of segregation existed in 47 stations which were located in nearly half of the 48 states.

"The elimination of segregation in such a comparatively short period of time and with an absolute minimum of untoward incidents is, I feel, a tremendous tribute to the cooperation, understanding and social maturity of all concerned — citizens of the various local communities, outside organizations interested in the matter, our hospital and domiciliary managers and their staffs and, above all, the veteran - patients themselves.

"THE READY acceptance of integration by our patients reflects their recognition that it is proper to provide equality of rights in the hospitalization of sick and disabled veterans of every race, color and creed, just as it was proper for these veterans to share in the defense of our country in time of war.

"It is my hope that this accomplishment within the VA may help to bring at least a little nearer the realization of your long - standing desire for liberty and justice for all."

Marathon Segregation Hearing Lasts Till Midnight in Richmond

Action on Schools Ruling Still Up in Air; Commission Listens for 14 Hours

By Alex R. Preston
Star Staff Correspondent

RICHMOND, Nov. 16.—The question of what Virginia is going to do about an adverse Supreme Court decision on public school segregation remained up in the air today after a special commission concluded a marathon hearing last night.

Between the hours of 10 a.m. and midnight theological, ideological and anthropological arguments were advanced on the high court's opinion that separate schools for whites and Negroes violate the Federal Constituton.

A weary 32-man legislative commission appointed by Gov. Stanley to find a solution to the problem, wound up the one-day public hearing last night after listening to a full round of arguments.

"Appeal to Open Hearts."

The Rev. C. C. Scott, colored, representing the Baptist Ministers Conference, seemed to put his finger on the key issue when he inserted this comment in the record:

Since the commission itself was appointed to circumvent the court's decision, there is no such thing as appealing to open minds. All we can do is appeal to open hearts."

Both Gov. Stanley and State Senator Garland Gray, chairman of the commission, previously had said they would use every legal means to preserve segregation in the public school system.

Testifying at a late hour, Kenneth H. Hooley of Fairfax County rekindled interest in the proceedings when he said:

"Gentlemen: I urge that you be not moved by those who would hand you an image of Christ imbued with the spirit of Karl Marx."

Then there was the declaration of Mrs. Clifford B. Chambliss, colored, of Suffolk, who opened the eyes of the all-white commission with this statement:

"I am the mother of seven little mulattoes who can boast of having one of the wealthiest white grandfathers in Nansemond County."

She told the Virginia gentry who sat on the commission: "I dare say that many Negro women are watching your children tonight as you sit here and listen to all the arguments against integration—you can be assured that you can no longer deceive us. Stop deceiving yourselves."

Sees "Marxian" Link.

The churches took a buffeting.

The Rev. Dr. Frank W. Price of the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, linked Virginia's insistence on segregation to "Marxian communism." A number of other clergymen—both Negro and white—spoke in behalf of the principle of integration.

School Supt. W. J. Story, jr., of South Norfolk entered this comment into the record:

"I am sorry they (the clergy) came here to ask for integration. As a member of the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Price did not speak for me."

Mr. Story asked two questions: Have the churches ended segregation? Have the ministers gone into school classrooms to learn the problems that would be created by integration?

Amalgamation "Tragic."

"Amalgamation of the races would be tragic to our schools as well as to our Southern life," said Mr. Story. "Amalgamation integration or mongrelization—whatever you call it—is wrong."

A jolt also came from William Stephenson of Newort News—another advocate of the State's segregation policy.

"I heard the ministers speak and got sick on my stomach. Where were they before May 17? Were they deceiving us then or now?"

May 17 is the date the Supreme Court declared that Virginia, among other States, is violating the Constitution by maintaining separate schools for whites and Negroes.

The hearing was completed in an atmosphere of restraint. When applause greeted remarks from one side or the other, Chairman Gray quickly gavelled the audience to silence.

There were about 2,000 persons at the hearing.

Stanley Has No Comment On Government's Brief

RICHMOND, Nov. 24 (AP).—Gov. Stanley, T. Justin Moore, counsel for the Prince Edward County School Board, and Spotswood W. Robinson, III of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People legal staff, had no comment on the Government segregation brief filed in Washington yesterday.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond listened to a report of the wire story of the brief filed by Attorney General Brownell and said that offhand it sounded "drastic" but seemed to be "about what one might expect" from Mr. Brownell.

Prince Edward County was involved in one of the original school segregation suits filed before the Supreme Court.

Virginia Affairs

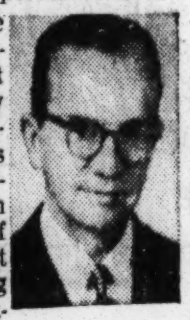
The Negro Speakers Were Eloquent

Post + Times Herald

By Benjamin Muse

THE PUBLIC HEARING of the State Commission on Public Education last Monday in Richmond was an intensely interesting and in many respects reassuring performance.

It was reassuring in that the Richmond policemen assigned to prevent disorder at discussion of the infinitely explosive subject of racial segregation in public schools had nothing to do. The several thousand Virginians in attendance, a majority of whom theoretically were bent on violating or circumventing the law, behaved like eminently law-abiding citizens.



MUSE

The meeting was reassuring, also, in the courage and firmness with which a few white speakers on the side of compliance with the Supreme Court decision expressed their convictions.

Dun. 11-21-54

P. 28

The churches went on record as opposed to segregation, but they made little effort to hold their own in the oratorical melee. One group, representing numerous religious organizations and "a million Virginia Christians," asked for only four minutes of the Commission's time. Altogether, there were approximately 10 hours of speeches.

The intervention of the church was enough, however, to arouse the ire of segregationist speakers. It was visited upon the clergy in terms rarely heard at a public meeting in Virginia.

Washington, D.C.

THE OFFICIAL SPOKESMEN for counties in which Negroes are a majority of the population—who referred incessantly and often fiercely to the wishes of "our people"—were, of course, white. The members of the boards of supervisors and school boards and all the public officials of those counties are white.

Segregationists spoke passionately of Virginia's devotion to the "Plessy Doctrine" of "separate but equal facilities"—as if the "equal" part of that principle had not been completely ignored in this State for 50 years after the Supreme Court rendered its decision in the case of Plessy v. Ferguson.

A Negro speaker aptly observed that, had the "Plessy Doctrine" been adhered to, the present crisis would not have arisen.

Some of the white speakers from the Black Belt, like E. W. Goode, of Surry, brought home with thought-provoking earnestness the gravity of the problem in that area—regardless of the "rightness or wrongness" of segregation.

IN THIS SITUATION, the Negro speakers found themselves the chief advocates of respect for law. They rose eloquently to the occasion. Learned authorities were quoted, from Diogenes to Warren.

The Negro spokesmen were a select group, fluent and polished—evidently of a higher cultural level than many of the white speakers. This circumstance itself became a part of the evening's argument.

Collins Denny, the attorney representing the recently organized "Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties," pointed to the erudition displayed by the Negro speakers as evidence of the "excellence" of the education provided by Virginia's present segregated Negro schools.

Other segregationists had argued that segregation was imperative because of the low cultural level of Virginia's Negroes.

The Negro representatives were uncompromising and unrealistic advocates of immediate and sweeping desegregation.. Most of them were discreetly respectful—but not all.

THE SUAVE AND LEARNED representative of the Negro bar association, W. Hale Thompson, mildly ridiculed the cultural shortcomings of some of the white speakers. He wondered, for instance, what a previous speaker knew about Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata.

Thompson also referred to the threat of some white officials from predominantly Negro counties to stop all appropriations for public schools if segregation is ended. This, they said, would impose a hardship mainly on the Negroes, because they could not afford to send their children to private schools.

Thompson countered with the prediction that the Negroes in those counties would vote in sufficient numbers to decide themselves what taxes would be levied and how public funds would be allocated.

Innumerable petitions and resolutions from organizations of many descriptions were presented to the Commission, opposing any change in the present system of segregated schools.

EDUCATION 1954

WASHINGTON D.C. PROGRAM

Capital Program Almost Perfect

Courier Sat. 11-6-54 Pittsburgh, Pa

Ratcliffe, Rivera Say 60 Per Cent of District's School Children Integrated

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

WASHINGTON — The hand of President Eisenhower—an iron fist in a velvet glove—is the potent force behind the well-oiled machinery now shaping up a near-perfect public school desegregation program in once jim-crow-crazy District of Columbia.

Even the staunchest of Democrats admit that Ike pressed the button that started the machinery rolling.

And, it's rolling—and at a fast clip, too!

* * *

THE WHEELS of integration were not turning quite fast enough at the outset to suit the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and protests from this national civil rights body resulted in the Board of Education speeding up its anti-segregation program.

At the very beginning, School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning issued a statement saying he thought it better to put off school integration in the Nation's Capital until the Supreme Court saw fit to hand down its final ruling.

However, he had said "We will be prepared" when the District of Columbia Board of Education began wondering what would happen should the Supreme Court outlaw segregated schools.

* * *

WHEN CORNING suggested that a desegregation program in Washington be held up, he didn't know that President Eisenhower had contacted the District Commissioners and expressed hope that the District of Columbia serve as a model for the rest of the Nation in wiping out segregated schools.

Superintendent Corning is a wise man—and he changed his mind after learning of President Eisenhower's desire.

Machinery for public school desegregation here in the nation's capital went into action one day after the Supreme Court ruled out racially segregated schools.

With the President's words still ringing in its ears, the District decided not to wait for the Court's arguments (Dec. 6) on the method and timing of integration.

* * *

THE DISTRICT Corporation Counsel had advised the school board that further hearings before the Supreme Court would be "moot" and that the high court's May 17 decision voided all statutes requiring separate schools by race.

And so, the District of Columbia—like Baltimore and little Morgantown, W. Va.—is serving as a model for the rest of the South.

The dual school system in the District of Columbia went out of the window Sept. 13—and without too much fanfare.

The early success of this changeover, and the cries for a speedier integration program from the NAACP and other pressure groups, prompted School Superintendent Corning to accelerate his desegregation policy just one week after the opening of public schools.

And, because of the speed-up, the picture changes day by day, fast approaching a near-perfect policy of school integration.

* * *

STUDENT ENROLLMENT in the District now is about sixty per cent Negro and forty per cent white. On Sept. 14, this year, a total of 99,946 children had enrolled in the schools and by Oct. 7, this year, the enrollment had jumped to a total of 105,518. Out of the total of 3,620 teachers in the public schools and the two city teacher colleges, 1,677 are white and 1,943 Negro.

During the first week of enrollment, school board officials revealed that 111 of the District's 161 schools had been integrated and that thirty-seven of the schools had mixed faculties. The accelerated policy adopted after the first week of school has given this picture a better flavor of integration week by week.

The original plan for Washington, after Mr. Eisenhower had asked for full integration, called for a one-year, step-by-step process. It was a gradual and somewhat optional plan.

* * *

WHEN CORNING presented this blueprint, it was adopted by the Board, 7 to 1.

Opposition came from ever alert Mrs. Margaret Just Butcher, one of the three Negro board members. She demanded "full scale" integration at the opening of schools last September and called Corning's plan a "gradual approach" to desegregation.

Since that time, several white groups have branded Mrs. Butcher a "reporter" for the NAACP and two white organizations demanded that she resign her position as member of the board. One of the organizations was the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

Under the "gradual" integration plan as first introduced to the schools last September, boundaries were redrawn for all schools without regard to race in order that children could attend school buildings nearest their homes.

* * *

THE NEW DISTRICT zones last September, however, applied only to pupils new to Washington schools and to children who had moved from one section of the city to another.

In addition to this, over 3,000 colored pupils were transferred from overcrowded schools that had been occupied by Negroes to formerly all-white schools which had plenty of empty seats.

This "gradual" program also saw the Board employing an additional 250 teachers who were assigned to classrooms regardless of race—and some veteran Negro teachers were moved from overcrowded schools to other buildings to instruct mixed classes.

* * *

MRS. BUTCHER, as a member of the Board, had objected to this slow process of integrating and contended that the new school zoning plan should become effective immediately.

She insisted that children should attend the school within their district no matter what their race.

At present, options are being taken up in the elementary grades. It is estimated that 2,300 children will make a change. School administrators told the Courier that little difficulty is anticipated in making the shift.

Under the terms of this latest Corning move the child who lives within the new zone, or school boundary, has top priority. If, for example, he wishes to transfer to the school in his zone and the particular class is crowded, he can "bump" a child who is illegally attending the school.

* * *

IN MAKING the shift at the high school level there was enough room and so-called "bumping" was not necessary.

All of the pupils wishing to transfer on the junior high school level were permitted to do so with the exception of seventy-three who wanted to move to the Eastern High School. Eastern has both junior and senior units but lacked a dual set-up for shops.

All of the high schools are integrated with the exception of the Woodrow Wilson High School which is located in the highly restricted wealthy residential section.

* * *

EUGENE DAVIDSON, director of the District Branch of the NAACP, said the latest Corning plan "got to be the NAACP plan." He said they have put a lot of our ideas into effect and it's going fairly well now.

Mr. Davidson said "we will never be satisfied until we get complete integration and we still don't like this bumping, but we are gratified with the acceleration of the over-all program."

Washington headquarters of the NAACP protested to the board, calling for a complete integration policy.

Superintendent Corning stepped up his plan for integration the second week after the opening of schools by giving high school students the opportunity to decide whether they would remain in the school they were attending or transfer to the school in their newly zoned district.

* * *

THE BOARD was to have determined in October of this year just when the new boundaries can be made effective for all elementary and junior high school pupils.

The present option plan now being used by the board permits pupils to stay in their old building unless the school is overcrowded.

While the NAACP was pounding at the Board for a complete and speeded-up integration calendar, an all-white group, the Federation of Citizens Association, was knocking the board over the head with a Federal suit claiming that the District of Columbia should have waited until a final decision is handed down by the Supreme Court before trying any form of integration.

District Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut ruled against the association, saying the Supreme Court had ruled school segregation unconstitutional.

* * *

AFTER IT HAD been decided that Washington's schools would be desegregated, Superintendent Corning and his staff went to work to acquaint the public and teachers with the approaching changeover. Seminars were held and experts on human relations were sought out for lectures.

Even a handbook on integration for teachers was published and distributed.

The District already had been conditioned somewhat by the Catholic and Episcopal schools which have been enrolling colored pupils since 1952.

* * *

LAST SCHOOL YEAR, with segregation in full force, many all-Negro public schools were overcrowded while most of the all-white school buildings had seats to spare, largely because of the increasing Negro population in the District and the movement of rich and middle-class whites to the nearby suburbs of Virginia and Maryland.

While wiping out overcrowded conditions in so-called all-Negro schools, the integration move also did away with separate administrations that governed white schools and Negro schools.

Negro teachers as well as colored supervisors and officials became a part of the integrated setup and, although the board appears to be making a great effort to integrate teachers and other officials without regard to race or color, there have been some recent rumors that white teachers were placed in top positions over one or two Negro teachers who were reported better qualified for the jobs.

* * *

A FIVE-POINT anti-discrimination plan to govern schools in the District was drawn up shortly after the Supreme Court decision was handed down. The five-point policy said:

1—All appointments, transfers, preferments, promotions and ratings of officers and employes of the board shall be predicated solely upon merit and not upon race or color.

2—No pupil shall be favored or discriminated against because of race or color.

3—No exceptions will be made for reasons of race when school boundaries are reorganized.

4—Records of pupils and school personnel will be kept without reference to race. (Note—This decision was later reversed, stemming from the fact that the District of Columbia requires a racial count of students for census purposes.)

5—The maximum efficient use shall be made of all physical facilities without regard to race or color.

When Superintendent Corning presented his initial plan for gradual integration, Robert R. Faulkner, a member of the board, submitted a desegregation blueprint of his own. He proposed establishing three sets of schools in areas where Negro and white populations are about equal. He recommended one exclusively white school, one exclusively Negro and the third would have complete integration of faculty and students. In other words, the students could make their own selection. But, Mr. Faulkner's plan was tabled.

• • •

NO MOVE has been made to merge the all-white Parents and Teachers group with the all-Negro P-TA, but the white group has removed its racial barriers. The colored group never has restricted whites.

Opening of schools here on a desegregated basis found the racial breakdown varying throughout the city. In heavy Negro districts, white pupils were in the minority, and in heavily populated white districts only a few Negro students were enrolled. In most cases, the same ratio was found on the teacher level.

The two District-operated teachers colleges, Wilson (formerly all-white) and Miner, formerly for Negroes only, are now geared for integration. Some Negroes have enrolled in Wilson but no whites have enrolled at Miner.

The two colleges will be merged next year, taking over one of the larger high school buildings.

• • •

ALTHOUGH disturbances and flareups did find their way here, following on the heels of the Bowles-inspired demonstrations in Milford, Del., and Baltimore, it must be pointed out here that most teachers sought to create racial understanding in their classes during the first week of school.

When hoodlums and some over-eager parents did stage demonstrations and seek to keep children from attending the schools, District police were ready. The disturbances died after police officials made it known that they meant business.

Indications are that President Eisenhower's wishes will be fulfilled, making Washington a model for the rest of the South.

W. Va. School

275 Strike To Protest Integration

WHITE SUIPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. Sept. 13 (AP.)—About 275 of White Sulphur Springs High School's 430 students went on strike today in protest against integration of Negro students into the school.

The boys and girls began parading through the streets about 730 a. m.

The students were reportedly demanding that 23 Negro students at the school be returned to Bolling High School in Lewisburg—the Negro high school before students were integrated under a State-wide order last week.

County School Superintendent D. D. Harrah and the Board of Education met with delegations of parents from White Sulphur Springs, Rupert and other towns in the county.

Harrah's office said about 200 persons were jammed into the board's meeting room.

School officials had reported earlier that the transition from segregated schools was expected to be "smooth and calm." The county's first trouble came last week when the combined elementary and high school at Rupert was picketed.

State police were reported cruising around the city here today to preserve order.

Stiller Wins Race

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 13 (AP.)—Alfred Stiller, 1948 Olympic star from Chicago, yesterday won the ninth annual George Wuchter Memorial 50-mile bicycle race.

Nu to Visit Red China

RANGOON, Burma, Sept. 13 (AP.)—Premier U. Nu will visit Communist China in December, it was officially announced today.

Picket Signs Disappear

'Rebels' Quit as Judge Gets Tough

By A. M. RIVERA JR.
(Courier Staff Writer)

FAIRMONT, W. Va.—A Circuit Court judge labeled a "strike" against integration at the Annabelle County School as a "rebellion" against the Government and warned protesting white parents that "if necessary, I will fill the jail until your feet are sticking out of the windows."

Circuit Court Judge J. Harper Meredith issued the statement here last week as he announced an injunction restraining picketing parents, most of whom were white mothers, from interfering with school operations, from molesting anyone entering or leaving it, and from threatening any pupil, teacher or principal.

Following the important decision, protesting white parents threw away their picket signs and went back to their mining home towns. Then, Negro and white pupils rode the same bus and resumed attending classes together at Annabelle.

* * *

USING SHARP language the jurist asserted, "In this case, the sovereign (the State) is being attacked by a group of citizens. It amounts to rebellion . . . a form of rebellion.

"They are attempting to prevent, if they can prevent one school from operating, they can close all schools, and picket the city building or the county jail.

"It is the duty of the court," Judge Meredith continued, "as an arm of the government to see that government property is respected. It is a serious thing for a group of citizens to take over government property. That is what started the Civil War.

"The time to stop it is when it starts."

The judge added that such a rebellion "cannot be tolerated" and declared, "It cannot continue and I won't permit it to continue."

Say State Has Adopted 'Wait and See' Policy

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

CHARLESTON, W. Va.—The true picture of the school desegregation program in the state of West Virginia is far from being an ugly sight.

It is more than the screaming headlines pointing up near-violence in the southeastern corner of the state and the short-lived "strike" in a little mining town a few miles from friendly Fairmont.

The border state of West Virginia offers a favorable picture on its over-all school integration scene despite political implications that are bound to exist . . . the hesitancy on the part of state officials to hand down a forceful ultimatum to county school boards and the loop holes in the U. S. Supreme Court decision that result in delaying tactics.

On the state level, West Virginia—the state of beautiful mountains and valleys—can take a pat on the back for having done a near-perfect job. All the tax-supported colleges and the university are fully integrated including once all-Negro West Virginia State College, ten miles out of Charleston.

* * *

INTEGRATION in reverse is moving at full speed and without a hitch on the scenic campus of West Virginia State. To date, the college has enrolled approximately seventy-five white students in day classes and more than 100 in evening classes.

West Virginia state now has the appearance of an above-the-border college, what with colored and white students moving throughout the buildings and across the campus together, and with Negro and white young men drilling side by side in the ROTC and on the gridiron.

Although the present situation at WVS is setting a pattern for more reluctant states in the South, a picture equally as attractive is found at formerly all-white West Virginia University in Morgantown of Monongalia County, just a stone's throw from the Pennsylvania line.

More than 100 Negroes are enrolled in the undergraduate and graduate departments of the university, and the public school system is completely integrated, including Negro teachers and the bus system.

NEGROES ALSO are attending two theatres in Morgantown without having to occupy balcony seats.

The success of Morgantown's complete integrated program can be traced to two important factors: (1) influence of the university which has been enrolling Negroes on the graduate level for several years, and (2) the small Negro population.

Integration on the grade school level in the state is progressing. West Virginia is composed of fifty-five counties, but only seventeen boast an appreciable Negro population.

Biggest fault found in the State of West Virgina is the hands-off, buck-passing policy taken by state governmental officials in handling the grade school integration program. The state operates on a county system, with each county having almost full power to operate its educational program.

* * *

WITH THIS pattern of operation, the state found it very easy to wash its hands of the matter and leave the decision of integration up to officials of each county. It was pointed out, however, that the state pays the basic salary to all teachers and, if for no other reason, could have handed down an ultimatum calling for complete integration throughout the state on the grade school level.

Labor, too, plays an important role in this integration program in West Virginia. Labor is the boss in the state and an endorsement by labor the board, James H. Rowland, a Negro, of Beckley, put up a strong fight for complete integration in the state supported colleges and university . . . and he won his battle.

* * *

ODDLY ENOUGH, the segregation law in West Virginia has been violated in some remote areas of the state for many years. Long before the U. S. Supreme Court handed down its momentous decision, a few Negroes were attending so-called white schools because the counties involved didn't have the money to set up a separate school for one or two colored children.

Screaming headlines have told the world of the two trouble spots in the state where whites protested Negroes attending so-called white schools, but no headlines have told of the role the National Association for the Advanceemnt of Colored People played, and is still playing, in preventing violence in the troubled areas.

The veteran trouble-shooter and state president of the NAACP, 78-year-old Atty. T. G. Nutter of Charleston, has been the general, so to speak, of the entire state.

* * *

HIS ADVICE and consultation prevented bloodshed in White Sulphur Springs, in Greenbrier County, and in the mining town of Four States, near Fairmont in Marion County.

An important factor in this entire situation is the lack of fear on the part of colored parents and their children. Negro mothers in a few areas have braved threats and carried their children to once all-white schools . . and the children have been just as fearless.

Before Negro children were turned back to an all-Negro school in Greenbrier County, and before the school strike was wiped out in little Four States, Negro parents were ready for any type of action.

All the time, they were receiving expert advice from the NAACP and peace-loving white citizens. Daily papers throughout the state have condemned every outburst and leading white citizens have come out opposing segregation and violence. The NAACP cautioned Negroes against resorting to violence. They were told to let the whites fight among themselves.

The most forceful decision in the entire state was made by Circuit Judge J. Harper Meredith of Fairmont. When the County Board of Education finally took out an injunction against white parents on strike at the Annabelle School, Judge Meredith ordered the strikers to return to their homes and warned that he would fill the jail until their feet stuck out of the windows if they made another effort to close the school.

* * *

WHILE THE strike was going on at Annabelle, Negro pupils were attending other formerly all-white schools in nearby Fairmont and Marion County.

Big question during this change-over period is: "What happens to the Negro teacher?" This question, which must be answered eventually, is causing a silent fear to creep over the state.

If Morgantown can be used as an example, the situation shouldn't be too alarming. The complete change-over in Morgantown found nine of the fourteen Negro teachers being placed in former all-white schools. Eight of the fourteen retained were veteran teachers, holders of continuing contracts, and one was a probationary teacher. Five other probationary Negro teachers were not placed. A teacher in West Virginia must teach three years before receiving a permanent or continuing contract. During the first three years of service they are known as probationary teachers.

It should be pointed out here that while there is a shortage of white teachers, there is no shortage of Negro teachers. The State of West Virginia at present is employing 1,200 emergency white teachers. These teachers are not fully qualified but they were pressed into service because of the shortage.

Needless to say, Catholic schools throughout the state were among the first to set up an integrated program.

* * *

ON THE grade school level in West Virgina, a breakdown shows that twenty-five counties are making efforts to end classroom segregation. Twelve counties, many of them with sparse Negro population, have completely integrated colored and white pupils. And thirteen others with few Negro children have partially desegregated.

Integration now ranges from one Negro girl in Weston (Lewis County), to 275 colored pupils in Monongalia County, site of West Virginia University.

Eleven counties in West Virginia have no Negro children.

What has happened in most counties is this: Officials of the county board of education announced that all schools, Negro and white, would operate as usual, but that Negroes could enroll in schools nearest their home. So what happened? Some colored kids enrolled in white schools and some enrolled in Negro schools.

* * *

IN THE case of Charleston, the caiptal city, one Negro boy did attend summer classes in one of the white schools, but a few days before the fall season was ushered in the board rescinded its action, announcing that Negroes should go to Negro schools and whites to white schools.

An NAACP source said trouble flared in Greenbrier County because Negro high school football stars would have replaced white players at the White Sulphur Springs white school.

It was a different picture in Fairmont. Many of the stars a all-Negro Dunbar High had planned to enroll in a former white school, but returned to Dunbar when county officials ruled that the Negro players would not be eligible for the team for one year.

Despite the progress noted throughout the state, it is obvious that most of the state and county officials are taking a "wait and see" attitude.

"Wait and see" what the U. S. Supreme Court does after the Dec. 6 hearing.

EDUCATION 1954

SOUTHERN GOVERNORS CONFERENCE
BOCA RATON, FLORIDA

Governors Unimpressed

Johns Bombshell For Segregation Vote Proves Dud

Herald P. 1
Miami, Fla.
Fri. 11-12-54

By JOHN McDERMOTT
Herald Political Writer

BOCA RATON—A politically delicate segregation bombshell dropped by Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns at the opening session of the southern governors conference here Thursday

Dade county state attorney, see Page 1-B.

—Associated Press Wirephoto

IT'S UNFAIR said George Brautigam in Tallahassee as he went in to have a talk with Leonard Pepper, executive assistant to Acting Gov. Charley Johns. For the story on the new apparently proved a dud.

A poll by newspapermen of governors assembled indicated they felt the Johns proposal for a special national referendum to vote on segregation was "inappropriate" and should be dropped. However, the highly controversial question appears headed for some kind of a showdown at this meeting.

Johns told reporters he will introduce his proposal in the form of a resolution. This action is expected Friday morning.

The acting governor jolted the opening session of the three-day governors conference by bringing segregation to a head. His talk had been billed as a welcoming address by the host governor. It came as a complete surprise to governors and top officials assembled here from nearly all the southern states and several other states.

Most of the governors polled said "No comment" when asked for an opinion. But many admitted privately they were unhappy that Johns was attempting to bring segregation into their formal discussions.

Johns offered a double-barreled suggestion designed to retain the status quo of "equal but separate" schools for Whites and Negroes in the South. In either case, an amendment would be required to the federal Constitution. Such action would circumvent the ruling by the United States Supreme court which ordered segregation abolished in schools.

Johns suggested the governors request President Eisenhower to immediately call a special session of Congress to consider the question and then submit it to a vote of the citizens of the 48 states.

As an alternative, Johns suggested the governors call their individual legislatures into special session to petition Congress for such a constitutional change.

"I feel that in doing this, we, as the governors of the sovereign states of America, will be facing up to our responsibilities and that the President of the United States and the national Congress should do likewise."

Johns said, "I strongly urge you governors to take action at this conference on the important question of segregation."

The Johns proposal overshadowed the formal routine discussions planned for opening day.

The governors went through the motions of discussing ways and means of improving mental health and education for the South—but the big question of segregation remained the paramount topic as governors talked quietly privately and off-the-record in the lavish lobbies of the swank Boca Raton Club, site of the conference. There appeared little chance of it getting a favorable vote from the nine-member resolutions committee headed by Texas Gov. Allan Shivers.

The committee will act on resolutions Friday and Saturday, then bring them before the governors in executive session Saturday afternoon. Indications were the Johns resolution either will be tabled—no action taken—or be disapproved.

Even Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, the South's most outspoken proponent of segregation "as is," said he could see little hope of any positive results from the Johns suggestion. He said it was extremely unlikely that President Eisenhower could be influenced to take such action as Johns proposed. And as for the individual states calling a special legislative session, he said his own state of Georgia will meet in regular session in January and would undoubtedly take a firm stand for preservation of segregation.

"You can't make the people do what they don't want to do simply by judicial decree unless you want to be a nation like Russia or Germany under Hitler," Talmadge said.

Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi said he would "like to see it" when asked how he felt about putting the segregation question to a national referendum.

Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina, declining to comment, said he had not had adequate time to analyze the Johns proposal. However, Byrnes is a close friend of President Eisenhower and observers here doubt whether he would attempt to pressure the President for a special session.

Gov. William C. Marland of West Virginia expressed doubt that the Johns proposal would get a favorable vote from the resolutions committee. But he declined comment on the over-all proposal.

Florida's Gov.-Elect LeRoy Collins sat in on the functions and was named by conference chairman, Gov. Johnston Murray of Oklahoma, as a member of the resolutions committee. Collins, too, declined comment on the Johns proposal, saying he felt it would be out of order for him, as a guest, to express himself.

Collins and Johns, bitter political enemies from the campaign days of last spring, posed together for photographers and shook hands.

And the first act of Johns, as he began his welcoming address, was to introduce Collins and ask the governors to give Florida's next chief executive a "big hand." They did.

Friday's session will be highlighted by introduction of the Johns resolution and discussion of a network of highways linking the southern states.

A total of 13 governors and at least three governors-elect are here for the conference.

Governors included Murray of Oklahoma, Talmadge of Georgia, McKeldin of Maryland, Byrnes of South Carolina, Wetherby of Kentucky, Clement of Tennessee, Kennon of Louisiana, White of Mississippi, Cherry of Arkansas, Shivers of Texas, Marland of West Virginia and Johns of Florida.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia will arrive Friday.

Besides Collins, governors-elect here included James E. Folson of Alabama and George B. Timberman of South Carolina.

Governor Asks Segregation Poll

Inquirer
Fri. 11-12-54

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 11 (UP).—Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns of Florida asked the Southern Governors Conference today to request President Eisenhower to call a special session of Congress to consider putting the segregation question before the voters.

The proposal met a cool reaction. Most seemed to feel that John's suggestion was inappropriate. The Governors had expressly said they did not want to take up the segregation question at the current meeting. P. 13

Johns, who will be succeeded in January by Gov.-elect Leroy Collins, as an alternative, proposed that each Southern State call its own special legislative session to petition Congress for the enactment of constitutional changes to provide equal but separate facilities in the various chool systems.

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled last May 17 that public school segregation was unlawful. New hearings have been set beginning Dec. 6 after which specific decrees will be handed down as to how and when the decision shall be enforced.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, one of the South's strongest segregationists, said his State would "go it alone," if necessary, to keep up the race barriers in its schools. He criticized "faint-hearted" fellow governors who failed to adopt his proposed resolution at lest year's session.

MOVE ENVISIONS SEPARATE, EQUAL PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Times Picayune
New Orleans, La.

Southern Governors Hear Basic Law Change Asked

By HENDRIX CHANDLER

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 11 (AP)—The explosive school segregation issue was touched off at the very outset of the Southern Governors Conference today when acting Gov. Charley E. Johns of Florida proposed a constitutional amendment to allow the states to maintain separate but equal public schools for the races. P. 1

After outlining his proposal in a welcome address to the governors and the governors-elect of 13 southern states, Johns announced he would press for an immediate vote on the resolution tomorrow.

But Gov. Johnston Murray of Oklahoma, the conference chairman, told newsmen he would have to rule any such attempt for an immediate vote out of order and refer the resolution to the resolutions committee, which reports Saturday.

Fri. 11-12-54

Would Ask Special Session

Johns apparently caught his fellow governors by surprise when he proposed that President Eisenhower be asked to call a special session of Congress immediately to submit a consitutional amendment which would allow the states to maintain their separate but equal public schools.

He said that in the alternative the southern governors should call special sessions of their legislatures to petition for enactment of such a constitutional change.

Most governors interviewed here prior to the conference opening said they thought each state should decide for itself what course it should pursue in meeting the U.S. Supreme Court edict of May 17 that segregated public schools must go.

The subject wasn't on the conference agenda and many of the governors expressed hope privately that the touchy issue wouldn't be brought up.

Sees Turmoil, Confusion

Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas was appointed to head up the resolutions committee, which normally would consider such a proposal.

Johns told the governors the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools has created turmoil and confusion not only in the Southland but also from Maine to California.

"The question of whether or not our schools shall be segregated is by far too great an issue to rest upon a judicial opinion of only nine men, particularly when there is a constitutional method by which the people themselves can be permitted to speak," Johns said.

Two Agree in Principle

Two governors, Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia and Hugh White of Mississippi, said they agreed in principle with Johns' resolution but expressed doubt that President Eisenhower would do anything about such a suggestion.

Talmadge said:

"I am sure that the General Assembly of Georgia would be glad to adopt such a resolution by an overwhelming majority. I do not believe the President will call a special session of Congress because he is rather proud of what he has been able to do to break down segregation laws.

"I think the resolution reflects the views of practically every governor in the conference, but I do not know how realistic it is."

White said he would be glad to submit such a proposal to the Mississippi Legislature when the next one is held.

Southern governors fail to take segregation action

Jump Birmingham, Ala.

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13—(AP)—The Southern Governors Conference resolutions committee Saturday rejected a proposal for a constitutional amendment to maintain separate but equal school facilities for the races.

Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns of Florida, who proposed the resolution, said he would make no further efforts to bring up the question. P. 12

Adjourned the three-day conference without taking any formal action on the U. S. Supreme Court decisions outlawing segregated public schools. Rec. 11-13-54

The governors elected Gov. Lawrence W. Wetherby of Kentucky chairman and adjourned.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland, a member of the resolutions committee, handed newsmen a statement in which he said it was his opinion that it was the duty of every citizen to accept the Supreme Court decree regardless of his own opinion of the case.

"Any other course would undermine the very foundations of law and order," McKeldin said.

The Maryland governor said the proper procedure was for the states to file briefs with the Supreme Court and make oral arguments at a hearing set for Dec. 6 on how and when desegregation should be ordered into effect.

Johns had appealed to the resolutions committee not to let the conference adjourn without taking some action on the segregation matter.

AN INDUSTRIAL research organization reported to the conference the South has an opportunity for even greater industrial expansion in the next 20 years provided it gets alert and aggressive leadership.

The Southern Assn. of Science and Industry, Inc., Atlanta, said increased purchasing power of the South had attracted more new plants and industrial facilities than any other one factor, and that the South's industrial and consumer markets would undoubtedly be a vital factor in industrial expansion through 1975.

Some fields for which the organization saw prospects for substantial increase were textile products, farm products, steel plants, forestry products and industrial chemicals.

The report also noted there would be a sharp increase in the need for recreational facilities and services in the South.

EDUCATION 1954

ALABAMA

NAACP

Schools Chief Given Petition Urging Segregation End Here

Advertiser Montgomery

The Montgomery branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has submitted a 12-point program to Superintendent of Schools Clarence M. Dannelly urging that schools here be placed on a non-segregated basis.

Dr. Dannelly was out of town yesterday and could not be reached for comment, but his answer to previous attempts to end segregation has been that such action would violate the Constitution of Alabama despite the ruling by the U.S. Surpreme Court.

E. N. Nixon, chairman of the education committee of the local NAACP, also said the group filed a petition in September requesting an audience with the county school board, but that they had received no information about it since.

"We are ready and willing to work with you in making and facilitating plans for compliance with the historic decision of the Supreme Court of the United States," the NAACP official said, adding that "it is our desire that this can be done with as little friction as possible."

Advertiser

The letter requesting an audience with the school board followed an attempt last mont to enroll 23 Negro children at a new white grammar school—William Harris—on the outskirts of South Montgomery. School officials turned down the proposal on grounds that these Negro children lived in a different school zone.

Mont. Adv.

12-Point Program

In the 12-point list of resolutions urging that separate school facilities of the races be abolished, the NAACP said it was convinced rschools."

The group promised to oppose vigorously attempts to "gerrymander" 'school districts to maintain segregated classrooms, and said school officials should take the lead in working out ways of complying with the high court's decision.

Under the Flag— With the American flag hanging limply by their sides, speakers of the National Association for the Advancement of White People exhort Milford (Del.) whites to join in the campaign against the integration of schools.—INP Photo.

NAAWP Prexy— Bryant W. Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which is out to flout the dictates of the U. S. Supreme Court. Bowles is one of the spearheads in the campaign to end the desegregation of public schools.—INP Photo.

Demand 'Protection' for Pupils

NAACP Goes to Court Over Milford Oyster

Courier Pittsburgh Pa. Sat. 10-9-54 p-1

MILFORD, Del.—Crack mechanics of the NAACP were hard at work this week attempting to repair the ailing motor of the integration express which conked out last week in Milford, Del.

The express rolled to an unscheduled stop here when the Milford School Board, in direct opposition to the U. S. Supreme Court, ruled to bar eleven Negro pupils from the tenth grade of Milford High School.

Chief mechanic Wagner D. Jackson, president of Wilmington's NAACP, termed the failure "shameful and sickening." He called the Milford School Board's action a "surrender to the illegal action of a lawless mob."

* * *

IN THE meantime, parents of ten of the children ousted from Milford High School, filed suit in Chancery Court in Georgetown, Del., Saturday, demanding restoration of the pupils to classes.

The action, which demanded a preliminary injunction against the Milford School Board was lodged before Vice Chancellor William Marvel, who set Oct. 12 as the date for arguments on the petition.

The suit was presented by Atty. Louis J. Redding.

Redding pointed out in the petition that the children of his clients would be inconvenienced and demanded that the pupils be given protection from "any acts of violence, intimidation or coercion." On Saturday, the State Board of Public Instruction had ordered the children to report to classes in Dover and in Georgetown.

Courier

THE SCHOOL BOARD'S decision meant that the eleven Negro pupils were temporarily without a classroom.

After bowing to a boycott of the school by white pupils the board had to figure out a way to send the deposed pupils twenty-odd miles away to an all-Negro high school in Dover, Del.

Sat 10-9-54

However, before this action could be taken the board also had to figure out a way to provide transportation to Dover for the Negro children.

Edmund F. Steiner, president of the Milford School Board, after announcing the segregation decision called upon Milford whites to end their boycott and to return pupils back to the school.

OUT OF 1,562 students, approximately 85 per cent had absented themselves from classes.

Representing the NAACP's newest foe, the National Association for the Advancement of White People, William B. Bowles hailed the Milford incident as "a great victory." He said, "our fight is just beginning."

In the meantime, the Milford hate virus spread into four other Sussex County schools in a manner which hinted at an organized campaign against racial integration in Delaware schools.

* * *

CLASSES WERE suspended last week at Millsboro, Gunboro, Ellendale, and Lincoln, as whites stayed away from the schools in droves, protesting the Milford integration move.

The original Milford school board had quit in a huff over a dispute with the State Board of Education.

A new school board was sworn in on Thursday and immediately announced its intentions. It also asked the state to take over responsibility for the "future education" of the Negro students.

* * *

THE BOARD said that it had "decided in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole to remove the eleven Negro students."

One Milfordian commented wryly, "and Milford's Negro citizens have to pay taxes to support the very schools which discriminate against their children."

EDUCATION 1954 MISSISSIPPI NAACP

Miss. NAACP Will Boycott White Foes of 'Civil Rights'

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 13—The Mississippi Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has served notice on the white "Citizens Councils" that exertion of economic pressure is a "two-way street."

One of the steps announced by the councils composed of "white males dedicated to the preservation of segregation" is the application of economic pressure on Negroes who would attempt integration of the public schools or seek to break down segregation in other categories.

Meeting in their ninth annual convention here, the state NAACP announced plans to "mobilize our resources to meet any threat to the economic welfare of our people."

That announcement was made in disclosing that certain banks and officials of companies selling various products have threatened to withhold credit from colored people who seek their civil rights." The conference also charged that "some of these officials have threatened the discharge of Negro employes who are working for full citizenship."

"We shall carefully list the names of all companies whose top officials use threats or intimidation to halt the advance of civil rights," the conference announced. "With the help of our branches throughout the country and our many friends and sympathizers, we shall work for a rigid boycott of the products or services sold by these companies inside and outside of Mississippi.

"We shall also send the names of the individuals to our national office for a determination of whether or not there have been violations of federal laws in such cases," the announcement revealed.

With reference to the organization of the "Citizens Councils" the NAACP group said:

"We abhor efforts of certain persons and groups, including the Citizens Councils and their ilk, to thwart and rebel against a decision by our highest federal judiciary by striking and demonstrating against our national laws. We loathe those cowards who slink in the background instigating, aiding and abetting this infamous rebellion.

"We urge federal, state and local governments to investigate these illegal acts," the conference action said.

Announcing it will fight for full and immediate educational integration at all levels, including the colleges, the council expressed opposition to a constitutional amendment, to be voted on Dec. 21, under which the legislature, as a last resort, would be authorized to abolish public schools to prevent integration.

"We deplore and condemn the referendum authorized by the legislature, and endorsed by Gov. Hugh White, which, if approved by the electorate, would give the legislature power to abolish public school education," the NAACP said. "We call on voters of Mississippi to defeat this proposal because it is corrupt, unethical and an obnoxious reflection upon the dignity and integrity of our officials who have taken an oath to uphold the law of the land."

It also characterized the recently ratified constitutional amendment increasing educational requirements of qualified electors as "a simple-minded attempt to get around the requirement of the 15th amendment to the constitution of the United States." The NAACP revealed it will challenge constitutionality of the amendment, which would largely affect Negroes, in the federal courts.

Insisting that "there should be integration at all lvels," the NAACP said it is "ready to sit in conference with school boards and discuss the implementation of the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court on a peaceful basis in the spirit of the American creed of fair play and equal justice to all."

With only 22,000 Mississippi Negroes now qualified electors, the association said it will make "voter registration" a major project.

The new constitutional amendment ratified in the recent general election requires applicants for registration to be able to "read and write" a reasonable interpretation of any section of the constitution pointed out by the county registrar (circuit clerk), and to write in his own hand an essay on citizenship and constitutional government.

Proponents of the amendment admitted it is aimed at curbing qualification of Negroes. It was ratified by a one-sided vote, although only about one-fifth of the present estimated 525,000 qualified electors troubled themselves with going to the polls to vote on the far-reaching proposal. Less than 110,000 voted on the amendments.

NAACP Active In Both Cities

Wilmington & Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 10-9-54 P.1

Bulletin

MIFFORD, Del. — A hearing on a petition for an injunction transferring Negro children from the Milford public schools has been set for Oct. 12 in Georgetown, Del.

The petition was filed by the NAACP Friday after the Milford school board reversed an earlier decision to integrate students at Lake View high school. If the segregation order persists, 11 Negro students will be forced to attend a Negro high school in Dover, 19 miles away. The Dover school is not accreditted by the state.

WASHINGTON — Baltimore was on the brink of eruption over school desegregation last week as officials voted the return of segregation in the Milford, Del. high school.

Demonstrations protesting integration in Baltimore and Milford are said to have been inspired by Bryan Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

White children ended their boycott at Wilford high and returned to classes last Friday after 11 Negro students were ousted by the school board.

The school board, in ordering a return to segregation, bowed to a boycott of the schools by most of the white students who had failed to attend classes last week. The children stayed away at the direction of their parents.

Meanwhile, police rushed to a high school in Southwest Baltimore Friday when 200 white boys and girls, protesting the end of racial segregation, jeered and hurled epithets at 12 Negro students, injuring two of them.

Officials feared an eruption at any time, as a stay-at-home campaign that began suddenly last Thursday because of a dozen Negro kindergarten pupils spread to six schools with 2,000 absentees.

PICKET SCHOOLS

All these schools, most of them ringed by anti-integration pickets, are in the South and Southwestern sections of Baltimore. However, there were also pickets at one school in the Northern part of the city.

The name-calling incident broke out at recess time at Southern high school, where the students themselves had been picketing until police broke them up, ordering them to get to class or go home.

The near-riot ended with the Negro pupils being escorted to safety and the white students being dispersed by the officers. Enrollment at the high school is 1,780, but 900 students stayed away.

For nearly a month, there were no disturbances over the city's end to public school segregation. But last Thursday a group of mothers showed up outside school No. 34 bearing placards demanding separate schools. Only 50 of the school's 750 students were at their desks Friday morning.

As the situation in Baltimore became more tense, the 11 Negro students who had been enrolled in the tenth grade at Milford, Del., were transferred to an all-Negro school at Dover, some 24 miles away.

Simultaneously, about 85 percent of the 1,562 white pupils returned to their classes at the Lakeview avenue combined elementary high school after a week-long boycott.

Sat. 10-9-54

The 11 Negro students were transferred under orders of a new four-member school board, which, after being chosen last Thursday, barred the Negroes "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole."

P. 2

The NAACP promptly threatened to take legal action to reverse the ruling. Wagner D. Jackson, president of the Wilmington charter, called the ruling "A surrender to the illegal action of a lawless mob."

The board defied a plea from Delaware Gov. J. Caleb Boggs who had ordered Milford's two public schools re-opened and appealed to citizens to let "law and order and calmness prevail."

Following reopening of the schools, a cross, reminiscent of the Ku Klux Klan, was ignited on a field across from the Lakeschool.

Bowles, president of the NAAWP hailed the school board's announcement as "a great victory" but declared "our fight is just beginning. Bowles said he planned further protest meetings.

The 34-year-old ex-Marine has been at the route of the anti-Negro demonstrations in the Baltimore Delaware area. He is reported to be under close surveillance now by local and Federal authorities.

It has been revealed that Bowles has a police record.

Willis McCall, the sheriff who killed one and wounded another of the boys convicted in the controversial Groveland rape case, spoke at Milford at the invitation of Bowles.

EDUCATION 1951

NAACP
ROY WILKINS

End all segregation by '63, Wilkins urges civic group

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE

All segregation should be wiped out by 1963, the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation.

This was the impassioned plea of Roy Wilkins, national administrator of the NAACP, as he addressed some 500 persons at the annual Thanksgiving service of the Baltimore branch, here, Sunday afternoon.

The meeting was held at Bethel AME Church.

Mr. Wilkins asked this question:

"... can we ever celebrate the Emancipation Proclamation in 1963 if we have to apologize for our restrictions and admit that after 100 years, we cannot have certain freedoms?

* * *

HE SAID THAT the NAACP has under way a campaign to wipe out all forms of segregation within the next nine years. Citing some of the methods, he said:

"We are using all weapons of law and democratic procedure to achieve our goal. We are using legislative and economic power and strong effective organization."

Looking back on the progress of the association, Mr. Wilkins said that the greatest fight for civil rights was in the field of education.

* * *

"IT WAS NOT an accident," he said. The NAACP planned this campaign in 1929, 1930 and 1931. They began in 1933 in North Carolina by trying to get a boy in the state school of pharmacy, but failed.

"The second try was here in Maryland when they tried to enroll Donald Murray in the University of Maryland. And the tall lanky boy who won that case (Thurgood Marshall) was the same one who argued before the U.S. Supreme Court and won a victory in May 1954."

ROY WILKINS

He said that the roof (against segregation) fell in 1950 when Texas and Oklahoma had to open their institutions to all students by Supreme Court order.

"And on May 17, the same court ruled that segregation had to end in elementary and secondary schools," he said triumphantly.

* * *

MR. WILKINS pointed out that the public housing issue is another great project now concerning the NAACP.

"Victory in this fight will mean we can go where we wish, buy what we want and live where we please," he said.

He said that fighting for civil rights is not a subversive matter, because there's nothing more American.

"Too often people have a tendency to call such a move Communistic when it as against their own beliefs," he charged.

* * *

COMMENTING ON the results of the Nov. 2 elections in Baltimore, he praised the citizens, saying:

"The election of colored candidates to the State Legislature not only encouraged your own people, but told the world that in this land, the lowest man has a chance to come up and have a voice in government."

Music for the services was furnished by the Metropolitan Methodist Church Choir, under the direction of John H. Thomas. The Rev. Harrison J. Bryant, pastor of Bethel, handled devotionals.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, Baltimore NAACP president.

NAACP Attorneys Ask That Integration Program Not Be Prolonged Indefinitely

Washington, D. C.—Decrees ordering immediate desegregation in public schools are asked by the attorneys for NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund in their brief filed with the United States Supreme Court Nov. 15, in answer to the Court's questions on the implementation of the May 17th decision.

However, if the Supreme Court issues its decrees at a time when desegregation would present an administrative problem, September 1955, is the date the Court is asked to order the defendants in the five school segregation cases to put an end to their Jim Crow schools.

Outside Date

On the other hand, should the Court decide to grant the schools time to develop and institute a gradual desegregation plan, then September, 1956, is asked as "the outside date by which desegregation must be accomplished."

The lawyers do not ask the Court to direct or supervise the decrees. They claim no elaborate decree structure is necessary.

Normally, a Supereme Court decision would put an immediate end to an existing unlawful practice, but whatever measures the Court may decide upon to implement the decisions, a time limit should be specified, the attorneys for the Negro children and parents argue.

The May 17th decision was the result of five cases brought before the high court challenging the validity of the statutes requiring the separation of the races in public and elementary schools. They came from Kansas, South Carolina, Delaware, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

To Docket

In handing down the unanimous opinion declaring that the "separate but equal" doctrine has no place in education and that segregated schools established by statutory requirments violates the Federal Constitution, the Supreme Court ordered the five cases restored to the docket for further argument on questions 4 and 5 of the five orginal questions posed in the reargument of the cases in December, 1953.

All parties involved were asked to present their views on whether the Court should direct immediate or gradual desegregation, and when and how it should be done.

Serious Injury

Should the Court decide that gradual adjustment from a segregated to a non-segregated system is necessary, the attorneys for the NAACP Legal Defense ask that the integration program not be allowed to drag on indefinitely.

They point out that, "Each day the relief is postponed is to the appellants a day of serious and irreparable injury; for this Court has announced that segregation of Negroes in public schools generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlkely ever to be undone."

There is no reason to believe that the process of transition would be more effective if allowed to lapse into years, they say.

Without Time

The attorneys agree that delays in some communities might be necessary because of administrative difficultes, but they do believe that the Court would not place the request of desegregation above the need for immediate action to give relief to the many thousands of Negro children now being denied a fair and adequate education.

"Gradual approaches" to desegregation without a time limit could well delay the successful conclusion for five or ten years, the lawyers maintain. Such delay could result in additional manipulation on the part of those bent on circumventing the law and the decrees.

Negro children should be given an opportunity to enjoy the constitutional rights which the Court held on May 17th they are entitled, the lawyers continue. The decrees should contain no provision for extension of time. To grant more time is merely an invitation to put off a desegregation program.

Moreover, the decrees should also provide that in the event the school authorities for any reason at all fail to comply with the time limitation, tethe Negro children should immediately be admitted to the Schools where they applied for enrollment and were refused, the attorneys maintain.

Merely Wait

NAACP Legal Defense lawyers ask that any decree granting time for gradual desegregation be so framed that no state maintaining segregated school system will be encouraged to sit back, do nothing and merely wait for court suits on the assumption that the same period of time will be granted to them after the suit hits the court.

The lawyers also say that if the Court should decide to grant gradual adjustment, it should not formulate detailed decrees but "should send these cases back to the courts where they originated" with "specific instructions to complete desegregation' by a certain date.

Specifications

They urge the Court to issue specific instructions that any decree entered by the district courts should specify "(1) that the process of desegregation be commenced immediately, (2) that appellees be required to file periodic reports to the courts of first instance, and (3 an outer time limit by which desegregation must be completed."

In this argument, the lawyers say that "whatever the reason for gradualism, there is no reason to believe that the process of transition would bemore effective if further extended Therefore, we submit that if the Court decides to grant further time, then all decrees should specify September, 1956 as the outside date by which desegregation must be accomplished."

Atorneys

NAACP Legal Defense attorneys are Thurgood Marshall, NAACP special counsel and director-counsel of NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., New York, and Harold R. Boulware, Columbia, S. C., (the South Carolina case); Robert L. Carter, NAACP assistant special counsel and assistant counsel of Legal Defene, New York, and Charles Scott, Topeka, Kansas (the Topeka case); Spottswood Robinson, III, Southeast regional counsel of Legal Defense and Oliver W. Hill, member of the Legal Defense National Legal Commitee, both of Rochmond, Va. (the Virginia case); Jack Greenberg, Legal Defense assistant counsel, New York, and Louis L. Redding, member Legal Defense National Legal Committee, Wilmington, Del. (Delaware case); and James M. Nabrit, professor of Law at Howard University and member of Legal Defense National Legal Committee, and George E. C. Hayes, Washington, D. C. (the D. C. case)

preme Court decision that racial segregation in the schools is now unconstitutional."

"The wide publicity on the very few instances of outright resistance has tended to obscure the fact that the vast majority of the communities that announced a desegregation plan for this term have executed it without incident and fanfare," said Wilkins.

After charging adult leadership of resistance movements, Wilkins asserted that in Milford, Del., "there is more than a little evidence that an outside organization took advantage of a wavering school board to whip up resistance sentiment."

In Milford, Negro and white students were integrated in the previously all-white Milford High School. But State officials said agitation by the National Association for the Advancement of White People, led by Bryant W. Bowles, halted integration for the present.

NAACP Sees Integration As Orderly

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 27 (AP). An official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says that the majority of communities which put desegregation plans into effect this year did so "without incident and fanfare."

Roy Wilkins, administrator for the NAACP, said in those instances where resistance was met "adults led the efforts, not the students."

Wilkins spoke at the opening session of a two-day regional conference called by the NAACP, he said, to consider means for "aiding prompt and orderly compliance with the Su-

South Confused, NAACP Asks Integration By '56

Defender Chicago, Ill. P. 1

WASHINGTON — While confusion gripped the South over the school issue, the NAACP asked the Supreme Court to set Sept. 1, 1956 as the deadline for integration in public schools all over the land.

The request came with the filing of briefs on how to implement the Supreme Court decision of May 17.

The NAACP's joint brief was filed on behalf of all childen involved in the Virginia, Delaware, Kansas, South Carolina and the District of Columbia school cases.

It urged that the court hand down decrees ending school segregation as quickly as administrative changes can be made in various states and communities and it suggested that this could be accomplished by Sept. 1955 with 1956 as an outside deadline for the final stages.

James E. Nabritt and George L. C. Hayes, attorneys for the children in the D. C. case disagreed violently with the brief filed by the District for the school board in which it said that no further court action was needed because integration would be completed by next year.

Defender

The two lawyers contended that it would be necessary for the Supreme Court to order immediate integration in Washington schools and they charged that the so-called Corning plan of gradualism had already brought about undue disturbances and hardships.

Sat. 11-27-54

Other states which filed briefs were Maryland, Florida, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware and Kansas. Filing also as a friend of the court was the American Veterans Committee which supported the NAACP stand of immediate integration.

P. 2

The Arkansas brief suggested that the problem be settled by Congress. Maryland declared that under no circumstances should little children of any race be used as guinea pigs in experiments to support or destroy any one's social theory." It urged a gradual system with the determination of time left to the local communities.

SOUNDS WARNING

The Virginia brief declared that it would take more than a generation to work out the peaceful solution to integration and said that "educational chaos" would result from hasty moves. It warned that unless an ample unspecified time were allowed Virginia might have to close its public schools.

South Carolina wants the case returned to the Clarendon County Court where it originated from for arbitration. Kansas also suggested a program of gradual desegregation, but the NAACP retorted that the gradualism asked for was only a delaying tactic and an escape clause.

MAKE SUGGESTION

A suggestion that the actual racial integration of the schools be handled by federal district courts in the states was made by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon County, S. C., and the attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the high court.

North Carolina predicted that a decree requiring North Carolina to desegregate its public schools immediately might lead to the abolition of the public school system.

Maryland feels confident about the final outcome but wants to be left alone to devise in good faith a timetable to carry out the Supreme Court decision.

Texas is of the opinion that the matter of choice should be left largely to the children involved.

Delaware proposed that the Supreme Court fix a date "beyond which there will be no further postponement."

Florida fears for its public school system unless the Supreme Court grants the state time to work out the tremendous problems of desegregation."

Oklahoma was concerned about the financial strain the changeover would place on the state.

EDUCATION 1954

Negro Lawyers Waging Stand Against Delay

Brownell Invited To Join Discussion At December Hearing

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (AP)—Attorneys for Negro parents told the Supreme Court today they would accept a slight delay in the wiping out of racially segregated public schools, but only until next September, the start of the next school year.

However, six Southern states told the court an abrupt switch would be dangerous and would disrupt their educational systems. The gravest concern was expressed by North Carolina, which said integration of the races might bring "bloody race riots."

A suggestion that the actual racial integration of the schools be handled by federal district courts in the states was made by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon County, S. C., and the attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the segregation cases before the high court.

Broad Discretion

The states urged that the lower courts be given broad discretion to direct the integration to meet local conditions. The attorneys for the Negroes asked the court to lay down strict limitations to avoid "any invitation to procrastinate."

Arkansas proposed that the court ask Congress to say how desegregation should be accomplished under the court's ruling of last May 17 that racial segregation in the schools violated the Constitution.

In handing down its historic decision the court decided to hear further argument on how desegregation could be carried out. These arguments are scheduled to start Dec. 6. Today was the deadline for filing briefs on which the oral presentations will be based.

The Supreme Court invited Atty. Gen. Brownell to participate in the December arguments. His aides said today the Justice Department will file its brief, preliminary to the argument sessions, in a week or ten days.

One Hour Each

Both sides in the segregation cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia have been allotted one hour each for oral argument. One hour each also was granted to states not directly involved in the original cases before the court—Maryland, North Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas. It is not known which of the attorneys general for each of these latter states will use the time allotted to them.

Some of the Southern states that filed briefs today said there was no constitutional bar to the court using its discretion to permit gradual desegregation. But attorneys for the Negroes said, "It would be paradoxical indeed if, in the instant cases, it were decided for the first time that constitutional rights may be postponed because of anticipation of difficulties arising out of local feelings."

The attorneys said "piecemeal" desegregation of schools would increase tension and they urged that if the court decides on a gradual system there be "minimum safeguards" to prevent injury to Negro children. There must be safeguards, too, the attorneys said, against gradual adjustment having no specific ending.

A camel's temperature can increase as much as 11 degrees Fahrenheit without injury to the animal.

File brief for high court action

P. 1

Asks that all schools democratize Gradualism allowed until Sept., 1956

By JAMES L. HICKS

WASHINGTON — The NAACP flatly asked the Supreme Court, Monday, to issue decrees ordering South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas, Virginia and the District of Columbia to end all school segregation by September of 1955.

Lawyers for the association further told the court that if the court decides to use a "gradual" approach to the problem and give the states more time, that such a time should not, in any case, extend beyond September of 1956.

This in sum, was the nub of the NAACP's answer to the final two, of the now celebrated "five questions" which the court asked lawyers on both sides of the school cases to discuss when it handed down its historic decision of May 17.

—o O o—

THE NAACP'S plea was contained in a 35-page brief filed with the Supreme Court by NAACP lawyers as attorneys for the defending four other states and the District of Columbia filed their answers to the questions with the court.

In the two questions the court asked the lawyers on both sides to discuss whether the court should order colored children in the four states and the district of Columbia to be admitted to white schools "forthwith," or whether the court should set up a "gradual" system of integration extending over a period of time.

The NAACP was concise and to the point: Lawyers for the Association told the court that only by issuing a decree requiring desegregation as quickly" as possible" could the court "discharge its judicial responsibility" to the colored school children who are being deprived of their constitutional rights in forced attendance at jim crow schools. And they reminded the court that the court itself has ruled that being forced to attend segregated schools is a denial of constitutional rights.

The lawyers pointed out that under normal judicial procedure when the court found that segregation was unconstitutional, decress would have been immediately issued forbidding the continuation of such segregation.

—o O o—

THEY ARGUED that since the the court had ruled segregation unconstitutional as far back as May 17, 1954, a target date of September, 1955, will have given the defending states 16 months to "complete whatever adjustments are necessary" to end segregation. They, therefore, argued that the court order all the defendants to end segregation by September, 1955.

In the second question, the lawyers were required by the court to "assume" that the court would order and end to segregation "gradually" and they were ordered by the court to also submit argument under this assumption.

After making it crystal clear that they see no reason whatever for the court to set up a gradual plan of desegregation, the NAACP lawyers, nevertheless complied with court's instructions and submitted proposals for gradual desegregation.

"If this court," NAACP lawyer said, "should decide to permit a effective gradual adjustment from segregated schools . . . . should not formulate detailed decrees but should remand these cases to the courts of the first instance with specific directions to complete desegregation by a day certain."

This is where the September, 1956, date entered the NAACP's argument.

—o O o—

THE LAWYERS pointed out that the court had required them to "assume" that it would set up a gradual system of desegregation, and they stated plainly that they do not feel the court will take such action.

But they said even under such an assumption they feel that to give the defending states until September, 1956, to gradually desegregate would be "generous in the extreme."

"Therefore," the NAACP brief said, "we submit that if the court decides to grant further time, then all decrees should specify September, 1956, as the outside date by which desegregation must be accomplished."

Then, obviously with a view toward having the court's decrees envelop all the 17 states having segregated schools, the NAACP brief told the court:

—o O o—

"A DECREE granting appelless time for gradual adjustment should be so framed that no other state maintaining such a system is lulled into a period of inaction and induced to merely await suit on the assumption that it will be granted the same period of time after such suit is instituted."

The brief pointed out that the court's May 17 decision had put all states "on notice" that segregated schools are unconstitutional.

NAACP lawyers further asked the court to "make it plain" if it should follow a course of gradualism, "that the time for completion of desegration program will not depend on the success of failure of interim actities.

"The decree in the instant cases," the lawyers argued, "should accordingly provide that in the event school authorities should for any reason fail to comply with the time limitation of the decree, colored children should be immediately admitted to the schools to which they apply."

The brief asked further that in the event of a gradualism plan any decree so issued would specify:

(1) That the process of desegregation be commenced immediaely.

(2) That the states be required to make periodic process reports on desegregation, and

(3) That an outer time limit be by which desegregation must be completed.

Argument in the cases will be heard Dec. 6. NAACP attorneys making the arguments will be Thurgood Marshall, Spottswood Robinson, Robert Carter, Jack Greenberg and Louis L. Redding, who will argue the South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas and Delaware cases.

The District of Columbia cases will be argued by James Nabrit and George E. C. Hayes, attorneys.

Retarded Childrens Week

NEW YORK — With the endorsement of President Eisenhower, the first National Retarded Children's Week began Monday under the co-chairmanship of Roy Rogers and Dale Evans, with the theme, "Retarded Children Can Be Helped."

In A Nutshell

WASHINGTON—The NAACP brief filed with the Supreme Court, Monday, in the historic school cases asks the court in summary to do two things:

First, the lawyers ask the court to issue decrees which would order the states immediately to begin to integrate their schools without further delay, and complete integration by September, 1955.

This is the official position of the NAACP and is the crux of the brief.

But because all lawyers in the case were ordered by the court to "assume" that it would order integration to proceed through gradualism and therefore to submit arguments as to how the integration order is to be implemented, NAACP lawyers were forced to submit arguments on how they feel desegregation should gradually be accomplished.

In reply to this directive by by the court, NAACP lawyers said in summary that they are opposed to any and all gradual plans, but that if that is the way the court will rule in the cases then they urge the court to set up a gradual plan with teeth in it so that all desegregation will be accomplished by September of 1956.

The NAACP's position in the case is that the court itself has declared that the constitutional rights of colored children are being denied them when they are forced to go to segregated schools and that since the court has so decided, there is no court of record anywhere to delay giving them the relief to which they are entitled.

N.A.A.C.P. ASSAILS BRANCH ON BOWLES

Denounces Peekskill Official for Bid to Bias Backer and Calls Off Parley

By MURRAY SCHUMACH

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sharply criticized yesterday the head of one of its branches for inviting Bryant W. Bowles to address a three-day state conference of the N. A. A. C. P.

Mr. Bowles, who as founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, has been active in fighting integration in the schools in Delaware, had accepted the invitation. To block Mr. Bowles' address, scheduled for Sunday at Peekskill, the conference was indefinitely postponed by Dr. Channing H. Tobias, chairman of the board of directors of N. A. A. C. P., who said the invitation "has brought about an intolerable situation."

Dr. Tobias said the invitation had been issued by Melvin Tapley, head of the Peekskill branch of the N. A. A. C. P., without the knowledge of those in charge of the conference, which was to have started Friday.

Mr. Tapley said he had invited Mr. Bowles to speak after the planning committee of his branch had agreed this would be an illustration of democracy at work.

'Everyone Should Be Heard'

"We felt," Mr. Tapley said last night, "that since integration would be the most important subject up for discussion at the conference we ought to listen to the most vocal opponent of integration and give him a chance to say why he was against it. Since this is America, we think that everyone should be heard, even Bowles."

Dr. Tobias differed with this position. He said he had ordered Mr. Tapley to rescind the invitation because Mr. Bowles was "infamous for his role in organizing and inciting people to violate the established laws of our land."

"Under no circumstances," said the message to Mr. Tapley, "shall you, as president of the branch, or any member thereof, invite or permit Bowles or any other individual in his category to participate in any N. A. A. C. P. meeting of any type, at any time, under any circumstances.

"You are also advised that the national office is instructed to investigate the circumstances surrounding you action in inviting Bowles and to make a full report to the next meeting of the board of directors."

After sending the message to Mr. Tapley, Dr. Tobias said there was "a strong probability" that the board of governors would relieve the Peekskill branch of its charter. Such a step, he added, would certainly be considered at the board's meeting on Nov. 8 at 20 West Fortieth Street.

300 Members in Branch

Dr. Tobias declared that the national organization "disclaims all responsibility for this unprecedented foolishness." He said he had not "the slightest idea why Mr. Tapley issued the invitation."

According to Henry Lee Moon, director of public relations for the N. A. A. C. P., no branch has lost its charter in more than ten years. During the early Forties, Mr. Moon said, a few of the organization's 1,300 branches were relieved of their charters. The reason at that time, Mr. Moon explained, was that these branches had become infiltrated by "extreme left-wing" groups.

Mr. Tapley said his branch had 300 members and he had been its president for two years. He is an artist for The Amsterdam News, a Negro newspaper.

He said he planned to talk to Dr. Tobias before taking any further action in connection with the invitation to Mr. Bowles.

Dr. Tobias said he had not heard of the invitation until he returned to his office yesterday morning after delivering speeches in Spartanburg, S. C.

N.A.A.C.P. Cancels Speech At Parley by Integration Foe

New York, Oct. 18 (AP)—The National Association for The Advancement of Colored People today denied its platform to Bryant Bowles and stingingly rebuked the man who had invited him to speak.

Bowles, president of the National Association for The Advancement of White People, is a bitter opponent of desegregating Southern schools, in contrast to the other group, which champions integration.

Meeting Postponed

Last week Melvin Tapley, president of the N.A.A.C.P. branch at Peekskill, N. Y., announced Bowles had accepted an invitation to address a state conference there.

Today Dr. Channing H. Tobias, the N.A.A.C.P.'s board chairman, wired Tapley that the meeting had been postponed until another time and place, not announced.

He ordered Tapley and the branch not to permit Bowles or "any other individual in his category" to participate "in any N.A.A.C.P. meeting of any type, at any time, under any circumstance."

Tobias said of Bowles:

"Bowles is well known as an outspoken opponent of the rights of minority groups and the Consitution and laws of the United States and the several states."

'Obviously Inimical'

"Your invitation to him is obviously inimical to the best interest of the N.A.A.C.P. . . ."

Tobias said the invitation to Bowles was issued without the knowledge of Mrs. Effie Gordon, president of the N.A.A.C.P. state conference.

32b 1954

Swift, Courier Action Foils Chief

Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 10-30-54

(Special to the Courier)

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J —An abortive attempt by Police Chief George F. Kane to intimidate the local branch of the NAACP and to suppress distribution of a Courier circular on "The South Speaks" was quickly squashed here by united action this week.

Moving swiftly and in concert, the Courier, the NAACP and the American Civil Liberties Union struck back and thwarted Kane's effort to ban an advertising throwaway, more than 100,000 copies of which have been freely circulated in the Deep South.

And Mayor John Lynch, who ordered an investigation of Kane's one-man crusade, assured the Courier and the NAACP branch that it is free to distribute the circular anywhere it chooses in the city limits here.

KANE BEGAN his drive against the local NAACP chapters last Monday, Oct. 18, less than twelve hours before officials of the branch were to confer with Negro residents of the nearby Franklin Township on charges that the township Board of Education had rezoned its school districts in order to perpetuate segregation of Negro pupils, in spite of the historic Supreme Court decision.

At 10 A. M., a detective came to the home of Nathan O. Gumbs Jr., 150 Handy Street. He told Gumbs, who is president of the New Brunswick branch of the NAACP:

"The chief wants to see you right away. You're the fellow who's been distributing these leaflets."

GUMBS LATER went to police headquarters where he was confronted by Kane.

"What do you mean distributing these circulars?" the police chief demanded. "Don't you know they'll incite trouble here? Do you want us to have trouble like they have down South?"

Gumbs tried to point out that the circulars only advertised a series of forthcoming Courier articles by two of the paper's top reporters on how the Supreme Court-ordered integration is proceeding in fourteen Southern states, but Kane cut him off.

Sat. 10-30-54

He ordered him to appear before Magistrate Joseph Takas the next morning and to bring the remaining 1,000 of the 3,000 circulars with him.

"And I warn you not to put any more of them out," he said.

* * *

GUMBS WENT to City Hall and searched local ordinances. He could find none preventing the distribution of circulars.

On his return home he found that a detective had also called Mrs. Ruth Jackson, secretary of the NAACP branch, and ordered her to appear at police headquarters also.

The branch called an emergency executive meeting for Tuesday night, after Gumbs appeared before Magistrate Takas that morning and was informed briefly that he needed a permit to continue distribution of "The South Speaks" circular.

He was accompanied to court by Atty. Jack Wysocker, the branch's counsel. Both Wysocker and Gumbs returned to City Hall where they again found that no ordinance forbade such distribution, and that night, while the executive committee was meeting, Magistrate Takas withdrew from his previous position.

* * *

MEANWHILE, HOWEVER, Gumbs had wired the Courier of Chief Kane's action, and the civil rights forces swung into action.

Mrs. Daisy Lampkin, vice president of the Pittsburgh Courier Publishing Company, Inc., and a ranking official of the national NAACP, wired New Brunswick Commissioner of Public Safety James T. Shine.

Almost simultaneously, Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the NAACP who had directed the successful fight for the historic Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation, wired shine:

"Just been advised by the New Brunswick branch of the NAACP that Police Chief Kane has ordered our branch to discontinue distribution of leaflets entitled 'The South Speaks.'

"This action by Police Chief Kane is clearly without warrant of law. Therefore, we request you to instruct Police Chief Kane to discontinue his effort to prevent free distribution of these leaflets."

* * *

PATRICK M. MALIN, director of the American Civil Liberties Union in New York, ordered the ACLU special counsel in New Brunswick to contact Gumbs immediately and to offer the legal services of the famed national organization to challenge the ban in court.

The Courer discovered that Public Safety Commissioner Shine was in the Veterans Hospital, suffering from a long illness, so the matter was placed directly before Mayor Lynch.

"This is the first I have heard of the matter," he said. "I will have it investigated immediately and see that action is taken."

WITHIN TWELVE hours, Mayor Lynch said that his investigation showed that there "must have been some kind of misunderstanding" and that "it is all squared away now."

"I have instructed Safety Commissioner Shine to inform the Courier immediately that the NAACP or anyone else is free to distribute the leaflet anywhere it chooses in New Brunswick," he said.

Smacked down by his superiors, Kane attempted to deny that he had ordered distribution of the circular halted and the remaining copies of "The South Speaks" seized.

"I made it plain to the man (Gumbs) that at no time was he under arrest," he said.

"All we were interested in who was handing the circular out. We don't like for outsiders to come in here and pass out things and litter up the streets.

"But I have nothing against the man and what he was handing out. I agree with everything that was in the circular ("The South Speaks") and we're 100 per cent for the paper (Courier)."

NAACP

DESPITE KANE'S backdown, however, the local executive committee of the NAACP voted unanimously to protest his abortive action at the next meeting of the New Brunswick City Council, the first week in November.

The group also set up a special committee to investigate complaints that the Franklin Township school officials are seeking to perpetuate segregation in spite of the Supreme Court decision.

EDUCATION 1954

NAACP

ATTY. THURGOOD MARSHALL

Good government is key to integration

'Leave it to children,' Thurgood Marshall tells Virginia NAACP

MARTINSVILLE, Va.— Good government will win out in the fight to end segregation, Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the NAACP, told some 1,500 delegates here Sunday.

Speaking at the Freedom Fund rally which closed a three-day state NAACP convention, Marshall said if the problem of integrating the public schools were left to the children themselves there would be no problem.

He added that the "good people of any community—and they are in the majority"—also realize their responsibilities on the segregation question.

—o O o—

"VIRGINIA IS no different than any other state," Marshall declared. "If they can desegregate schools in Baltimore, they can desegregate schools anywhere, including Biloxi, Miss."

The Baltimore-born attorney, who led the NAACP's successful fight before the Supreme Court to have public school segregation declared unconstitutional, said the NAACP never has been more encouraged nor more certain that the counry is moving toward eventual desegregation.

Dr. J. M. Tinsley, Richmond dentist and president of the Virginia NAACP, lashed out at General Almond for their attempts to retain segregation for Virginia public schools.

"These men and other officials like them, are our enemies," Dr. Tinsley declared. "It is men like this that encourage organized groups to do violence to colored children."

—o O o—

EARLIER SUNDAY morning, the delegates had re-elected Dr. Tinlsey for his 20th consecutive term as president of the state conference.

Officers chosen were Dr. E. B. Henderson of Falls Church, vice president; Dr. S. F. Coppage of Norfolk, treasurer; Oliver W. Hill, Richmond, chairman of of legal staff; Martin A. Martin, Richmond, vice chairman.

Members of the executive board, re-elected for three-year terms were J. S. Carrington, South Boston; the Rev. W. J. Hodge, Lynchburg; Dr. John B. Henderson, Norfolk and Charles D. Fowler of Charlottesville, a new member.

Added to the state legal staff was Hugo Madison, Norfolk attorney.

EDUCATION 1954

NAACP

DR. CHANNING H. TOBIAS

Dr. Tobias explains why Byrnes left high court

...SPARTANBURG, S.C. — Why ... South Carolina's Gov. James ... leave the U.S. Su... Court

...what NAACP Board ... Dr. Channing H. To... had to say to the question ... address to the South Caro... NAACP convention here last ...

... and one-half years ... Secretary of State, ... James F. Byrnes, in... office in the ... Department to request me ... my country in a dis... diplomatic post. I stated to ... that as much as ... the offer of this un... opportunity, I could not ... because of ... engagements.

"HE WAS NOT satisfied with my first word of declination and proceeded to put rather heavy pressure upon me to accept.

Then I said to him that I could understand why no one who resigned from the security of the Supreme Court bench to serve his country in ... lets re... and ... difficult ... as Chief Assistant ... the President, would put pres... sure on others to serve where service was most needed. To which he replied that I, like most other people, did not know the true reason that led him to resign from the Supreme Court. I then said that the last case on which he sat was the decisive factor.

"IT WAS A case that had taken 20 years to come before the court. 'There I was,' said the Secretary, "sitting there listening to arguments based upon 20-year-old eveidence, and outside the world was on fire.

"I was so disgusted,' continued the Secretary, "that at the first opportunity I took up the receiver, called President Roosevelt and told him that I was at his service.'"

Dr. Tobias said he was now ... Mr. Byrnes, to use his influence in implementing school integration in South Carolina for "the world is still on fire."

School issue stirred world, Tobias avers

SPARTANBURG, S.C. — Dr. Channing H. Tobits, speaking at the 14th annual meeting of the South Carolina State Conference of NAACP Branches Friday declared that the Clarendon County suit to abolish public school segregation captured the imagination of liberal minded people throughout the world.

In a strong denunciation of the foes of integration, the chairman of the NAACP board of directors said that the most effective allies of America's enemies are not the "Communists in this country, but rather they are the advocates of 'standpatism" in race relations.

"In a changing world, race relations in South Carolina, or elsewhere in this nation, cannot remain unaltered," he declared. "White supremacy, or the supremacy of any racial group, is doomed.

— o O o —

"NEITHER SCIENCE or morality recognizes a 'inferior' or 'superior' races," the speaker said. "Both the laboratory and the pulpit are agreed that mankind is one—that the differences among men are minor as compared with their basic and enduring similarities.

"The rejection of science and religion by the racists creates a crisis throughout the world. It is a rejection of humanity and will not accept it. Peoples of the world will continue to struggle against this arrogance of a mility," Dr. Tobias stated, alluding to the predominance of darkskinned peoples in the world as compared to whites.

The speaker said that if it is mandatory for the United States to avoid the charge of racial prejudice as stated in a report by the President's Committee on Government Contracts, ... important enough to require fair employment legislation in Congress.

— o O o —

THE WORLD IS "still on fire," Dr. Tobias declared, a fact which he affirmed must be brought home to those who burn the homes of law-abiding citizens who are seeking to improve their living conditions.

"Those who perpetrate such crimes," he stated, "should be brought to relize that every time they set the torch to an innocent person's home, they help to burn the foundations that support America's leadership in the free world."

of Tapley's invitation to Bowles last Monday on his return from a trip south and took immediate action. He said the Peekskill branch had no authority to invite anyone to participate in the state conference.

The national board will investigate the motive behind issuing such an invitation and will report back in three weeks.

Meanwhile, Tobias has wired Tapley that the meeting has been postponed until another time and place, not announced.

The board has the power to revoke a chapter's charter if it finds a situation that is "intolerable," Tobias said.

"And I certainly do feel that issuing such an invitation is intolerable," he added.

— o O o —

TAPLEY SAID that the invitation to Bowles had been issued on Oct. 8 before Bowles was arrested in Delaware for leading a boycott delegation on the schools of Milford, where he was active in stirring up agitation against colored students attending the local high school.

The 300 - member chapter's planning board, Tapley said, had "decided unanimously" to invite Bowles.

Bowles accepted the invitation last Saturday, but declined to accept the chapter's offer of transportation and hotel accomodations.

"The theme of the conference is 'Implementation of the Supreme Court's Decision," Tapley said, "and we wanted to hear why he says he is against the decision."

Tobias attacks bid for Bowles to speak to revoke Peekskill's charter NAACP board head threatens

NEW YORK (ANP) — In a sharply worded telegram, Dr. Channing Tobias rebuked Melvin Tapley, president of the Peekskill chapter of the NAACP for inviting Bryant W. Bowles to address the state-wide meeting of the organization.

Threatening to revoke the charter of the chapter, for inviting Bowles to speak at the meeting, scheduled last week, in Peekskill, Tobias said:

"The last thing in the world that the national office of the state conference of the NAACP would do would be to invite a character like that to take part in a program, even if the program were designed to show him up.

"It is intolerable to extend an invitation to a man who stands in defiance of the implementation of the orders of the United States Supreme Court.

"He is not only up for trial in connection with his efforts to prevent these children from attending school—there are formal charges against him in Florida and Maryland—but he is facing legal action in connection with the funds of his organization and his own income tax returns."

— o O o —

HE HAD, Tobias said, learned

The Real Bryant Bowles

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

WASHINGTON—Some time before the winter's thaw, the U. S. Supreme Court is expected to spell out the terms of its May 17 decision banning segregation in public school education.

Before and after the Court stipulates ways of putting into practice this momentous decision there will be one name very much in the news—34 year-old Florida-born Bryant William Bowles.

Bowles, a struggling contractor who has been indicted several times on bad check charges suddenly leaped into the limelight as the new spokesman for the Old South.

HE SET HIMSELF up as president-founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and immediately began soliciting members at $5 a year.

A spokesman for the NAAWP told the Courier last week that memberships were pouring in from all parts of the United States and from at least two foreign countries.

At the association headquarters, 1319 F Street N. W. Washington, D. C., Mrs. Bowles, secretary of the NAAWP, confirmed the report and denied the rumor that most of the organization's funds were coming from behind the South's "Grits and Gravy Curtain."

* * *

SHE SAID that memberships have come from all of the forty-eight states and that as much mail comes from the North as from the South. She singled out Philadelphia as being especially enthusiastic toward the movement.

"What is Bowles like?" everyone asks. "Who is this man who has out-Talmadged Talmadge? What is his appeal?"

To his mushrooming followers he is a patriotic American out to preserve the white and the Negro races, a sincere advocate of the separation of races.

His critics see him as a dangerous demagog, a shrewd opportunist who has siezed the chance to enrich himself and bask in the limelight. This is the prevailing opinion.

LIKE ALL MEN of Mr. Bowles' ilk, he is clever. He knows that it's easier to inflame than to inform and his basic tools are vicious half truths.

Ignorance and blind hatred of racial progress appear to be the dominant characteristics of a considerable element in Bowles' mass following. His inner circle, however, is said to consist of some native-grown neo-Fascists who are operating according to a well-ordered plan. Their efforts are reportedly heavily financed by Southern capital.

Among the welter of rumors floating around in the wake of the Bowles vogue is a consistent report that the NAAWP's birth was deliberately conceived at a time when it was designated to try to influence the Supreme Court to hand down a meaningless "gradualist decision."

* * *

IN TALKING with members of the mob, these reporters heard Bowles' admirers term him "handsome," "persuasive," "powerful," "a born leader" who is also "too slick for them." The "them" apparently are the law-abiding citizens who desire to follow the court's ruling.

Bowles tape records his speeches, saying "they're not going to put any words into my mouth." He manages to get the undertones of his remarks to his listeners by well timed winks and other gestures that are not recorded. For an example, he said: "If the law of Baltimore says that we can't picket, then we won't picket . . . if the law says that we can't keep our children out of school then we won't keep them out." He smiles to his audience and with a knowing wink assures them that what he is saying is just so much hogwash.

He never misses an opportunity to get into the record that he is not against the Negro. He explains his anti-Negro attitude as being in the best interest of the Negro and the white gentile.

* * *

HIS TEXAS-BORN wife, mother of his two daughters, denied rumors that there was a tie-in with the NAAWP and the KKK and claimed to have never heard of Gerald L. K. Smith.

Bowles' financial condition prior to the recent interest shown in his NAAWP is highlighted by a series of indictments from 1952 to as late as June 18 of this year for bad checks, larceny after trust, and fraud.

The Washington Star of Oct. 7, 1954, carried this comment on the Ericksen case:

"Larceny after trust — October, 1952. 'Feloniously and fraudulently converted to his own uses' $5,000 entrusted to him by Capt. Edward W. Ericksen, a New York tugboat operator, to be applied in building of a six unit motel at La Plata, Md. Contract between Ericksen and Bryant Roofing and Home Improvement Corp. March 10, 1953, Bowles signed agreement following civil action, handled by Sherbow & Sherbow, 1316 Munsey Building, Baltimore, to pay Ericksen $1,000 on each of five successive Mondays starting March 16, 1953. With deductions for surveys, etc., the total due Ericksen, Sherbow & Sherbow says, is $4,700.

"On April 30, 1954, Edward F. Shea Jr. of Sherbow & Sherbow wrote to N. Peter Moser, assistant state's attorney, as follows: 'Our file further shows that on March 16, 1953, Mr. Bowles telephoned our office . . . he would appear with the payment that day . . . Mr. Bowles never appeared. . . .'"

Segregation Figure Hits Mail Carrier

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27 (AP)—Bryant W. Bowles, who sparked recent segregation moves at Washington, Baltimore and Delaware schools, was arrested today on a charge of assaulting a Negro postman who delivers mail to his office here.

Bowles, founder of the National Assn. for Advancement of White People, was freed under $300 bond. He will be arraigned in municipal court tomorrow.

Bowles told reporters he struck Roscoe V. Cooper, employe of the local post office for 15 years, because "he called my wife a liar. Then I picked him up and knocked him down again."

Cooper said the altercation involved a dispute that started when Bowles asked him why he was separating his mail from that of other tenants in the office building.

Cooper said he had been ordered to do it because post offices in other cities protested they were getting mail from Bowles' office without the necessary stamps.

Bowles' scheme

MILFORD, Del. — Bryant Bowles of the NAAWP stated last week he would permit colored people to attend his meetings if they segregate themselves and not ask to join his organization.

"They can come as long as they remain segregated here," Bowles said. "They can stand in the rear of the platform and there is to be no mixing, but if some do want to take a stand we will welcome them anad drive a wedge betweenn them and the NAAWP."

Bowles said he had been contacted by some colored people who wanted to attend his meetings and take a stand for segregation. He did not call any names.

Bowles and 'Gang'—Bryant Bowles (left), state leaders of the hate group. In several speeches Bowles founder-president of the NAAWP, poses in Milford, Del., with the alleged Delaware intimated that he had connections in the state from the Governor's office on down.

EDUCATION 1954

BRYANT W. BOWLES
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WHITE PEOPLE

Bowles Faces Court Here On Warrant Charges

Washington, D.C. Assault on Postman

R 9-33

Bryant W. Bowles, president of the Association for the Advancement of White People, today faces court action, after being served with a warrant accusing him of assaulting a Washington postman.

Mr. Bowles posted $300 bond at No. 1 Precinct last night, after he was served with the warrant at his office, 1319 F street N.W. Municipal Court Judge Thomas Scalley issued the paper after the postman, Roscoe V. Cooper, Negro, swore it out, following a hearing in the office of Assistant United States Attorney Kenneth Wood.

Mr. Cooper, of 5208 Central avenue S.E., was represented by Attorney Roy Garvin, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Beating Alleged.

The information in a warrant is brief. According to Mr. Cooper's application for the paper, Mr.

ROSCOE COOPER
Accuses Bowles.

Bowles struck and kicked him last Monday night in the lobby of the F street building. Mr. Cooper also stated that his left eye was swollen, and his face and body bruised from "the severe beating."

An argument had developed over the manner in which the postman collected the outgoing NAAWP mail, investigating police officers were told.

Mr. Bowles told Mr. Cooper his wife had noticed that the postman put the association's mail under his arm, and not with the other mail in the bag.

A 73-year-old elevator operator at the building, Augustus Finley, colored, of 511 D streets S.E., said he tried to aid Mr. Cooper during the attack.

Says Separation Ordered.

Mr. Cooper said he was ordered to separate the association's mail because the Post Office had received complaints of insufficient postage.

Mr. Bowles said he admits "striking him (Mr. Cooper) once, picking him up, hitting him again, picking him up again—but I never kicked him. I've never kicked a man in my life."

Mr. Cooper is 5 feet, 5 inches tall and weighs 138 pounds. He is believed to be the smallest member of the city's postal force.

Mr. Bowles also told reporters he had to borrow $25 from his office staff to raise the $300 bail.

In Municipal Court yesterday, Mr. Cooper was also accompanied by Eugene Davidson, president of the local chapter of the NAACP. Mr. Davidson said his organization will check with postal authorities to see if there is any basis for a Federal charge.

Bowles Seized, Inquirer Hit Postman Philadelphia

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27 (UP).—Bryant W. Bowles, who sparked recent segregation moves at Washington, Baltimore and Delaware schools, was arrested today on charges of assaulting a Negro postman who delivers mail to his office here. Thur. 10-28-54

Bowles, founder of the organization known as the National Association for Advancement of White People, was freed under $300 bond. He will be arraigned in municipal court tomorrow.

Bowles told reporters that he struck Roscoe V. Cooper, employe of the local post office for 15 years, because "he called my wife a liar. Then I picked him up and knocked him down again."

Cooper said the altercation involved a dispute that started when Bowles asked him why he was separating his mail from that of other tenants in the office building.

Cooper said he had been ordered to do it because post offices in other cities protested they were getting mail from Bowles' office without the necessary stamps.

Evening Star Washington D.C. —Star Staff Photos.

BOWLES BOOKED ON ASSAULT CHARGE—Bryant W. Bowles, president of the Association for the Advancement of White People, chats with two policemen at No. 1 precinct as he awaits bond on a charge of assaulting a Negro postman.

Integration Foe Admits Hitting Negro

Herald Miami, Fla. Thur. 10-28-54

WASHINGTON—(UP)—Bryant W. Bowles, who sparked recent anti-integration moves at Washington, Baltimore and Delaware schools, was arrested Wednesday on charges of assaulting a Negro postman who delivers mail to his office here.

Bowles, founder of the organization known as the National Association for Advancement of White People, was arrested on assault charges and freed under $300 bond. He will be arraigned in municipal court Thursday.

Bowles told reporters that he struck Roscoe V. Cooper, employe of the local post office for 15 years, because "he called my wife a liar. Then I picked him up and knocked him down again."

Cooper said the altercation involved a dispute that started when Bowles asked him why he was separating his mail from that of other tenants in the office building.

Cooper said he had been ordered to do it because post offices in other cities protested they were getting mail from Bowles' office without the necessary stamps.

Bid To Bryant Bowles Stirs NAACP Tempest

Defender Chicago, Ill. P. 2

NEW YORK — After discovery by the national office of the NAACP that the Peekskill branch had invited Bryant W. Bowles, leader of the National Association for White People, to address the three-day state conference there on Sunday, the conference was indefinitely postponed.

Sat. 11-27-54

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, chairman of the NAACP board of directors, said that Melvin Tapley, president of the Peekskill branch, in extending the invitation without the knowledge of those in charge of the conference, "has brought about an intolerable situation."

In his defense, Mr. Tapley said: "Race integration would be the most important subject at the conference. The planning committee of the branch felt that we ought to listen to the most vocal opponent of integration and give him a chance to say why he is against it."

DISENGAGEMENT CANCELED

Ordering Mr. Tapley to rescind the invitation, Dr. Tobias said: "Under no circumstances shall you, as president of the branch or any member thereof, invite or permit Bowles or any other individual in his category to participate in any NAACP meeting of any type, at any time, under any circumstances.

"You are also advised that the national office is instructed to investigate the circumstances surrounding your action in inviting Bowles and to make a full report to the next meeting of the board of directors."

Dr. Tobias said later that there was a "strong possibility" that the board would relieve the Peekskill branch of its charter. Such a move will be considered at the board's Nov. 8 meeting.

Henry L. Moon, director of publications for the NAACP, said that no branch has lost its charter in more than 10 years. During the early 40's, he said, some of the organization's 1,300 branches lost their charters because they had been infiltrated by "extreme-left-wing" groups. The Peekskill branch has 300 members and Mr. Tapley has been its president for two years.

NAACP speech invitation to Bryant Bowles stands

PEEKSKILL, N.Y. — The invitation to Bryant Bowles, organizer of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, to speak before New York NAACP branches still stands according to a statement from Melvin Tapley, president of the branch.

Mr. Tapley, who said that the recent arrests of Mr. Bowles does not alter the invitation, sent a letter to Mr. Bowles inviting him to attend the New York State conference of NAACP Branches Oct. 22-24.

"To rescind our invitation now would be, we feel, the equivalent of convicting Mr. Bowles without a hearing. This is the antithesis of all that the NAACP has always stood for. We believe firmly in fair treatment—for all people," stated Tapley.

—o O o—

ADMITTING THAT the reported statements of Mr. Bowles indicated an attitude of prejudice and bigotry to which he and the NAACP as a whole are strongly opposed, Mr. Tapley insisted that the invitation still stood.

"If he is the type of man that many have described him to be," said Mr. Tapley, "we want to give him a chance to tell us, the people he seems to hate, just why. And if, by chance, he has been wronged or misquoted, we'd like to know that, too.

"In fact," concluded the Peekskill NAACP head, "if the aims of the NAAWP are really deserving of support, Mr. Bowles might find help. In working for the advancement of colored people we know that we are also constantly seeking the advancement of all people."

BRYANT W. BOWLES
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WHITE PEOPLE

Tampan Accepts Credit for Riots

(Second in a series)

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

When the Supreme Court announced its decision ending segregation in the public schools, there were some who predicted trouble in the Deep South.

But when the first trouble developed, it was in such unexpected spots as Milford, Del., Washington and Baltimore.

COLLIER

White children organized strikes against Negro students and police had to break up demonstrations.

Looking behind these disturbances, police found in each case they followed meetings organized by a group called the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

It is headed by a 33-year-old ex-Marine, native of Tampa, named Bryant W. Bowles.

Bowles, who started NAAWP on a shoestring and financed its early efforts by selling his own automobile, was quick to claim credit for the rioting.

$5 Memberships Later Reduced to $2

"I FIGURE I got 40 more years to live, and I'm going to die whoopin' and hollerin' for the White race," he told a reporter.

Bowles sold memberships in NAAWP for $5, later reduced this to $2. Agents are active in Florida, particularly in the middle tier of counties, where NAAWP claims hundreds of members.

One of them, self-admittedly, is Sheriff Willis McCall of Bustis, the law officer who shot two handcuffed Negro prisoners who were arrested in the Groveland rape case in 1949.

McCall went to Milford under NAAWP sponsorship and addressed a rally in suburban Lincoln.

Introduced by Bowles as "a famous man who knows how to handle Negroes," McCall told the Delaware audience that if a Negro is guilty of a crime in Florida, "he better light out."

After disorders flared over desegregation, Bowles went on television in Washington and claimed credit. He announced he was extending his campaign to Philadelphia.

Promptly, District Attorney Richardson Dilworth said that if Bowles tried to hold one of his rabble-rousing meetings there, he would be arrested for inciting a riot.

"He will be given no opportunity to foul up our racial relations in our city," Dilsworth said.

★ ★ ★

Material Lifted from 'Hate Sheet'

TAMPA CITIZENS are puzzled to explain how Bowles became a big shot in the agitation racket .He drew no special attention while attending school there. He enlisted in the Marines at 19 and after 7½ years of service, entered the contracting business.

Bowles threw all this up in late 1953 and set up his organization with a Delaware charter and an office in Washington.

"I figured somebody was going to start a movement like this," he explained, "so why not me."

Now he has branch offices in Memphis, Atlanta, Richmond and other cities, but is announcing no membership figures.

Bowles said his goal is 10,000,000 members.

One of the most revealing things about NAAWP is its publication, The National Forum which appeared first in mid-August.

Material in its pages was largely lifted from the American Nationalist, edited by Frank L. Britton at Inglewood, Cal. This is a notorious hate sheet, attacking Jews, Negroes and other minority groups with equal ferocity. In using this material, Bowles didn't bother to change a word.

★ ★ ★

Pierda Claims No Ties With NAAPMWP

Milton Pierda, of 545 SW First st., Miami, identified in Sunday's initial article in this series as regional vice president of the National Association for the Advancement and Protection of the Majority of White People, said Sunday that he has severed all connections with that organization.

Klan Leaders Also Active in Campaign

WITH BOWLES' agents busy recruiting members in Florida, leaders of the Ku Klux Klan have become openly active in the segregation fight.

In Tampa, W. J. Griffin, who identified himself as the grand dragon of the Association of the Florida Ku Klux Klan, began circulating petitions to Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns demanding continued segregation. But he told The Tampa Tribune that "The Klan should be left completely out of this thing."

He claimed 50,000 persons have signed.

Griffin said this movement started after a meeting of an unidentified group at Live Oak, representing a number of groups fighting integration.

Among them were the Conscientious American Citizens Club and the Pro Southerners League, two of the newly formed groups that have sprung up in recent weeks.

One of the oddest of these—and most commercial—is called American Business Institute, which has a Tampa post office box as a mailing address.

Its stock in trade is a booklet which it sells for $1.

★ ★ ★

'Get Confidential Report,' Ads Urge

ACCORDING TO the advertisements which appear in the few newspapers throughout the South which have accepted them, the "Business Institute" asks:

"What happens to your child when White and Negro children attend the same schools.

"Who says they must? When will this be? What about the Negro teacher? Is the South Eventually Doomed?

"Get a confidential report . . . facts about health, sex, psychology and religion problems involved, and warning you exactly what to expect."

When another such group, the White Brotherhood, was organized recently in Atlanta, Bill Hendricks, the former Klan chieftain in Florida who ran for governor in 1952, attended the birth rites and declared:

"This will become a successor to the Klan."

This is a pattern of these mushrooming groups—National Association for Preservation of the White Race, the Southerners, the Heritage Crusade, among countless others.

Emory Univ. Paper For Integration

Admission of qualified Negroes to Emory University at Atlanta urged Thursday by the school's student newspaper.

The "Emory Wheel" in a front-page editorial, said the newspaper believes "the greatest effort to which Emory could make toward relieving racial strain in the south and toward improving the lot of both the white and colored races would be action toward the admittance of qualified Negroes to the University."

Emory is a privately-endowed University.

Inquiry Needed Into NAAWP and Its Officers

One of the principals in the recent dismaying exhibition of racial intolerance in Milford, Del., has been an organization headed by Bryant W. Bowles and calling itself the National Association for the Advancement of White People. Inquirer

The outside group spearheaded the movement in Milford to resist the admission of 11 Negroes in the high school there, in conformity with the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling against segregation. To Milford's shame, that movement has been successful in temporarily excluding the Negro youths from the school and returning the town's public education to a segregated basis. Philadelphia, Pa. P. 28

Until agitation was stirred up from the outside, integration had been proceeding smoothly. The Negro students had been admitted to the high school, instead of having to go to an all-Negro school in Dover, many miles away. Then the agitators and the professional fomenters of race hatred took over.

The National Association for the Advancement of White People held mass meetings, threats of violence filled the air, parents fearful of trouble kept their children away from classes, and the race boycott was on. The problem was "solved" finally by reverting to the former segregated status. The problem has not, of course, really been solved and it can never be solved by clinging to the outworn, undemocratic and unlawful dictum that one race is inferior to another.

The NAAWP received a charter under the laws of Delaware in 1953 on its assurance to "promote and protect the Constitutional guarantee of citizenship in the U. S." Attorney General H. Albert Young, of Delaware, has charged the organization with "abuse and misuse of its corporate power, privileges and franchise," and has started proceedings to revoke its charter. He plans also to subpena Bowles to turn over all books and records of the association, including gifts and lists of membership. Encl. 10-6-54

A court ruling in Delaware against the association could result in suspension of its activities throughout the country. It has shown itself a trouble-maker and an inciter of hate, and the inquiry into its set-up and practices initiated by Delaware's Attorney General is most welcome.

EDUCATION 1954

BRYANT W. BOWLES

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WHITE PEOPLE

Bowles Hints an Economic Boycott Of Those Who Favor Integration

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times.

HARRINGTON, Del., Oct. 17 Bryant W. Bowles, founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, hinted today at an economic boycott of those who believed in integration in the public schools.

Mr. Bowles got across the idea—a new aspect of his fight for segregation—at another outdoor rally at the airport here. Last week, he was arrested on [illegible] the airport but made his speech anyway after four hours of detention.

He is out on bail of $6,000 on charges of disrupting the educational system in Kent and Sussex Counties. The town of Milford straddles the line between these counties.

Although Mr. Bowles already has urged local political candidates to step before his organization with avowals of belief in segregation, this marked the first time he had put his appeal in economic terms.

"No Delaware business man standing for race mixing," he declared, "is not going to jump on the bandwagon of this organization to help his business."

Tells of Questioning Dealers

He made the point by describing how, when he himself went in to buy a suit, he threw a lot of questions at the dealer in terms of his attitude on "politics and integration."

The 34-year-old former drummer in a United States Marine Corps Band never lost his light touch for a moment.

Earlier, Mr. Bowles told the 2,500 persons at the airport of his acceptance of the invitation to the New York State conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Peekskill, N. Y., next Sunday. The invitation and acceptance had been announced in Peekskill yesterday by Melvin Tapley, president of the Peekskill branch of the N. A. C. P.

But the matter was new to the segregationists standing in front of Mr. Bowles' truck-trailer platform here today. He confided that he had not told Mr. Tapley why he could not appear in Peekskill on Friday.

On that day, Mr. Bowles is due in court in Dover, Del. The State of Delaware at that time will seek to deprive Mr. Bowles' group of its charter.

Mr. Bowles said he had wired his acceptance direct to the chapter in Peekskill.

"I told them I would be more than happy to come up and speak to them," Mr. Bowles said, "but that I wished to decline their offer of transportation and hotel.

"Even in Peekskill, I am going to call a spade a spade, even a black spade a black spade. But I'm going to pick my own hotel to stay in."

'Exploitation' Charged

He said the theme of his remarks would be that the N. A. A. C. P. did not really speak for the best interests of the Negroes involved in the school fight, but was in effect, "exploiting" them.

Mr. Bowles declared there was no need in this country for an organization to "advance" the Negro.

"If they need to be advanced," he said, "the road is open in the jungles of Africa."

He repeated that his group was not "against Negroes."

"But those people who are trying to shove the Negro down our throats, we're going to boot them out of the United States if we can," he said.

Tomorrow morning the state will offer transportation to Georgetown High School to the ten Negro children dropped from the high school in Milford.

Negro spokesmen have emphasized that if the children accept this arrangement it will be only to avoid a total interruption in their education. They say the children will return to the Milford school as soon as Vice Chancellor William Marvel of the Court of Chancery makes definitive his order of last Thursday that the children had a "clear, legal right" to attend school on an integrated basis. The earliest that could be would be Tuesday.

Tapley Initiated Bid

Special to The New York Times.

PeeksRill, N. Y., Oct. 17—The exchange of correspondence that led to Mr. Bowles' accepting the invitation to speak here was begun by Mr. Tapley on Oct. 8.

Mr. Tapley questioned statemennts reportedly made by Mr. Bowles, declaring that if correct they were "tantamount to treason." He then invited Mr. Bowles to address the conference during its three-day state meeting.

Mr. Tapley offered Mr. Bowles transportation and hotel accommodations although, he pointed out, the N. A. A. C. P. was a nonprofit organization.

In a reply sent on Friday and received yesterday by the organization, Mr. Bowles accepted the invitation for next Sunday but declined the offer of expenses.

Others scheduled to speak on that day at Shustim Locust Manor here are Edward R. Dudley, former Ambassador to Liberia; John Hayes, Mayor of Peekskill; Polic Judge Seymour Levine of Peekskill, and Mrs. Effie Gordon of Rye, state president of the N. A. A. C. P.

NAACP Branch Reprimanded For Inviting Bowles

NEW YORK — (SNS) — Channing H. Tobias, chairman of the board of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, sharply reprimanded the Peekskill, N. Y. NAACP branch for extending a speaking invitation to Bryant Bowles, notorious as the originator of the "National Association for the Advancement of White People" which figured prominently in resisting school integration recently in Milford, Delaware, Baltimore, Maryland and Washington, D. C.

Dr. Tobias ordered Melvin Tapley president of the branch, to call off the projected Bowles appearance saying that he (Bowles) is "well known as an outspoken opponent of the rights of minority groups and the Constitution and laws of the United States and several states."

He also hinted that, because of the invitation, the Peekskill branch may lose its charter.

Delaware Launches Attack on 'Association for White People'

Attorney General Announces War on Prejudiced Outfit

DOVER, Del.— (INS) — Delaware's Attorney General H. Albert Young launched a two-pronged assault Tuesday against the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which has been leading a fight against racial integration in public schools.

Young said he would ask the state Chancery court to revoke the organization's charter and that he would also issue his own subpeona to compel NAAWP President Bryant W. Bowles to turn over all books and records of the group, including "gifts and lists of membership."

Young said the organization was chartered with the avowed purpose "to promote and protect" constitutional guarantees. But he charged that the NAAWP has "abused the terms of the charter" and helped to violate constitutional privileges of citizens.

It was reported that a court ruling against the association in the state could result in suspension of its activities throughout the United States, because it was incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware, although it maintains headquarters in Washington, D. C.

Young said the Chancery court would be asked for an injunction against Bowles and other officers of the NAAWP seeking to restrain them from continuing to solicit members and collect dues. A receiver also will be sought "to wind up the corporation's affairs," he added.

The racial squabble in the state started in Milford where the high school at first admitted 11 Negro children and then transferred them to an all-Negro school when most of the white pupils boycotted classes.

Parents of the Negro children have filed suit against the Milford board of education seeking readmission for their children. Young informed the board that he will not represent it in defense against the suit.

He ruled that the board's "denial of admission, solely on the ground of face, color and ancestry, represents a violation of what I believe to be the law."

NAACP Bars Bowles

NEW YORK, Oct. 18 (AP)—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People today denied its platform to Bryant Bowles and stingingly rebuked the man who had invited him to speak.

Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, is a bitter opponent of desegregating Southern schools, in contrast to the other group which champion integration.

Last week Melvin Tapley, president of the NAACP branch at Peekskill, N. Y., announced Bowles had accepted an invitation to address a state conference there.

Today Dr. Channing H. Tobias, the NAACP's board chairman, wired Tapley that the meeting had been postponed until another time and place, not announced.

He ordered Tapley and the branch not to permit Bowles or "any other individual in his category" to participate "in any NAACP meeting of any type, at any time, under any circumstance."

Of Bowles Tobias said:

"Bowles is well known as an outspoken opponent of the rights of minority groups and the constitution and laws of the United States and the several states. . . .

"Your invitation to him is obviously inimical to the best interest of the NAACP. . . ."

Tobias said the invitation to Bowles was issued without the knowledge of Mrs. Effie Gordon, president of the NAACP state conference.

Later Tapley said he has not yet seen the telegram but indicated that he would abide by the NAACP decision. He added:

"We (the Peekskill branch of the NAACP) felt that since this is America, everyone, even Bowles, should be heard.

"Democracy will never be preserved by closing our eyes and ears."

EDUCATION 1954

BYRANT W. BOWLES
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WHITE PEOPLE

Bare long police record of Florida-born agitator

Afro-American Baltimore, Md
P. 1 Sat. 10-9-54

BALTIMORE

A native of Hillsborough, Fla., who has a penchant for leading enterprises which mean financial gain for himself but not necessarily for those associated with him, is spearheading the drive in this section to stop school districts from carrying out pupil integration.

He is Bryant W. Bowles, organizer and president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, who is heading the drive in southeastern Delaware and in Baltimore to agitate prejudiced white parents into action against school integration.

"My three-year-old daughter will never attend a school with colored children as long as there is breath in my body and gun-powder to burn," he declared, although the avowed "principles" of his organization preclude the use of "force or violence."

A MEDICAL REPORT concerning the psychological condition of a Bryant W. Bowles, 35, is on record in the Baltimore Criminal Courts.

The report was obtained in June, 1954, when Bowles was on trial here for larceny after trust of $5,000 from a New York sea captain. Bowles was found not guilty in this case by Judge Michael J. Manley.

However, on July 27, 1954 he was given a one-year suspended term in the House of Correction on a bad check charge.

The sentence was suspended with the provision that he make restitution in this case involving $93 and five other cases, in each of which he paid $25 fines.

—o O o—

ALL OF these cases grew out of Bowles' operation of the Bryant Roofing and Home Improvement Company in Baltimore. Bryant is his first name.

In the larceny after trust case, plaintiff claimed Bowles accepted the $5,000 from the sea captain, Edward W. Erickson of Long Island, N.Y., to build a six-unit motel in La Plata, Md.

The other cases involved bad checks and failure to pay workmen on construction jobs.

—O O O—

IN STILL another case in Harford County, a Bryant W. Bowles, a construction company worker, was involved in a court case wherein the property owner charged fraud.

The complainant who had hired Bowles to make repairs on his property under an FHA proposition was James Mahanes of Havre de Grace, Md.

Mr. Mahanes signed a completion certificate before the work was completed. His attorney said that Bowles secured the money on the loan, but failed to complete the job.

The attorney said that Mahanes did not have a very good case of fraud against Bowles. But after learning that his company had folded, he was apprehended, brought to Bel Air, and a settlement of about some $750 was made to Mr. Mahanes.

At the time of his arrest in Baltimore, according to a report released by Delaware State Police, he was also wanted in Tampa, Fla., in connection with bogus checks.

Tampa authorities later advised Baltimore that restitution had been made and Bowles no longer was wanted there.

BOWLES IS an ex-Marine who makes enrollment in the NAAWP a regular item of business in the communities where he moves to stir up trouble among the racially minded poor whites who are attracted by his ideas.

There are four types of membership and the required dues are as follows: one year, $5; three years, $12; silver cards, $25; and gold cards, $50. No time limit is specified for the latter two.

Bowles says he was raised on the farm in Florida and went "to the city when I was 15. I learned all there is to know about city ways in about 10 months. We had some city fellers living out near our farm for two years and they never did find out what was going on."

—o O o—

A WIRY medium-height man, Bowles married "a girl from Texas. He started the group for tht "advancement of white people" last year by incorporating in Delaware. He put $6,000 of his own money in it, he says.

Bowles contends that the organizations backing integration are "organized agitating groups."

He says members of his group must be "rock-bottom, red-blooded Americans who will not be brain-washed by Communists or self-styled libe als."

IN ATTEMPTING TO integrate, Bowles says, colored people are "cutting off the hand that's fed them. They may have to start looking out for themselves. He doesn't know whether they are capable of taking care of themselves."

Bowles explains another phase of his philosophy this way:

"Any so-called whites who join forces with another race may call himself a self-styled liberal, but he is still a traitor to the white race."

—o O o—

HE BELIEVES the best weapon right now for fighting integration "is not violence, because that's what the Communists and the opposition want us to do," but rather boycotts such as the ones which spreaded through the southern half of Delaware last week.

"It's against the law to keep your children home from school. But if anyone's arrested we'll furnish a lawyer to handle the case. And besides, where are they going to get a jury from among you to convict another one of you?" he asks the crowds.

Prosegregation Leader Arrested In Delaware

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. Mon. 10-11-54
P. 7

Bryant Bowles, N.A.A.W.P. President, Charged With Conspiracy To Violate Education Law

From Wire Dispatches

Milford, Del., Oct. 10.—The State of Delaware today arrested Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, and charged him with conspiring to violate the State education law by leading a boycott of Milford's integrated high school.

After spending 6 hours at arraignment hearings in two counties and making numerous phone calls to raise $6,000 total bond, Bowles returned to a mass meeting at nearby Harrington Airport and declared:

"Let's don't say this is the bitter end. There will be no bitter end. We'll keep going until there's a sweet end."

Governor Issued Warrant

Bowles was arrested at the airport early in the afternoon on a warrant issued at the direction of Governor J. Caleb Boggs. He was taken by State police to Dover, the State capital, where he was arraigned and held on $3,000 bond for further hearing November 3.

He was then taken to Milford for a second hearing in Sussex County on the same charges. This was done because the Milford School District straddles the Kent-Sussex County line.

Under Delaware law a man must be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, such as the charges brought against Bowles, in the county where it was allegedly committed. Since the boycott developed in both counties, trials must be held in each.

Met by Police Major

Flying in from Washington to speak at the scheduled afternoon meeting, the 34-year-old ex-Marine was met by Maj. Frederick Lamb of the Delaware State police, who served the warrant for his arrest.

Also waiting for Bowles was a crowd, which grew noisy, and in some instances resentful, over the proceedings.

A group of Bowles supporters cornered a Columbia Briadcasting System cameraman and an Associated Press photographer, shouted expletives at them, demanded their film and negatives, and also an explanation of their position.

The ringleaders told them to climb onto a truck platform and speak over the public-address system. Both men refused, but the C.B.S. man eventually intoned the pledge of allegiance to the flag.

"Show Our Side. . ."

Walter E. Dombrow, the C.B.S. man, said they called out, "Show our side once in awhile," "You always show the worst side," "You're playing the Communist game," and other things even less polite.

"They ripped my shirt a bit, taking off a few buttons," he said. He manded over two holders of unexposed film, he said.

The A.P. photographer, Warren Winterbottom, Philadelphia, described the crowd as boisterous but not outright disorderly. He said he and Dombrow were surrounded for about 20 minutes, but that he was not given rough physical treatment. He gave up only an empty photographic plateholder.

Ordered by Governor

Bowles' arrest was ordered yesterday by Governor Boggs, who said, "The State of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children."

The seizure of Bowles resulted from his organization's successful attempts to block the integration of white and Negro pupils in Milford High School and seven other lower Delaware schools.

Under prodding of the N.A.A.W.P., white students began a boycott when 10 Negro students were admitted to the high school. The strike by the pupils quickly spread to the seven other schools. Mon. 10-11-54

The boycott finally became so widespread that the Negro pupils were taken out of previously all-white classes and sent to the schools they attended last year.

Bowles Is Arrested At Delaware Airport

Post Times Herald

DOVER, Del., Oct. 10 (U.P.)— Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of a pro-segregation movement, was arrested today on charges of conspiracy to violate Delaware's schools laws.

A warrant was served on him at Harrington Airport, eight miles west of Milford, scene of a boycott by white pupils of Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago.

Bowles had flown in from Washington to speak at a scheduled mass meeting at the airport.

The warrant for his arrest was served by Maj. Frederick Lamb, of the Delaware State Police, and Bowles promptly accepted it. He was then brought to the Dover barracks of the state police, detained there for about 25 minutes, and taken to the court house.

In Common Pleas Court of Kent County, Judge Arley B. Magee released him when bail of $1500 was provided on each of two counts of violating the state's school laws. A further hearing was scheduled for November 3.

Bowles' arrest was ordered by Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, who asserted "the state of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech, but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children."

The NAAWP moved into the Milford dispute at a Sunday meeting three weeks ago, similar to the one set for today. That was Bowles' first public appearance in Delaware, one of the areas troubled in recent months by cleavage over the integration of Negro pupils into schools heretofore enrolling white pupils only.

The arrest of Bowles at first caused an uneasy stir among the people assembled at the Harrington Airport. Soon shouts rose here and there, chiefly of "block the highways." But state troopers in uniform and in plainclothes, were on hand to keep order, and the highway leading to the airport was guarded by other police.

One manifestation of crowd disapproval prompted the seizure of two photographers—Warren Winterbottom of the Associated Press and a Columbia Broadcasting System cameraman—but no violence was done to them. A photographic plate holder taken from Winterbottom was kept, however.

Bowles, a 34-year-old former Marine, was told of Governor Boggs' action when he arrived at an open air meeting near Baltimore where he helped to form a Maryland chapter of the NAAWP. At the same time he was served with a summons to appear before the Internal Revenue Service in Wilmington, Del., on Monday for alleged failure to pay Federal taxes.

An Internal Revenue spokesman said the summons had nothing to do with the NAAWP, but was in reference to several hundred dollars due from a roofing busines Bowles operated in Baltimore in 1952.

waiting crowd.

The group, estimated at 3,000 stayed on the scene several hours and was addressed by a man who identified himself as the Rev. Claude Lynch.

Both warrants, on two counts each, charged Bowles with conspiracy to violate the state school attendance laws and conspiracy to interfere with the administration of the state school system by inciting white parents to resist admission of Negro children into their schools.

The seizure of Bowles resulted from his successful attempts to block integration of white and Negro pupils in the Milford High School and seven other lower Delaware schools.

FOE OF INTEGRATION IS ARRESTED TWICE

Commercial Appeal

Bowles Seized On Orders Of Delaware Governor

Mon. 10-11-54

HARRINGTON, Del., Oct. 10.—(UP)—Bryant W. Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and out-spoken advocate of racial segregation, was arrested twice within two hours Sunday on charges of conspiring to violate the Delaware state school laws.

Bowles, of Washington, D. C., was first seized by State Police at the Harrington Airport on orders of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs. After posting $3,000 bond at the Kent County Common Pleas Court at Dover, he was rearrested by police and taken before Magistrate Morris Gloverman at Milford on a Sussex County warrant. Mr. Gloverman set a similar bail figure and Bowles was freed when the bond was posted.

Maj. Fred Lamb, field force commander of the State Police with headquarters at Wilmington, handed Bowles the first warrant from Kent County as the anti-segregation leader stepped off a light plane to address a

Bowles Is Defiant On State's Order To Reveal Books

Inquirer p. 1

Willing to Turn Over Records On Finances to court, He Says; Fails to Appear at 2 Meetings

Bryant Bowles, 34, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, yesterday refused a request by Delaware authorities to turn over financial records of his pro-segregation group to State Attorney General H. Albert Young.

At the same time, Bowles, at liberty under $6000 bond on charges of conspiring to break Delaware's education law, failed to keep scheduled conferences in Dover, Del., and Baltimore.

At Milford, Del., Bowles said: "I will not turn the records over to the Attorney General, but I'll turn them over to any authorized court that requests them."

"Besides, trying to get the records of all the chartered organizations in the different States on such short notice is impossible."

The leader of the NAAWP refused to subpenas issued last Friday by Young calling on the association to hand over all data on its finances and operations.

ARRESTED ON SUNDAY

Bowles was arrested Sunday and was freed under bond for a hearing Nov. 3 in Dover, Del., on charges of conspiring to violate Delaware's education law by leading a boycott of Milford's high school after 11 Negro students were admitted to classes there for the first time last month.

Officials of the NAAWP were scheduled to meet with Young at his office in Dover, at 1:30 P. M. yesterday. The meeting later was rescheduled for 2 P.M. in Wilmington.

Then Bowles telephoned Young and said his attorney was engaged elsewhere and he "would like to have a reasonable extension of time."

NEXT MEETING TODAY

Young said he told Bowles he would be in Georgetown, Del., on court business today and that Bowles and his attorney were welcome to meet him there between noon and 2 P. M.

The Attorney General said Bowles did not indicate whether he would show up at Georgetown today.

The president of the NAAWP also failed to keep a conference in Baltimore with Director of Internal Revenue L. A. Chamberlain.

Bowles had been subpenaed to answer questions about withholding statements he had filed while operating a contracting business in the Maryland city.

He was served with the subpena by internal revenue agents when he addressed a mass meeting Saturday at Glen Burnie, Md. The subpena ordered him to appear with all material available in connection with his financial status when he operated the business over a four-year period, together with records of his present financial condition.

Bowles later notified the Internal Revenue office in Baltimore that he failed to respond to the summons because he was answering another summons in Delaware. He asked that a new date be set for the Baltimore conference.

The internal revenue director's office said the Government was willing to be stood up—temporarily—in view of other legal difficulties Bowles is experiencing in nearby Delaware.

Bowles, 34-year-old president of the pro-segregation NAAWP, had been summoned to appear for a meeting with Director L. A. Chamberlain to answer questions about withholding tax statements he filed while operating a contracting business in Baltimore.

He is free under $6,000 bond for a November 3 hearing at Dover accused of leading a boycott of the Milford (Del.) High School, where 11 Negroes were admitted for a time last month.

Bowles Fails Date With Tax Collector

By the Associated Press

BALTIMORE, Oct. 12.—Bryant Bowles of Arlington, Va., head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, failed to keep a date with the tax collector yesterday.

Bowles later notified the internal revenue director's office in Baltimore he failed to respond to a summons because he was answering another summons in Delaware. He asked that a new date be set for the Baltimore conference.

The internal revenue director's office said the Government was willing to be stood up—temporarily—in view of other legal difficulties Bowles is experiencing in nearby Delaware.

Bowles, 34-year-old president of the pro-segregation NAAWP, had been summoned to appear for a meeting with Director L. A. Chamberlain to answer questions about withholding tax statements he filed while operating a contracting business in Baltimore.

He is free under $6,000 bond for a November 3 hearing at Dover accused of leading a boycott of the Milford (Del.) High School, where 11 Negroes were admitted for a time last month.

Segregation Champion Arrested in Delaware

DOVER, Del., Oct. 10 (AP).—Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of a pro-segregation movement, was arrested today on charges of conspiracy to violate Delaware's school laws.

A warrant was served upon him this afternoon at Harrington Airport, eight miles west of Milford, scene of a boycott by white pupils of Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago. Mr. Bowles had flown in from Washington to speak at a scheduled mass meeting at the airport.

The warrant for his arrest was served by Maj. Frederick Lamb, of the Delaware State Police, and Mr. Bowles promptly accepted it. He was then brought to the Dover barracks of the state police, detained there for twenty-five minutes, then escorted to the courthouse.

Released in Bail

In Common Pleas Court of Kent County, Judge Arley B. Magee released him when bail of $1,500 was provided on each of two counts of violating the state's school laws. A further hearing was scheduled for Nov. 3. Herman Brown, deputy attorney general, represented the state.

At Harrington Airport, where a crowd estimated by police at 2,000 had gathered for the expected meeting, many of Mr. Bowles' adherents set about taking up a collection to supply bail. Under Kent County law, however, only property can be accepted for such surety.

Mr. Bowles' arrest was ordered yesterday by Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, who asserted asserted: "The State of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech, but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children."

Led Fight for Boycott

The N. A. A. W. P. moved into the Milford dispute at a Sunday meeting three weeks ago, similar to the one set for today. That was Mr. Bowles' first public appearance in Delaware, one of the areas troubled in recent months by cleavage over the integration of Negro pupils into schools heretofore enrolling white pupils only.

Mr. Bowles' group led the successful fight to have white parents and pupils boycott the Milford school so long as eleven Negro pupils were admitted to the tenth grade.

The arrest of Mr. Bowles at first caused an uneasy stir among the people assembled at the airport. Soon shouts rose here and there, chiefly that of "block the highways." But state troopers, in uniform and in plainclothes, were on hand to keep order, and the highway leading to the airport was guarded by other police. The sentiments of the crowd, though boisterously expressed, therefore, led to no actual disorder.

Two Photographers Seized

One manifestation of crowd disapproval prompted the seizure of two photographers—Warren Winterbottom, of The Associated Press, and a Columbia Broadcasting System cameraman—but no violence was done to them. A photographic plate holder taken from Mr. Winterbottom was kept, however.

Mr. Winterbottom said he and his colleague, whose name was not immediately available, were "held" for twenty minutes after being told that the seized plate would be held unless Mr. Bowles gave the word to release it.

Mr. Winterbottom related that the ringleaders put him and the CBS man on a truck, equipped with a loudspeaker microphone, and "asked us to go ahead and explain our position."

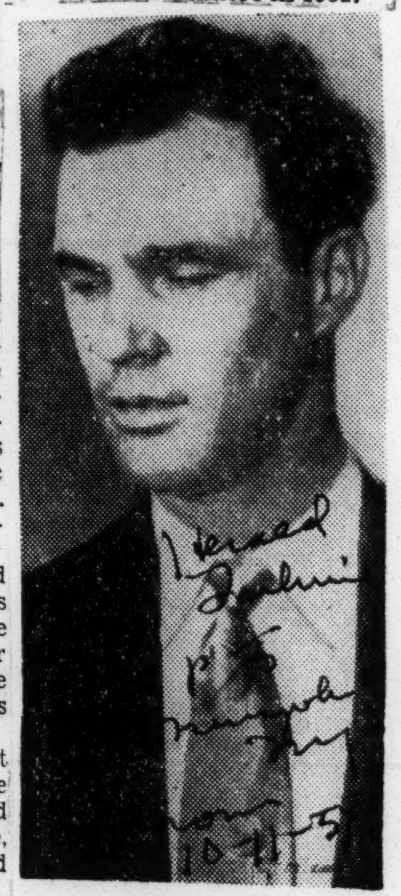
Both refused. Mr. Winterbottom got away simply by saying he'd go have a talk with Mr. Bowles. The CBS man, he added, "was reading the pledge of allegiance to the flag when I left." Later it was reported that the crowd insisted that he do that.

Police, the photographers and others described the crowd as a mixture of young and older people, with a sprinkling of children. Many appeared to be farmers.

The crowd stayed on after the removal of Mr. Bowles, obviously hoping that he would return to make the speech he said yesterday he definitely would make.

The thirty-four-year-old former Marine was told of Gov. Boggs' action when he arrived at an open-air meeting near Baltimore where he helped to form a Maryland chapter of the N. A. A. W. P. At the same time he was served with a summons to appear before the Internal Revenue Service in Wilmington Del., on Monday for alleged failure to pay Federal taxes.

An Internal Revenue spokesman said the summons had nothing to do with the N. A. A. W. P. but was in reference to several hundred dollars due from a roofing business Mr. Bowles operated in Baltimore in 1952.



Associated Press wirephoto
Bryant Bowles

Delaware Arrests Tampa Race Foe

Police Grab Man Twice In 2 Hours

Partisans of Bowles Corner Cameraman And Photographer

By Herald Wire Services

HARRINGTON, Del. — Bryant W. Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and outspoken advocate of racial segregation, was arrested twice within two hours Sunday on charges of conspiring to violate the Delaware state school laws.

Bowles, of Tampa, Fla., was first seized by state police at the Harrington airport on orders of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs.

After posting $3,000 bond at the Kent county common pleas court at Dover, he was rearrested by police and taken before Magistrate Morris Gloverman at Milford on a Sussex county warrant.

Gloverman set a similar bail figure and Bowles was freed when the bond was posted.

Maj. Fred Lamb, field force commander of the state police, handed Bowles the first warrant from Kent county as the anti-integration leader stepped off a plane to [illegible] a crowd.

The group, estimated by state troopers at 3,000, stayed on the scene for several hours and was addressed by a man who identified himself as the Rev. Claude Lynch.

A group of partisans cornered a Columbia Broadcasting system cameraman and an Associated Press photographer, shouted invective at them, and demanded their film and negatives and an explanation of their "position."

The ringleaders told them to climb onto a truck platform and speak over the amplifying system. Both men refused, but the CBS man a bit later read the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.

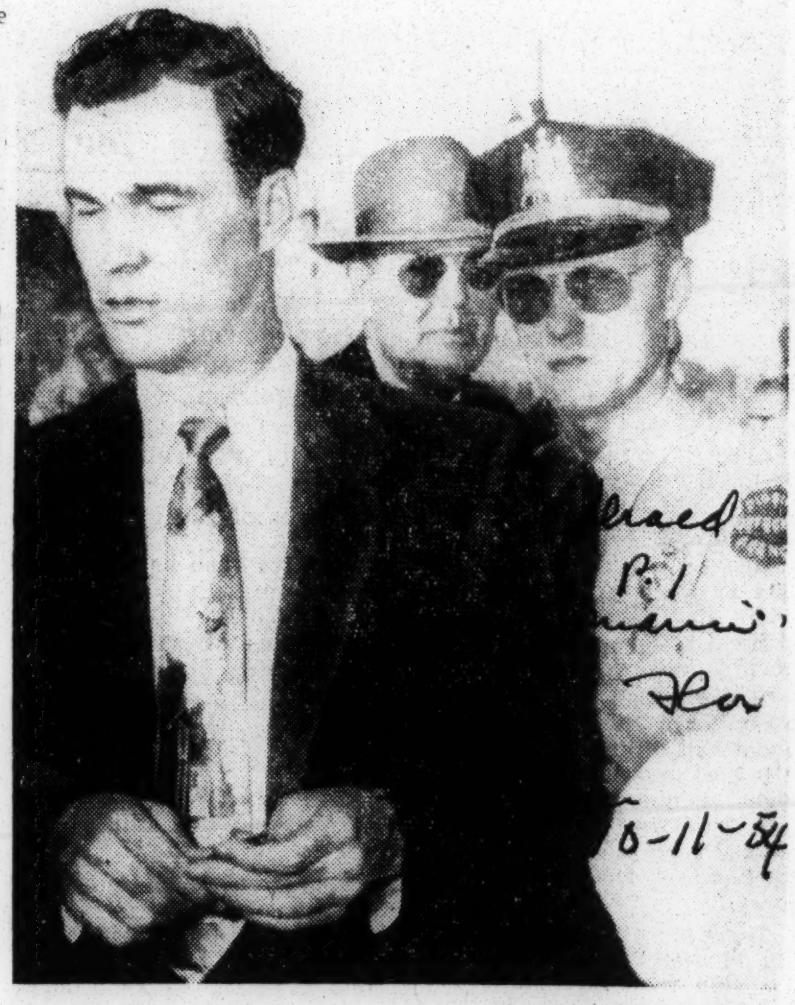
Walter E. Dombrow, the CBS cameraman, said "they called out 'show our side once in a while', 'you always show the worst side' and things even less polite. They ripped my shirt a bit, taking off a few buttons." He said he handed over two holders or unused negatives.

The AP photographer, Warren Winterbottom, of the Philadelphia bureau, described the crowd as boisterous but not outright disorderly. He said he and Dombrow were surrounded for about 20 minutes, but that no one laid violent hands on him. He gave up only an empty photographic plateholder.

He reported that he was able to take only shots of the crowd and of the warrant being served on Bowles, before the hecklers closed in.

Both warrants, on two counts each, charged Bowles with conspiracy to violate the state school attendance laws and conspiracy to interfere with the administration of the state school system by inciting White parents to resist the admission of Negro children into their schools.

Joseph Mifflin Danes, head of the Delaware chapter of the NAAWP, posted the $3,000 bond at Dover as a state property owner. No cash is permitted under state regulations. At Milford, a man who identified himself as Douglas Morgan posted the bond.



—Associated Press Wirephoto

BRYANT BOWLES SPEAKS TO CROWD BEFORE ARREST

... police arrested him twice soon after

Bowles was ordered to appear at Dover for a hearing Nov. 3. Glover said he would be summoned before the Sussex county Superior court sometime during the November term.

Bowles, who previously had been in trouble with the law on bad check charges, flew here from Washington with three other persons, none of whom identified himself.

The arrest resulted from action by the governor Saturday. Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young, acting on behalf of Boggs, said reports had reached the governor that Bowles and other NAAWP leaders "intend to continue interference with school attendance by the boycotting of schools, intimidating of parents and children and the fomenting of racial disturbances."

Seizure of Bowles resulted from his organization's successful attempts to block integration of White and Negro pupils in Milford High School and seven other lower Delaware schools.

Under prodding of the NAAWP, White students began a boycott when 10 Negro students were admitted to Milford High last month. The "strike" quickly spread to the other schools.

The boycott became so widespread that Negro pupils were taken out of previously all-White classes and sent to schools they attended last year.

Gov. Boggs said Saturday a review of tape recordings of speeches during the boycott indicated the arrest of Bowles "is warranted on charges of criminal conspiracy so that there will be no further interruption of the education of children in our schools."

Bowles Arrest Is Ordered By Delaware

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 9 (AP).—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs today ordered the arrest of Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of the recent prosegregation boycott in Milford, Del., schools, on charges of conspiracy to interrupt the education of children in Delaware schools.

Bowles, holding a meeting at Ritchie Raceway just south of Baltimore, said:

"I will go to Delaware Sunday morning. I will call up and find out who holds the warrant. I will make an appointment and go up there to meet him."

Bowles has a mass meeting scheduled for 2:30 Sunday afternoon at the Harrington, Del., airport, eight miles west of Milford.

Bowles' group led the successful fight to have white parents and pupils boycott the Milford school as long as 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the tenth grade.

Earlier this week the State of Delaware sought revocation of the NAAWP's charter and Thursday issued subpenas on state officers of the group to produce financial records by Monday.

EDUCATION 1954

MR. BRYANT BOWLES

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WHITE PEOPLE

WARRANT ISSUED FOR NAAWP HEAD

Raleigh, N.C

Delaware Governor Takes Action Against School Boycott Ringleader

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 9 (AP)—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs today ordered the arrest of Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People and leader of the recent prosegregation boycott in Milford, Del., schools, on charges of conspiracy to interrupt the education of children in Delaware schools.

Bowles, holding a meeting at Ritchie Raceway just south of Baltimore, said:

Going to Delaware.

"I will go to Delaware Sunday morning. I will call up and find out who holds the warrant. I will make an appointment and go up there to meet him.

"If Gov. Boggs wants to serve the warrant himself, I'll go to meet him."

Bowles has a mass meeting scheduled for 2:30 Sunday afternoon at the Harrington, Del., Airport, eight miles west of Milford—scene of a boycott by white pupils of the Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago.

The text of Bogg's statement:

"The state of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children.

"After a thorough review of tape recordings of speeches by various self-styled leaders, interviews of numerous witnesses who attended those meetings and following consultation with members of the state police and the attorney general, it was decided that arrest and prosecution of Bowles is warranted on charges of criminal conspiracy that there will be no further interruption of education of the children in our schools.

Orders For Arrest.

"Accordingly, orders have gone out for his immediate arrest. Law and order will be maintained and the police have been alerted and directed to arrest anyone else who violates our laws.

"I approve the action of the attorney general in seeking forfeiture of the charter of the NAAWP for having abused the privileges accorded to it by the state of Delaware and further commend the state police for their vigilance in the past, which was largely responsible for the prevention of violence and injury.

"The attorney general, the police and I will continue our constant surveillance of future activities of all unlawful elements in order to prevent injury to our citizens, damage to their property and to preserve the dignity of the state."

The NAAWP moved into the Milford dispute at a Sunday meeting three weeks ago, similar to the one scheduled for tomorrow. That was the first public appearance of Bowles in Delaware.

He told the crowd that he was for segregation and that he had a three-year-old daughter "who will never attend a school with Negroes as long as there is a breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

Bowles' group led the successful fight to have white parents and pupils boycott the Milford school as long as 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the 10th grade.

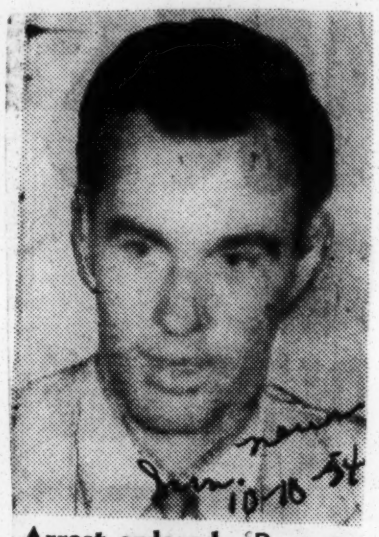
The boycott was successful with less than 30 per cent of the enrollment of 1,562 pupils showing up for classes for four days. Finally, the newly-elected school board — the old one resigned in a dispute with the State Board of Education —ousted the Negro pupils and ordered them transferred to an all-Negro high school at Dover, Del. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has filed an injunction — scheduled for hearing Tuesday in Georgetown —to get the pupils readmitted to the Milford school.

Earlier this week the state of Delaware sought revocation of the NAAWP's charter and Thursday issued subpoenas on state officers of the group to produce financial records by Monday.

NAAWP head faces arrest in school boycott

By The Associated Press

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 9—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs Saturday ordered the arrest of Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of the recent pro-segregation boycott in Milford, Del., schools on charges of conspiracy to interrupt the education of children in Delaware schools.



Arrest ordered—Bryant Bowles.

Bowles, holding a meeting at Ritchie Raceway just south of Baltimore, said:

"I will go to Delaware Sunday morning. I will call up and find out who holds the warrant. I will make an appointment and go up there to meet him.

"If Gov. Boggs wants to serve the warrant himself, I'll go to meet him.

Bowles has a mass meeting scheduled for 2:30 Sunday afternoon at the Harrington, Del., airport, eight miles west of Milford—scene of a boycott by white pupils of the Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago.

The text of Boggs' statement:

"The state of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children.

"After a thorough review of tape recordings of speeches by various self-styled leaders, interviews of numerous witnesses who attended those meetings and following consultation with members of the state police and the attorney general, it was decided that arrest and prosecution of Bowles is warranted on charges of criminal conspiracy that there will be no further interruption of education of the children in our schools.

Arrest order issued

"ACCORDINGLY, orders have gone out for his immediate arrest. Law and order will be maintained and the police have been alerted and directed to arrest anyone else who violates our laws.

"I approve the action of the attorney general in seeking forfeiture of the charter of the NAAWP for having abused the privileges accorded to it by the state of Delaware and further commend the state police for their vigilance in the past, which was largely responsible for the prevention of violence and injury.

"The attorney general, the police and I will continue our constant surveillance of future activities of all unlawful elements in order to prevent injury to our citizens, damage to their property and to preserve the dignity of the state."

The NAAWP moved into the Milford dispute at a Sunday meeting three weeks ago, similar to the one scheduled for Sunday. That was the first public appearance of Bowles in Delaware.

He told the crowd that he was for segregation and that he had a 3-year-old daughter "who will never attend a school with Negroes as long as there is a breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

School is boycotted

BOWLES' GROUP led the successful fight to have white parents and pupils boycott the Milford School as long as 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the 10th grade.

The boycott was successful with less than 30 per cent of the enrollment of 1562 pupils showing up for classes for four days. Finally, the newly-elected school board—the old one resigned in a dispute with the state board of education—ousted the Negro pupils and ordered them transferred to an all-Negro high school at Dover, Del. NAACP has filed an injunction—scheduled for hearing Tuesday in Georgetown—to get the pupils readmitted to the Milford School.

Earlier this week the state of Delaware sought revocation of the NAAWP's charter and Thursday issued subpenas on state officers of the group to produce financial records by Monday.

Delaware's Governor Orders Arrest Of NAAWP President

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 9 (AP)—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs today ordered the arrest of Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People and leader of the recent prosegregation boycott in Milford, Del., schools, on charges of conspiracy to interrupt the education of children in Delaware schools.

Bowles, holding a meeting at Ritchie Raceway just south of Baltimore, said:

"I will go to Delaware Sunday morning. I will call up and find out who holds the warrant. I will make an appointment and go up there to meet him.

I'll Go To Meet Him

"If Gov. Boggs wants to serve the warrant himself, I'll go to meet him."

Bowles has a mass meeting scheduled for 2:30 Sunday afternoon at the Harrington, Del., Airport, eight miles west of Milford—Scene of a boycott by white pupils of the Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago.

The text of Bogg's statement:

"The state of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children.

"After a thorough review of tape recordings of speeches by various self-styled leaders, interviews of numerous witnesses who attended those meetings and following consultation with members of the state police and the attorney general, it was decided that arrest and prosecution of Bowles is warranted on charges of criminal conspiracy that there will be no further interruption of education of the children in our schools.

"Accordingly, orders have gone out for his immediate arrest. Law and order will be maintained and the police have been alerted and directed to arrest anyone else who violates our laws.

"I approve the action of the attorney general in seeking forfeiture of the charter of the NAAWP for having abused the privileges accorded to it by the state of Delaware and further commend the vancement of Colored People has filed an injunction — scheduled for hearing Tuesday in Georgetown —to get the pupils readmitted to the Milford school.

Earlier this week the state of Delaware sought revocation of the NAAWP's charter and Thursday issued subpoenas on state officers of the group to produce financial records by Monday.

Race Baiter Is Issued Warning

Crisis St. Louis, Mo. Jan. 1954 p.1

Bowles Will Be Arrested In Philly

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Authorities here have declared they will deal severely with Bryant W. Bowles, professional troublemaker, if he comes here as promised.

Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, had announced he will conduct a mass meeting in this city to implement his "campaign" against desegregation of the public schools in defiance of the U. S. Supreme Court decision.

"He will be arrested for inciting to riot if he attempts such a meeting here," Philadelphia officials have said.

WASHINGTON— As scattered pro-school segregation forces continued this week to openly defy the United States Supreme Court ruling against racial segregation Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., was called upon to take action against those who attempt to prevent Negro students from entering previously all-white schools.

In a telegram from his New York office, Thurgood Marshall, Chief Counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, urged the Attorney General to make it clear that the federal government will stand behind school boards ending segregation.

Marshall blamed the flareups and violence on the activities of Bryant W. Bowles, president of National Association for the Advancement of White People, who boasted in Baltimore this week that under his leadership Negro students had been forced out of Milford, Delaware schools.

Meanwhile, Delaware's Attorney General H. Albert Young, has brought action against Bowles and his organization have been ordered to show cause why the charter should not be revoked.

TROUBLE SPREADS

The disturbances which began last week in Milford, Delaware, spread to Dover, Delaware, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. They developed as result of indecision on the part of the Milford School Board as to the handling of white pickets protesting the admittance of Negro students to the formerly all-white Milford School.

The Board of Education which made the decision to integrate the school resigned in the fac of the disorder and a new board revoked the integration order, sending Negro children back to the former all-Negro school.

Bowles told newsmen last week that he had designated two of the four new Milford School Board members.

A former board member charged that a "deal" had been made between Bowles and Delaware Governor J. Caleb Boggs.

The ex-board member is reported to have said there were some people who opposed integration but, "without Bowles and his group, we could have settled it."

DENIES CONTACT

Gov. Boggs has denied any contact with Bowles.

As the disturbances spread in Baltimore Police Commissioner Beverly Ober announced that pickets in front of schools would be treated as lawbreakers. He cited a state law making it an offense to disturb public schools in session.

In a meeting with school, state and city officials, Commissioner Ober declared:

"We, in the Police Department, are hopeful that the citizens will be orderly, but we are prepared to act immediately on any overt act. We will not permit disorder."

The Baltimore City School Board announced last week that schools would remain open "with the assurance of the police department and the department of education that parents need not have any concern about sending their children to school."

A strike at the Annabelle County School in Fairmount, West Va., was labeled by Circuit Court Judge J. Harper Meredith as a "rebellion" against the government.

RESTRAINING INJUNCTION

The judge announced an injunction restraining the picketing parents and issued the warning "if necessary, I will fill the jail until your feet are sticking out of the windows."

He accused the parents of attacking the State, and said:

"They are attempting to wreck a function of government. If they can prevent one school from operating they can close all schools, and picket the city building or the county jail.

"It is the duty of this court as an arm of the government to see that government property is protected...It is a serious thing for a group of citizens to take over government property...The time to stop it is when it starts."

Nine Negro students in Dover, Delaware, who were transferred from a white school when white students boycotted the classes, set up a counter-boycott of their own. They refused to return to the Negro school.

FILE COURT ACTION

Parents of the youths filed a court action asking that they be re-entered in the previously all-white school.

The Baltimore situation started at a kindergarten school when white parents, mostly mothers, paraded in front of the school with signs after Negro children had been entered.

The picketing spread to five other schools and violence took place at one, the Southern High School.

Colored parents were reported to have nothing but praise for the teaching staff of one Baltimore school where they said, "the teachers couldn't treat our children any better."

In one instance a white teacher snatched a Negro student from the hands of several whites in the vicinity of the school.

And in Washington, D.C., the nation's capital, strikes and demonstrations broke out in and around eight schools.

At one school, the principal declared, "You're not going to change the integration program. This school is going to stay the way it is. That's the law of the land."

CONFERENCE OF 60 NEGRO EDUCATORS- LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Dixie Educators Ask Immediate Integration

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 11-6-54 P. 3

HOT SPRINGS Ark. — In a statement calling for immediate planning to implement the Supreme Court decision and offering "wholehearted cooperation" in the attainment of this objective, sixty Negro educators from 14 southern states and the District of Columbia set forth their views on this subject last week.

The two-day meeting called by 15 Negro educators and sponsored by the Phelps Stokes Fund, was held in Hot Springs October 26-27.

The educators criticized sharply the effort of some leaders and school officials to intimidate Negro teachers and other citizens under threat of loss of job if they express approval of the Court's decision and if segregation is not maintained.

"Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be party to any plan designed to nullify the Court's decision" they said.

The conference called upon the people of the South and the nation to strive with "good will and honest intent" to implement the Court decision.

"It is our firm and unanimous belief" say the educators "that the implementation of the Decision will strengthen the South and the Nation morally, economically and spiritually.

"We as Negro educators stand ready to cooperate wholeheartedly in the progressive fulfillment of these democratic objectives."

Hot Springs, Ark., Dr. F. D. Patterson, director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund at 101 Park Avenue, released yesterday a statement unanimously approved by the educators.

The decision, is said, is part of the evolutionary process that has been going on in the South and in the nation and "dramatically distinguishes our way of life in a democracy from that in such totalitarian countries as Nazi Germany and Communist Russia."

Tues. 11-2-54

The educators noted "a fundamental sense of fair play abroad in the South." However, they added, "we regret that some public officials have sought to persuade Negro educators and other leaders to evade the decision by agreeing to voluntary segregation."

This referred to reports that some teachers had agreed not to further desegregation, in return for job security.

Shock Whites Who Foresaw Possible Passive Attitude

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 11-6-54

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — (ANP) — Southern white leaders who had hoped that leading Negro educators might lend some measure of comfort to plans to defy the Supreme Court, received a rude jolt here last week when the most representative group of Negro educators assembled since the decision, called for complete compliance with the high court ruling.

The group, which included presidents of leading Negro colleges and universities, said in a joint statement that the decision dramatically distinguishes "our way of life in a democracy from that in totalitarian countries."

* * *

"TIME WILL PROVE," the statement said, "that our fears have no foundation in fact, just as has been proved by the implementation of previous court decisions. Segregation breeds fear; and when the barriers of segregation are at last removed, we will wonder why we feared at all."

Pointing out that change without bloodshed and revolution was possible because of a Constitution which guarantees equality and justice to all, the educators said "that to evade or discredit it is to destroy our Government."

"It is our hope," they said, "that all of the colleges and universities of the South, Negro and white, will immediately implement the spirit of the court's decision by accepting, irrespective of race, all qualified students who seek admission."

The leaders said they were convinced that there is a "fundamental sense of fair play in the South," and noted that integration in public schools involving both students and teachers is already working well in some southern schools.

Educators Call For Planning To Implement S. Court Decision

World Birmingham, Ala.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — In a significant statement calling for immediate planning in good faith to implement the Supreme Court decision and offering wholehearted cooperation in the attainment of this objective, 60 Negro educators from 14 southern states and the District of Columbia set forth their views on this subject.

The twoday meeting, called by 15 Negro educators and sponsored by the Phelps Stokes Fund, was held in Hot Springs, Ark., October 26-27.

Tues. 11-2-54

The statement of the educators began: "We welcome the decision of the Supreme Court and look upon it as another significant milestone in the Nation's quest for a democratic way of life and in the Negro's long struggle to become a first-class citizen . . . This is a part of an evolutionary process which has been going on in the South and the Nation for some time."

The educators criticized sharply "The effort on the part of some leaders and school officials to intimidate Negro teachers and other citizens under threat of loss of job if they express approval of the Court's decision and if segregation is not maintained is shortsighted, vindictive, and contrary to the fundamental sense of fair play of the American people." And speaking of Negroes themselves: "Negro educators should not and can't afford to be a party to any plan designed to nullify the Court's decision."

In conclusion the Conference calls upon the people of the South and the Nation to strive with good will and honest intent to implement the Court decision. "It is our firm and unanimous belief," say the educators, "that the implementation of the Decision will strengthen the South and the Nation morally, economically, and spiritually. We as Negro educators stand ready to cooperate wholeheartedly in the progressive fulfillment of these democratic objectives'.'

TEACHERS GET PLEA ON DESEGREGATION

Times P. 38

Sixty-four Negro educators have expressed faith in the ultimate results of the Supreme Court's desegration decision and have urged colleagues not to "be a party to any plan designed to [illegible] fourteen states in the South met Oct. 26-27 at

SOUTHERN WHITES SHOCKED WHEN NEGRO EDUCATORS SUPPORT SUPREME COURT DECISION

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla. Sat. 11-6-54 P. 2

Joint Statement Issued By Leaders Proves Loyalty For Program of Progress

THINKS NATION BELIEVES IN FAIR PLAY

HOT SPRING, Ark. — (ANP) — Southern white leaders who had hoped that leading Negro educators might lend some measure of comfort to plans to defy the Supreme court, received a rude jolt here last week when the most representative group of Negro educators assembled since the decision, called for complete compliance with the high court ruling.

The group, which included presidents of leading Negro colleges and universities, said in a joint statement that the decision dramatically distinguishes "our way of life in a democracy from that in totalitarian countries."

"Time will prove," the statement said, "that our fears have no foundation in fact, just as has been proved by the implementation of previous court decision. Segregation breeds fear; and when the barriers of segregation are at last removed we will wonder why we feared at all."

Pointing out that change without bloodshed and revolution was possible because of a Constitution which guarantees equality and justice to all, the educators said "that to evade or discredit it is to destroy our government."

"It is our hope," they said, "that all of the colleges and universities of the South, Negro and white, will immediately implement the spirit of the court's decision by accepting, irrespective of race, all qualified students who seek admission."

The leaders said they were convinced that there is a "fundamental sense of fair play in the South," and noted that integration in public schools involving both students and teachers . already working well in some southern schools.

Stating that it was unfortunate "that preoccupation with the coeducational implication of the decision" had obscured the question any plan designed to nullify the of the quality of education for all children, the educators said that "in two-thirds of the United States, co-education of the races has been going on for many decades with no untoward effect."

Again the group stated that where integration will be attempted, the leaders said there "should "Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to the cooperative effort in every community to plan on the local level the implementation of the decision. The planning should de done in good faith and with an honest desire to implement the decision rather than scheming to circumvent it."

The educators said they were not making the statement or pleading for Negroes alone, but that they were concerned "about the best education that can be made available to every child in the South."

The group went on record favoring federal aid to education "in order that the per capita expenditure in the South may be brought up to a high national average. We want the white child to have the best and we want the Negro child to have the best." This is not possible, they said, in segregated schools.

churches in Sapulpa, Crescent, Langston and Guthrie. His last pastorate was with the Macedonia Baptist church in Guthrie.

The funeral will be held at the First Baptist church at 2 p. m. Thursday, Nov. 4.

Members of the immediate family of the deceased include Mrs. Ruth Moon, wife, Guthrie; Alice Moon Humphreys, daughter, St. Louis, Mo.; Irene Moon, sister, Guthrie; Dr. E. L. Moon, brother, Oklahoma City; F. D. Moon, brother, Oklahoma City.

Southern Negro Educators Want Immediate Integration

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. p. 1
Thur. 11-4-54

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — (ANP) — Southern white leaders who had hoped that leading Negro educators might lend some measure of comfort to plans to defy the Supreme court, received a rude jolt here last week when the most representative group of Negro educators assembled since the decision, called for complete compliance with the high court ruling.

The group, which included presidents of leading Negro colleges and universities, said in a joint statement that the decision dramatically distinguishes "our way of life in a democracy from that in totalitarian countries."

"Time will prove," the statement said, "that our fears have no foundation in fact, just as has been proved by the implementation of previous court decisions. Segregation breeds fear; and when the barriers of segregation are at last removed, we will wonder why we feared at all."

Pointing out that change without bloodshed and revolution was possible because of a Constitution which guarantees equality and justice to all, the educators said "that to evade or discredit it is to destroy our government."

"It is our hope," they said, "that all of the colleges and universities of the South, Negro and white, will immediately implement the spirit of the court's decision by accepting, irrespective of race, all qualified students who seek admission."

The leaders said they were convinced that there is a "fundamental sense of fair play in the South," and noted that integration in public schools involving both students and teachers is already working well in some southern schools.

Stating that it was unfortunate "that preoccupation with the co-educational implicaton of the decision" had obscured the question of the quality of education for all children, the educators said that "in two-thirds of the United States, co-education of the races has been going on for many decades with no untoward effect."

Again the group stated that "Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nullify the court's decision. To do this would be tantamount to sharing in a plan to destroy the very fabric of our constitutional government."

Realizing the difficulties that will be incurred in some places where integration will be attempted, the leaders said there "should be the cooperative effort in every community to plan on the local level the implementation of the decision. The planning should be done in good faith and with an honest desire to implement the decision rather than scheming to circumvent it."

The educators said they were not making the statement or pleading for Negroes alone, but that they were concerned "about the best education that can be made available to every child in the South."

The group went on record favoring federal aid to education "in order that the per capita expenditure in the South may be brought up to a high national average. We want the white child to have the best and we want the Negro child to have the best:" This is not possible, they said, in segregated schools.

Aid on Southern School Problems

With the aid of a grant from the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education, a group of editors and educators have established the Southern Educational Reporting Service. It is to be headed by Virginius Dabney, editor of The Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The aim of the nonprofit agency will be to provide public-school administrators and other community leaders with objective information on community problems and developments that may arise in the wake of the recent Supreme Court decision against racial segregation in the public schools.

News Gathering

The problem of adjusting to the Supreme Court's decision, Mr. Dabney said, will vary widely from one community to another, and must be met by each community in its own way. It is reasonable to expect, Mr. Dabney said, that school officials and other leaders of these communities will be better equipped to meet this challenge wisely and effectively if they are kept informed of the experiences of other communities similarly situated.

The new service will try to assis in filling the need for such information. A team of experienced Southern newspaper reporters will gather information for the service, and will send periodic reports to the Nashville, Tenn., headquarters. These detailed reports will be supplemented by special factual studies and other available materials of interest. Periodic summaries will be available to school administrators, to state and local leaders and to newspaper editors for background use.

Objective Reports

The service, Mr. Dabney said, will be strictly nonpartisan, seeking to promote no special point of view. It is designed to supplement rather than compete with regular newspaper coverage of educational developments.

According to Mr. Dabney, it will not be the purpose of the service to comment on events as they occur, nor to indicate whether in the opinion of the director or the members of the board any decision or occurrence was right or wrong. Rather, the service will see that accurate, factual reports are available to those desiring them. Mr. Dabney added that "those of us who are associated with this undertaking feel that it will perform a very useful public service."

G. C.

7 Southern Governors Hit Segregation Ban As Conference Ends

Star P. A-3
Sun. 11-14-54
Washington, D.C.

By the Associated Press.

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13.—The Southern Governors Conference adjourned today without taking formal action on the school segregation issue, but seven Governors and one Governor-elect issued a joint statement later registering a protest against efforts to force mixing of the races in public schools.

The statement said the signers would attempt by constitutional methods "to preserve the right of the States to administer their public school systems to the best interest of all our people."

It was the first meeting of Southern Governors since the Supreme Court outlawed segregation in the public schools on May 17.

P. A-3

The Governors signing the statement said experience had proved the wisdom of separate but equal facilities for the races and it would be damaging to the public school system if schools in the South were desegregated.

Signers Are Listed.

Those signing were Govs. Thomas B. Stanley, Virginia; Robert F. Kennon, Louisiana; James F. Byrnes, South Carolina; Allen Shivers, Texas; Herman E. Talmadge, Georgia; Charley E. Johns, Florida, and Johnston Murray, Oklahoma, and Gov.-Elect George Bell Timmerman, jr., of South Carolina.

This group said Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi and Gov.-Elect Leroy Collins of Florida had left Boca Raton before the statement was drafted.

Five other Governors and one Governor-Elect attending the conference did not sign the statement. They were Govs. Theodore R. McKeldin, Maryland; Lawrence W. Wetherby, Kentucky; Frank G. Clement, Tennessee; Francis Cherry, Arkansas, and William C. Marland, West Virginia, and Gov.-Elect James E. Folsom of Alabama.

Gov. McKeldin issued a statement of his own in which he said that in his opinion it was the duty of every citizen to accept the Supreme Court decree regardless of how he felt about the matter.

"Any other course would undermine the very foundations of law and order," Gov. McKeldin said.

McKeldin Cites Procedure.

Gov. McKeldin, the only Republican governor attending the conference, said the proper procedure would be for the States to file briefs with the Supreme Court and to make oral arguments at a hearing set for December 6 on ways and means of putting the May 17 ruling into effect.

North Carolina and Delaware, other members of the conference, didn't have their governors here and Gov. Gordon Persons of Alabama did not attend.

A resolution by acting Gov. Johns, of Florida, which would have put the conference on record as favoring the constitutional amendment to maintain separate but equal school facilities did not get a conference vote since it was rejected by the resolutions committee.

Several members of the committee said they didn't consider this a practical approach to the situation. Gov. Johns said he regarded the joint statement on the matter "a moral victory for my stand."

The conference elected Gov. Wetherby chairman, succeeding Gov. Murray.

South's Governors Refuse To Act on Segregation Plan

Herald Tribune P. 3
Sun. 11-14-54

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13 (AP). — The Southern Governors Conference refused today to act on a proposal calling for a Constitutional amendment to keep whites and Negroes in separate public schools.

P. 3

Instead, seven governors and one governor-elect issued a joint statement pledging themselves to "exercise every proper prerogative to preserve the basic principles of our constitutional government." They said this applied to education and the prevention of segregation.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin Maryland Republican, refused to sign this statement and issued one of his own. He said the suggestion that his state should offer either active or passive resistance to a May 17 Supreme Court decision against segregation "is fantastic nonsense . . . a waste of time to discuss." Gov. McKeldin said it is the duty of the people to accept the decree of the high court "regardless of one's opinions of the merits of the case."

Wetherby Named

On the final day of the convention Gov. Lawrence Wetherby of Kentucky was named new chairman of the group to succeed Gov. Johnston Murray of Oklahoma.

The annual conference adjourned after deciding against acting on the Constitutional amendment proposal, made by acting Florida Gov. Charley E. Johns.

Gov. Johns said he told the resolutions committee of the conference in a closed session: "I felt the (segregation) issue is of such vital importance both to the South and to the nation that the Southern Governors should take some action."

Urged Call for a Vote

He had advocated calling on President Eisenhower to ask Congress for a nation-wide vote on school desegregation as ordered by the high court. Mr. Johns contended the eight-man joint statement was "a moral victory for my segregation proposal."

Those who signed the statement were Govs. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia, Robert F. Kennon of Louisana, George Bell Timmerman jr., of South Carolina (Governor - elect), James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, Allan Shivers of Texas, Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia, and Murray and Johns.

Govs. Hugh White of Mississippi and Gov.-elect Leroy Colline of Florida had left the conference before the subject came up today.

Associated Press wirephoto

Herald Tribune New York, N.Y. P. 3
Nov. 22, 1955

Gubernatorial contest—Taking time out from the Southern Governors' conference at Boca Raton, Fla., twelve Governors photograph Tangerine Queen Jan Holden (third from right) and her Ladies-in-Waiting. Kneeling, from left, are: William Marland, of West Virginia; Theodore McKeldin, of Maryland; Johnston Murray, of Oklahoma; Allan Shivers, of Texas, and Frank Clement, of Tennessee. Standing, from left: Thomas Stanley, of Virginia; Lawrence Wetherby, of Kentucky; James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina; Charley Johns, of Florida; Herman Talmadge, of Georgia; Hugh White, of Mississippi, and Robert F. Kennon, of Louisiana. Gov. White won the $100 first prize, which he gave to the Red Cross.

7 Southern Governors Rap School Segregation Ban

Inquirer Philadelphia, Pa.
Nov. 14, 1954

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13 (UP).—The Southern Governors Conference refused today to act on a proposal calling for a constitutional amendment to continue segregation in public schools.

Instead, seven Governors and one Governor-elect issued a joint statement pledging themselves to "exercise every proper prerogative to preserve the basic principles of our constitutional government." They said this applied to education and the preservation of segregation.

Gov. Theodore McKeldin, Maryland Republican, refused to sign this statement and issued one of his own. He said the suggestion that his State should offer either active or passive resistance to a May 17 Supreme Court decision against segregation "is fantastic nonsense . . . a waste of time to discuss."

Those who signed the statement were Govs. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia, Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, George Bell Timmerman, Jr., of South Carolina (Governor-elect), James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, Allan Shivers of Texas, Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia, Johnston Murray of Oklahoma and Johns.

Govs. Hugh White of Mississippi and Gov.-elect Leroy Collins of Florida had left the conference before the subject came up today.

PARLEY AVOIDS DESEGREGATION ISSUE IN SOUTH

Tribune Chicago, Ill.
Nov. 14, 54

Boca Raton, Fla., Nov. 13 (AP)—The southern governors conference adjourned today without acting on the school segregation issue, but seven governors and one governor-elect issued a joint statement later registering a protest against efforts to force mixing of the races in public schools.

The statement said the signers would attempt by constitutional methods "to preserve the right of the states to administer their public school systems to the best interest of all our people."

It was the first meeting of southern governors since the Supreme court handed down its decision May 17 outlawing segregation in the public schools.

Fear Damage to Schools

The governors signing the statement said experience had proved the wisdom of separate but equal school facilities for the races and it would be damaging to the public school system if schools in the south were desegregated.

Those signing were Governors Thomas B. Stanley, Virginia; Robert F. Kennon, Louisiana; James F. Byrnes, South Carolina; Allan Shivers, Texas; Herman E. Talmadge, Georgia; Charley E. Johns, Florida, and Johnston Murray, Oklahoma. This group said Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi and Gov.-elect Leroy Collins of Florida had left Boca Raton before the statement was drafted.

Six Decline to Sign

Five other governors and one governor-elect attending the conference did not sign the statement. They were Governors Theodore R. McKeldin, Maryland; Lawrence W. Wetherby, Kentucky; Frank G. Clement, Tennessee; Francis Cherry, Arkansas, and William C. Marland, West Virginia, and Gov.-elect James E. Folsom of Alabama.

McKeldin issued a statement of his own in which he said that in his opinion it was the duty of every citizen to accept the Supreme court decree regardless of how he felt about the matter.

"Any other course would undermine the very foundations of law and order," McKeldin said.

The Maryland governor, the only Republican attending the conference, said the proper procedure would be for the states to file briefs with the Supreme court and to make oral arguments at a hearing set for Dec. 6 on ways and means of putting the May 17 ruling into effect.

Talmadge, Johns Lead Defiance Of High Court

Courier Sat. 11-20-54
Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 1

By ALBERT DUNMORE
(Courier's Florida Editor)

MIAMI, Fla.—Florida's Acting Governor Charley Johns' last-minute bid for headlines led to a sharp split among chiefs of state at the annual Southern Governors' Conference held at the exclusive Boca Raton Club last week-end.

The division of opinion came about when Johns offered an unofficial statement urging the maintenance of segregated schools after his original resolution, which called for a "national referendum" on the matter of maintaining segregated schools was by-passed.

Florida's outgoing chief executive claimed a "moral victory" after seven governors and one governor-elect signed the joint statement protesting the abolition of segregated education.

Significantly, perhaps, Johns' successor, Governor-elect LeRoy Collins of Tallahassee, did not sign the statement, having left the conference before the "unofficial" action was taken.

Collins was a member of the Resolutions Committee which failed to act on Johns' proposal to petition President Eisenhower to call a special session of Congress to submit the anti-segregation referendum.

Also refusing to sign the unofficial statement along with Collins were Governors T. R. McKeldin of Maryland; Lawrence W. Wetherby of Kentucky; William C. Marland of West Virginia; Francis Cherry of Arkansas, and Frank G. Clement of Tennessee.

Also failing to sign was Governor-elect James (Big Jim) Folsom of Alabama.

* * *

GOV. HUGH WHITE of Mississippi did not sign, having left the conference before the action took place.

Signers along with Johns were Govs. James Byrnes of South Carolina and Herman Talmadge of Georgia, both of whom branded Johns' original resolution as "impractical"; T. B. Stanley, Virginia; Robert F. Kennon, Louisiana; James F. Byrnes, South Carolina; Allan Shivers, Texas; Johnston Murray, Oklahoma, the conference chairman, and George Timmerman, Governor-elect of South Carolina.

The Governors declared:

"Any effort to compel a mixing of the races in our public schools would interrupt steady progress that is being made." It continued:

"We, the undersigned, will exercise every proper prerogative to preserve the basic principles of our constitutional governments, and as applied to education, to preserve the right of the states to administer their public school sytems to the best interests of all our people."

Johns, in welcoming the annual fall Governors meeting to Boca Raton, declared the Supreme Court decision "will create turmoil and confusion from Maine to California."

* * *

JOHNS WAS joined in his denunciation of the court opinion by Govs. Herman Talmadge of Georgia and Hugh White of Mississippi, but other executives apparently preferred to by-pass any official joint action on the issue.

Johns then requested that the Southern Governors Conference petition President Eisenhower to call a special session of Congress asking that a constitutional amendment, legalizing segregation, be submitted in a nation-wide referendum.

He also suggested that the Governors request each State Legislature to petition Congress to submit the racial question to the people. It would be necessary for thirty-six legislatures to make such a petition before the matter would be placed before the voters.

* * *

JOHNS RECALLED that the U. S. Supreme Court decision on income taxes was not accepted before it was submitted to the people. He declared:

"This question is equally or more important to the people."

Governor White said he would propose that the Mississippi Legislature address Congress asking for a referendum.

Johns' address, landing like an unexpected bomb in the meeting, was received with mixed comment.

Gov. Lawrence Weatherby of Kentucky, a member of the Resolutions Committee, said the suggestion was far afield from the agenda of the Governor's Conference. He added:

"Every state should face the segregation issue as it sees fit."

* * *

GOVERNOR TALMADGE of Georgia praised Johns' effort, and said the Georgia General Assembly would petition for an amendment to the constitution. Such petitions would be necessary from thirty-six states, however, before Congress could set a referendum. Governor White of Mississippi joined in Talmadge's sentiments.

South Carolina's Gov. James Byrnes, a defender of Dixie's traditional segregation but also a supporter of President Eisenhower, declined comment as did Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas, chairman of the Resolutions Committee.

Maryland's Governor McKeldin, lone Republican among the Dixie Governors, denounced the Johns' proposal. He handed newsmen a copy of a speech delivered to the executives behind closed doors. McKeldin said:

"I counsel you to turn a deaf ear to any man rash enough to claim he can answer the segregation problem out of his own unaided wisdom."

* * *

THE FLORIDA Governor, defeated for re-election in the summer Democratic primary, declared he "felt it a matter of duty" to urge the Governors to take a firm stand now against the U. S. Supreme Court opinion banning segregation.

Efforts to obtain a unanimous front for preservation of Dixie's traditional racial barriers failed when the Governors gathered last spring at Hot Springs, W. Va., and again last summer when Gov. Thomas Stanley of Virginia summoned them into a special session at Richmond.

Fed. Jurist Upholds Bias

Courier P. 1
11-20-54

BOCA RATON, Fla. (INS)—A Federal jurist who upheld the principle of separate schools for white and Negro pupils supported Southern Governors Friday in their demands for States' Rights.

Judge John J. Parker of the U. S. Court of Appeals at Charlotte, N. C., declared that centralized power in Washington is "fraught with the utmost danger to local self-government and to the freedom of the individual."

Judge Parker was one of three appellate jurists whose collective opinion in the Clarendon County, S. C., school segregation case was reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court opinion banning racial segregation.

He spoke before the Governors at Boca Raton while they considered a proposal to let the nation's voters decide the fate of Dixie's traditional segregation.

Highlights From Dixie Governors' Sessions

Courier P. 1
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 11-20-54

Highlights from statements uttered by various Governors at the Southern Governors' conference last week-end: . .

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia: "I suggested we pass such a resolution when we met at Hot Springs, W. Va., but some of the faint-hearted boys wouldn't go along. Now it's too late."

Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland: "It is the duty of every private citizen as well as every official to accept the decrees of the Supreme Court regardless of one's opinions of the merits of the case. So the suggestion that Maryland should offer resistance, active or passive, to the court is fantastic nonsense."

* * *

Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina: "I would favor amending the Constitution to legalize segregation, but I'm not confident that such a move would meet with success."

* * *

Gov. Thomas B. Tanley of Virginia: "Efforts to force anti-segregation laws upon the Southern States is but one phase of the violations of states' rights by the National Government. I believe states outside the South feel as we do about preserving their sovereign rights."

* * *

Acting Gov. Charley Johns of Florida, "The segregation problem is upon us and it is time to take action. I don't know whether my resolution will be approved because some of these Governors are timid."

7 of South's Governors Warn Of 'Dissensions' in Curb on Bias

Times Dispatch 11-14-54

Avow Right of States to Control Public School Procedures—Six at Meeting Refrain From Signing Statement

New York, N.Y. Times 11-14-54

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13—Seven Southern Governors and a Governor-elect issued today a statement declaring that racial integration in the public schools of their states would "engender dissensions that do not now exist."

They said that they would "exercise every proper prerogative" in preserving the right of the states to "administer their public school systems to the best interest of all our people."

The statement was for the most part a reiteration of views the eight had expressed individually since the Supreme Court handed down on May 17 its decision against racial segregation in the public schools.

The statement resulted from a meeting held immediately after the close of the twentieth annual Southern Governors' Conference. The signers stressed that their action was not connected with the official business of the conference.

The signers were Govs. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia, Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, Allan Shivers of Texas, Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia, Charley E. Johns of Florida, Johnston Murray of Oklahoma and the South Carolina Governor-elect, George Bell Timmerman Jr.

Participants in the meeting who did not sign the statement were Govs. Frank G. Clement of Tennessee, Francis Cherry of Arkansas, Lawrence Wetherby of Kentucky, Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland, William C. Marland of West Virginia and the Alabama Governor-elect, James E. Folsom.

It was announced that Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi and Leroy Collins, Governor-elect of Florida, were not present when the action was taken.

Governor McKeldin announced that he had told other Southern Governors that any suggestion that his state should offer resistance to the Supreme Court directive "is fantastic nonsense."

He declared that he had urged the Governors to keep in mind that the Supreme Court itself had found in school segregation problem so complex that it was asking advice on how to implement its decision. He added that he had said:

"I counsel you to turn a deaf ear to any man rash enough to claim that he can answer it out of his own unaided wisdom."

The school segregation issue was not on the agenda of the general conference, but was introduced unexpectedly Thursday. Governor Johns, in his welcoming address, urged the conference to call on President Eisenhower to ask Congress to submit for state ratification a constitutional amendment to preserve public school racial segregation.

The Governors were cool to the proposal, mainly because they regarded it as politically infeasible. Governor Johns subsequently submitted his proposal to the conference resolutions committee, where it was tabled.

Some viewed the statement issued today as a vehicle for underscoring agreement with the "objectives" of the Florida Governor's proposal.

It was at a closed session of the resolutions committee, according to Governor McKeldin, that he made the remarks he cited today.

"We are going to work this thing out in Maryland," he declared.

Governor Wetherby was elected chairman of the conference to succeed Governor Murray. He has been at the forefront of the conference's program for strengthening higher education in the South.

It Took Christian Courage

It took Christian courage and the finest sense of democratic responsibility for Mr. Aubrey Williams, Jr., of Montgomery to assist a group of parents interested in enrolling their children in the nearest and best public school. All good Christians and genuine believers in real democracy will applaud this action.

It is impossible for human beings to live dividely and at the same time unitedly. The American credo is an undivided teaching. Christian teachings have no double standard. Understanding has to be taught be example. Those who would understand each other must learn with each other.

Public schools belong to the people. They are the property of no particular group. They who own the schools are entitle to use them in the same way as any others. This is democracy and as it should be no matter how long it may have been ignored tradition has always bowed to the truth in the struggle of progress.

In Montgomery some twenty-three children on September 2 presented themselves for registration at the closest and best school. They were refused admission. It is believed that legal steps for their admission may eventually be taken. There was no incident when these students sought admission and we do not believe their admission would break the routine of the school. We have this kind of faith in decent and fair-minded people, such as we believe Montgomery has.

On School Issue—

Aubrey Williams Receives 'Threats'

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 3 (U.P.)—Aubrey Williams Jr., who accompanied a group of Negro children to a white school here in their unsuccessful attempt to be enrolled, said today he has received two threatening telephone calls.

He said both were made yesterday afternoon, soon after the Negro pupils appeared at the white school and asked to be entered.

Williams said one man told him, "We'll get you tonight." The other said, "We'll meet up sometimes."

He said he dismissed both telephone callers as "just excited people."

Police said today that they have received no reports of any attempts to carry out the threats.

A group of 23 children appeared at the white school yesterday and registered for enrollment. School Principal Robert Anderson refused them on grounds they lived in another school district.

Montgomery Lawyer Nesbitt Elmore said a lawsuit will be filed in Federal District Court at Montgomery to challenge the refusal.

EDUCATION 1954

MR. HARRY S. ASHMORE, EXECUTIVE EDITOR--ARKANSAS GAZETTE
AUTHOR--"THE NEGRO AND THE SCHOOLS"

Southern Editor Sees End Of Bias In South Without Violence

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Integration in the schools can be accomplished in the South without widespread violence, Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette and author of the recently-published book, "The Negro and the Schools," says.

Speaking to the Women's National Press Club at a luncheon held at the Mayflower hotel Friday, the southern writer recalled that it was prophesied when Negroes were given the franchise in the South that "blood would run in the streets if they showed up at the polls." But when they went to vote, nothing happened.

WHOLESALE VIOLENCE

The speaker admitted, however that the feeling against school integration runs more deeply than it did for the opening of polling booths to the Negro. "But," he continued, "I don't anticipate any wholesale violence."

He contended that integration will progress much more rapidly in some districts than in others. Some districts might integrate their schools with six months while others might take six years.

The author implied that he favored gradualism in integration by pointing out that children should not be forced into a hostile atmosphere. "Where there is hostility," he continued, "there can be no manifold integration. Hostility will inhibit the right to learn."

INSPIRED IN HOMES

He admitted that hostility on the part of students is usually inspired in the homes and such hostility could be overcome by proper instruction from parents and tolerance on the part of the teachers.

White and Negro leaders of the South are now sitting down and discussing across the table the law and social system of their communities in an effort to work out a solution to meet the needs of both races.

About 40 per cent of all the school districts in the Confederate states, said Ashmore, have less than 10 per cent Negro population. He suggested that these districts could very well integrate without too much resentment, but the process will be much slower in the deep south where there is a larger Negro population. There are 11,000 school districts, he said, affected by the Supreme Court's decision.

NO OTHER WAY

Most white Southerners didn't like the decision, he stated, "but there is no use kidding ourselves, they could not have ruled any other way."

The Negro has advanced on all other fronts, he continued, and the last resort was that of segregation in education. "This was a historic movement which marked one more milestone along the very difficult journey which the two races must travel together," Ashmore said.

He spoke of Gov. Talmadge's proposal to abolish all public schools if integration is forced upon his state. If Georgia actually carries out this threat it will set public education back 50 years for both races, and the losses will be far greater than the gains.

And education, he concluded, is the best means of liberating us all.

Negroes invited by the Women's Press Club to witness the lecture given by this authority on school integration included Mrs. Vivian Mason, president of the National Council of Negro Women; Louis Lautier of the National Newspaper Publishers Association, Mrs. Alice A. Dunnigan of the Associated Negro Press.

EDUCATION 1954

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: A CITY'S CASE HISTORY

Baltimore Incidents Are Traced to Ignorance on Part of Parents

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 9—After a week of diminishing disorders on the issue of mixed classes in the public schools, this city presents a case history in desegregation that [illegible] of value to other communities.

For the moment, the proponents of segregation seem to have been defeated, although tension remains in a few districts. At no time did the picketing and related demonstrations by parents and children affect more than twenty-five of the city's 170 public schools.

Underlying the situation here is the steady increase in the Negro population, now set at just about one-quarter of the total of nearly 1,000,000. This has meant drastic changes in some neighborhoods and the imminence of change in others. Significantly enough there was no trouble at all in [illegible], where the Negro enrollment reached 45 per cent—by far the highest ratio throughout the city.

In Baltimore, which has a home-rule charter, integration at the fall term was made possible here by a decision of the board of school commissioners.

The other Maryland counties, in accordance with a ruling by the state attorney general, are maintaining "separate but equal facilities" pending the decrees by the United States Supreme Court implementing its historic decision of last May.

The primary cause of trouble here seems unquestionably to be ignorance. Between the court decision and the actual start of classes, there was virtually no sign of protest. It was only when segregationist parents actually saw the "mixing" of races in the neighborhood schools, that they began to mutter.

Many told principals and teachers, "We thought we had the right to vote on it." Near P. S. 34 in sensitive southwest Baltimore, a father assured a group of women, "It's only a decision—it's got to be passed." Near by another man insisted, "It isn't the law," but merely a "deal" between local officials and "stooges."

'TAKES PATIENCE'

Thiele in The Los Angeles Mirror

Police Act Firmly

This kind of "thinking" inevitably erupted in violence. There were injuries and arrests on Friday and on Monday; but after a strong warning by Police Commissioner Beverly Ober, followed up by firm police tactics, the physical manifestations of dissatisfaction rapidly waned.

The question of the degree to which the segregationists are organized is naturally of great concern. Many phone calls, spreading rumors and asking questions about incidents that never took place have been traced to relatively few people. There has as yet been no real centralization of the protest in Baltimore.

One protest group, permitted by a Methodist minister to express opinions but not to organize in the church meeting hall, spoke with convincing simplicity of running a cake sale to raise funds to hire a hall without restrictions. Later this group met informally over a garage.

The nearest to an organized demonstration—apart from the street disorders—was a meeting Monday night at the Ritchie Stock Car Raceway, beyond the city limits in Anne Arundel County.

It was here that Bryant W. Bowles, organizer of a "National Association for the Advancement of White People," made his appearance. The setting, the audience and what Bowles said were unmistakably indicative of the sources of segregationist sentiment in this area.

The Voices of Protest

About 500 persons, at least half women, sat on open tiers of seats while Bowles spoke in the glare of floodlights from the back of an open truck. There was constant audience participation—encouraged by the speaker. There were all of the most hackneyed jokes and puns on color. One woman down front kept getting to her feet and shouting:

"And don't forget, he [Gov. Theodore McKeldin] has only executed one man—and that was a white man."

She said it at least three times, at regular intervals.

Another speaker—called to the truck from the audience by Bowles—was a 46-year-old carpenter who had been arrested during the day near Southern High School, where he has three sons enrolled. Freed on probation, without verdict on a disorderly conduct charge, this man harangued the crowd with a kind of hill-billy humor. He belittled the idea that outsiders had started the protest in Baltimore.

"You know who started it?" he yelled. "My kids and a couple of their friends."

Bowles left after distributing applications for membership, which costs $5. He called for another meeting today. But he kept assuring his listeners that he did not need their money. He said he could draw on "$2,000,000" of pledged funds; and that the "banker" had set aside $100,000 for him on demand.

At the same time, it has been noticeable here that those involved in the demonstrations, including the man who hired the racetrack for Bowles and even the chairman of his meeting, have made extraordinary efforts to keep their names out of it.

School Officials' Course

The attitude of school officials has been uniformly in line with the policy of the school board and Superintendent John H. Fischer. That is not to say that all teachers and administrators necessarily have identical views on segregation. In his decision supporting the board's decision to go ahead with desegregation without waiting for Supreme Court decrees, Superior Court Judge James K. Cullen noted Tuesday that compliance with the court's decision, not agreement, was the important thing.

But all evidence suggests that the Baltimore teachers have put their hearts as well as their professional efforts into the fight to achieve integration. There is a young physical education teacher at Southern High School named Becky Kekenes. On Oct. 1, at great risk, she drove her own car doggedly through a hostile crowd to get two Negro pupils to safety. Within a few days, she was reduced to tears by a series of goads and insults.

The steps taken by school authorities fitted in smoothly with those taken by the police. As pickets were warned they were subject to arrest, Dr. Fischer announced that continued absences without legitimate excuse would mean a formal entry of truancy in the records, and possible suspension and expulsion.

Principals generally have told hesitant pupils to either "come to school or go home." Loitering in the neighborhood has been discouraged. And visiting by adults during school hours has been more strictly supervised; principals are alert to the danger of the single incident.

Outlook 'Bright'

As for the long-range outlook, Dr. Fischer says it is bright. And in an official publication on the segregation issue, he quoted from a letter written by James G. Carroll, Principal of Elementary School No. 10, to his faculty. Dr. Fischer said the tone of the message reflected the spirit of the entire school system.

It said in part:

"I shall give the Negro teacher or the Negro child no special favors because of his color, nor shall I withhold any privilege or right from him because he is Negro. * * *

"I shall remember that the same God made both of us—that He put my mind inside a white skin. * * * My stepson found the Negro boys who fought in Korea beside him * * * received enemy bullets with the same bravery that the white skin received them. * * *

"Segregation in the schools has ended. Let us make the transition in this school a smooth transition. Let us be proud of ourselves next June."

MR. MILTON BRACKER
NEW YORK TIMES

DESEGREGATION—TWO VIEWS

Pratt in The Sacramento Bee

"Classroom for anarchy."

Ivey in The St. Petersburg Times

Still a problem.

DR. MARAGRET BUTCHER
BOARD OF EDUCATION, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Mrs. Butcher Hails Anti Bias Ruling As Victory For All

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Negroes alone did not win when the Supreme court handed down its decision on segregation, Margaret Just Butcher, told the human relations department of the National Council of Negro women, here last week.

A member of the Washington board of education, she asserted the decision was a culmination of an "American dream."

Mrs. Butchers, who teaches at Howard university, said Negroes as well as whites should treat the decision with the greatest respect she said, even though there are as many Negroes, proportionately as whites opposed to mixed schools.

Declaring that the decision was inevitable, she said that most of the work in eradicating racial segregation is yet to be done.

"We hope that any child soon can go to the school nearest him," she said.

Dr. Butcher Talks To Big Audience

Didn't Find Blanket Indians In Sooner Capital

A huge throng assembled in the Calvary Baptist church Sunday to greet Margaret Butcher, member of the Washington, D. C. school board and a faculty member of Howard university.

In a rapid fire address to her audience, Mrs. Butcher, following introduction to the audience by Editor Roscoe Dunjee, plunged into a discussion of the problem that faced school officials in the national capital, following the Supreme Court decision. She said her experience in Washington caused her to feel Negroes should pay no attention whatsoever to these "s h o t g u n" organizations springing up overnight to pilot the way for desegregation. "Let's follow the trained guidance of such true and tried organizations such as the NAACP in finding our way in this new day." Mrs. Butcher declared.

In an earlier portion of the big program, J. E. Stewart outlined the purpose of the meeting, which he said was for the purpose of raising funds for the Freedom Fulfillment program. At the close of the meeting the audience laid $378.40 on the table. The local branch plans to add to this amount to make a total of $500 to be donated to the national office on Oklahoma City's quota.

Mrs. Butcher left for Tulsa Monday afternoon, where she is scheduled to make an address Monday night.

"I am surprised at what I find in Oklahoma City," declared the distinguished daughter of the first Spingarn medalist. While the Washingtonian did not amplify on this statement, it is assumed she came west looking for some blanket Indians in what is supposed to be the former Indian country.

NAACP Needed to Prod America —Dr. Butcher

The militance and aggressiveness of organizations like the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is "necessary to the progress of American democracy," Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, Howard University professor, Washington, D. C., told an audience Monday night at Mt. Zion Baptist church.

Daughter of the eminent Dr. Ernest Just, internationally famous biologist, and the only woman member of the Washington, D. C. board of education, Dr. Butcher was introduced to the NAACP sponsored mass meeting audience by Atty. B. C. Franklin, whose guest she was while in the city.

Dr. Margaret J. Butcher
Photo Courtesy of Tulsa Tribune

"Too often," she said, "when we try to defend the things that make America, America, and that make democracy, democracy,—we are accused of being radicals."

She stressed that the importance of fighting to implement democratic practices cannot be over-emphasized.

"It is important that colored Americans should take a stand," the speaker declared. "The history of the West is based on the type of largesse that 'men are men' and able to measure up to what it means to be members of a democratic society."

" The NAACP is sometimes accused of 'going too fast and too far.' But it is simply tryin to help America save herself at a time when American democracy is on the spot. In times like this protest and social action groups are needed to help to resolve many of our problems."

Dr. Butcher pointed out that segregation, against which the NAACP has waged its most unrelenting fight, is premised on four wrongs:

1. It is immoral; it flouts the basic assumption of the worth and dignity of the individual as a child of God.

2. It damages America and America's brand of democracy in the eyes of our enemies and colored peoples around the world.

3. The price of segregation is too costly.

4. It allows the "supreme irony" —that a Negro need only put on a turban and affect an accent to "pass."

The speaker mentioned numerous occasions on which she had been queried by colored persons of other national and racial back grounds who wondered "how the American Negro can maintain an attitude of loyalty, optimism and objectivity" in the face of American discrimination and segregation.

As one of three Negro members board of education, Dr. Butcher has apparently left no stone unturned in her quest for information and facts about her community's Negro and white schools—as was evidenced in some of the inequities which she so dramatically cited.

In the District of Columbia, out of 104,000 school children, 54,000 are she stated. She cited examples of the disadvantageed situations to which some 15,000 to 16,000 Negro school children were subjected, while pointing out that "only 12,000 are in adequate schools."

Because residents of the District have no vote, she said Negro citizens have long had to put up with "flagrant" abuses in the dual pattern of education.

"Despite laws demanding that elementary school children should go no more than five blocks to the nearest school, there are many cases of Negro children traveling three to six miles to attend school."

DR. MARGARET J. BUTCHER
BOARD OF EDUCATION- WASHINGTON, D.C.

She pointed out that the separate schools were denied such "special services as psychiatrists, and added humorously that if "having to walk past three schools to get to one" wouldn't frustrate a child enough for it to need psychiatric services, she didn't know what would!

In Washington, Negroes have not gotten new school buildings, but have been the recipients of hand-me-downs. The speaker stated that out of 20 transfers of schools to separate status, all except one had old, exhusted, unneeded and unoccupied by the other group."

She told of such conditions in the Negro schools as: "physics laboratories without running water, cooking classes where students learned to cook on a coal stove "at least 40 years old," classes for crippled children located in a basement down steps that had no handrail.

Anent the current implementation of the Supreme Court decision in Washington, Dr. Butcher declared that there is no such thing as a gradual way to integrate the public schools.

"Step-by-step integration takes on a beguiling tone, but it won't get the job done," she declared. "The only way to integrate a system is to do it!"

She pointed out that in the District original plans for this fall called for the arbitrary transfer of 2,900 Negro children into white schools.

"Somewhere along the line, between June and September—and possibly with White House pressure—new zones were declared which changed the picture entirely." She said Hobard Corning, superintendent of schools has since speeded up the process which means that Negro children could apply for transfer at the beginning of this month instead of waiting until September 1955, as was originally planned.

Dr. Butcher drew applause when she said that integration is a two way street, and not just for the Negro alone.

"It means as much to white children to go to integrated schools as for Negroes," she stated. "Integration is for the American citizen!"

"It is not just for the Negro alone. And folks who believe otherwise, in the channeling of Negro children into white schools, put the burden of integration on the Negro children into white schools, put the burden of integration on the Negro child as an interloper and on the white child as an innocent victim. Integration should work both ways. Integration is a two-way street, and it's a ridiculous fallacy that it's for the Negro child alone

Dr. Butcher concluded her talk with some techniques which can be used by communities looking forward to integration. (A check-list of these techniques will be published in next week's Oklahoma Eagle.)

NAACP Speaker Blasts Teachers' Conclave For Failure To Tackle Desegregation Issue

Dr. Margaret Butcher, Howard Faculty Member, Says All Citizens Obligated To Accept Court's Mandate; Schools' First Concern Should Be Education of Pupils

By LUTHER CARMICHAEL

If teachers don't take a firm stand and support desegregation, the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court abolishing segregation in public education might as well "be thrown out of the window," Dr Margaret Butcher told the Tennessee State Conference Branches of the NAACP last Sunday afternoon at Pleasant Green Baptist Church.

Dr. Butcher, associate professor of English at Howard University, now on leave, is connected with the NAACP National Office.

Speaking from the subject, "The Meaning of the Supreme Court's Decision to Us as a People," Dr. Butcher lambasted those persons who seek to circumvent the decision of the High Courts of last May 17. On the other hand, she reminded the audience repeatedly that it is the duty of all American citizens to "supplement the court's decision."

"The decision," she declared, "has eradicated the idea of color so far as I am concerned."

Dr. Butcher, who was named "Woman of the Year" for 1954, "brought down the house" when she denounced a Virginia teachers' organization for a resolution opposing the Supreme Court's ruling, and an editorial in the Roanoke (Virginia) Times supporting the teachers' resolution.

"Anytime a group of teachers assume a position to reject the Supreme Court's Decision, that group of teachers should be fired, and the paper supporting them should be censured," she said.

Not all of the teachers opposing the May 17 decision are white. "Some of them are colored," she said.

"I have been told that a group of Negro teachers held a 3-day convention here recently and did not even mention desegregation.

"If teachers don't take a stand and support the decision, it might as well be thrown out the window."

Teachers who do not ascribe to the ruling of the Supreme Court stand to lose the respect of both races, she said.

Dr. Butcher related an incident in which two Negro school officials went to their superintendent and assured him that they were against the Supreme Court's ruling. The superintendent listened to their story and said:

"First, I don't believe you are telling the truth, and second, you ought to be ashamed of yourself."

Education of Pupil Is Main Purpose

Everything possible will be done to protect teachers from the loss of their jobs. However, in a fight of such far-reaching significance, there will always be "some casualties," she said.

Dr. Butcher reminded teachers, however, to remember that "the "main purpose" of our public schools "is to educate pupils; not hire teachers." She urged teachers to take a "firm, democratic position," and "do the job."

"If you are going to teach, TEACH; or find something else to do."

Parents, P-TA groups and civic workers, she said, can "help the teachers."

Sometimes we forget that a democracy is made up of i ndividual people . . . as people of conviction, as people of morality, we are obligated to take the Supreme Court's Decision . . . we believe we are right . . . we believe that God is on our side."

NAACP Not Subversive

Lauding the struggle of the NAACP, she said that it is the only organization which has taken this case to court.

"The NAACP is not subversive—we do not operate underground. It has the blessings of both parties.

Lambasting inequities and the high cost of segregated schools, Dr. Butcher cited cases in Washington, before the Court's decision, where a total of 2100 unused seats were found in white schools, while 1600 colored pupils were packed into a school built to accomodate 900.

"They were packed in the basement, in the janitors' quarters, and in the principal's outer office. Some children had to go from 6 to 8 miles to school. . . There was one girl suffering from a sinus infection, who had to go 58 blocks to school, and had to get three transfers, when there wa sa school just across the street.

"We, as a people, have a right to the best that's offered, she said. "The old contention that the Negro does not pay enough taxes to ask equal public facilities is not to be considered at all, she said.

"If we had better job opportunities, we would pay more taxes." On the contrary, she pointed out that the Negro taxpayer is not getting "what he pays for." The speaker called for implementation of the decision in order to "see to it that we get what we are paying for."

Dr. Butcher was introduced by Mrs. Preston Valien, an outstanding leader in local and state affairs of the NAACP.

Rev. Grimmett Elected President

The meeting Sunday brought to a close a three-day session of the State Branches of the NAACP.

The Rev. J. F. Grimmett, faculty member at the American Baptist Theological Seminary, was elected president of the State group. Mrs. J. F. Grimmett, secretary, and M. W. Day, treasurer.

In a brief talk at the Sunday afternoon meeting, the Rev. Grimmett pleaded for the "whole-hearted cooperation" of the entire membership.

"If we are to do a job in the State of Tennessee, it must be done with your whole-hearted cooperation— It is no one man's job."

He urged full and free use of the franchise, declaring, "no citizen is a full-fledged citizen in a community until he is able to vote . . . we want to dispel some of the fear which detains our people as citizens. . . This is not a 'Negro' fight, but a fight for all of us."

Earlier in the sessions, panels were conducted on "Housing," "Job Placement," Legislative Needs," "Implementation of Supreme Court's Decision," and "Religion In Integration."

NAAWP Seeking Ouster

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

WASHINGTON—Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, professor of English at Howard University, and daughter of the late and famed biologist, Dr. Ernest Just, has been requested to resign her position on the local school board.

Opposition to Dr. Butcher is said to have grown out of charges that she is a "tool" of the NAACP and therefore unqualified to view with objectivity the business before the board.

Associates of Dr. Butcher point out that the National Association for the Advancement of White People demanded last January that she resign.

* * *

THEY RECALL further that one influential Washington daily has devoted considerable editorial space condemning the attitude of Dr. Butcher.

Veteran observers see the recent demands for the removal of Dr. Butcher as "no more serious, no more dramatic and probably just as meaningless as previous efforts to oust her."

DR. MARGARET BUTCHER
. . . a platform for propaganda?

Friends of Dr. Butcher say that she is a person who, though born with a silver spoon, has an unusual sense of social justice.

Her enemies charge that she is using her position on the school board as a platform for propagandizing.

* * *

HER RECORD on the board is proof that she is a woman of conviction, completely unafraid, confident and willing to defend an unpopular point of view alone.

This has won for her the recognition as the stormy petrel of the school board.

Dr. Butcher was the only member of the board who requested, prior to the May 17 Supreme Court decision, that the board go on record as admitting that the schools for white and Negro children in the District were unequal and she single handedly attacked the first "Corning Plan" announced at the beginning of the school year in September as "a gradualist approach which did not meet the spirit of the Supreme Court decisoin."

Members of the school board are appointed by district judges. The other Negro members of the board are Col. West A. Hamilton, retired from the U. S. Army, and Atty. Wesley S. Williams.

EDUCATION 1954

DR, MARGARET JUST BUTCHER

I always worked for democracy -- Dr. Butcher

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 11-20-54 p. 22

DR. MARGARET JUST BUTCHER

WASHINGTON

"I have always worked with group interested in democracy. Those are the only important things I know," says Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, outspoken member of the board of education.

Dr. Butcher made the statement Tuesday when asked about her latest activities which have brought a recurrence of demands for her ouster from the board.

The educator refused to discuss the reported demands of some white citizens associations and the NAAWP for her removal, saying she would not honor their remarks with a statement.

"I DID not aspire to be a member of the board of education," Dr. Butcher asserted. "I was advised that I was appointed when I was some 700 miles away from Washington in July of 1953.

"At such time as the District judges, who apparently concurred in my appointment, see fit to suggest my removal, I will then dignify the current requests with a reply.

"In the meantime, as one who is happy to serve in terms of forthright democratic principles—I shall continue to exert my best possible judgement in the best interest of all people in this community," Dr. Butcher said.

—o O o—

THE EDUCATOR said she recently told the New York Herald Tribune Forum that she did not feel there was anything wrong with pressure groups in America.

"Gunnar Myrdal calls the work of pressure groups an important asset to our country." After all, haven't we been pressuring for democracy around the world? Why can't we do it at home?" Dr. Butcher said emphatically.

AS ONE of the speakers on the recent forum in New York City, Dr. Butcher appeared on a panel with Mrs. Henry Barlett, president of the Federation of Citizens and Miss Jeanne Rogers, a local newswoman.

In addition to appearances in New York, Dr. Butcher also has speaking engagements in Oklahoma, Kentucky, Ohio and the states she is touring as a consultant for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, headed by Thurgood Marshall.

THE MILITANT educator has just returned to the city from West Virginia where she is on special assignment for the NAACP.

Dr. Butcher has taken leave from her position as professor of English at Howard University to accept the post as consultant.

Her job as a roving investigator, is to see how well the job started by Mr. Marshall and his aides is being carried out.

HER WORK takes her into four states and the District where she confers with school officials, civic leaders and government officers on the progress of desegregation.

The states which Dr. Butcher covers includes Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, part of Delaware. She is currently touring Mercer and Fayette County in West Virginia.

"My job is to see how integration is working in these various communities and what is being planned for the future," Dr. Butcher said.

The consultant said she is interested in teacher as well as pupil integration.

"You can't have school integration without integrating the faculties" she continued.

Dr. Butcher said she is already surprised at some of the reaction she has found to the white and colored citizens in the various areas.

Dr. Butcher said her activity has nothing to do with the NAACP briefs to be filed with the high Court in December.

DR. BUTCHER was in town to attend the committee meetings of the board scheduled for this week and next Wednesday.

She said she boycotted the closed meeting of board members with assistant corporation counsel Milton Korman Monday because "I vowed before I wouldn't go" after the corporation counsel failed to confer with school board members in preparing the brief for the Supreme Court arguments last year.

Mr. Korman told AFRO reporters board members were invited this year to hear the brief he is going to present to the Supreme Court in December, because he wanted "to avoid any ruckus being raised like it was before."

The Negro Educational Worker

Bright Future Seen for Negro Teacher As Desegregation Changes School Scene

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 10-30-54

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the fourth in a series of articles by Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant to the Commissioner, U. S. Office of Education, on the Negro educational worker in America. Dr. Caliver is considered an outstanding authority in the field of higher education for Negroes. This is a comprehensive study of the Negro educational worker in America.

By DR. AMBROSE CALIVER

What is the outlook for Negro teachers in this period of transition from a segregated to an integrated school system? This question can best be answered by considering the emerging role of education in our national life. That the significance of education is coming to be increasingly recognized as our most important social enterprise, is apparent on every hand. The developing strength of the educational profession; the expansion of the educational structure and program; the extension of its services to the entire population; and the increasing financial support provided all point to its significance. But even more important than these things is the growing interest of citizens generally in education as a public function.

DR. CALIVER

THERE HAS BEEN some apprehension expressed concerning the possibility that a number of Negro teachers would lose their jobs when desegregation takes place.

In the light of the above analysis, and of the facts about school growth, what is the outlook for Negro teachers? What are some of the trends which point to the need for their services?

(1) On the basis of our present school enrollment it is estimated that we started this year with a shortage of about 22,000 prepared teachers for elementary schools.

(2) This year we had approximately thirty-seven million students enrolled in elementary and secondary schools and in colleges. At the present rate of increase of births; increase of 5-7-year-old children in school, and increase of 16-18-year-old youth remaining in school, it is estimated that by 1960 there will be forty-five million enrolled in schools and colleges. In this conection the fact that Negroes have not begun to reach their educational saturation point probably has not been taken into consideration. When the proportion of Negroes attending the upper elementary school grades, the high scools and the colleges approximates that for whites the educational load will be even heavier than was estimated for 1960.

3. In addition to the above, return of adults to school and college is increasing at an accelerated rate.

4. In spite of the increase of 17- and 18-year-old youths in schools, there is still a large percentage of them out of school who ought to be there if our potential manpower is to be conserved and made more effective.

5. Another source from which we may expect an increased demand on our schools and colleges is the aging population. Their proportion to the total population is rapidly growing. The number of men and women, 65 years old and over has quadrupled since 1900. The number, which is now thirteen million, is increasing currently at the rate of 400,000 a year. Their educational needs are now largely unmet.

Three other factors should be mentioned here: One is the fact that in most cases there will not be any wholesale, overnight shift of school populations, because of the racial segregation in housing. Except in isolated instances, even under a redistricting program, schools now attended predominantly by Negroes or by whites will for some time continue to be attended predominantly by the same racial group.

* * *

THE SECOND FACTOR is that of tenure. Not all Negro teachers are protected by tenure regulations, but nine of the affected states and the District of Columbia have tenure regulations.

Not only may the school officials be expected to abide by them, but such groups as the Commission for Defense of Democracy through education, and the Association of University Professors may be looked to for help in this matter.

A third factor is that of supply and demand. The National Education Association Report, referred to earlier, points out what has been generally known for some time, that the supply of teachers graduating from teacher education institutions has for several years been far short of the demand.

* * *

A REALISTIC appraisal of the foregoing facts would indicate that all the teachers we now have, and many more, will be needed in the immediate and foreseeable future, as we prepare to implement the Court's decision and decrees with reference to desegregation and possible integration.

Any serious discussion, therefore, of the wholesale loss of jobs by Negro teachers following desegregation is, according to many competent observers, either based on ignorance of the facts, malicious threats of intimidation, or wilful attempt to thwart the will of the Court and to continue the type of discrimination practiced for over three-quarters of a century.

Naturally, some Negro teachers may lose their jobs, as some white teachers may. But not only are Negro teachers needed from the standpoint of the demand of sheer numbers to be taught; they are also needed from the standpoint of the contribution they can make toward helping the nation reappraise its fundamental human values and work toward its ultimate destiny.

* * *

THEIR SERVICES will be required in some instances to help interpret the needs of Negro students resulting from their poor home and school backgrounds, and the scars left by segregation. Their services will be needed also to help the white teachers to understand that Negro children, in spite of their color and background, are fundamentally like all other children, and will, under normal circumstances, respond as they will. The patience, fortitude, understanding, goodwill and wisdom which many Negro teachers developed out of sheer necessity will be great assets to any school system. It is assumed here, of course, that only the competent Negro teacher has a right to expect to be integrated — as would also be true of whites — and that right is "individual" and "present."

* * *

IT HAS BEEN demonstrated on the school as well as college level that Negro teachers can be successfully integrated. This is shown by the fact that Negro students and teachers worked with white persons successfully as early as Reconstruction Days, and have continued to do so, largely in private schools and colleges predominantly attended by Negroes, as well as in public scshools to some extent.

During the past decade, increasing numbers of Negro teachers have been teaching in colleges and universities which had not employed Negroes previously. More recently, according to studies made of the subject, they have been employed in elementary and high schools.

The following excerpt from an unpublished study prepared for the U. S. Attorney General in 1953 supports the above conclusion:

"One of the most serious questions raised when the process of integration begins is 'What happens to Negro teachers?' Under the New Jersey plan the number has increased. In 1945-46 there were in that state 479 Negro teachers of whom 415 were teaching in nine counties operating a dual school system. Last year there were 645 of whom 525 were in areas formerly maintaining separate schools. One of the most important conclusions that may be drawn from the New Jersey story is that integration can increase rather than decrease the number of Negro teachers who are employed.

The experience in the State of Indiana reinforces that of New Jersey. While some Negro teachers do lose their positions in the making of changes, the overall picture is one of encouragement since the total number of opportunities is usually increased.

* * *

A STUDY of successful experience with public school interracial teaching staffs was made by a Washington representative of the American Friends Service Committee Community Relations staff. It is based upon forty replies in which twenty-one cities state a policy of non-discrimination, or employment on merit, and indicate no restriction on this principle.

Twelve of these cities are in the Northeast, five in the Midwest, three on the West Coast, and one in the Southwest. The following findings and conclusions are stated:

1. Success of co-employment of teachers is consistently reported with pride of accomplishment, while explanation and apology are offered for slowness of progress. The only difficulty reported is that some parents objected.

2. Interracial staffs are used with interracial student bodies, with all-Negro student bodies, and with all-white student bodies. Placing interracial staffs in an interracial school is generally regarded as a good initial step."

There has been some talk about various means of circumventing the Court's decision. This has been especially true with respect to Negro teachers, principals and supervisors. In regard to this, John T. Fey, dean of the Law School of George Washington University, had this to say in the August 1954 issue of the Nation's Schools: "It is hoped that the way can be shown by the Court's decrees in the five cases recently decided. Plans used during the transition period which conflict with the decided cases can be regarded only as temporary expedients. There can be no permanent forestalling of integration in view of existing decisions. The findings are clear —only the methods and timing present uncertainly."

In a similar vein, Bruce in the School Board Journal previously referred to, has this to say: "The interest of all the children must be paramount in any policy the school board adopts. In a special way, the competent professional teachers — white and Negro — deserve consideration. The career of no teacher trained by hard professional study and dedicated work in the classroom can or should be disturbed."

* * *

WHAT A CHALLENGE!

AND THEN HE SAYS: "The decision of the Court lays on the school boards a serious challenge and a magnificent opportunity; a challenge to break down ancient racial and social prejudices; an opportunity — in reality a duty — to bring to an end for all time the unjust denial of a completely equal opportunity of education for all the children of all the people."

The big challenge to Negro educational workers is to help white educational workers with whom they come in contact, to face up to the necessity of reassessing our value commitments.

It is their obligation to accept the opportunity offered by the Court's decision in lifting the governmental ban on the social mobility of Negroes. This will require extra strenuous effort to assure that Negro boys and girls are prepared for the keener competition which they will meet in the free open market place provided through integration.

It will mean helping the formerly rejected Negro boys and girls to gain a sense of belonging — by first being acceptable to their white peers and teachers, and second by accepting them.

* * *

THERE IS ALSO a challenge presented to the white teachers and administrators. If integration is to succeed, all concerned must see it as a two-way matter. Those in authority, positions of leadership or preferred status have a responsibility to take the first step.

Moreover, they should assure the active involvement of Negroes in all decision making. Integration in many places cannot be successful except through intergroup conferences of ALL groups concerned.

These groups, working together, have the obligation to utilize all the available knowledge and techniques at their command in the field of intergroup education. We know we can learn how to live together more amicably, and that the improvement of human relations is amenable to educational processes. Let us put that knowlege to work.

* * *

LINCOLN is supposed to have said in 1858, in reference to a matter which was the root of our present problem: "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do, and how to do it." We know where we are. We are at the crossroads of our destiny; we are tending toward the time of great decisions, the greatest the nation has faced in nearly a century. Our values tell us what to do — to make our decisions not in terms of expediency, the immediately practical, nor in terms of our traditional prejudice, but in terms of the democratic principle of the dignity and worth of every human being, and according to the self-imposed rule of law and justice.

EDUCATION 1954

DR. AMBROSE CALIVER

The Negro Teacher

The Negro Educational Worker Faces the Period of Transition

Courier Sat, 10-9-54 Pittsburgh, Pa.

By AMBROSE CALIVER

If education is the most important function of a free society, it then follows that, educational workers are in a more strategic position than perhaps any other group of workers to influence that society. If this is true in normal times, it is particularly so in a time of transition such as today.

What is the nature and extent of this transition?

Assistant to the Commissioner, U. S. Office of Education since 1950, Dr. Caliver received his bachelor's degree from Knoxville College, his master's from the University of Wisconsin, and his doctor's from Columbia. From teaching in high schools he became, in 1917, the first Negro dean of Fisk University, serving until 1930. From thence until 1946, he was senior specialist in the Education of Negroes in the U. S. Office of Education. He then was appointed specialist for higher education of Negroes and adviser on Related Problems until his present appointment in 1950. Always interested in education, Dr. Caliver was the first Negro to receive a permanent appointment to the Classified Federal Service on a professional level. He is a member of several organizations in the field of education, and has been the recipient of many honors and testimonials.

Mr. Caliver

It has two major characteristics. One is concerned principally with the material aspects, the other with the human aspects. Scientific and technological advances have revolutionized every phase of our physical existence, improved and increased the materials we use, changed our methods in the use of these materials, increased the speed and ease of communication, changed the nature and methods of our work and our play.

The major effect of this transition has been: To increase the production of goods, and reduce the time and labor required to produce them. In addition, it has speeded up the processes of life, made it much more complex, and raised its physical standards. More significantly, it is moving us in the direction of leisure-centered existence and away from our former, work-centered existence.

* * *

THE RESULT of these trends has tended to create one-world. The different peoples of this one-world are rapidly forming one great neighborhood, with a growing number of common interests and interdependencies. All this has focused attention on the second major characteristic of the transition mentioned earlier—concern for the human aspects of life. As the populations of the world become more migratory and more congested, getting along together becomes urgently essential. With the reduction of the exhausting physical labor required to eke out a poverty-stricken existence, and the increase in the time available for other purposes, the necessity of using that time constructively and wholesomely, grows apace.

The United States has taken the lead in the technicological development which made all this possible. Thrust into multifarious relationship with all peoples, it perforce has become the leader of the free peoples seeking the democratic way of life. It is within this context, and growing out of a long struggle to apply the principles of democracy to all men and to help them obtain the fruits of our technological advance that the U. S. Supreme Court decision on school segregation finds its significance.

THE IMPACT OF THE TRANSITION

BECAUSE OF the peculiar relation which Negroes have to the American social order, and to the world community (the majority of which is colored) Negro educators have a special responsibility in terms of these trends and forces in the present transition period; perhaps more than workers in any other field of endeavor, or of any other ethnic, national, or cultural group. This responsibility was suggested in the words of Chief Justice Warren, in the now-famous May 17 Supreme Court decision, when he said:

"Today, education is perhaps the most important function of the state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democraic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities, even service in the armed forces. It is the very foundation of good citizenship. Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values, in preparing him for later professional training, and in helping him to adjust normally to his environment. In these days, it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of any education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms."

It is within such a framework that Negro educational workers will be found to be not only needed, but essential. It is also within this framework, and the new transition period ushered in by this momentous decision that Negro educational workers will find their greatest opportunity and challenge.

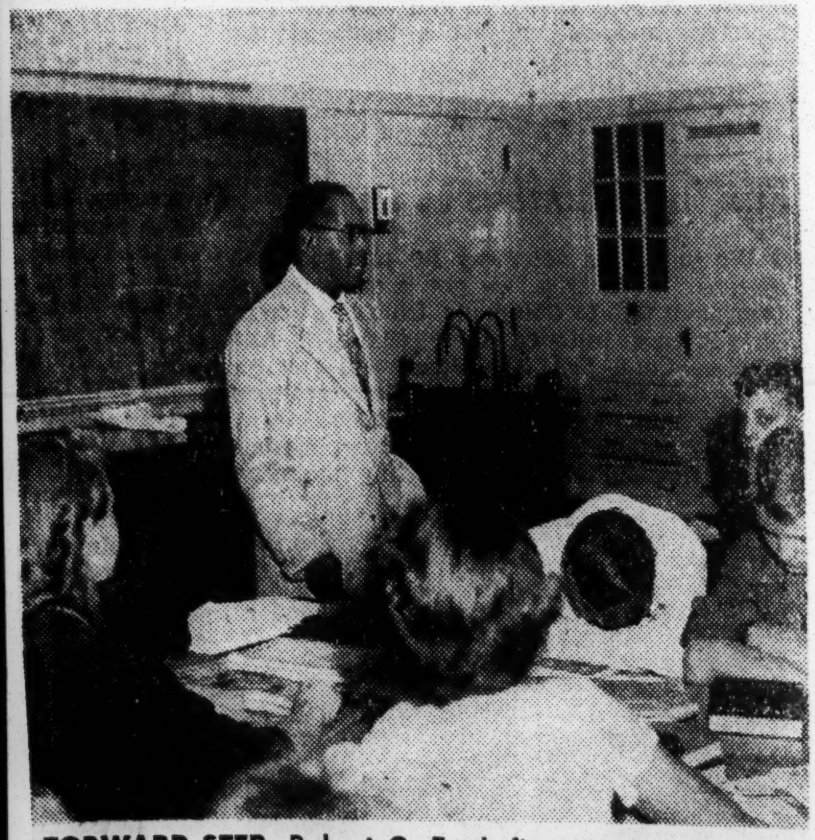
NUMBER AND DISTRIBUTION

THERE ARE approximately 85,000 Negro educational workers in the public schools and colleges and universities for Negroes. Men represent about 18 per cent of the 79,000 public school teachers, and nearly 60 per cent of the nearly 6,000 in Negro colleges and universities. The growth in both groups has been tremendous during the past half century.

Immediately after Emancipation and for several years later, the need for teachers among Negroes was met largely by northern white missionaries and officers of the Union Army. By 1900 they had trained 27,000 teachers. This was both a difficult and dangerous task. But the fact that it was done was a tribute to the courage, fortitude and humane spirit of the teachers and pupils, as well as to the desire and determination of Negroes generally to help themselves by obtaining an education. According to the latest available statistics from the seventeen southern states and the District of Columbia, in 1952 there were 54,376 Negro elementary public school teachers and 20,842 teaching in public high schools. The fact that there were only 3,287 principals indicates that most of the schools are combination elementary and secondary schools.

Next week: Mr. Caliver will discuss the extent and nature of the preparation of the Negro educational worker in America.

TEACHER AND PUPILS—The ninth grade teacher of the colored school at Jenkins, Ky., poses with three of her star pupils. The children, sons and daughters of coal miners, are extremely well-dressed as a rule, show a keen desire for knowledge.—Bituminous Coal Institute—Pierson.



FORWARD STEP—Robert G. Ford, first Negro high school teacher in the State of Oregon, was appointed in 1952 to Roosevelt High School, Portland. This type of scene is increasing slowly, but steadily throughout the nation.

The Educational Worker

Negro Teachers Take Advantage Of Educational Opportunities

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 10-16-54
P. 7

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles by Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant to the Commissioner, U. S. Office of Education, on the Negro educational worker in America. Dr. Caliver is considered an outstanding authority in the field of Negro education for Negroes. This is a comprehensive study of the Negro educational worker in America.

By DR. AMBROSE CALIVER

In general, Negro teachers are well prepared. There are several reasons for this. Among the more important are the following:

a. Negroes place a high value on education;

b. Because of limited opportunities in other fields, education has tended to attract the best brains among Negroes;

c. Salary equalization campaigns and litigation have spurred many on to better preparation in the field of education;

d. In some states Negroes are concentrated in urban areas, which offer better inducements attract the better-prepared teachers. The upgrading of teachers in the service has, of course, been an important factor in lifting the educational level of all teachers.

All of the influences just mentioned have in some instances caused Negroes to spurt ahead of the white teachers in their preparation.

THE QUALIFICATION of Negro school teachers has always been superior to that of the white elementary school teachers. But the college degree is rapidly becoming their standard equipment. According to a recent study by the NEA Research Division a larger percentage of Negro elementary school teachers held college degrees than white elementary school teachers in at least five states and the District of Columbia, as shown below.

Percentage of teachers having 120 semester hours of credit or more

	White	Negro
Alabama	68.9	69.6
District of Columbia	71.1	97.4
South Carolina	65.1	96.9
Alabama	69.9	94.2
Georgia	48.9	77.2
West Virginia	84.2	95.8

No data were available from some of the other states, the same trend would be found. In South Carolina there is only a slight diffeffrene between the white and Negro elementary teachers having 120 semester hours of credit or more; it was respectively, 69.1 and 65.4.

This is in contrast to that found among Negro elementary school teachers about twenty years ago by the writer. Then, one-fifth had not advanced beyond four years of high school education; three-fourths had not gone beyond the then accepted minimum standard of two years of college. Nearly one-half had not reached that standard.

In addition to the high percentage of Negro teachers having a given quantity of semester hours, attention should be called to another fact relating the qualitative aspects of their training. Because of the lack of opportunity to pursue graduate studies in their states, they found it necessary to attend the universities of the East, North and West.

This fact probably resulted in a relatively higher proportion of Negro teachers in the South with graduate credit (and in some cases undergraduate) from those institutions than white teachers. This should have important implications in terms of the oft-repeated concern about qualification of Negro teachers in desegregated schools.

* * *

THE SUMMER SCHOOL provides the channel through which a majority of the teachers and administrators improve their education status.

The increases are quite marked in summer school enrollment during the past half century. However, these data do not include the Negro educational workers who attended summer schools at the large Eastern, Northern and Western Universities and teachers colleges. The enrollment in these institutions has been considerable, and is still on the increase.

While all these are not in-service teachers,, a large majority are, or they are recent graduates preparing to enter educational service.

* * *

IN ATTEMPTING to improve their qualifications, Negro educational workers have had the encouragement and assistance of many persons and groups—white school offiffcials in the South, and college and university authorities in the North, East and West.

Special mention should be made of the aid received from philanthropic foundations through whose generosity a majority of the Negroes were able to pursue their graduate studies.

RESULTS ACHIEVED

THE AMOUNT and quality of education of teachers have no real significance except in terms of their own personal development and growth, and in terms of the behavior of those whom they teach. It should be of interest, therefore, to learn something of these behavior patterns as a criterion for evaluating the service of the Negro teacher. One index of this outcome is the holding power of the school, or the increasing number who advance from grade to grade.

In 1910 over four-fifths (84 per cent) of the Negro pupils were concentrated in the first four grades. There was a decrease in this proportion each of the succeeding three decades, respectively to 81, 73, and 62 per cent. In 1948 it was 55 per cent. By 1950 it had dropped to 53, and to 50.9 in 1952. The range in that year was 41.5 in Oklahoma to 61.5 in Mississippi.

* * *

THE NUMBER of pupils who advanced to high school is another significant index of the quality of education provided. From 1910 to 1920, the Negro high school enrollment rose from 3,000 to 33,000. By 1930 it rose to 112,000; to 254,000 by 1940; and to 338,000 by 1950; in 1952 it was 372,362 (see Chart II). In 1950 three-fourths of all Negroes of high school age were enrolled in school. The range was 86 per cent for Oklahoma to 65 per cent for South Carolina.

Only three-tenths of 1 per cent of the total Negro public school enrollment was in high school in 1910. By 1930 it had risen to 4.9 per cent; to 10.5 per cent by 1940; and to 15 per cent in 1952. The range in that year was 23 per cent in West Virginia to 9 per cent in Mississippi. This holding power of the schools is also reflected in the number of Negro public high school graduates. These numbered 30,000 in 1940. By 1950 it had risen to 45,000. Today it is 50,000.

* * *

ANOTHER MEASURE of the competence of teachers is the number of students who enter college and who earn degrees. Progrss here has been almost spectacular. At the beginning of the century there were only 2,624 Negro students enrolled in college courses. By 1948 there were nearly 80,000.

Although, in keeping with the general trend, succeeding years witnessed a slight drop in enrollments. In 1952 the enrollment was still 71,554. Similarly in the matter of degrees, the number conferred by the Negro colleges rose from 156 in 1900 to 12,371 in 1953 (including master's degrees).

The progress indicated here is, of course, due to many factors. But perhaps the most important is the teacher and the quality of the teaching. However, these data do not tell the whole story concerning the outcomes of the Negro teacher.

The most important phase of this story is told by the thousands of Negro men and women who have become illiterate and many who are successfully performing their daily tasks as workers, as homemakers, and as citizens.

* * *

THESE CONSTITUTE a silent tribute to the competence, idealism, devotion, courage and patience of the thousands of Negro teachers, from the darkest days of slavery and Reconstruction, over the long treadmill of segregation and discrimination, on to the present enlightened period of desegregation, integration, and first-class citizenship.

(Next week Dr. Caliver will tell of the Negro educational worker and his achievement against many odds.)

Achievement Against Many Odds Marks Advance of Negro Teacher

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the third in a series of articles by Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant to the Commissioner, U. S. Office of Education, on the Negro educational worker in America. Dr. Caliver is considered an outstanding authority in the field of higher education for Negroes. This is a comprehensive study of the Negro educational worker in America.

By DR. AMBROSE CALIVER

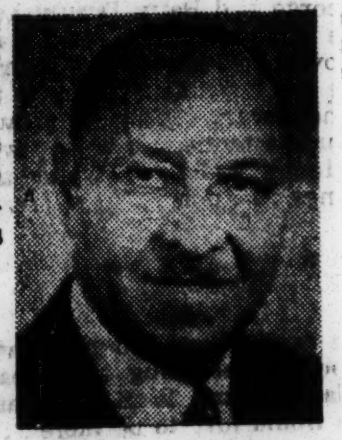
The outcomes of the Negro teacher were achieved under difficult circumstances. Until about a little over a decade ago, the physical facilities provided these teachers to do their job were not only meager, but woefully inadequate. In general the buildings were antiquated and dilapidated. Equipment and teaching aids were conspicuous by their absence. Textbooks, when they were provided, were in the main outmoded cast-offs from the white schools or from some kind-hearted friend.

The following story of the experiences of a former Negro high school principal in a Southern state as late as fifteen years ago particularizes the general situation described above.

He said that all instructional materials, equipment, and the like were delivered to the white school for the use of both the white and Negro schools.

The worn-out athletic equipment for football and other sports was passed on to the Negro school.

When coal was needed, the Negro principal would send a few boys to shovel it under the white janitor's bin and haul it back to the Negro school. No



DR. CALIVER

The Negro principal's training was superior to that of the white principal. He had a master's degree then; has later received a doctorate and has devoted his life to the training and welfare of youth, Negro and white.

textbooks were issued to the Negro pupils—only the used books from the white school.

THE NEGRO principal was required to use the side entrance to the white principal's office, and [illegible] until the office room was clear of all persons. Before rapping gently on the door, Paper, erasers, and two or three pieces of chalk for each Negro teacher were issued to the principal. On several occasions the Negro principal would thank the white principal as he "condescendingly" dropped each piece of crayon into his hand.

The salaries of Negro teachers were pitiably low. This was a reflection of the lack of recognition accorded Negro teachers by their supervisors, and of the low esteem in which they were held by citizens of the community. The gap between Negro teachers' salaries and those for white teachers remained almost constant until the late 1930s, after litigation was started by Negroes to eliminate the discrimination.

* * *

AT THE close of Reconstruction, Negroes were promised equality in educational matters if they and their friends would desist from their agitation for "mixed" schools. They agreed. And for a short period the meager school funds were distributed on a relatively equal basis.

Soon, however, this practice was abandoned. Small gaps between the two races began to widen, until in some states they became "Yawning Chasms."

As mentioned earlier, conditions have changed during the past decade, as illustrated by one community. As late as 1945, the salary of the average Negro teacher in Birmingham was only $1,179. Today, however, it is $3057.

Art: 10-23-54

THE ACHIEVEMENTS of Negro teachers—both personal and professional—could not have been accomplished through scholastic competence alone; nor through the incentive of the meager salaries received. They required a professional spirit of a very high order. To overcome the odds of segregation and discrimination called for vision to clearly see and set their goals; cooperation in developing and executing plans to reach them; and courage and determination to work toward them.

These qualities were not strangers to Negro teachers. They were developed through travail by their parents, grandparents, and missionary tutors, during the dark days of slavery and post-Reconstruction period.

Negro teachers in the early days had personal experience that developed these qualities. Many teachers today have learned them from the lips of their parents, their religious leaders, and from history and folklore. Small wonder that their educational associations, as well as individual teachers, have stood in the forefront of the current battle against discrimination and segregation.

* * *

AS A GROUP they have pooled their strength and their money. Sometimes they have worked silently, behind the scenes, in cooperation with other groups. At other times they have courageously come out in the open and taken "overt" legal action.

The individuals who have become "test cases" may be compared to the "lookout" in battle. Frequently, his was a "suicide" mission. Many were threatened, others lost their jobs, some fell by the wayside. One disappeared, never to be heard of again.

And yet, they continued to volunteer; persevering step by step through all the intricacies and vicissitudes of legal processes, until on May 17, 1954, final victory was won, not for Negroes alone, but for the entire nation.

* * *

THERE IS MUCH yet to be done to consolidate the gains made thus far. The record which Negro educational workers—administrators, teachers, students and others—have made, and the spirit they have shown, indicate that they welcome the Supreme Court's decision; that they are prepared to take the next steps; and that they will persvere with intelligence, goodwill and determination to the end that integration may become an established fact in the schools of our land.

Evidence of this is indicated by the constant rise in the membership of local, state and national professional organizations. Fifteen years ago when litigation against educational inequalities had just started, the American Teachers Association had about 2,500 members. During the first ten months of 1953-54 the membership had increased to 16,611.

One of the most encouraging signs is the willingness of individuals and groups to submerge their vested interests, which have grown from the necessity of having a "separate" educational organization; and to extend the hand of professional fellowship across racial lines. Mergers of the Negro and white state teachers associations have taken place, or plans are made for such in Missouri, Delaware, West Virginia and Arkansas.

* * *

ANOTHER IMPORTANT expression of a professional spirit among educational workers is their creative contributions. Evidence of such creativity is not easily available. However, from the limited knowledge at hand, and according to competent observers, Negroes have a rather good record in this regard. This is particularly true in the light of their many handicaps.

Until recently few of the facilities necessary for research or conducive to scholarly endeavor were accessible to Negro educators in the region where most of them worked. The libraries of the region were not open to them. The experimental facilities of the universities and Government were inaccessible. They were debarred from the communication and exchange of ideas made possible by membership in the major professional organizations of scholars and of learned societies.

* * *

IN ADDITION to these handicaps, Negro teachers faced many limitations in their own institutions. One was lack of budgetary provision for research and travel in the colleges and universities. A second limitation was an excessive teaching load.

Still another one was inadequate salaries which left little or nothing to spend on research, writing, travel, or memberships in cases where the teacher was willing to spend his own money for scholarly advancement.

Still another limitation is the frequent lack of encouragement given teachers by certain administrators to explore new fields and to express their findings orally or in writing. Lack of adequate tenure provisions also frequently affected the continuity required for effective long-term study and research.

* * *

CERTAIN CONDITIONS in the homes of Negroes also frequently served as deterrents to scholarly activity. Among those that might be mentioned are excessive illiteracy, high sickness and death rates, poverty, and the "social distance" between the teacher and other members of the family. These, of course, are not peculiar to Negroes, but may be found among any low economy groups. They are listed here merely to indicate some of the odds against which Negro teachers have labored. And to suggest that in spite of them, they are well prepared for the job that lies ahead during this transition period. One indication that they are prepared is the amount of research and scholarly activity they have accomplished in spite of their limitations and handicaps. Here is only a sample:

* * *

IN ONE AREA of research alone—the various aspects of Negro life—Ellis O. Knox, who has made an annual survey of the field since 1932, reports in the Journal of Negro Education that during the past twenty-two years, researches resulting in master's theses numbered 4,743. During the same period 563 doctoral dissertations were written in this one field alone. It appears that about 85 per cent of the master's theses were written by Negroes—a majority of whom became teachers.

During the past decade about one-half the doctoral dissertations were written by Negroes. These statistics do not include the large number who wrote master's and doctor's theses in other fields. Neither does it include those who made researches that did not result in a thesis.

The number of Ph. D. degrees or their equivalent earned by members of a group, is one important index of that group's scholarly advancement. Negroes have made real progress in earning such degrees during the past generation. According to Harry W. Greene's studies and reports, before World War I there were only fourteen who had earned the Ph. D. or its equivalent.

From 1914 to 1929 thirty-seven more earned the degree, and from 1930 to 1943 there were 317 more added to the ranks. Exact data on the subject are not available now. But if Negroes continued to earn the degree at about the same rate since 1951 as was reported by the Negro Yearbook for 1947-51; and if we cut the rate in half for the years during World War II, we may conservatively estimate that a total of about 925 Negroes have earned the Ph. D. degree or its equivalent.

* * *

IN ADDITION to the above evidence of scholarly attainment, attention might be called to the fact that 128 Negroes are listed in "American Men of Service" and 146 in "Who's Who in America." There are many other achievements that might be mentioned if space permitted, such as membership in Phi Beta Kappa. These are sufficient, however, to indicate that the intellectual and creative climate in which Negroes have been developing in recent years has helped in preparing them for a high quality of service in an integrated situation. They stand ready and willing to contribute their full measure of talent and resources to the welfare of the nation and the advancement of mankind.

* * *

(Next week the fourth and final article in this series will deal with the outlook and the challenge facing the Negro educational worker.)

EDUCATION 1954

Hodding Carter Lashes Citizens Council In Miss.

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 11-3-54

SHREVEPORT, La.— (ANP) — Pulitzer prive winning newspaper editor Hodding Carter said last week that anti-Catholic and anti-Semitic groups were turning Mississippi Citizen's Councils into "uptown Ku Klux Klans." P.1

Carter, editor of the Greenville, Miss., Delta Democrat-Times, blasted the formation of citizens councils in certain cities and counties of Mississippi that are dedicated to fight for segregation.

Carter described the formation of the councils as a "very dangerous situation." He told the Shreveport Bar Association that "we have other methods of maintaining separate schools for many years."

He said it would be "absolute defeatism for us to insist we would have a mongrelized race if segregation is done away with."

Integration of public schools, he said, would cause a dangerous drop in education standards. Carter said Louisiana was going about it in the right way by providing equal facilities.

Meanwhile, the 32nd citizens council was formed in Lowndes County, Miss. A fiery speaker said at the first meeting that the white and Negro races "cannot live together in peace with equal social and political liberties."

Atty. Hugh Wall of Brookhaven declared:

"We might as well face the problem and quit whistling about it. The two races are different in nature."

More than 500 men approved the council's constitution making it the 32nd in the state.

"We should have faced this years ago but we didn't do it," Wall said. "We should have taken the position that there is a superior race and an inferior race."

He urged the men to vote for a proposed constitutional amendment, designed to further restrict Negroes from voting.

Robert B. Patterson, executive secretary of the recently formed State Association of Citizens Councils said the state will keep segregation legally and peacefully or illegally and violently. "If they said 'well have violence and you know it," he told the men.

"Segregation is not immoral, it is not un-Christian.. our forefathers believed in it, and what was good enough for them is good enough for us'," the 35-year-old, red-headed former captain of the Mississippi State football team declared.

HODDING CARTER
EDITOR, DELTA DEMOCRAT-TIMES
GREENVILLE, MISS.

EDUCATION - 1954

DR. N.M. CHRISTOPHER

The Education Decision

Informer - Houston, Texas
Sat. 10-23-54 By P. 10

N. M. Christopher

IX: Negro Teachers and the Integration of Schools

The problems of desegregating public schools must include the employment of teachers. The problem has no history or precendence from which adequate definite patterns may be drawn. Though many white teachers have taught in schools for Negroes since the days of Reconstruction, and though considerable numbers are employed in several Northern centers, the fact remains that no adequate policy for Southern schools comes from history. The Southern Regional Council believes that domestic service experiences of Negroes may be conclusive in the employment of Negro teachers. But there seems to be such a gulf between the maid-servant and the school mam that the educational transition cannot bridge it. It will be difficult to change the currents of education which have always flowed from white to black, especially when all community tributaries strengthen the flow in the same direction.

Unfortunately many Negroes believe in the same direction of the flow. Even the opinion of a Negro who holds a P. H. D. degree has little weight among Negroes habitually, while among whites it has no weight theoretically. This has not come about by accident; it is complementary to the teaching of white supremacy for more than three hundred years.

A nationally known columnist attempted to show the gravity of the problem by citing a few weeks ago the scarcity of Negro teachers in the state with mixed schools. In his thinking he seems to commit the fallacy of composition. In the first place, 43 percent of the Negro teachers are protected by tenure laws. In the next place, more than 70,000 Negro teachers are employed in public schools, and they cannot be replaced by white teachers when a great shortage of teachers already exist.

Yet, however, several practices in the employment of teachers will probably be exercised. First, the local au hority will not over-look the fact that few Negro colleges meet the standards of the Southern Association, and that the teachers produced in them are not up to standard. All these years poorly prepared teachers have been good enough for Negro children. But now that the schools are to be mixed, graduates of state teachers may be preferred. A state teachers college does not exist for Negro teachers in the State of Texas, and very few in other Southern states. This is not to say that Negro liberal arts colleges do not produce good elementary teachers. But it is to suggest that such a strategy may be now used to employ mostly white teachers.

In many Southern states the certification of teachers has graded certificates with Negroes receiving the lower grades. It may be that the local authority may set standards of certificates for the employment of teachers. In Texas the permanent elementary certificate is granted to graduates of state teachers colleges only. The Negro teacher must put in five years' teaching experience for the same certificate. This may militate to keep many new teachers out of employment. When inadequate preparation is used as an excuse for not employing Negro teachers, it follows that the state that has practiced the hypothesis that any teacher is good enough for Negro children is now faced with the recoil of the false assumption. How may a state grant a certificate that does not certify the holder to all the rights and privileges of the profession? The argument for not employing Negro teachers on the basis of preparation will be absurd.

A third policy may be that, when Negro teachers are employed, they may be placed in positions where hands are more obvious than brains. This means that all positions in high schools in agriculture, home economics, shops, psysical education, etc. may be filled by Negro teachers, while English, literature, social studies, languages, etc. may be reserved for white teachers. It must be said here that all teaching positions are sacred, and any position in line with one's training and experience is the position for that teacher.

In many cases, Negro teachers may be so placed in certain schools that the school itself may still be thought of as a "Negro school," or "white school." This will be a most unfortunate circumstance in that the white teachers will consider her position in a "Negro school" a demotion, while no Negro will be promoted to a "white school." The probability of permitting parents to send their children to "Negro schools" or "white schools" will encourage the psycholgical fallacy of integration of schools.

That many Negro teachers are afraid of losing their jobs is common knowledge. On returns of a questionnaire sent out to five Negro colleges in Texas during the summer just past, almost 20 per cent of the 135 stated that they would lose their jobs on integrating the schools. That the local authority will whip up such a fear is a fore-gone conclusion. The strategy will be to sustain separate schools by keeping Negro teachers in their favor. But separate schools will be still unconstitutional even if any group favors them.

Many educators scan with eager eyes the horizon of the news for the first mixture of teachers in public schools. They are aware of the first mixure of students, and of school boards. They are also aware that the first teachers in mixed schools will be pioneers of the new era, and that all pioneers face the wilderness. But like the pioneers of old they must push the frontier of American education farther back that the coming generations may grow up with a new America. All the extra - legal activities of the community may be visited upon these first pioneer Negro teachers.

But they must be able to take it, though with heads "bloody but unbowed." How things will work out depends upon the principal of the school where teachers are mixed. If he is an American, things will work out well; if he is a "white principal," things may not work well for some time. Such principals may well ponder the lines of Langston Hughes as follows:

"Let America be America again
Let it be the dream it used to be;
Let it be the pioneer on the plain,
Seeking a home where he himself is free."

The Education Decision

Informer P. 10

By

Houston, Texas Sat. 11-6-54

N. M. Christopher

The Decision and the Principalship of Negro Schools.

One of the most important positions in public schools is the principalship. It is the great channel of school administration through which all executive activities of the state and the local authorities flow downward to the educational plains of the nation's children. Through it, all the needs of pupils and teachers are brought to the attention of school authorities. It is the last of educational authority going down and the first stop of student and teacher needs going up. The facilitation of such educational traffic requires a well-trained and skillful administrator. The Negro school principal has occupied such a position for the education of Negroes during most of the present century.

In the public schools for Negroes the principal has been the vanguard of Negro public education. In the so called bi-racial society of the South, it goes without saying that the principal of the Negro school has occupied a difficult position where he succeeded in becoming the educational leader of his patrons he has had difficulty keeping his job. Where he forsook his group, he became an "Uncle Tom," and has been opposed by other Negro community leaders, and hence had his difficulties keeping his job just the same. No one can successfully obey two masters.

The difficulty of the Negro principal as a leader in his community has come from the fact that school authorities generally clip the wings of such a leader, or fail to renew his contract for another year. They clip his wings by not giving him the privilege of recommending his teachers in which case he has on his staff many teachers who do not act responsible to him, and cooperation is reduced to a minimum. School authorities clip his wings by providing very inadequate supplies, and by neglect of the Negro school in general, they they accuse him of being incompetent. The principal most liked by the school authorities may be the most disliked by the people in the community.

Moreover, Negro teachers may be encouraged in their lack of cooperation with the principal. Some teachers love to run to the superintendent, or board members with matters that should first come to the principal. Wherever they get a hearing, they are likely to scoff at the authority of the principal.

In these instances the old general saying that "I went to the head man" is the implication that the principal's word means next to nothing. The respect due him is gone. The channels of organization are ignored. The principal then has responsibility without authority, and that spells trouble. What such teachers do not know is that the school authorities generally play both ends against the middle and keep the Negro school substandard. Such teachers make the saying true that it takes a white man to rule Negroes.

Where there is confusion in the school, there is sure to be confusion in the community. Whether the principal thinks so or not, he is a man of the public. In the final analysis he is an employee of the people. Too many principals act as if the schools belong to them. The good principal is one who does his duties, and still keeps the community cooperating with him. Where he allows confusion among students and teachers to continue in his school, he is sure to be blamed for all that happens. If he cannot suspend a student or ask the board to discharge an unsatisfactory teacher without creating a public stink, he should in fairness to all, resign.

The Decision of the Supreme Court adds to the duties of the Negro principal, if he keeps his job, a Herculean task. As a man of the public, he must be accepted by the whole community. Here-to-fore he dealt with only Negro patrons. Now he must deal with all patrons. Many community duties will take him into the homes where he must be accepted as an equal for conferences relative to the program of his school, concerning the welfare of his students, white as well as black.

He must create good will for himself and his school. In fact he must go against just about every grain of the race problem where every knot changes the direction of the splitting of the problem. Hats off to that principal, who keeps his job, and like Hercules strangles the serpents sent to his cradle to strangle him, but unlike Hercules, retains his sanity, and performs the twelve labors of integration with success.

Further analysis of the principal's duties under integration will follow.

EDUCATION 1954

DR. RUFUS CLEMENT
PRESIDENT, ATLANTA UNIVERSITY

Dr. Clement Asks About Negroes In School Meets

Daily World
Oct. 10, 1954
p. 2

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—The question of whether Southern Negro citizens will form a part of the representation of Southern States was raised Thursday in Washington by Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University and member of the Atlanta Board of Education.

Dr. Clement asked U. S. Commissioner of Education Samuel Brownell if Negroes would be represented when the various states have conferences and when the White House Conference on Education is held next November.

Mr. Brownell said that the individual states would determine their representation in state meetings but that Negroes would get "proper representation" at the nation-wide conference.

Dr. Clement stated that he was "glad to hear the word going out from Washington" that Negroes are to be included. He added that by the time of the White House conference, there may be no public schools in Georgia.

He said: "If the word doesn't go out from Washington we may not be represented. Georgia's Negro population, one third of the state's, must be represented in the Georgia and White House meetings."

EDUCATION 1954

JAMES H.M. HENDERSON TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE

Alabama Student Says South Is Inconsistent

Tuskegee Institute, Ala. — I would like to make a brief comment on a rather paradoxical situation existing at present in certain states of the South.

The great unrest and uneasiness caused by the U.S. Supreme Court decision regarding segregation in public schools has prompted several states to make plans for a private school system — a plan which Negroes themselves suggested in the post Civil War period.

It is rather amusing to see how these "sovereign" states rebel furiously at the "Great Father" telling them how to go about the education of their masses on a democratically equal basis. They then turn right around and before the sound waves have dissipated, practically beg, demand, implore, and cry to the "Great Father" in Washington for aid and funds to relieve their material and economic sufferings which nature and God have wrought on them — drought, flood, conservation, agricultural surpluses and crop and livestock reliefs, tornado and hurricane relief.

JAMES H. M. HENDERSON.

EDUCATION 1954

PRIVATE SCHOOL PLAN
ATTY. ROBERT KRAMER, DUKE UNIVERSITY

Duke University Law Professor Warns Dixie States On "Private School Plan"

Says Many Legal Problems Will Face Evaders Of Ruling

Atlanta Birmingham, Ala.

DURHAM, N. C. — (INS) — A Duke University law professor warns that southern states threatening to get out of the public school business to maintain segregation may be inviting the federal government to step in.

Robert Kramer of the Duke Law School suggested, in a speech at Durham, that various legal problems may confront South Carolina, Mississippi and Georgia if they decide to switch to private school systems. Those are the three states which have laid the groundwork for such a move if necessary to combat the U. S. Supreme Court ruling that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

9a 11-19-54

Kramer said the states are basing their private school proposals on the 14th amendment which they interpret to meant at discrimination of color and race is illegal only when practiced by public authorities. Kramer commented, "this looks like a game of bluff and counter-bluff."

He said that the plans advanced make it appear that the states are trying "not to abolish the public school system, but to make a few changes in it so that it can be called private."

The court, he went on, is likely to rule that illegal on the argument that the "private schools system" is receiving state money as well as from the fact that education is a public function and the state is supporting it.

Kramer said: "In order to carry out the program, the state would have to smash to smithereens every aspect of public education in the state and even then might avoid an unfavorable court action."

He said that to truly achieve a private school system, the state would have to get out of the business of education completely, repealing compulsory attendance laws, laws regarding teacher certification and others.

The law professor, stressing that he is neither for nor against the court's segregation ruling, analyzed several other suggested ways of keeping school segregation.

EDUCATION 1954

SHERIFF WILLIS McCALL

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WHITE PEOPLE

at Milford, Delaware

Groveland Sheriff Fans Racial Strife

The Herald P. 1
Sept. 10-3-57 Miami Fla

By RICHARD RUNDELL
Herald Staff Writer

A central Florida sheriff who once made national headlines by shooting two handcuffed Negro prisoners has been fanning the flames of racial strife in the Milford, Del., school system, The Herald learned Saturday.

Turn to next Page, Col. 3

Sheriff Willis McCall of Eustis, the top law enforcement officer in Lake county, flew to Delaware and was guest speaker last Thursday night before a pro-segregation rally in Lincoln, a suburb of Milford.

Police Chief Samuel Powel of Milford told The Herald that the theme of McCall's speech was "obviously against Negroes." He said McCall addressed "about 800 people."

Sheriff McCall, insisting that the rally drew "more than 3,000 people," said he told the group fighting integration of the races in Delaware's public schools, "to keep up the good work."

"I was very gratified to see that kind of a turnout above the Mason-Dixon line," the sheriff said. "Those people are going about it in an orderly fashion, but they're not going to put up with any of this foolishness."

He said a "group of Delaware citizens" paid his plane fare to the rally, which was sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of White People—an organization of which the sheriff concedes he is a member.

Leonard Pepper, executive assistant to Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns, said late Saturday that "the governor's office has no expression to make at this time."

Sheriff McCall's position as president of the Florida Sheriffs Association makes him a powerful political figure in the state.

Sheriff McCall's last fling at the headlines came in November, 1951, when he killed one Negro prisoner and seriously wounded another.

Herald

The victims were two of the defendants in the famous Groveland rape case of 1949. They had been sentenced to death, and were awaiting execution in the state prison at Raiford when their conviction was reversed by the United States Supreme court.

Sun. 10-3-57

The prisoners, Walter Lee Irvin and Samuel Shepherd, were being returned to Eustis by Sheriff McCall for a hearing on a change of venue.

Irvin said the sheriff stopped the car at night at a desolate spot, shot Shepherd to death and wounded him. Sheriff McCall contended that he stopped to change a tire, and that the Negroes assaulted him in an escape attempt.

County and federal grand juries investigated the shootings, but no charges were ever filed against McCall.

Attempts to integrate the races in Milford's schools have met with opposition from organized pro-segregation groups recently.

White students boycotted six schools when colored students showed up for classes. Numerous rallies were held by the pro-segregationists, and it was one of these that was addressed by McCall.

Attendance at Milford schools jumped back to normal several days ago when a new school board there reversed the integration order and returned schools to a segregated basis.

"I told them that the battle wasn't won, though," Sheriff McCall said. "Just one skirmish."

He praised the policy of "passive resistance" adopted by the Delaware pro-segregation forces.

"If the White people will do what the niggers and minority groups have been doing, they can raise Cain," Sheriff McCall said. "That's a lot better than the violent way. I sure don't believe in violence."

EDUCATION 1954

MR. WILLIAM H. OLIVER
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

TRIP* EUROPE, ASIA

Oliver Says Europe, Asia Watching Desegregation

Defender Chicago, Ill. p. 4
Sat. 10-9-54

WASHINGTON — William H. Oliver of Detroit who recently returned from a six-weeks trip to Asia and Europe, reported that anti-American feeling which had been steadily rising in Asia has subsided in recent weeks to a new low.

This is largely due, he said, to the effective work of the Voice of America in beaming the Supreme Court decision in the school cases to 54 countries in 34 languages.

The impact of this has had tremendous effect, Oliver said, but the big question now in the minds of the Asians is "Can you make it work?"

Oliver, who is co-director of the fair practices and anti-discrimination department, UAW-CIO, was a delegate to the Second Triennial Conference of the World Assembly of Youth, held at Singapore last August.

He also made an extensive tour throughout Asia, Italy France, and Germany.

The assembly is made up of 54 independent countries which have established national youth committees.

It was organized in London, England in 1948 when youth groups from the free countries around the world severed their relations with the World Federation of Democratic Youth, the Communist dominated world youth organization which had prior to that time, coordinated the activities of youth organizations throughout the world.

The objectives of the organization are: 1. To increase interracial respect and to foster international understanding and cooperation.

2. To facilitate the collection of information about the needs and problems of youth.

3. To promote the interchange of ideas between youth of all countries.

Oliver said that no question of the Negro problem arose until he reached Calcutta, India where the question was bluntly put to him on how the United States intended to carry out the court's order and were they really sincere in their intentions.

He said that every move on the integration of schools is being closely watched and reported on abroad.

For example, the strike in Milford, Del., by white parents in protest against integration has been played up in the headlines of the European press.

The Communists, he said, are eager to seize upon such incidents as evidence of insincerity and American "imperialistic hypocrisy."

During his trip, Oliver met with trade union leaders in each of the countries and lectured on American labor.

He praised the broad program of the International Confederation of Trade Unions and said it was the chief salvation and hope for the almost hopeless plight of the masses of people in these countries.

He cited the growing consciousness and active participation of workers in trade unionism.

In Singapore, Mme. Pandit, former president of the UN General Assembly, delivered the keynote address, he reported.

She issued a challenge to the youth to work for world peace and urged the delegates if they really believed in democracy to work for it and preach it in their homes, their communities, and ever facet of their lives, Oliver stated.

He quoted the noted Indian woman statesman as saying that she was not sure that the United Nations had done the kind of job "we would like to have seen accomplished."

Oliver concluded his report by saying if we fail in the implementation of the high court decision, it will have disastrous effects upon our relations with other nations in the Free World.

EDUCATION 1954

DR. NATHAN M. PUSEY, PRESIDENT
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Pusey Urges U.S. Reshape Schools

Christian Science Monitor

By Mary Kelly

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

New York

If the United States is to solve its stringent problem of teacher supply, it may be necessary to change the concept of what a schoolteacher should know and be. Dr. Nathan M. Pusey, president of Harvard University, brought this out in a talk given here Oct. 20.

As pictured by the distinguished Boston educator, the person who presides over the classroom would be, first of all, a liberally educated man or woman. Mastery of the techniques of pedagogy would not play as important a part in qualifications as at present. Laws would have to be changed to admit talented individuals now ineligible, and their on-the-job training would have to be planned with a new vision.

Addressing the annual dinner of the Public Education Association at the Waldorf-Astoria, Dr. Pusey said:

In-Service Training

"If it is the aim of legislation governing the certification of teachers not so much to keep people out of the profession as to get superior individuals into it, it is perhaps time for an effort to be made in many states to remove restrictions which now prevent full use of graduates of liberal arts colleges in the classrooms of the public schools, elementary and secondary alike.

"It may very well be, however, that such changes will have also to be accompanied by new and more imaginative efforts to provide better in-service training.

"Second, perhaps the time has also come to try to effect changes to make it easier for experienced teachers to devote their efforts at summer school to their own intellectual interests rather than to further study of teaching methods. This is only to say that teachers should be encouraged, in my judgment, in all their experience to grow as persons rather than to become educational technicians."

Despite a certain antipathy in some quarters toward "bookishness" today, the importance of intellectual development in both teacher and student should not be overlooked, he stressed.

"The teacher's job is not to engender familiarity with the commonplaces of life, but to quicken awareness of its finer reaches and possibilities, to acquaint us with the excellent and the extraordinary that lies everywhere around us.

"But to do this, the teacher must himself be sensitive to these things, which means chiefly, it seems to me, it is essential to have as teachers people who will go on caring about and reading books of quality all their lives."

Medal Presented

The teaching of information, skills, and even citizenship is not enough, he continued. The intellect must play an increased role in giving "precision and control to thinking," and nothing is more likely to produce the desired result than the habitual reading of significant literature.

More than 90 per cent of the nation's young people are enrolled in the public schools, he declared earlier in his talk. He had particular praise for citizen groups such as the PEA and the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools which foster improvement of public education.

A feature of the evening was presentation by United States Commissioner of Education Samuel L. Brownell of the PEA medal to Roy E. Larsen, president of Time, Inc., and chairman of the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools.

"Roy Larsen's leadership in stimulating citizen interest in our schools is a contribution to the general welfare which enriches the whole nation," said Mr. Brownell. "His devoted efforts are in the finest tradition of public service."

John Mason Brown, author and lecturer, said that education had reached a high point in the sciences, "but when it comes to taking in the humanities, I think we have failed."

About 700 persons attending the dinner were apparently willing—in the words of Dr. Pusey's recommendation to lay citizens—to "pause in the on-rush of daily life to look at education." Education, he reminded them, is the most promising force in the world today.

ADULT EDUCATION REPORTED GAINING

Comco P31

Back-to-School Movement Has Enrolled 3,000,000, National Group Is Told

New York Times P 14

GREATER TOTAL POSSIBLE

Wed. 11-10-54

Commission Says It Might Be Trebled if All States Gave Support to Program

14a

By GENE CURRIVAN

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 9—The back-to-school movement for adults, which has gained considerable momentum during the year, has attracted more than 3,000,000 persons into today's public school classrooms they thought were left behind in their youth.

This nation-wide surge for more enlightenment by the mature elements of the population was highlighted here today in a report by the National Commission on Adult Education Finance. It was announced by Philip Klein, commission chairman, to delegates of the National Conference on Adult Education.

An overall estimate of participation in adult education, prepared for the Encyclopedia Americana by Malcolm S. Knowles, administrative coordinator of the Adult Education Association of the U. S. A., is near 50,000,000 but this includes correspondence schools, educational radio and television, business and industry and the armed forces program.

The commission, which was appointed by the association and financed by the Fund for Adult Education, reported after a year's study that present indications pointed to a future adult enrollment of 10,000,000 if all school districts followed the lead of those now pioneering.

States Supporting Program

Amplifying this point, Mr. Klein said that if all the forty-eight states provided support for adult education such as that now provided by ten states the present enrollment would be 5,000,000.

State support for general adult education in those states amounts to 313,691,000. They are New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Florida, California, Louisiana, Michigan, Massachusetts, Wisconsin and Washington.

Three times as many persons are enrolled in adult education in these states as in the ones with no state aid, Mr. Klein added.

Main sources for financing aside from direct state aid, the report said, included Veterans Administration benefits, state and Federal aid for vocational education, school district funds and fees for tuition.

It was also brought out that the cost of adult education for each individual year was only $26.60 as contrasted with $235 for the cost of childhood education. During 1952-53, adults participated in 174,000,000 hours of education at a cost of $79,000,000.

The need for the establishment of adult education councils in the smaller communities was stressed. It was disclosed that while nearly all metropolitan school districts conduct adult education programs less than one-third of the districts with populations from 900 to 9,000 are so equipped.

Public Participation Stressed

Prof. Peul L. Essert, executive officer of the Institute of Adult Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, was elected president ate today's session to succeed Paul H. Sheats, associate director of university extension at the University of California.

As part of his platform, Professor Essert called for greater participation in the movement by citizens. He urged that every adult give at least one hour a week of voluntary service to his community and "one hour a week studying how and why he does it." He recommended a basic minimum program of adult educateion in every community.

Expressing a note of optimism, Mr. Sheats said he believed the association could develop a pattern of self-support within the next two years although the need for grants still would be necessary for special projects. The meambership has jumped from 4,500 at the beginning of the year to 6,000, with current prospects of increasing at the rate of 1,000 a month, Mr. Sheats said.

The association, he declared, has been sending out exploratory groups to various areas of the country to determine needs and the possibility of establishing councils. A plan also has been worked out for recruiting experienced educators in each state to serve as consultants to local communities.

Representative Eugene J. McCarthy, Democrat of Minnesota, called upon the educators and community leaders to dispel the idea that politics was "a necessary evil and office holders feeders at the public trough." The public should be taught that political parties are an essential part of democratic government and that citizens should participate fully in political affairs, he asserted.

The association received a citation from the National Citizens Committee for Educational Television for its role in providing educational television to the public.

14a 1954

ILLINOIS

ADULT EDUCATION HELD NEGLECTED

Times

National Conference Leaders Urge Greater Emphasis in Government Circles

New York, N.Y.

By GENE CURRIVAN

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 10—Adult education leaders meeting here indicated today that they were being snubbed or at least not receiving due recognition at high Government levels. P. 36

At the final session of the National Conference on Adult Education, delegates took steps to remedy that situation, at the same time reiterating their position that adult education was just as important as any other degree of learning and should be treated accordingly.

The conference, which opened Sunday, is sponsored by the Adult Education Association of the U. S. A. Jour. 11-11-54

The first step was a resolution asking that President Eisenhower's White House Conference on Education, scheduled for November, 1955, and the intervening state conferences relating to it, put appropriate emphasis on adult education. The delegates asked that a study be made of the needs of adult education and its adequate financing at both state and Federal levels.

Federal Aid an Issue

The White House conference is being called to determine the most practical approach to the various problems facing national education and to reflect attitudes for or against Federal aid to education.

To assure a proper hearing at the conference the association voted to ask its ow ndelegates from each state to make known their community problems and clear them through the national organization in time for presentation at the 1955 meeting.

It was indicated that the association felt that adult education was not appropriately represented in the pattern of the Washington conference.

Paul H. Sheats, retiring president, said that according to scattered reports he had received from state delegates many of them had not been invited to the proposed state conferences scheduled to start within two months.

Plea to Office of Education

It was said that the United States Office of Education had not given an adequate amount of consideration to adult education and had not restored an Adult Education Section that was dropped two years ago.

The conference adopted a resolution asking for the immediate restoration of this division.

The association also decided that as a part of its overall program it would concern itself with major national issues so that these could be interpreted intelligently at community levels.

The problem of widespread illiteracy also was considered. It was recommended that the association establish a national commission for fundamental education and literacy to study the field.

Recognizing that desegregation in the public schools is a national problem, the association voted to establish regional conferences to provide consultative services for those requesting assistance.

It also asked the Council of National Organizations, a subdivision of the association, to convene meetings of educational specialists to discuss the problems arising from desegregation. The council is affiliated with 130 national organizations and acts as liaison between these groups and the parent body.

A budget report showed that the association expected to spend $584,750 during the year. This compares with $359,312 spent during the fiscal year that ended June 30.

Association membership is now more than 6,000. New members are coming in at the rate of 1,000 a month during the current membership drive.

Ia 1954

ADULT EDUCATION CLASSES OFFER MUCH

Des Moines Register
p. 6
Thurs. 10-7-54

Adult Education in the Des Moines Public schools begins another session this month offering courses in just about anything a person- desires. Classes are held during the evenings, thus offering those who are employed during the day the opportunity to arrange schedules which fit easily into their daily program.

Many people pursue courses which fit them better to live at home; many who left school without finishing a course or feel the need of preparing for or furthering their knowledge of the work in which they are engaged find Adult Education courses a source of great help.

In these days of specialties it is highly necessary that young people receive a good basic education in order to move into particular fields. And then too many youngsters find himself with an opportunity to go ahead only to discover that he is not prepared to do so.

Adult Education classes attempt to meet these needs, have been popular with the people and successful. People never need quit learning and these classes are helpful in pointing this up.

Douglass Adult Institute

The Adult Institute will open its fall term at the "new" Douglass High school located at 900 North Eastern Avenue, September 21, 1954. Students may enroll at any time during the evening between 6:00 and 9:00 p. m. in the main office. Regular classes meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Regular academic courses will be offered for high school graduation. These courses are especially designed for adults who were not able to complete high school during their youth.

The Adult Institute is offered to any person eighteen years of age or older, who is not attending any high school during the day, and who wishes to further his educational training. Many benefits may be derived from this type of training, such as high school graduation, job advancement, trade improvement, increased earning power, satisfy college entrance requirements.

Courses not listed in the present schedule may be offered if there is a minimum of twelve students to register.

Persons wishing further information about Adult Education contact Neil Pierce or Mrs. Geneva Johnson at FOrest 5-9413 extension 10.

Courses Offered

Academic courses (for High School Credit): Algebra, Biology, English, Public Speaking, General Science, History, Social Science.

Trade Classes: Auto Mechanics, Upholstery.

Commerce: Shorthand, Typewriting.

Self-Improvement — Hobby: Dress Making, Photography Driver Education, Tailoring.

How Much Does It Cost?

$7.00 for each High School Credit.
$3.50 for a one-hour class (24 hrs of instruction).
$7.00 for a two-hour class (48 hrs of instruction).
$8.50 for Driver Education (6 weeks course).

"IMPROVE YOURSELF BY ATTENDING NIGHT SCHOOL."

Parents awarded adult education certificates

KING WILLIAM, Va. — The adult education program of the Hamilton - Holmes high school closed its first five weeks recently with appropriate commencement activities.

William Cooper, registrar of Hampton institute, addressed the fifty-three parents receiving certificates.

He told them that "to live the full live we must not hoard that we know or can do but share it with others. By so doing the community will become a better place in which to live."

Mr. Cooper urged the parents to continue their study. "The higher you climb the broader will be your horizon," he said.

Live Fuller Life

The adult educational program is designed to develop the potentials of adults in the area in which they are interested so that they may realize a fuller and richer life.

A choral group, under the direction of Mrs. Grace M. Womack, provided music for the occastion. Invocation was rendered by the Rev. A. B. James, dean of students, Virginia Union university. "The Christmas Story," a reading, was given by Miss Viola Moore.

Parents awarded certificates of achievement in home mechanics were: Miss Sarah Harris, Messrs. Fredrick D. Hall, Augustus A. Edwards, Alascus Claiborne, and Thomas Waddell.

Certificates of achievement in parent education went to: Mesdames Dinah Gresham, Zemoria Washington, Grace M. Womack, Ada Holmes, Julia Waddell, Addie Jackson and Effie Holmes.

Mesdames Jeanette Moore, Muriel E. Wyatt, Lizzie H. Washington, Rachel Ann Harvey, Irene Brown.

Messrs. John T. Wyatt, Edwood Jones, Elmer Claiborne, and Charles Williams.

Interior Decoration

Certificates of achievement in interior decoration were awarded to: Mesdames Ethel Mays, Amanda Hall, Dorothy Moore, Martha Burroughs, Emma Robinson, Mary Jane White and Rosa Holmes.

Mesdames Ethel Robinson, Elnora Robinson, Loui Hill, Henrietta Champion, Zelma Jones, Lenora Harris, Eliza Jackson and Myrete Jackson.

Eunica Neale

Mesdames Eunica Neale, Nettie Gwathmey, Daisy Brown, Thelma Mack, Blanche Edwards, Louanna Gaines, Clara Broaddus, Susie Clory, Mary Mickens, Louise Robinson and Elizabeth Harris.

Misses Dorothy Hamm, Viola Moore, Carrie Moore and Viola Stith; and Junius White.

The courses were conducted by the Rev. A. B. James, instructor in family relations, Virginia Union, Mr. Harold L. Mays, vocational agricultural instructor, Hamilton-Holmes high school and Mrs. Elizabeth McAlister, graduate in home making, Virginia State college.

Directors of the courses were Mrs. Edna H. White, elementary supervisor, and S. D. Womack, principal of Hamilton-Holmes high school.

Name 4 Virginians to education group

RICHMOND

Four Virginians have been named to the Adult Education Assn. committee on fundamental education.

They are: Dr. G. W. C. Brown, supervisor, evening college of Norfolk State college; Hampton Institute; Mrs. Margaret Dabney, instructor, adult field worker, extension department, University of Virginia.

Dr. Ambrose Calvier, assistant to the commissioner of education, US Office of Education, is chairman of the commission.

General Tasks Outlined

A letter from Dr. Paul Sheats, AEA president, in Chicago said the Executive Committee and according to policies established by the Executive Committee.

Committee Members

The committee, which will hold its first meeting in Atlantic City on Feb. 16, has as its immediate task the consideration of plans to establish a national commission on literacy and fundamental education.

Other nationally known educators appointed included:

Miss Marguerite Tolbert, Dr. J. Maurice Hohlfeld, Dr. F. J. Rex, Dr. Effie Bethurst, H. A. Hodges, Hugh J. Betts, Grandy E. Moates, Miss Susan Simrall, Miss Angela Cass, J. H. Daves, Dr. Kara Jackson, C. O. Banta, William Cooper, Drs. Howard McClusky, Homer Kempfer, Seth Spaudling and J. Carson Pritchard.

Virginia State To Enlarge Its Adult Study Program

Virginia State College will enlarge its adult study program beginning in October of this school year, it was announced recently by Dr. Samuel A. Madden, Director of the Division of Field Services Impetus for enlarging the college adult education offerings for the citizens of Petersburg and nearby communities was given by the interest and enrollment in the evening courses offerings during 1953-54, when more than a hundred Petersburg citizens enrolled in the two non-credit adult classes offered by the college. These non-credit courses will be conducted in either four or six sessions of one and one-half hours each. All sessions are free and open to persons wishing to attend, Dr. Madden indicated.

VARIED COURSES

The 1954-55 program will get underway on October 5, and will offer five different and varied courses. The courses offered by members of the regular college faculty are How To Conduct A Meeting by Mrs. M. G. Dabney, Supervisor of Adult Education; Everyday Courtesy, by Mrs. I. M. Scott, Assistant Professor of Home Economics; and How To Grow and Arrange Flowers, by Dr. W. L. Watson. The course, The Citizen and His Income Tax, forms for which will be provided by the Government Income Tax School, will be instructed in part by the college staff with lectures by Federal Income Tax Officials. The Church Group Leadership course will be conducted by Mrs. Robert P. Daniel who is certified by the International Council of Religious Education.

SPRING OF 1955

The course, How To Conduct a Meeting, will be offered during October and will be repeated in the Spring of 1955 to accomodate all persons desiring to take it, since enrollment in each session of this class is limited to 30 persons. Attendance in the other classes is not limited. The adult education courses are primarily for the self-improvement of the student rather than for certificates or credit.

Detailed information concerning the adult study program will be furnished upon request by the Division of Field Services.

14b 1954

ACADEMY OF SCIENCE (FLORIDA)

Faculty Members At Science Meet

TALLAHASSEE—Nine Florida A and M University faculty members and 20 students attended the 19th annual meeting of the Florida Acodemy of Sciences which met in joint session with the Florida Junior Academy of Science at Florida State University here last weekend. Papers were presented by two of the faculty members.

Dr. L. W. Elliott, head of the department of chemistry presented a paper entitled, "Formation of Aldehydes from Unique Amides," before persons attending the physical sciences section at the Friday morning session. "The Effects of Various Lethal Agents on the Rate of Water Loss in Certain Florida Termites" was the title of a paper presented by Dr. Margaret S. Collins, head of the biology department, Friday afternoon before the biological sciences section.

Staff members attending included—biology—E. E. Ware, Mrs. Norma Holloway Smith, Ernest Franklin and Carlton Pryor—chemistry and physics, J. C. Tinner, Walter Ellis, Miss Julia Martin, and sociology, Dr. C. U. Smith, and Robert Smith.

14b 1954

ALABAMA ASSOCIATION OF NEGRO COLLEGES

ALABAMA STATE College was host at the regular meeting of the Alabama Association of Negro Colleges in its one-day session on Tuesday. The topic for discussion was "Some Major Challenges and Opportunities of Administrative Leadership in Negro Colleges of Alabama." The topic was explored through a panel consisting of representatives of the administrative staffs of the colleges of the state, with C. G. Gomillion, dean of students at Tuskegee Institute, as chairman.

Felicitations on behalf of the host institution were extended by Dr. John Garrick Hardy, dean of freshmen, and some summary observations on the discussion were given by Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, host president .

The business session, beginning at 9 a.m., was preceded by a coffee hour with Miss Edith Gibson, dean of women, as hostess. Dr. J. C. Blair, director of the division of Negro education, State Department of Education, is chairman. Dr. W. E. Anderson, dean of instruction at Alabama State College, is the secretary; and Dean O. B. Edwards, dean of the Oakwood Junior College at Huntsville, is the treasurer. Other institutions having affiliation with the organization include Talladega College, Stillman College, Selma University, Birmingham Baptist College, Miles College, Alabama A&M College, and Lomax-Hannon Junior College.

College Business Officers Elect

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — W. C. Erwin, business manager, Paine College, Augusta, Ga., was elected president of the American Association of College Business Officers at the organization's fifteenth annual meeting Lincoln University (Mo.), 2-4.

Business officers name W. C. Ervin

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — W. C. Ervin, business manager of Paine College, was elected president of the American Association of College Business Officers at the recent 15th annual meeting of the group held at Lincoln University.

Other officers elected were: James B. Clark, treasurer, Howard University, vice-president; B. A. Little auditor, Southern University, secretary; William Jones, business manager, North Carolina College, treasurer; and Don A. Davis, business manager, Hampton Institute, placement officer.

The executive committee includes the newly elected officers and J. W. Bryant, business manager, Texas College; James Cephas, treasurer-business manager, Virginia State College; and George H. Valentine, business manager, Wilberforce University.

COLLEGE BUSINESS MEN — Shown above are members of the American Association of College Business Officers who attended a week-meeting in Atlanta. Left to right, seated are: William Jones, North Carolina College; Harold Logan, Tuskegee Institute; B. A. Little, Southern University; J. B. Cephus, Virginia State College, and W. C. Erwin Paine College. Back row includes: G. C. Buckette, Atlanta University; S. V Jeter, Clark College; C. A. Christophe, Arkansas State College; J. W. Bryant, Texas College; and C. E. Prothro, Tuskegee Institute. They represent the Executive Committee. — (Perry's Photo)

14b 1954

Youth Meet At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — The annual conference of the American Youth Industrial Education Association met at Tuskegee Institute, April 29-30.

States represented at the conference were North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, Florida, Arkansas, Alabama and Tennessee.

President Otis Williams presided.

14b 1954

ASSOCIATION OF HOME ECONOMICS

HOME ECONOMICS HEAD—Miss Adelaide Respass of West Street School, New Bern, N. C., seated second from left, newly elected president of the N. C. Association of Home Economics, is shown studying the program at the tenth annual meet at North Carolina College in Durham, N. C., last week. Others among the seventy-five state home economics teachers pictured here are, seated, left to right: Mrs. Louise McNeil Jenkins, Barden High School, Wilson; Miss Respass, Mrs. Mae Browning, Jordan-Sellars High School, Burlington. Standing: Mrs. Lucy James, itinerant teacher trainer of the NCC Home Economics Department; Miss Molly K. Bradford, Barber-Scotia College, Concord; Mrs. Marie C. Moffitt, itinerant teacher trainer at NCC at NCC and state adviser to the New Homemakers of America; Mrs. Ada Powell, Ayden, and Mrs. Harvaleigh White, Shaw University, Raleigh.

Dr. Richardson Elected Vice President Of Association of Methodist Seminaries

CINCINNATI, Ohio. — (ANP) — At the meeting of the Association of Methodist Theological Schools last week Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Gammon Theological seminary, was elected vice president of the association.

The association includes some of the leading theological seminaries in the nation; such as Boston University School of Theology, Garrett Biblical institute, Duke University Divinity school, Candler School of Theology of Emory university, Drew University Theological seminary, and Perkins School of Theology of Southern Methodist university, Dallas, Texas.

President Richardson is an outstanding administrator of theological education in America. Under his leadership, Gammon Theological seminary has had the largest enrollment in its history, its physical plant has been expanded and improved, and its academic program has been greatly enriched. The seminary has recently added a new dormitory for married students, one of the most modern buildings of its kind in the country.

President Richardson's vigorous efforts to achieve a better trained ministry bespeaks a new day for the Negro church.

gets Ohio post

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president, Central State College, was elected president of the Association of Ohio College Presidents and Deans this week.

For three years the Central State head has been a member of the Ohio College Association executive committee, and chairman of the resolutions committee for four years.

14b

Delegates— Delegates from nineteen states and the District of Columbia attended the nineteenth annual meeting of the Association of Social Science Teachers, held at Union University, Richmond, Va., last week. Extreme right front row shows Dean R. F. Russell, Arkansas A. M. and N. College, retiring president; Dr. E. S. Richards, Texas Southern University, president-elect, and T. E. McKinney, Johnson C. Smith University, founder.

Newly Elected— Officers elected at the three-day meeting of the Association of Social Science Teachers at Richmond, Va., are pictured as they discussed plans for the coming year. Left to right are Dr. Raleigh Wilson, first vice president; R. F. Russell, Arkansas A. M. and N., treasurer; Dr. E. S. Richards, Texas Southern University, president; Mrs. E. Garrett Gaines, Anniston, Ala., executive board; Merl Epps, Tennessee State A. and I., executive board; Dr. Mozell Hill, Atlanta University, executive board, and Dr. Harry Roberts, Virginia State College, second vice president.—Rivera Photo.

Flay Prejudice At Annual Meet

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

RICHMOND, Va.—Racial prejudice and discrimination took a scientific beating here last week as teachers from thirty-five colleges and high schools attending the nineteenth annual meeting of the Association of Social Scientists at Union University called the twin evils, "democracy's public enemy number one."

Dr. John Hope Franklin, celebrated historian and a member of the faculty of Howard University, hurled the challenge to Negro social scientists to get ready for the new day.

Speaking on the subject, "The Negro Social Scientist and the New American Revolution," Dr. Franklin pointed to the economic, political, legal, religious, and international pressures which he claimed are making for the new and improved status of minorities in American life.

AT THE association banquet, retiring president, R. F. Russell, dean of Arkansas A. M. and N. College, spoke on the subject, "Understanding Prejudice and Discrimination -- the Foes of Democracy."

Russell said, "Our responsibility is unique and we are challenged to be constantly developing and improving our students. We must know the richness of democracy and the American-way of life and the role of education in preserving and extending them."

Officers elected for the coming year are Dr. Eugene S. Richards, Texas Southern University, president; Dr. Raleigh Wilson, Tennessee State University, first vice president; Dr. Harry W. Roberts, Virginia State College, second vice president; Dr. J. Errol Miller, Lincoln University (Mo.), secretary, and Dean R. F. Russell, Arkansas A. M. and N. College, treasurer. Horace C. Savage, Tennessee State University, was re-elected assistant secretary-treasurer.

* * *

ELECTED TO the executive board were Dr. Mozell C. Hill, Atlanta University; Dr. Edwin R. Edmonds, Langston University; Dr. Merl Epps, Tennessee State; R. F. Russell, Arkansas A. M. and N. College, and Tinseley L. Spraggins, Union University.

Charles Davis, a student at Albany State College in Georgia, was elected president of Sigma Rho Sigma, honorary social scientist society.

Pioneer members pointed out that even more significant than the increased membership, which has more than doubled to include nineteen states and the District of Columbia, is the improved caliber of papers being read at the sessions.

* * *

A PAPER written by Earl E. Thorpe of Alabama A. and M. College and read in absentia, oddly enough, caused perhaps the most spirited discussion of the three-day meet and revealed the deep-seated "bread-and-butter" fears among so many of the teachers present.

Thorpe's paper, "Communism and the Teaching of History and Government," revealed fears that brought public admission from some of the teachers that the bread-and-butter aspect of teaching was more important to them than academic freedom.

The public school section, which was presided over by Mrs. E. Garrett Gaines, Cobb Avenue High School, Anniston, Ala., agreed on the importance of teaching controversial issues in social studies. Langston University was chosen as the convention site for 1955.

SESSIONS SET APRIL 29-MAY 1:

Social science teachers slate Richmond meeting

RICHMOND

The 19th annual meeting of the Association of Social Science Teachers will be held at Virginia Union university, April 29-May 1. R. F. Russell, president, announced last week.

Mr. Russell, director of the division of arts and sciences and professor of history at Arkansas A.M. and N. college, says the theme for the meeting is "Understanding Prejudices and Discrimination, Racial, Religious, Economic, Social and Political."

Four sectional meetings have been scheduled, the first one slated for Thursay, April 29, at 1:30 p.m.

Listed among the outstanding personalities who will appear on the various programs are:

Dr. Rayford W. Logan, Howard University; R. Clyde Minor, Lincoln University (Mo.); L. L. Haynes, A. M. and N. college; Thomas A. Clark, A. and T. college; Raleigh Wilson, Tennessee State university; Joseph T. Taylor, Dillard university;

W. Sherman Savage

W. Sherman Savage, Lincoln university (Mo.); Maxwell Brooks, Wilberforce university; E. S. Richards, Texas Southern university; W. Tycer Nelson, Maryland State college; Harry W. Roberts, Virginia State college;

M. P. Carmichael, Kentucky State college; Helen Edmonds, North Carolina college; Oliver Cox, Lincoln University (Mo.); Earl Thorpe, Alabama A. and M College; Robert Anglin, West Virginia State; William M. Boyd, Atlanta University;

Mrs. Troas Lewis Latimer, Albany State College; William Robinson, Central State College;

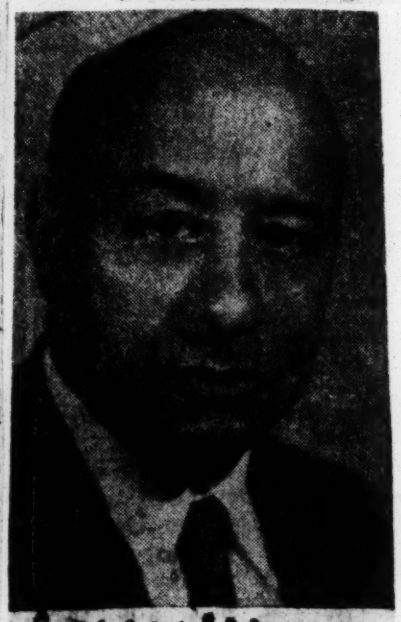
Robert L. Gill, Morgan State College; J. H. Taylor, North Carolina college; Mozell C. Hill, Edmonds, Langston university and J. Reuben Sheeler, Texas Southern.

Logan Main Speaker

Dr. Logan will deliver the principal address at the public meeting Thursday, April 29, at 8 p.m. Dr. John M. Ellison, president of Virginia Union, will welcome the delegates. President Russell will preside.

At the annual banquet Friday night, Henry J. McGuinn of Virginia Union university will preside and President Russell will deliver his annual message.

Saturday, May 1, the public school section will have as its leader Mrs. E. Carrett Gaines, Cobb Avenue high school, Anniston, Ala. Mrs. Jessie Lawrence, Booker T. Washington High school, Montgomery, Ala., will discuss "How to Teach Controversial Issues in the Social Studies."



EYES PARLEY—Dr. Merl R. Eppse of Tennessee State U., secretary - treasurer of Minority Social Science Teachers Association, will attend the nineteenth annual meeting of the body at Virginia Union University, Richmond, April 29-30, May 1. Administrative bias will be the key topic for delegates.

14b 1954

ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Secondary school heads hold meeting in Louisville

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Considering the theme "Critical Problems in the Education in the Southern Region," the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools opened its 21th annual convention at Central High School here, Nov. 29, Dec. 2.

Paul L. Guthrie is president of the association. Dr. James M. Nabrit, secretary of Howard University and recently appointed member of President Eisenhower's Committee on Government Contracts addressed the opening session Monday and greetings were brought by outstanding local educators and city officials.

Dr. J. C. Dixon, executive director, Southern Education Foundation, spoke Tuesday morning on "Some Basic Issues in Public Education in the Southern Region." In the afternoon, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president, Bluefield State College, addressed the group on "The Needs of Higher Education."

SPEAKERS IN A a symposium based upon the theme will include:

Dr. Horace M. Bond, president Lincoln University (Pa.); Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta University; Dr. Wesley J. Lyda, dean, school of education, Atlanta University; Dr. Nabrit; Dr. H. I. Willett, Superintendent of public schools, Richmond, Va. and Dr. Wright.

Dr. Thomas Henderson, dean of Virginia Union University, Richmond, was peaker Wednesday morning and Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president, Central State College, was banquet orator in the evening.

In addition to Mr. Guthrie, key officers of the Association are Dr. C. V. Troup, Fort Valley (Ga.) State College, vice president, and Dr. L. S. Cozart, secretary-treasurer, Barber - Scotia College, Concord, N.C. Mrs. Anita Robinson, Louisville, headed the committee on arrangements.

Colleges And Secondary Schools Heads Are Meeting In Louisville

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Considering the theme, "Critical Problems in the Education of Negroes in the Southern Region," the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools is holding its twenty-first annual convention at Central High School in Louisville, this week, according to Paul L. Guthrie, president of the Association.

Dr. James M. Nabrit, former Houston, Texas lawyer and secretary of Howard University who was recently appointed member of the President Eisenhower's Committee on Government Contracts, addressed the opening session Monday. At the same meeting, greetings were brought by outstanding educators and officials of Louisville.

The following morning, Dr. J. C. Dixon, executive director, Southern Education Foundation, spoke on "Some Basic Issues in Public Education in the Southern Region." In the afternoon, Stephen J. Wright, president, Bluefield State College, Bluefield, W. Va., addressed the group on the topic, "The Needs of Higher Education."

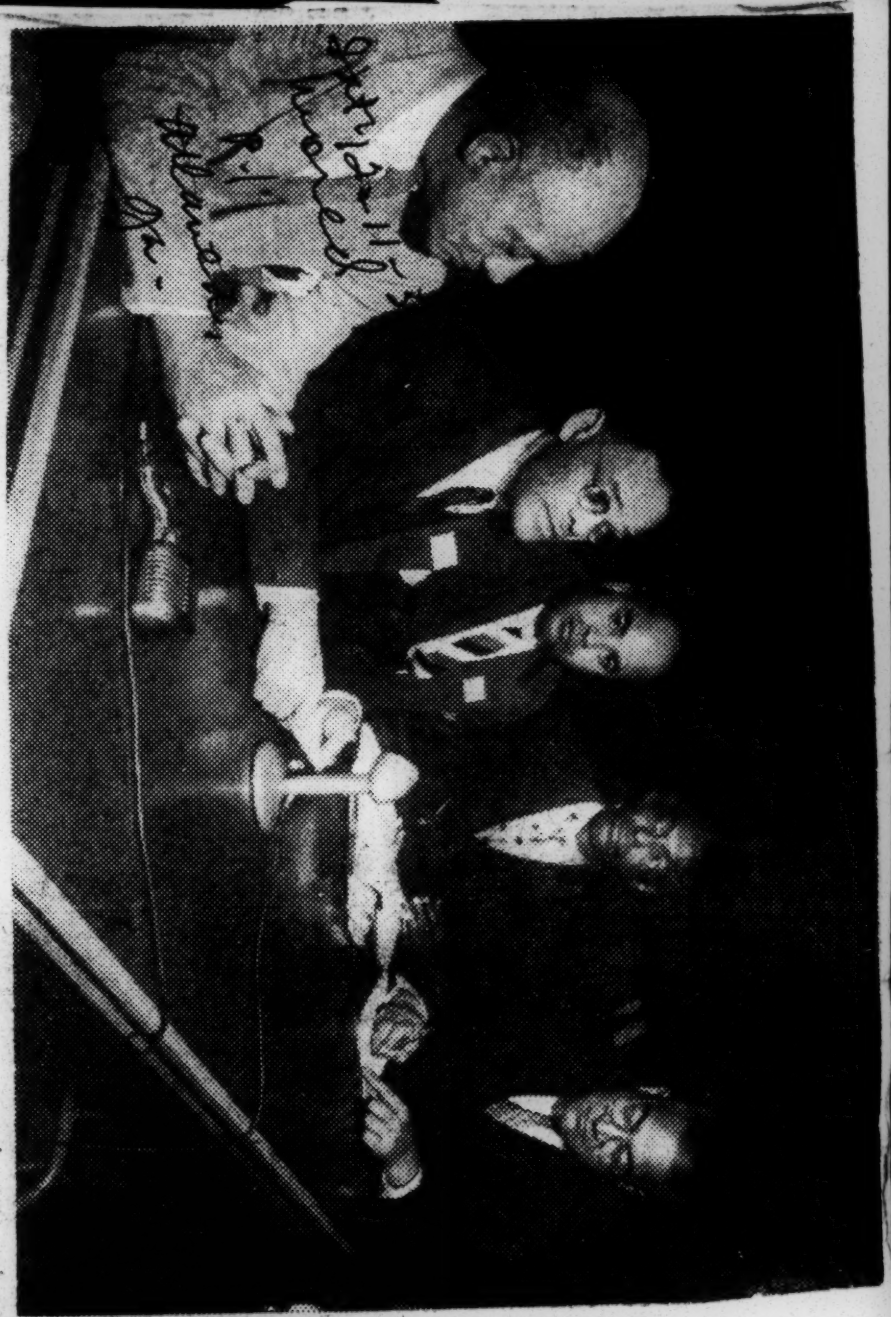
There is being held a symposium based upon the theme of the conference. Participants include Dr. Horace M. Bond, president, Lincoln University, Pa.; Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta Univtrsity; Dr. Wesley J. Lyda, dean, School of Education, Atlanta University; Dr. Nabrit; Dr. H. I. Willett, superintendent of Public Schools, Richmond, Virginia; and Dr. Wright.

Dr. Thomas Henderson, dean of the College, Virginia Union University, Richmond, Virginia, delivered an address Wednesday morning, and Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president, Central State College, Wilberforce, Ohio spoke at the banquet, Wednesday evening. On Thursday, during the closing session of the conference, several reports on education were presented by members of the Association.

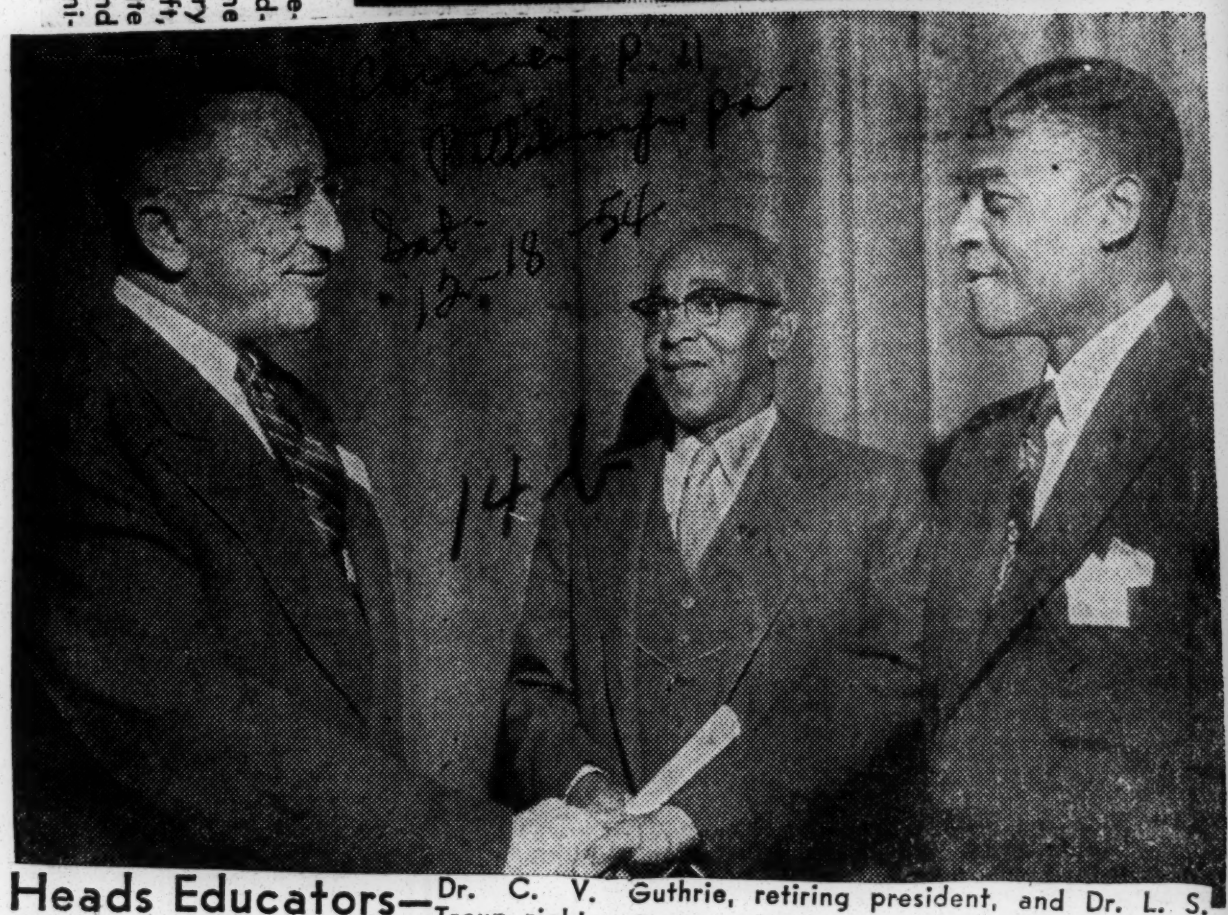
In addition to Mr. Guthrie, key officers of the Association are Dr. C. V. Troup, Fort Valley (Ga.) State College, vice-president, and Dr. L. S. Cozart, secretary- treasurer, Barber-Scotia College, Concord, N. C. Mrs. Anita Robinson of Louisville is chairman of the host committee on arrangements.

All meetings are being held in the Central High School Auditorium in Louisville.

DR. C. V TROUP (right) president of Fort Valley State college, Fort Valley, Ga., was elected head of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at the close of the organization's 21st annual convention last week in Louisville. Congratulations are being offered by Paul Guthrie (left) retiring president, and Dr. L. S. Cozart (center) secretary-treasurer of the association for 21 years. Dr. Cozart is president of Barber-Scotia college, N. C., while Guthrie is principal of Dunbar High school, Lexington, Ky.

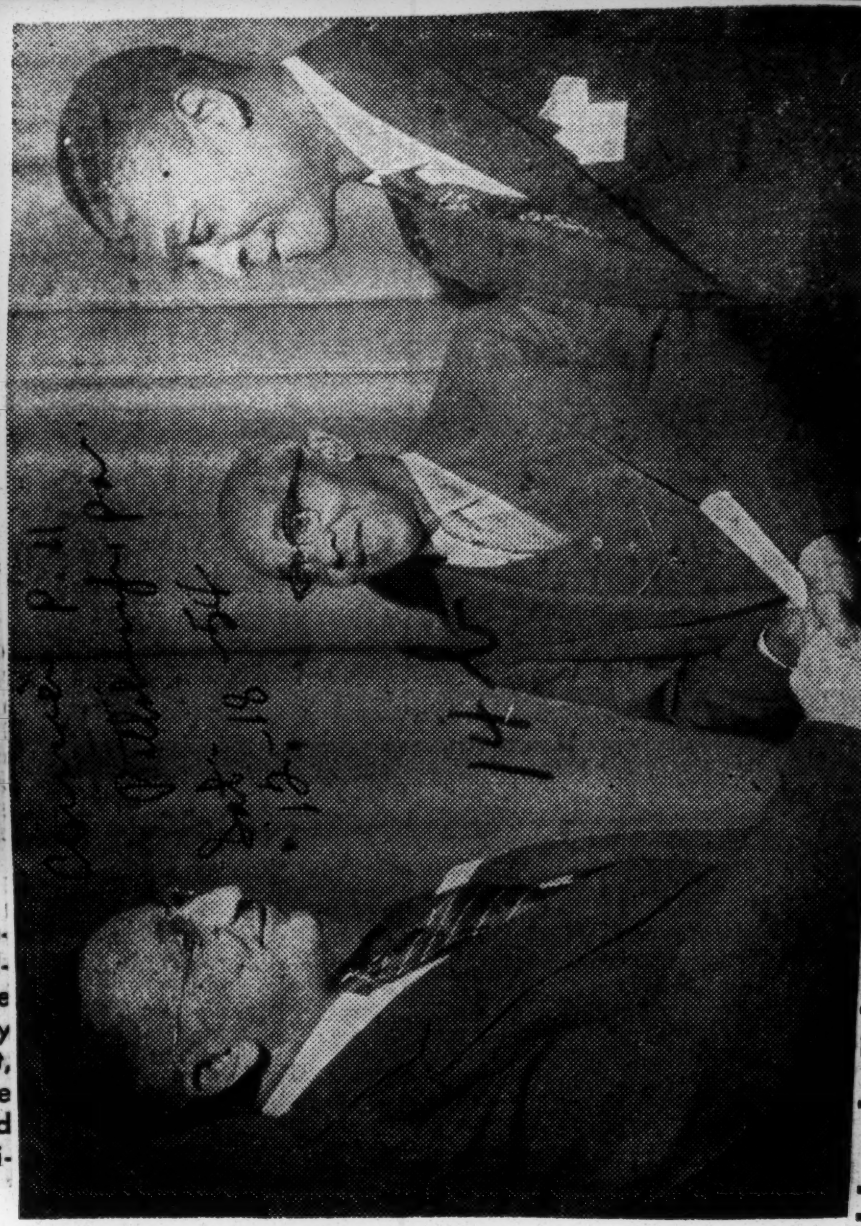


ATLANTANS HAVE LEADERSHIP ROLES IN LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE — Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta University, and Dr. Wesley J. Lyda, dean of the School of Education in the university, second and third from left, carried participating roles in last week's meeting of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools which met in its 21st annual session in Louisville. The above picture was taken during symposium on "Critical Problems in the Education of Negroes in the Southern Region," which was presided over by Dr. Clement. Others appearing in the panel were Dr. James M. Nabrit, Jr., secretary of Howard University, Washington, extreme left, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president, Bluefield State College, Bluefield, W. Va., fourth from left, and Dr. Horace Mann Bond, president of Lincoln University of Pennsylvania.



Heads Educators—Dr. C. V. Troup, right, president of Fort Valley (Ga.) State College, was elected head of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at the close of the organization's twenty-first annual convention recently in Louisville. Seen commending the new electee are, left, Paul L. Guthrie, retiring president, and Dr. L. S. Cozart, center, who has been secretary-treasurer of the association for twenty-one years. Dr. Cozart is president of Barber-Scotia College, Concord, N. C., while Mr. Guthrie is principal of the Dunbar High School, Lexington, Ky.

ATLANTANS HAVE LEADERSHIP ROLES IN LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE — Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta University, and Dr. Wesley J. Lyda, dean of the School of Education in the university, second and third from left, carried participating roles in last week's meeting of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools which met in its 21st annual session in Louisville. The above picture was taken during symposium on "Critical Problems in the Education of Negroes in the Southern Region," which was presided over by Dr. Clement. Others appearing in the panel were Dr. James M. Nabrit, Jr., secretary of Howard University, Washington, extreme left, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president, Bluefield State College, Bluefield, W. Va., fourth from left, and Dr. Horace Mann Bond, president of Lincoln University of Pennsylvania.



Heads Educators—Dr. C. V. Troup, right, president of Fort Valley (Ga.) State College, was elected head of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at the close of the organization's twenty-first annual convention recently in Louisville. Seen commending the new electee are, left, Paul L. Guthrie, retiring president, and Dr. L. S. Cozart, center, who has been secretary-treasurer of the association for twenty-one years. Dr. Cozart is president of Barber-Scotia College, Concord, N. C., while Mr. Guthrie is principal of the Dunbar High School, Lexington, Ky.

14b 1954

COMMITTEE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION

Ike Names Ga. Negro To Confab On Education

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—President Eisenhower Thursday slapped directly at Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia by appointing Lorimer D. Milton of Atlanta to the Committee for the White House Conference on Education. Mr. Milton is president of the Citizens Trust Company of Atlanta and a member of the Board of Trustees of Howard University.

The question of the participation of colored persons in the White House Conference on Education was raised when Dr. Samuel M. Brownell, United States Commissioner of Education, addressed the Conference of Land-Grant College Presidents in October.

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, and other college presidents reminded Mr. Brownell that Talmadge in 1951 had refused to name any colored persons as delegates from Georgia to a White House conference on youth and President Truman had to intervene to have colored persons from Georgia attend the conference.

Dr. Brownell assured the land-grant college president that colored educators and laymen would participate in the White House Conference on Education, to be held in 1955, and apparently the first move toward that end was made with the appointment of Mr. Milton as one of the thirty-three persons who comprise the full committee.

The conference will "consider and report to the President on significant and pressing problems in the field of education."

In letters to the governors of all states and territories, President Eisenhower has stressed that "the primary responsibility for meeting these problems lie with the states and local communities" and that "The Federal Government should strengthen and not interfere with state administration of education.

Each state will hold its own conference on education prior to the White House conference to discuss its own problems, make appropriate recommendations, and name delegates to the White House conference.

Congress appropiated $700,000 to assist the states in holding these conferences. The share allotted to Georgia is $14,456.

Language Group Meets At Atlanta University Today

The Fourteenth Annual Conference of the College Language Association will get under way at Atlanta University this morning and will continue through tomorrow afternoon. Dean Sage Hall will be the scene of most of the activities and all of the meetings.

Registration is from 8:00 to 10:00 a. m., today in the lobby of the Dean Sage Auditorium. The Executive Committee meets in the Faculty Lounge of Dean Sage Hall from 9:00 to 10:30 a. m., and coffee will be served the delegates in the Morehouse Chemistry Building Lounge from 9:00 to 10:30 a. m.

The general session will be held from 10:30 to 12:00 in the Dean Sage Auditorium, with C. L. A. President John W. Parker as principal speaker. The first luncheon session will be held at the Atlanta University dining hall from 12:30 to 2:00 p. m., with Professor Gertrude H. Williams of the Howard University English Department as speaker.

RESEARCH SESSIONS

The sessions on research and scholarly papers will be held in Dean Sage Hall from 2:30 to 5:30 p. m. In the English Section papers will be read by: Helen F. Flowers, Stowe Teachers College, St. Louis; Ulysses Lee, Lincoln University (Pennsylvania); W. T. Farrison, North Carolina College at Durham, and Hazel B. Williams, Tennessee A and I. State University. Papers will be read in the Foreign Language Section by:: Mercer Cook, Howard University; Herman A. Bostick, Grambling College; Oliver E. Jackson, Arkansas A N and M College, and Wilhelm Braun, Morehouse College.

The banquet will be held at Clark College from 7:00 to 8:15 p. m. on Friday, with Blyden Jackson of Fisk University as banquet speaker.

PUBLIC MEETING

At 8:30, the public session will be held in the Dean Sage Auditorium with Dr. Lou LaBrant, president of the National Council of Teachers of English, for many years professor of English at New York University and presently professor of English education at Atlanta University, as speaker.

After the public session, there will be a reception for delegates given by Atlanta University in the Exhibition Room of the Trevor Arnett Library.

Saturday morning from 8:30 to 10:15, there will be a continuation of the sessions on research and scholarly papers. In the English Section papers will be read by Cecil T. Lewis of the Tennessee A and I State University; J. Randolph Fisher, Savannah State College; Malcolm A. Davis, Fort Valley State College; and James A. Butler, Alabama A and M College. Papers will be read in the Foreign Language Section by Wynona M. Lipman, Morehouse College; Sandye McIntyre II. Morgan State College; John H. Morrow, Talladega College and Gerado Ebanks, Morris Brown College.

The business session will be held in the Dean Sage Auditorium from 10:30 to 12:00. At 12:30 p. m., the second luncheon session (and final session) will begin in the Atlanta University dining hall. The speaker on this occasion will be Dr. Nancy Woolridge of Hampton Institute.

Plans for the C. L. A. Fourteenth Annual Conference have been completed by the Host Committee, of which Dr. Edward A Jones, Morehouse College, a former president of the College Language Association (1950-52) is chairman.

CLA OFFICERS

The officers of CLA during 1952-1954 were John W. Parker, Fayetteville State Teachers College, Fayville State Teachers College, Fayetteville, North Carolina, president; Crawford B. Lindsay, Tennessee A and I. State University, vice president; Carrie B. Robinson, Winston-Salem (North Carolina) Teachers College, secretary; John F. Mathews, Maryland State College, treasurer; Bessie Dickerson, Grambling College, assistant treasurer; Charles H. Curl, Morehouse College, editor, College Language Association Bulletin; Anne L. Campbell, Prairie View College (Texas), parliamentarian; Edwin D. Sheen, Prairie View College, Director of Publicity.

PRINCIPALS, JEANES GROUP CLOSE CONFAB

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The two-day annual conference of Principals and Jeanes supervisors closes at Alabama State College today.

Theme of the meeting is "The Role of Guidance in a Good School Program.

The conference is under the cooperative direction of the Division of Special Services of the State Department of Alabama and Albama State College. Principals and supervisors from every section of the state are in attendance.

Presiding at the opening general session Thursday was Henry C. Segar, of Enterprise. Greetings were extended by J. T. Brooks, assistant to the president of the host institution and by Mrs. Thelma Smiley Morris, president of the Montgomery County Teachers Association. The response was by Walker J. Carroll, of Daphne. The keynote speaker was Dr. A. R. Meadows, State Superintendent-Elect. He was introduced by Dr. J. C. Blair, director of Special Services, State Department of Education. A symposium on "Recent Investigations and Emphases in Guidance" had as participants William Smith, Alabama State College; C. B. Fancher, Lincoln School, Marion; E. D. Sledge, Chilton County Training School and MacDonald Hughes, Druid High School, Tuscaloosa.

Mrs. Catherine Neal Johnson, Montgomery, president of the Jeanes Supervisors Association, presided at the second general session Thursday. Presentations at this session were made by Dr. W. E. Anderson and Dr. R. D. Crockett, of Alabmaa State College and by Dr. C. W. Orr, Alabama A and M College.

Bryant Foster, Eufaula, president of the Alabama Association of School Principals, will preside today at the third general session at which time the featured speaker will be Dr. R. E. Tidwell, special assistant to the president of Stillman College, who will be introduced by Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State College. Other contributions will be made by L. L. Still and Albert East both of the State Department of Education.

The conference is being by Dr. Robert C. Hatch and Dr. Blair, of the Division of Special Services.

14b 1954

Leading College Heads Say Decision 'Our Way Of Life'

World Birmingham Ala.
Sat. 11-5-54 p. 1

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — (ANP) — Southern white leaders who had hoped that leading Negro educators might lend some measure of comfort to plans to defy the Supreme court, received a rude jolt here last week when the most representative group of Negro educators assembled since the decision, called for complete compliance with the high court ruling.

The group, which included presidents of leading Negro colleges and universities, said in a joint statement that the decision dramatically distinguishes "our way of life in a democracy from that in totalitarian countries."

"Time will prove," the statement said, "that our fears have no foundation in fact, just as has been proved by the implementation of previous court decisions. Segregation breeds fear; and when the barriers of segregation are at last removed, we will wonder why we feared at all."

Pointing out that change without bloodshed and revolution was possible because of a Constitution which guarantees equality and justice to all, the educators said "that to evade or discredit it is to destroy our government."

"It is our hope," they said, "that all of the colleges and universities of the South, Negro and white, will immediately implement the spirit of the court's decision by accepting, irrespective of race, all qualified students who seek admission."

The leaders said they were convinced that there is a "fundamental sense of fair play in the South," and noted that integration in public schools involving both students and teachers is already working well in some southern schools.

Stating that it was unfortunate that preoccupation with the educational implicaton of the decision had obscured the question of the quality of education for all children, the educators said that "in two-thirds of the United States, co-education of the races has been going on for many decades with no untoward effect."

Again the group stated that "Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nullify the court's decision. To do this would be tantamount to sharing in a plan to destroy the very fabric of our constitutional government."

Realizing the difficulties that will be incurred in some places where integration will be attempted, the leaders said there "should be the cooperative effort in every community to plan on the local level the implementation of the decision. The planning should be done in good faith and with an honest desire to implement the decision rather than scheming to circumvent it."

The educators said they were not making the statement or pleading for Negroes alone, but that they were concerned "about the best education that can be made available to every child in the South."

The group went on record favoring federal aid to education "in order that the per capita expenditure in the South may be brought up to a high national average. We want the white child to have the best and we want the Negro child to have the best." This is not possible they said, in segregated schools.

CONFERENCE OF 62 EDUCATORS LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Harry Richarlson, Gammon Theological Seminary; J. S. Scott, Wiley College; J. W. Seabrook, Fayetteville State Teachers; William R. Strassner, Sham University; Harold L. Trigg, St. Augustine; and S. D. Williams, Elizabeth City Teachers College.

— o O o —

OTHER EDUCATORS attending were:

Miss L. S. Alexander, executive secretary, Mississippi Teachers Association; Booker T. Bradshaw, school board member, Richmond Va.; Miss E. M. Douglas, trustee board member, AM and N College; L. C. Downing, Richmond School Board;

Samuel E. Duncan, supervisor, high schools, North Carolina; George C. Grant, Morgan State College; W. L. Greene, executive secretary, North Carolina Teachers Associaton; Cornell A. Johnson, field consultant, South Carolina Educational Finance Commission;

George Longe, executive secretary, Louisiana Education Association; L. G. Moore, dean, Langston University; Joseph C Parks, executive secretary, Maryland Educational Association; Gilbert L. Porter, executive secretary, Florida Teachers Association;

— o O,o —

WALTER RIDLEY, Virginia State College; Mrs. Anita W. Robinson executive secretary, Kentucky Teachers Association; Daniel T. Rolfe, Meharry Medical College; Frank W. Smith, executive secretary, Arkansas Teachers Association; Walter E. Solomon, executive secretary, Palmetto State Teachers Association;

Charles H. Thompson, editor, Journal of Negro Education, Howard University; Wardell D. Thompson, consultant, Prairie View State College; Leslie J. White, executive secretary, Colored State Teachers Association, Austin, Tex.

Serving as consultants to the conference were Aaron Brown and Dr. F. D. Patterson, executive director, both of Phelps-Stokes Fund, NYC; and from the United Negro College Fund, also of NYC, Hollis F. Price and W. J. Trent Jr., executive director

Among educators at Hot Springs parley

Pittsburgh American p. 3
Sat. 11-6-54

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (ANP)— The 62 educators who assembled here to issue a joint statement on the Supreme Court decision have been described as one of the "most representative" by a press observer.

Baltimore Md.

Among college presidents in attendance were:

Rufus B. Atwood, Kentucky State; J. A. Bacoats, Benedict; N. R. Berger, Mississippi Teachers Association; Cleo W. Blackburn, Jarvis Christian; Rufus E Clement, Atlanta University and member, Atlanta Board of Education, Atlanta;

James A. Colston, Knoxville College; L. S. Cozart, Barber - Scotia; Milton K. Curry Jr., Bishop; J. W. Coggs, Arkansas Baptist; Lawrence A. Davis, AM and N College; Albert W. Dent Dillard University;

— o O o —

J. F. DRAKE, A and M College; Luther Foster, Tuskegee Institute; D. R. Glass, Texas College; Walter W. Gibson, LeMoyne College (acting); Arthur D. Gray, Talladega; P. L. Guthrie, Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools; M. L. Harris, Philander Smith College;

A. L. Jornson, Prentice Institute; Charles S. Johnson, Fisk University; Mordecai W. Johnson, Howard University; David D. Jones, Bennett College; R. W. E. Jones, Grambling College; William H. Jones, Houston-Tillotson College;

C. A. Kirkendell, Lane College; John H. Lewis, Morris Brows; Hardy Liston Johnson C. Smith; Albert E. Manley, Spelman; Benjamin E. Mays, Morehouse; J. R. Otis, Alcorn; Royal W Puryear, Florida N and I; Jacob Reddix, Jackson College;

The Nation's Top Negro Educators Issue Important Release

World Birmingham, Ala.

In the trends of the time affecting so gravely our educational policy now under discussion, sixty Negro educators from fourteen states and the District of Columbia expressed their collective point of view with respect to the Supreme Court's decision of May 17th, 1954, declaring segregation in the public schools, unconstitutional.

The two-day meeting, called by fifteen Negro educators and sponsored by the Phelps Stokes Fund, was held in Hot Springs, Arkansas, October 26-27 Sat. 11-5-54

The statement of the educators began — "We welcome the decision of the Supreme Court and look upon it as another significant milestone in the Nation's quest for a democratic way of life and in the Negro's long struggle to become a first-class citizen. . . . . This is a part of an evolutionary process which has been going on in the South and the Nation for some time."

p. 8

The educators criticized sharply "The effort on the part of some leaders and school officials to intimidate Negro teachers and other citizens under threat of loss of job if they express approval of the Court's decision and if segregation is not maintained is shortsighted, vindictive, and contrary to the fundamental sense of fair play of the American people." And speaking of Negroes themselves: "Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nullify the Court's decision."

This release, coming as it does from a careful study of college presidents and executive specialists, carries with it the weight of those who are acquainted with the school problem. It has been theirs to study it throughout the years and they are to be commended for their findings and the stand they have taken.

It has been our position all along that school people were the best authorities on school problems. The only times that educational systems have suffered were those occasions upon which politicians seized upon them to foster their political ambitions.

This release means much for those educational projects in the Deep South, where occasional entries have been made by the politicians in search of footballs and expedient "whipping boys."

Okla. PTA Congress Convenes Apr. 6-7

GUTHRIE—The twenty-seventh annual session of the Oklahoma Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers will be held at the Faver high school Tuesday and Wednesday, April 6 and 7. The theme for the congress will be "New Responsibilities in a Changing Society."

The first session of the congress will begin at 9 a.m. Tuesday with the state president, Mrs. Gladys Dobson presiding. The program will be as follows: registration by the secretary, Mrs. Thelma Wilson; assembly singing conducted by Mrs. Carmelita Tipton, Guthrie; invocation, the Rev. J. Branch, pastor of the A.M.E. Church; greetings on part of local units, Oliver Hodge, state superintendent of education; presentation of consultants, speakers and guests and music by the Faver high school.

A panel discussion—"New Responsibilities in a Changing Society," will be held from 10:30 a.m. until 12:30. Participants of the panel are: "Home," Mrs. Bertha the Rev. C. W. Hurrington, pastor of St. Immanuel Baptist church; "Leadership," Mrs. Gloria Ainsworth, Ardmore; "School," Mrs. A. L. Morgan, Tulsa; "Community," Mrs. V. M. Davis, Wewoka; "Health Education," Mrs. Rosa P. House, Guthrie. Students from Langston university will also appear on this panel.

The afternoon session will begin at 2 o'clock with the vice president, B. D. Holbert, presiding. Highlighting the afternoon session will be an address and movie by Mrs. Ira D. Hall, state chairman of mental health; tree planting ceremony, Ira D. Hall, honoree and dedicatory address, R. S. Waugh, Perry. A.L. Tipton, Guthrie, will preside at the 3 o'clock session. At 6 o'clock the presidents' banquet will be held.

Beginning at 8 o'clock will be the evening session with the state president, Mrs. Gladys Dobson presiding. Invocation will be by Rev. R.B. Bradford, pastor of First Baptist church. L. R. Kirkpatrick, Muskogee, will deliver the address on "New Responsibilities in a Changing Society." Greetings from city officials will be followed by a response from Mrs. Maggie Noble. Rev. Eddie Ward, pastor of Macedonia Baptist church will give the benediction.

Mrs. Molilla Hornbeck, Ardmore, will preside at the Wednesday meeting. The program follows:

Mrs. Gladys Dobson

assembly singing from 9 til 9:10; Committee chairman reports; school instruction; congress picture, Mrs. H. Hibler, director; and dinner at 12:30. The evening program consists of business session, final reports, acknowledgements, awards, presentations. The Rev. J. Branch will give the benediction.

The program for the State PTA welcome program follows: music by the Faver high school, Mrs. C. Tipton, director; welcome greetings, Ministerial Alliance, Rev. J.I. Branch, president; Congress PTA , Mrs. Spencer Session; Chamber of Commerce, T. H. Black; welcome from th eschools, C. E. Crook, superintendent of schools. Mrs. Cermonia Hibler will serve as mistress of ceremony for the evening. The banquet will be held at 6 o'clock.

State officers for the Congress are: president, Mrs. Gladys V. Dobson; vice presid B. D. Holbert; secretary, Mrs. Thelma Wilson; assistant secretary, Mrs. R.T. Gracey; treasurer, Mrs. Beulah M. Ellsberry; publicity director, Mrs. M. E. Burrow; Western district, Mrs. Gencie Osborne; Southern District, Mrs. Martha Peters; Northeast district, Mrs. Rosa Davis; West Central district, Mrs. R. T. Gracey; East district, president, Miss Corine Dean; East Central district, Mrs. Maggie Noble.

Parents, Teachers End Conclave in Oklahoma

LANGSTON, Okla.—The annual convention of the National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers ended its twenty-eighth annual session here recently at Langston University.

Eighteen states and the District of Columbia were represented at the confab. Sessions were highlighted by addresses from key people from across the nation.

Opening with an address of welcome by Dr. G. L. Harrison, president of Langston University, other speakers included the Hon. Johnston Murray, Governor of Oklahoma; Mrs. Willie Murray, wife of the Governor; Mrs. Ruth Gaston Mueller, Assistant Republican National Committeewoman, and Mrs. Charles L. Williams, national president of the organization.

Theme of the conclave was "New Responsibilities for a Changing Society." One of the sessions featured a youth panel, "The Challenge of Our Times."

The convention was climaxed with a tour of Oklahoma City sponsored by the Oklahoma City P-TA Council which included a visit to the Governor's mansion.

The 1955 convention will meet in Texas.

New Duties Is Theme Of Conference

Leaders Planning Pilgrimage To Grave Of Founder

Pioneers and leaders in the Parent-Teacher Associations of Virginia will meet in Portsmouth Nov. 10 for the three-day session marking the 27th annual conference of the Virginia Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers. The meeting will be held at the I. C. Norcom High School.

The theme of the conference is "New Responsibilities in Parent-Children - Teacher Relations." The theme will be discussed from the viewpoint of added responsibilities relative to the Supreme Court decision of May 17 declaring segregated public schools unconstitutional. Other phases of the responsibility of parents and teachers in the PTA program in Virginia will also receive attention.

* * *

THE CONFERENCE this year will be the "Founders Memorial Edition." A highlight of the session will be the program in honor of the founders of the organization. Most prominent among them were the late Mrs. Clara L. K. Bailey, of Portsmouth, and the late Dr. John M. Gandy, a former president of Virginia State College.

A pre-conference board of managers meeting will be held at the Norcom high school on Nov. 10 at 7 p. m.

* * *

THE FIRST general session on Thursday, Nov. 11 at 10 a. m. will feature greetings from Fred Duke, Mayor of the City of Portsmouth, A. J. Mapp, Superintendent of city schools, and Carolyn W. Jackson, president, Portsmouth Council of PTA's.

The conference theme will be formally presented by way of a panel moderated by Dr. John J. Brooks, director of The New Lincoln School, New York City. Other members of the panel will be Ralph Gholson, principal, George Peabody elementary school, Portsmouth; Mrs. Naomi Wright Grannum, supervisor, Hampton Institute; Mrs. Irma B. Thompson, Newport News schools; and Dr. C. Waldo Scott, member, Newport News School Board.

* * *

DR. DEBORAH Cannon Partridge, profesor of education, Queens College Flushing, N. Y,. will deliver the keynote address to open the Thursday afternoon session. Dr. Partridge, a well known figure in education and a prolific contributor to publications in the fields of school-community relations, and curriculum development, will speak to the assemblage at 2:30 p. m.

Also a feature of the Thursday afternoon session will be a symposium, on "Some Mental Adjustments Involved in Desegregation in Our Schools," moderated by Dr. Hugo Owens, of Portsmouth, and engaging in the deliberations with him will be Dr. Eva C. Mitchell, division of teacher education, Hampton Institute; Dr. Wendell J. Pile, psychiatrist, Newport News and Warwick Mental Hygiene Clinic; Dr. S. R. Proctor, dean, School of Religion, Virginia Union University; Mrs. Roger Boyle, University of Virginia. Presiding, Alfred K. Talbot, Jr., vice president, will preside at this session.

* * *

CLIMAXING the festivities of the second general session will be held Thursday at 8 p. m. Mrs. Caroyn W. Jackson of the Portsmouth PTA Council will preside. Music will be furnished by the I. C. Norcom band and choral group. The program will include a dramatic skit by the Truxton nelementary school and the local President's March.

* * *

* * *

THE PRE Clinic will be held on Friday from 8 to 9:25 a. m. under the leadership of Mrs. Margaret G. Dabney of the division of field services

The third general session at Virginia State College. Assisting Mrs. Dabney as consultants wil be Dr. J. Rupert Picott, executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association, and Dr. John J. Brooks, director of The Lincoln School New York City.

The fourth general session with Executive Secretary S. M. Burrell Dr. Samuel A. Madden, director of field services, Virginia State College will direct the showing of a film on juvenile delinquency and will lead the discussion following the showing at 11:15 a. m.

* * *

GEORGE P. Lawrence, lawyer and legal advisor to the Virginia Congress and President of the Roanoke PTA Council, will conduct an open forum discussion on the subject, "Methods of Local Units in Dealing with Desegregation and the Courts" beginning at 12:15 p. m.

State Congress President Thelma S. Pegram will preside at the final "after-lunch" session beginning at 2:20 p. m. and highlighted by conference evaluation, final reports and awards to local units.

DR. JOHN J. BROOKS
Moderator

College Language Association To Meet At Atlanta University

The College Language Association will hold its 1954 annual conference at Atlanta University on Friday and Saturday, April 30 - May 1, with Atlanta University serving as host institution. The CLA is made up of teachers of English and modern languages in the colleges and universities engaging in Negro education in this country, and some of the most outstanding experts in the field of language teaching and research will participate in the conference, which promises to be one of the best in the Association's history.

Those who will appear on the program as speakers are the following: John W. Parker, Fayetteville State Teachers College, Fayetteville, N. C., president of CLA; Gertrude H. Williams, Howard University, speaker at the first luncheon; Nancy B. Woolridge, Hampton Institute, speaker at the second luncheon; Blyden Jackson, Fisk University, speaker at the banquet; and Lou La Brant, Atlanta University (formerly of New York University), speaker at the public session.

JOHN W. PARKER

Scholarly papers will be read by the following in the English Section: Nick Aaron Ford, Morgan College; Helen F. Flowers, Stowe Teachers College; Ulysses Lee, Lincoln University; W. E. Farrison, North Carolina College at Durham; Hazel B. Williams, Tennessee A & I State; Cecil T. Lewis; J. Randolph Fisher, Savannah State College; Malcolm A. Davis, Fort Valley State; and James A. Butler, Alabama A & M College.

In the Foreign Language Section the following: Mercer Cook, Howard University; Herman F. Bostick, Grambling College; Oliver E. Jackson, Arkansas A M & N College; Wilhelm Braun, Morehouse College; Wynona Moore Lipman, Morehouse College; Sandye McIntyre II, Morgan State College; John Morrow, Talladega College; and Gerardo Ebanks, Morris Brown College.

Dr. Edward A. Jones, of Morehouse College, is chairman of the Host Committee for the 1954 annual conference of CLA, and working with him are members of the English and foreign language faculties of all the Atlanta colleges: Atlanta University, Clark College, Morehouse College and Morris Brown College.

The officers of CLA are John W. Parker, president; Crawford B. Lindsay, Tennessee A & I State University, vice president and chairman of the Program Committee; Carrie B. Robinson, Maryland State, secretary; John T. Mathers, Maryland State, treasurer.

The CLA Host Committee, which is responsible for arrangements for the forth-coming conference, consists of the following persons from the Atlanta colleges:

DR. CRAWFORD B. LINDSAY

(Atlanta University) Mrs. Lucy C. Grisby, Dr. Charles Wahl; (Clark College) Mrs. Emma R. Cunningham, Mrs. Sara H. Cureton; (Morehouse College) A. Russell Brooks, Edward A. Jones; (Morris Brown College) Mrs. Thelma Curl, Mrs. Julia Fountain Jackson; (Spelman College Dr. Coragreene Johnstone, Mrs. Billie Geter Thomas. Mrs. Cunhingham, of the Clark College English faculty, heads a subcommittee in charge of registration; Mrs. Thomas, of the French Department at Spelman College, heads a subcommittee in charge of entertainment; and Mrs. Grisby, of the Atlanta University Department of English, heads a subcommittee in charge of housing.

Language association slates 1954 meeting at Atlanta U.

ATLANTA—The College Language Association will hold its 1954 annual conference at Atlanta University Friday and Saturday, April 30-May 1. The CLA is made up of teachers of English and modern foreign languages.

Those who will appear on the program as speakers are the following: John W. Parker, Fayetteville State Teachers college, Fayetteville, N. C., president of CLA; Miss Gertrude H. Williams, Howard university;

Miss Nancy B. Woolridge, Hampton Institute; Blyden Jackson, Fisk University, and Lou La Brant, Atlanta university (formerly of New York university).

To Read Papers

Papers will be read by the following in the English section: Nick Aaron Ford, Morgan college; Miss Helen F. Flowers, Stowe Teachers college; Ulysses Lee, Lincoln University; W. E. Farrison, North Carolina college at Durham;

Miss Hazel B. Williams, Tennessee A. and I. State; Cecil T. Lewis, J. Randolph Fisher, Savannah State college; Malcolm A. Davis, Fort Valley State; and James A. Butler, Alabama A. and M. college.

In the foreign language section: Mercer Cook, Howard university; Herman F. Bostick, Grambling college; Oliver T. Jackson, Arkansas A.M. and N. college; Wilhelm Braun, Morehouse college;

Miss Wynona M. Lipman, Morehouse college; Sandye McIntyre 2nd, Morgan State college; John Morrow, Talladega college, and Gerardo Eubanks, Morris Brown college.

Language Association to meet on Atlanta campus

ATLANTA — The 14th annual conference of the College Language Association will open at Atlanta University, Friady, at 10 a.m. in Dean Sage Hall and continue through Saturday afternoon.

Registration hours will be from 8 to 10 a.m. in the Sage auditorium lobby. The executive committee will meet in the same hall beginning at 9 a.m., while coffee will be served to delegates in Morehouse chemistry building lounge from 9 to 10:30.

President Opening Speaker

Speaker at the opening general session will be CLA President John W. Parker and Dr. Gertrude H. Williams, of the Howard University English department will address the first luncheon session.

Speakers at research sessions will include:

Helen F. Flowers, Stowe Teachers College; Ulysses Lee, Lincoln (Pa.); W. E. Farrison, N. Carolina College; Hazel B. Williams, Tennessee State; Mercer Cook, Howard; Herman A. Bostick, Grambling; Oliver E. Jackson, Arkansas A. and M., and Wilhelm Braun, Morehouse.

Banquet Friday At 7

The banquet will be held at 7 p.m. Friday in Clark College, with Blyden Jackson of Fisk as the speaker.

Others slated to be heard are:

Dr. Lou LaBrant, Atlanta University; Cecil T. Lewis, Tennessee State; J. Randolph Fisher, Savannah State; Malcolm A. Davis, Fort Valley; James A. Butler, Alabama A. and M.; Wynona M. Lipman, Morehouse; Sandye McIntyre 2nd, Morgan State;

John H. Morrow, Talladega; Gerado Ebanks, Morris Brown; Dr. Nancy Woolridge, Hampton Institute, and Dr. Edward A. Jones, Morehouse, former association president, who headed the host committee on arrangements.

Current Officers

Officers during the closing term were:

President Parker, Fayetteville State; Crawford B. Lindsay, Tennessee State, vice-president; Carrie B. Robinson, Winston - Salem Teachers, secretary; John F. Matthews, Maryland State, treasurer; Bessie Dickerson, Grambling, assistant;

Charles H. Curl, Morehouse, editor of the association's bulletin; Anne L. Campbell, Prairie View, parliamentarian, and Edwin D. Sheen, also of Prairie View, director of publicity.

Language Association Meet Acclaimed Successful Here

The 24th annual conference of the College Language Association, which was held on the campus of Atlanta University last weekend, has been acclaimed one of the most successful in the history of the association, both in attendance (with approximately 140 of its more than 200 members present) and in the caliber and effectiveness of papers, addresses, and achievements of its various committees.

More than a score of scholars in the field of language and literature (English and foreign) participated in C. L. A.'s 1954 program by reading papers, speaking, or conducting discussions on teaching methods. The participants represented 26 colleges and universities in the states of Maryland, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia Florida Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Missouri and the District of Columbia.

The first luncheon speaker was Dr. Gertrude H. Williams of the English Department of Miner Teachers College, Washington, D C. The second luncheon speaker was Dr. Nancy Bullock Woolridge of the Department of English of Hampton Institute, Hampton, Virginia. The banquet speaker was Dr. Blyden Jackson of the Department of English of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn. The following read scholarly papers in the English Language and Literature Section: Dr. Helen F. Flowers, Stowe Teachers College, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Ulysses Lee, Lincoln University ,Mo.); Dr. W. Edward Farrison North Carolina College at Durham; Dr. Hazel Browne Williams, Tennessee State A. and I. University, Nashville; Dr. Cecil T. Lewis, Tennessee State A. &. I. Nniversity, Dr. Malcolm A. Davis, Fort Valley (Ga.) State College; Dr. J. Randolph Fisher, Savannah (Ga.) State College, and Dr. James A. Butler, Alabama A. & M. College, Huntsville, Ala.

In the Foreign Language and Literature Section (French, German and Spanish), paper were read by the following: Dr. Mercer Cook, Howard University; Prof. Herman F. Bostick, Grambling College, Grambling, La.; Dr. Oliver E. Jackson, Arkansas A&M College, Pine Bluff; Dr. Wilhelm Braun, Morehouse College, Atlanta; Dr. Wynona Moore Lipman, Morehouse College, Atlanta; Prof. Sandye McIntyre II, Morgan State College, Baltimore, Maryland; Dr. John H. Morrow, and Prof. Gerardo Ebanks of Morris College.

DR. LOU LA BRANT PUBLIC MEETING SPEAKER

The speaker at the public meeting of C. L. A.'s 1954 annual conference last Friday evening was the nationally-famous expert in English and the teaching of English, Dr. Lou La Brant, president of the National Council of Teachers of English and former professor at New York University. Dr. La Brant, who is now on the faculty of Atlanta University, spoke on the subject, "The Language World of Today's Youth."

C. L. A. President John W. Parker, of the Fayetteville State Teachers College, Fayetteville, N. C., in his presential message, eulogized the late Benjamin G. Brawley, distinguished humanist and devoted teacher and prolific writer and productive scholar, one time professor of English and dean of Morehouse College who served for a number of years as professor of English at Shaw University and at Howard University.

DR. LINDSAY ELECTED PRESIDENT

At the business meeting Saturday morning the following officers were elected to serve C. L. A. for the next two years: Dr. Crawford B. Lindsay, Tennessee State A. & I. College, president; Professor Billie Geter Thomas, Spelman College, vice-president; Prof. Carrie Robinson, Winston-Salem State Teachers College, secretary; Prof. John F. Matheus, Maryland State College, treasurer; Dr. Charles Ray, North Carolina College at Durham, editor of the C. L. A. Bulletin and corresponding secretary; Prof. Oliver E. Jackson, Arkansas A&M College, parliamentrian; and Dr. John S Lash, Maryland State College, director of publicity.

TO MEET AT HAMPTON IN 1955

The College Language Association accepted the invitation to hold its 1955 annual conference at Hampton Institute the last weekend in April. (C. L. A. Founder, Dr. Hugh M. Gloster, who is on leave this year as a Fulbright lecturer in universities in Japan, heads the Communications Center at Hampton.)

C. L. A. LITERARY PRIZES AWARDED TO STUDENTS

The C. L. A. Committee on Creative Writing, under the able direction of Dr. Nick Aaron Ford of Morgan State College, succeeded in getting the Johnson Publishing Company (publishers of EBONY, JET and other widely-read publications.) to provide funds for four prizes in creative writing, two in poetry and two in prose. Cash awards for the four prizes total $300.

This year the C. L. A.-EBONY award's first prize for poetry was awarded to Richard Johnson, Morehouse College (cash value of award, $100). The second prize for poetry went to Sarah O. Sepha, Coppin State Teachers College (cash value, $50.) The C. L. A.-EBONY award's first prize for prose (the short story) went to William L. Spencer Morgan State College (cash value of $100), while the second prize for prose went to Cecil Haselrig, Knoxville College (cash value, $50).

The host committee responsible for arrangements for the 1954 C. L. A. conference in Atlanta was headed by Dr. Edward A. Jones, Morehouse College, a former president of C. L. A. (1950-1952). Dr. Jones was assisted on the host committee by members of the English foreign language faculties of each of the colleges in the Atlanta University Center: Atlanta University, Clark College, Morehouse College, and Morris Brown College.

14b 1954

ELEMENTARY PRINCIPALS' CONFERENCE (LOUISIANA)

Elementary Principals Confab Ends

By Collie J. Nicholson

Grambling, La. (Special)—The annual Elementary Principals' conference of the Louisiana Education association was recently held at Grambling college with 168 delegates in attendance.

Theme of the confab was: "The Elementary Principal at Work."

Delegates from all sections of the state participating in the two general sessions, heard a keynote address by Dr. John A. Hunter, registrar and professor of education, Louisiana State university, and divided into small study groups for work.

Subject of Dr. Hunter's address was "The Principal and His Program."

Mrs. Fannie C. Williams, principal, Jones Elementary school, New Orleans, delivered the closing address at the evening session.

Platform guest appearing on the program included J. K. Haynes, president, Louisiana Education association; J. B. Robertson, director, division of elementary and secondary education, State Department of Education; Roscoe H. White, superintendent, Caddo parish schools; and W. S. Finister, Jr., principal, J. B. Lafargue elementary school, Alexandria.

Albert McHenry, principal, Lincoln elementary school, Ruston; L. L. Kilgore, supervisor of Negro schools, State Department of Education; Jonathan Vaughn, principal, Milne-Municipal Boys Home, New Orleans.

Elijah B. Williams, chairman, department of elementary principals, LEA; Mrs. Inez Cenales, principal, Butler elementary school, Bossier City; Dean E. L. Cole, Dr. Kara V. Jackson and Registrar W. L. Garner of Grambling college.

Selected principals, state department of education personnel and faculty members from Grambling college and Southern university served as resource persons for the conference.

Conference participants discussed these topics in afternoon study groups:

"Improving Human Relations," "Discipline—New Concepts and Methods," "Improving Instruction.' 'Effective Organization for the Elementary School," and "Effective Leadership in the Elementary School."

HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPALS' CONFERENCE (LOUISIANA)

14b 1954

EDUCATORS HEAR DR. T. R. HOWARD

State High School Group Concludes Session

p. 23

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

BATON ROUGE, La., April 15—Dr. T. R. M. Howard, founder of Friendship hospital and president of the Mississippi Regional Leadership Council, Mound Bayou, Miss., was a dynamic speaker at the annual banquet held during the Louisiana High school principals' conference on the Southern university campus.

Choosing the subject, "The Role of the Negro High School Principal in a Changing Order in America," Dr. Howard said to the educators: "You are to help get our people prepared as rapidly as possible for our appointment with destiny. Your first job, of course, is in school where you have been given the great responsibility of administrator. The Negro High school principals, not only of Louisiana, but of the entire South are facing their greatest challenge today and you must decide whether you are going to face the problem as courageous men or whether you will shrink away from it as a coward."

Dr. Howard A. Strong, advocate for competent leadership among Negro organizations in Mississippi, pioneered in the field of surgery in the all-Negro town of Mound Bayou.

At the closing session of the two-day meeting Thursday educators heard Dr. George H. Deer, professor of education, Louisiana State university, and Honorable Shelby M. Jackson, state superintendent of education.

Dr. Deer who spoke on the subject, "The Principal's Role in Curriculum Development," told the principals that they must develop a program of experience which will help our boys and girls grow as persons.

Superintendent Jackson in his address gave words of praise to the principals for the fine job they are now doing and complimented them for having assembled themselves for further improvements. He said further, "We must stress character, it is the people with character that count.

The keynote speaker and general consultant, Dr. Henry H. Kronenberg, University of Arkansas, gave a closing statement which was followed by an evaluation of the conference by Dr. Joseph Taylor, Dillard university, and the conference projection by L. L. Kilgore, state department of education.

Chicago Woman Sets Precedent, Heads PTA Council

CHICAGO—(A N P)—Mrs. Josephine Graham was installed last week as president of the High School Council District 7 of the Illinois Congress of Parents and Teachers. She is the first person of her race to win the coveted position.

14b 1954

INDUSTRIAL ARTS CLUB CONFERENCE

ATTEND INDUSTRIAL ARTS CLUB CONFERENCE — Leaders and delegates who attended the first conference of representatives of Industrial Clubs held Saturday at Virginia State College are pictured above. The meeting was sponsored under auspices of the Virginia State College School of Industries, of which G. W. David is director. Dr. W. T. Reed, itinerant teacher trainer, was conference coordinator.

Seen in the group pictured above are, club members: Leonard Boone, Petersburg; Alvin Brown, Unionville; Homer Brown, Amissville; Miss Margaret Crews, Petersburg; Reginald Davis, Roanoke; Karl Dones, Martinsville; Floyd Feagans, Charlottesville; Juanita Fields, Petersburg; Charles Clover, Hopewell; Clifford Hamilton, Martinsville; Roy Harris, Martinsville; Prince Harvell, Emporia; Joshua Jefferson, Emporia; A. M. Jackson, Petersburg; Miss Barbara Jones, Petersburg; Samuel Jones, Emporia; James Kasey, Salem; Joseph Love, Petersburg; Winfred Lindsey, Williamsburg; William Lowery, Martinsville; Willie Martin, Martinsville; Willie M. Mason, Petersburg; John Patterson, Newport News; Johnny Payne, Newport News; Earl Penn, Petersburg; John Pilney, Petersburg; Alfred Simmons, Emporia; Charles Smith, Martinsville; Phillip Smith, Newport News; Joseph Stallor, Roanoke; James Sweeney, Roanoke; William Taylor, Culpeper; Herbert Turner, Petersburg; Leon Tynes, Newport News; Willie Walker, Roanoke; John Watkins, Roanoke; Charles Wesson, Petersburg; William Willis, Arlington; Benjamin Garrett, Portsmouth; Melvin Jarvis, Portsmouth; Lennie Perry, Portsmouth; Henry Ross, Portsmouth; Thomas Ted, Portsmouth.

Faculty members: Smith Anderson, Dinwiddie Training School; Sylvester Blue, Peabody; James Bowman, Bruton Heights; A. W. Bracey, Parker-Gray; J. T. Brown, Huntington; William Cooper, Virginia State College; George W. Davis, Virginia State College; H. E. Fauntleroy, Virginia State College; Alvin France, Carver; B. P. French, Hoffman-Boston; R. H. Gant, Halifax; J. H. George, Huntington; H. D. Goode, Halifax; Frank T. Greene, Virginia State College; Mrs. Rebecca Hamlin, Peabody; R. J. Hayes, Chester; Lester V. Hill, Maggie L. Walker; E. J. Jackson, Virginia State College; W. H. Johns, Jackson P. Burley; J. D. Johnson, B. T. Washington (Staunton); R. R. Jones, George P. Phenix; B. C. Martin, Carver; Jesse Martin, Carver; A. M. McClerry, Carver; P. L. Miller, James S. Russell McKinnon, Nottoway Training School W. C. Penn, Carver; R. F. Parker, Roanoke; C. B. Powell, Virginia State College; Elmore Rainey, Peabody; D. H. Randolph, G. W. Carver; W. T. Reed, Virginia State Colman-Boston; J. R. Scott, M. H. Thomas; Russell Scott, Jackson P. Burley; J. D. Serrell; Addison; W. J. Short, Manassas Training School; S. C. Smith, A. and T. College; J. Taylor, A. and T. College; McKinley R. Tucker, Christiansburg Institute; W. B. Tynes, Peabody; D. J. Vick, I. C. Norcom; G. H. Walker, Lawrenceville; W. C. Washington, B. W. Wyatt; W. H. White, Norfolk County; H. L. Williams, Albert Harris; J. Williams, Peabody; Finley R. Wood, Virginia State College; A. E. Wright, I. C. Norcom.

Industrial Club Leaders Hold Confab At Va. State

Journal and Guide

PETERSBURG, Va. — Student representatives and advisors from 21 high schools in Virginia attended a one-day conference of Industrial Club Leaders held Saturday at Virginia State College.

P. 24

The organization and operation of local clubs as a phase of extra-curricular activities were studied at the meeting. Attention also was given to the advantages of inter-school activities in vocational and industrial arts subjects.

Norfolk

FOLLOWING welcomes to the campus and to the School of Industries by Dean J. H. Johnston and Director George W. Davis, brief discussions were presented by some of the industrial teachers from various high schools. Question periods were held in which teachers and students participated.

Va.

Sat. 1-24-54

A temporary council, consisting of one representative from each high school represented, was formed for the purpose of further study and planning of an organization through which interest and learning may be stimulated.

The officers chosen by the council were President, Henry Ross, Norfolk County Training School, Portsmouth; Vice President, Leon Tyns Huntington high school, Newport News; Secretary, Willie Martin, Albert-Harris high school, Martinsville; Assistant secretary, Willie Walker, Addison high school, Roanoke; Secretary-Treasurer, Winfred Lindsey, Bruton Heights high school, Williamsburg; and Sergeant-at-arms, Thomas Scott, Halifax County Training School, Halifax.

Among consultants and discussion leaders at the conference were, Dr. W. T. Reed, Virginia State College; Lester V. Hill, Richmond; Sylvester Blue, Petersburg; B. F. French, Arlington; J. D. Serrell, Roanoke; S. C. Smith, A. and T. College, Greensboro; Dalton Randolph, Culpeper; R. G. Parker, Williamsburg; and H. E. Fauntleroy, Virginia State College.

14b 1954

JEANES TEACHERS (ALABAMA)

Jeanes Supervisors Workshop At Alabama State College

Sponsored and directed by the Division of Special Services of the Alabama State Department of Education, a special workshop for the Jeanes Teachers opened at Alabama State College, July 18.

The workshop provides for concentrated emphasis in each of three areas of work: The Jeanes Supervisor's Relations with Others; Supervisors—Their Plans, Techniques, and Activities and Incidental Problems.

Among the topics listed for the general interest sessions are the following: The Supervisor's Relations With Others; The Teacher and Mental Health; The Curriculum and The Jeanes Teacher; Principles and Techniques of Supervision; Duties and Activities of Supervisors; A Self-Study Program for Local Schools; The Sumter County Story of Its Self-Study Program; The Changing Role of Jeanes Work and The Leadership Role of the Jeanes Supervisor.

Listed as resource contributors are J T Brooks, Assistant to the President of the Alabama State College; Dr. John M. McKee head of the Division of Mental Health of the Alabama State Department of Health; A. R. Stickney, Principal of the Calhoun Rural Laboratory School of Alabama State College; John H. Ward, Associate Professor of Education; Dean T. J. Mayberry, Jr., of Alabama State College; Asa B. Nichols, Hale County Jeanes Supervisor; Mrs. Janie Lowe Clayton Teacher in Montgomery City Schools; E. W. Mellown, Superintendent of Education, Sumter County; Mrs Mary E. Preyer, Chilton County Jeanes Teacher; Miss Ruby C Todd, Lamar County Jeanes Teacher.

Dr [illegible] Dixon, Executive Officer of the Southern Education Foundation; Miss Emma K Gray, Limestone County Jeanes Supervisor; Mrs. Leila T. McSpadden, Autauga County Jeanes Teacher; Dr. Charles W. Orr, Director of Instruction, Alabama State A and M College; and Leon Kennedy, Principal of Wenonah High School of Jefferson County. Consultants include Dr J. C. Blair, Dr. Robert C. Hatch, Mrs. Carrie C Robinson—all of the State Department of Education; J T. Brooks, Miss Eula C. Gilbert, Dean T. J. Mayberry and John H Ward—all of the Alabama State College head ed by Dr. H Councill Trenholm, president.

Biology teachers elect Dr. Frazier

Apr-American

BALTIMORE

Maryland's Biology Teachers Association, meeting last week at the University of Maryland unanimously elected Dr. Thomas Frazier of Morgan State college president for the next year.

Dr. Frazier is head of the science education department at Morgan

Baltimore Md.

The association also accepted the invitation to hold its 1955 session at Morgan in connection with the dedication of the new million-dollar science building at Morgan.

Sat. 5-8-54

The nominating committee included Howard B. Owens, Greenbelt, Md. high school; Mrs. Alexina G. Scidman, superintendent of science of Baltimore junior high schools; and Herbert M. Frisby, head of the science department at Douglass High school. The association has 1,000 members.

Dr. D. T. Rolfe And Miss Virginia Few Are Among Speakers At National Alumni Meeting

Daytona Beach, Fla.—(Special)—The National Alumni Association, representing 38 Colleges and Universities, will meet at Bethune-Cookman College, this city, April 23, 24. It is expected that at least 75 delegates from all parts of the country will attend this meeting.

The general theme of the conference will be: "The Alumni Office in Action." Highlights of the two-day session will start on Friday, April 23, at 2:30 p.m. with the College Presidents' Session, having Dr. Geo. W. Gore, Jr., of Florida A. & M. University; Dr. R. W. Puryear, Florida N. & I. College and Dr. Richard V. Moore, Bethune-Cookman College discussing "What We Expect From Our Alumni." At 4:00 p.m., a panel discussion on "Functions and Purpose of Alumni Office" will include the following speakers: Mrs. Annie L. Frazier, Mississippi Industrial College; Mr. A. D. Fobbs, Alcorn College; Mr. Otto McClarrin, Howard University; Miss Lillian Mazique, A. M. & N. College and Dr. D. T. Rolfe, Meharry College.

At 8:00 p.m., on the same evening there will be held the Annual Banquet followed by an informal dance. The banquet speaker will be Dr. Richard V. Moore and the Annual Address of the National Alumni Association will be given by Mr. G. W. Conoly, President.

On Saturday, April 24, at 10:30 a.m., there will be another discussion of "Descriptions of Alumni Offices." The panel will include: Mr. Charles J. Smith, Florida A. & M. University; Mrs. Virginia Few, Fisk University; Mr. Jack Atkins, Winston-Salem Teachers' College; Mrs. Christine Dillard, Virginia State College; Rev. G. E. Cheek, Shaw University; Mr. C. L. Mosley, Prairie View College; Mr. W. Beverly Carter, Lincoln University (Pa.); Mrs. Willease Simpson, State Teachers College, Montgomery, Alabama and Miss Hettie L. Bradford, Wiley College.

The 1952-53 National Alumni Association participating members are: A. M. & N. College, Pine Bluff, Ark.; A. & T. College, Greensboro, N. C.; Alabama State Teachers' College, Montgomery; Albany State College; Alcorn, A. & M.; Allen University; Bethune-Cookman College; Benedict College; Claflin College; Clark College; Elizabeth City Teachers College; Fayetteville Teachers College; Fisk University; Florida A. & M. University; Florida N. & I. College; Howard University; Houston-Tillotson College; Johnson C. Smith University; Knoxville College; Lane College; Lincoln University (Pa.); Lincoln University (Mo.); Meharry Medical College; Mississippi Industrial College; Morgan State College; Morehouse College; Morris College; Morristown College; North Carolina Colleges; Prairie View A. & M. College; Rust College; Savannah State College; St. Augustine's College; Texas Southern University; Virginia State College; Western Baptist Seminary; Wiley College; and Winston-Salem Teachers' College.

14b 1954

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY CHAPLAINS

Chaplains Convene At Howard U.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — More than 150 chaplains and religious leaders representing educational institutions throughout the U. S. are expected to assemble at Howard university.

The occasion will make the seventh annual conference of the National Association of College and University Chaplains.

Dr. Daniel G. Hill, dean of Andrew Rankin Memorial chapel at Howard, will serve as host. The three-day meeting and sessions will be held at the Rankin chapel and on the university campus.

The principal speakers are Rev. Charles C. Noble, Dr. J. Edward Dirks, Dr. Arthur Adams, Dr. Mordecai Johnson and Dr. Carlos H. Baker.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars are: from left, Dean T. E. McKinney, founder of the organization; First Vice President R. A. Carter, Edwin M. Thorpe, assistant secretary: Secretary Frances M. Eagleson; Edward N. Wilson, president: Second Vice President C. D. Batchlor: John J. Hedgeman, secretary, and John P. Whitaker, who was presented a plaque during the annual banquet for his outstanding service of 37 years in education.

69 at Deans, Registrars conference in Pine Bluff

PINE BLUFF, Ark. — Sixty-nine representatives from 19 states closed their annual conference of the National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars here at Arkansas A.M. and N. College, Friday, with a joint session with students, faculty and delegates in Caldwell Hall Auditorium.

Principal speaker for the final session was Dr. Stephen Wright, president of Bluefield College, W. Va.

Earlier in the week, the conference delegates had heard addresses by Arkansas' Governor Francis S. Cherry, and also the former governor of Arkansas, Sidney S. McMath.

Pine Bluff Mayor Visits

Dr. Lawrence A. Davis of the A.M. and N. College welcomed the guests along with the mayor of the city of Pine Bluff, Offie Lite.

At the annual banquet, Thursday night, John J. Hedgemon, registrar at Southern University, served as toastmaster.

Highlight of the banquet was the presentation of a gold plaque to Registrar John P. Whitaker, Atlanta University, for his 37 years of outstanding service to education.

Dean T. E. McKinney, dean at Johnson C. Smith College and founder of the association, made the presentation.

Deans And Registrars Of 19 States Attend Parley

By JOHN HOWARD

PINE BLUFF, Ark.—Sixty-nine representatives from nineteen states closed their annual confernce of the National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars here at Arkansas AM and N College, Friday, with a joint session with students, faculty and delegates in Caldwell Hall Auditorium.

Principal speaker for the final session was Dr. Stephen Wright president of Bluefield College, West Virginia.

EARLIER IN the week, the conference delegates had heard addresses by Arkansas' Governor Francis S. Cherry, and also the former governor of Arkansas, Sidney S. McMath. Dr. Lawrence A. Davis of the AM and N. College welcomed the guests along with Mayor Offie Lite of the city of Pine Bluff.

At the annual banquet, Thursday night, highlight of the session que to Registrar John P. Whitaker, Atlanta University, for his thirty-seven years of outstanding service to education. Dean T. E. McKinney, dean at Johnson C. Smith College and founder of the association, made the presentation.

THE COMMITTEE on Recommendations and Resolutions deplored the action of the regents of the state of Georgia which recently failed to reappoint Dr. Aaron Brown as President of Albany State College. It was felt by the committee that Dr. Brown's dismissal was due to political reprisal.

The committee also registered its objection to actions in other states which deprive teachers and administrators of academic freedom and the right to free speech and assembly.

Virginia State College First Colored Site For Conference on Audio-Visual Education

Petersburg, Va.—Company "D", Fifth Regiment, Honorary Society of Pershing Rifles, Virginia State College, Petersburg, Va., was the first all Negro Company to be invited to attend the National Drill Meet at the University of Illinois.

After travelling continously for 24 hours for a distance of 750 miles, the team was still able to perform with a high degree of proficiency. The proficiency of the Virginia State College Drill Team was exemplified by winning second place honors over twelve of the nation's top drill teams, being bested only by the drill team from the University of Purdue.

Aside from winning second place honors in exhibition drill, Cadet 1st Lt. Russell T. Rivers of Yale, Va., won fourth place honors in the individual drill competition, bringing the number of trophies won by the Virginia State College Drill Team to a total of two.

The team was aided to victory by Captain John M. Jenkins, Advisor to the team, and M-Sgt. Robert L. Cosby, Drill Master and a former member of the famed 7777 Honor Guard in Europe.

Captain Jenkins was invited to be the Drill Master for the individual drill competition.

Audio-visual conference slated at State College

PETERSBURG, Va.—Virginia State college will be host to the first national audio-visual conference ever conducted for the American institutions of higher learning for colored students.

The conference, May 5 to 8, is jointly sponsored by the Conference of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges and Teaching Film Custodians.

Dr. R. P. Daniel, president of Virginia State and president of the Land Grant College Association, will serve as general chairman of the conference.

The conference speakers will nclude: President R. B. Atwood, Kentucky State college; Dr. Rog- Albright, Teaching Film Cus- dians; Dr. Mark A. May, Yale iversity;

President R. E. Clement, Atnta University; Dr. Ambrose aliver, U.S. Office of Education; Dr. Willard Givens, emeritus executive secretary of the NEA, and Dr. S. A. Madden, Virginia State college.

The conference will be one of the dedicatory activities of the Luther Hilton Foster College Center, which will have an enlarged audio-visual facility for teacher training.

Judge Waring To Aid Rural Schools Comn.

NEW YORK — Thousands of school children in the rural areas of the south are receiving some first-class lessons in human relations from a labor-sponsored organization known as the National Committee for Rural Schools, Inc.

Set up for the purpose of providing school - age children who have been denied essentials that more fortunate children take for granted, such as clothes, shoes, pencils, books, toys, records and even baseball bats, the NCRS carries on its work with a big heart and a small budget.

On November 20, at the Hotel Commodore in New York, the NCRS will welcome its new national president, Judge J. Waties Waring, whose courageous decisions during the years he served in the South Carolina courts attracted world-wide attention for their wisdom and acute understanding of the human problems created by segregation and discrimination.

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche will preside at the luncheon in one of his first public appearances since his recent appointment as Under-Secretary to the United Nations. A. Philip Randolph and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will also speak.

With Judge Waring as its new president, the National Committee for Rural Schools, Inc., whose headquarters are at 112 East 19th St. in New York City, hopes to win new supporters so that it will be better able to meet the increased demand for its services brought about by the historic Supreme Court ruling against segregation in the public schools. The NCRS aims to convert the Supreme Court decision from an eloquent legal victory into a solid fact in the daily lives of thousands of colored and white children in the rural areas of the south.

Dignitaries Tribute Waring As Rural School Group Head

NEW YORK—Retired Federal Judge J. Waites Waring, recently named president of the National Committee for Rural Schools, was honored at a luncheon Saturday at the Hotel Commodore at which he delivered an address on the wider significance of the Supreme Court ruling in years to come.

Waring and Friend— Judge J. Waites Waring was guest of honor at a luncheon sponsored by the National Committee for Rural Schools, Hotel Commodore, Saturday (Nov. 20), is greeted in his New York home, 952 Fifth Avenue, by two of the youngest members of the committee. They are, left, Roger Sessions, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Sessions, 219-68 Seventy-fifth Avenue, Bayside, L. I., and Yvonne Smallhorne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gerard Smallhorne, 226 West 138th Street, New York City. They called on the noted jurist for an unsegregated inspection of toys the NCRS ships to schools in depressed areas for Christmas parties.

Judge Waring's legal reasoning several years ago in a minority decision to outlaw school segregation in South Carolina was upheld in the recent high court ruling.

Dr. Ralph Bunche, principal director, UN Department of Trusteeship, delivered the tribute and read the citation to Judge Waring. Other speakers were Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Dr. Roma Gans, professor of education, Columbia University, and A. Philip Randolph, president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. Benjamin F. McLaurin, general chairman, the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, was chairman.

The National Committee for Rural Schools is dedicated to the promotion of adequate unsegregated school facilities extending from kindergarten through high school to which all children may have access.

14b 1954

Alabama Education Unit Holds Annual Session For 40th Time

The Alabama Branch of National Congress of Parents and of approximately 1,900,000 representing the sixty seven counties in the state of Alabama, held it's 40th annual session at the Cobb Avenue High School, in Anniston.

Miss Tessie M. Oliver, who has served this organization as chairman of the home service department,treasurer, chairman of the political action committee and for several years was elected president of this organization for a period of two years.

Besides from being elected president of this organization and the many duties attached to this office, she is James Supervisor of Bullock County, Union Springs. She is also engaged in many social, religious political, civic and proffessional activities. She is the president of the Golden Rule Federated Club of Union Springs, member of the Ten Times One is Ten Club, one of the oldest Federated clubs in the State of Alabama, vice president of the Alabama association for curriculum development, board member of the farm and city enterprise, a newly established corporation, member of the woman's politicay council of Montgomery, member of Alpha Kappa Sorority, district organizer for the Alabama federation of women's clubs, member of Order of Eastern Stars and a member of the historic AME Zion Church of Montgomery.

MISS TESSIE M. OLIVER

She holds the B.S. and M. Ed. degrees from Alabama State College. Montgomery.

Other officers elected for this administration are: Mrs. A. M Norris, vice president Montgomery; Mrs Carolyn Watts, recording secretary, Tuscaloosa; Mrs Gorene Turner, corresponding secretary, Annistion; Mrs Ruby C. Todd, treasurer, Vernon; Mrs Alice Martin, parliamentarian Montgomery; Mrs Carrie Russel historian, Birmingham and Mrs. Mitchell, Chaplain, Elmore County.

14b 1954

Prominent educator at rural conference

Afro-American p. 11

Mrs. Helen Adele Whiting of Atlanta was among the hundreds of educators who attended the recent national conference on rural education in Washington.

Widely known as an author as well as an educator, Mrs. Whiting is a native of Washington and the daughter of the late Dr. William Bishop Johnson. Doctor Johnson was for 35 years pastor of Second Baptist Church in D.C.

Baltimore Md.

LAST WEEK'S conference included workshop sessions at the Mayflower and Statler hotels as well as general sessions in Constitution Hall.

The problems discussed included the shortage of teachers, Federal aid to education, and other issues directly related to rural life.

Dist. 10-23-54

Mrs. Whiting, who has been active in the field of education for 48 years, achieved prominence as a writer through her numerous books for children on art, music and folklore demonstrating the race's contributions to American civilization.

She has also writte a number of educational pieces and many pamphlets on the improvement of rural life in the South.

—o O o—

A GRADUATE of Howard University, which honored her with its Alumni Award in 1946, Mrs. Whiting also studied at New York University, Columbia University and the University of Iowa.

She holds the B.S. and M.A. degrees from Columbia, where she also received diplomas in elementary and rural education and in supervision.

Mrs. Whiting has held teaching posts at Hampton Institute, Tuskegee Institute and Elizabeth City Teachers College. She was also supervisor of schools in Charlotte, N.C.

FOR A NUMBER of years Mrs. Whiting has also been coordinator of student teaching in the Atlanta area. She participated in and wrote up the study which resulted in revision of the elementary and high school curriculum for the entire state of Georgia.

Now serving several institutions as a special consulstant, Mrs. Whiting will spend the coming year as consultant at Allen University, while maintaining her home in Atlanta where she resides with her husband, a retired school teacher.

While in Washington, Mrs. Whiting was the house guest of Mrs. Ruth Caston Mueller of 1824 Belmont Rd., NW., assistant to the director of the women's division of the National Republican Committee.

National Parent-Teacher Congress lauds Supreme Court school ruling

LANGSTON, Okla. — The National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers at its 28th annual convention held recently at Langston University, passed a resolution commending the U.S. Supreme Court for its decision barring segregation in schools.

MRS. CHARLES L. WILLIAMS, Miami, Fla., teacher who heads the organization, said, "We will await with interest the final decree to be handed down."

The group pledged itself to take advantage of the "readiness period," the time prior to an expected deadline on ending separate schools, by helping to make the transition harmonious in all communities.

MRS. WILLIAMS added, "Each state branch will work out its own plan of action. The congress will be prepared to offer counsel and advice to the states when needed."

—o O o—

THE CONVENTION theme "New Responsibilities in a Changing Society," was carried throughout the program in addresses, panels, workshops and a socio-drama. Much time and attention was devoted to the areas of parent education and intergroup relations.

DR. D. CANNON PARTRIDGE, associate professor, Queens College, Flushing, N.Y., is national intergroup relations chairman.

GOV. JOHNSTON MURRAY emphasized discussing matters together, having a spirit of ambition and a desire to do those things which we should do. He urged that we impress upon our children's minds the fact that freedom exists, that it is not what one's name is that counts but what one is doing.

THE GOVERNOR stated in regard to the Supreme Court decision: "Oklahoma stands ready to abide by the law."

THE 1955 convention will be held in Texas.

REGISTERED DELEGATES attending the convention were:

ALABAMA—Mrs. Odessa McKinney, Miss Tessie Oliver, Mrs. Thelma Morris, Jerome Morris, Mrs. M. W. Burroughs, Miss Lillie Dixon and Dr. D. Partridge. ARKANSAS—Mrs. Dovie Anderson, Mrs Mary O. Ray, Mrs. A. M. P. Strong, Mrs. E. M. Roberts, and Mrs. Lovey Miller.

DELAWARE — Marcellus Blackburn, Mrs. Cecie P. Henry, John Taliafero, Ned Brown and J. Stanley James. DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—William I. Lee, Robert F. Brooks, the Rev. J. D Pair, Mrs. Marguerite Seldon, Mrs. M. E. Carpenter and Richard Carpenter.

FLORIDA — Mrs. D. B. Sanders, Mrs. Daisy Murrell, Mrs. Mary L. Washington and Mrs. Mayme E. Williams.

GEORGIA—C. V. Duval Mrs. Ethel Kight, Mrs. J. S. Morgan, Mrs. Clara G. Gay, J. S. Morgan and Mrs. Bertha Everhardt. KANSAS—J. F. Barnes, Mrs. M. Caldwell, Dr. and Mrs. H. T. Geeder Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Watson, Mrs. Milton Moore and Miss Barbara Caldwell.

KENTUCKY—Mrs. O. K. Glass, Mrs. M. J. Hitch, Mrs. Beulah Milan, Mrs. Anna Swann, William Wood, and Mrs. Emma Johnson

MARYLAND Mrs. A. Bransford, Mr. and Mrs. Doswell Brooks and Mrs. Mable C. Johnson. MISSISSIPPI — Mrs. Z. E. Moman, Mrs. Theresa Garrett and Mrs. E. G. Alemore.

—o O o—

MISSOURI—Mrs. Maureen Wilson, Walter Rusan, Mrs John Thomas Mrs. Bert A. Mayberry and Mrs. C. E. Sims. NORTH CAROLINA—Mrs. Ada M. Jarnigan.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The Rev. Z. Townsend, Peter Poinsette. TEXAS—J. W. Thomas, Mrs. Lois Allen, Mrs. L. M Downey, Mrs. D. C. Rayford, Mrs. H. P. Jones and Mrs. Marie Pickens.

TENNESSEE—Mrs. S. M. Draper, Mrs. G. M. Bumpus, Mrs. A. B. Collier, Mrs L. C. Reddick, Mrs. Ola Hutching and Mrs. Vera S. Avant. VIRGINIA—Mrs Thelma Pegram, Mrs. S. M. Burrell and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Carter WEST VIRGINIA—Mrs. A. L. Younger and L. A. Toney.

OKLAHOMA—Mrs. R. I. Gracey, Mrs. Gladys Dobson, Mrs. Maggie Noble, Mrs. Virgie Evans, Mrs. Calvin Glover, Mrs. Helen B. Smith, Mrs M. R. Crosley, Mrs. Almeta Gaines, Mrs. Theresa Wright, Mrs. Cora Dixon A. C. Arterbery, Mrs. C. M. Griffin, Mrs. Essie Beck;

—o O o—

MRS. ANNIE L. WILLIAMS, Mrs. Ruth Dennis, Mrs. G. E. Jones, Mrs. B. M. Elsberry, Mrs. M. D. Johnson, Mrs. Rosa Davis, Mrs. Azalia Starks, Mrs. L. Gandy, Mrs. Edna Jones, Mrs. Marie Tisdale, W. A. Dobson, Mrs. Bernice Summer Mrs. Manilla Hornbeak, Mrs. H. F. V. Wilson, Mrs O. U. Ragsdale;

MRS. J. W. WILEY, Mrs. Viola W. Ford, Mrs. A. C. Prince, Mrs. H. E. Henley, Mrs. Jessie A. Douglas, P. D. Holbert, H. W. Ragsdale, Mrs Novella Sadberry, Mrs. M. E. Burrien Mrs. J. Redmond, Mrs. B. Vance, Leroy Kirk, Miss Louise Stephens;

IRA HALL, Mrs. Bertha Warren, Mrs. B. M. Oliver Mrs. Gladys Jamision, E. E. McQuander, Dr. G. L. Harrison, Mrs. T. P. Scott, Mrs. Sadie M. Gibbs, Mrs Louvenia Brown, Mrs. Zulene Watson Mrs. Johnie Jackson;

MRS. RACHEL DAILEY, Mrs. Clara Jackson, Mrs. Rosa J. Parker, Mrs. Ruby Patterson, Mrs. Earline Marlow, Mrs. Willie F. Roberts, Mrs. Mary Nelson, Mrs. Estinia Baslam, Mrs Annie L. Parker, Mrs. Laura Tubbs, Mrs. Zelma Case and Victoria Hawkins.

Teachers hear Dr. LaBrant

Afro-American
Sat. 11-27-54
p. 18
Baltimore, Md.

INSTITUTE, W.Va.—Dr. Lou LaBrant, president of the National Council for Teachers of English, told teachers attending a one-day conference at West Virginia State College that "children who never hear English which is not grammatically perfect may grow up to be linguistic snobs."

She explained how children in years past arrived in school with little linguistic experience outside their own homes and, consequently, were unfamiliar with the dialect spoken by their immediate families.

—o O o—

NOW, SHE POINTED out, they come to school with a knowledge of a wide variety of dialects through the media of radio and television, which is good and worth while in that it enriches the child's linguistic experience.

Among others appearing on the program were President William J. L. Wallace, Dr. Harrison Ferrell Dr. Lorena E. Kemp and Mrs. Ruth S. Norman.

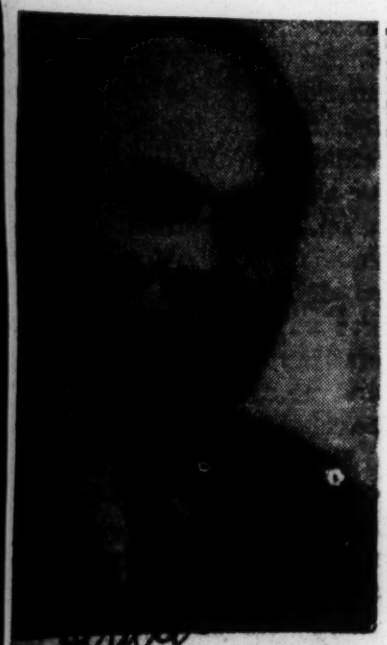
14b 1954

NEW COLLEGE CONFERENCE HEAD—Dean James A. Boyer of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh (second from right), is shown here congratulating his successor as president of the North Carolina Negro College Conference, and President Hardy Liston of Johnson C. Smith University, Charlotte (second from left), following the 29th annual session at North Carolina College, Durham. Looking on are Dean Rudolph Jones, Fayetteville State Teachers College, Fayetteville, assistant secretary (left), and Dean Foster P. Payne, Shaw University, Raleigh (right), treasurer. Officers not shown are Dean A. L. Turner of the NCC Law School, vice president; and Dr. George Davis of the department of education at Elizabeth City State Teahers College, secretary. The 1955 conference will be held at Shaw University, Raleigh.

Name Liston Head Of NCC Conference

DURHAM, N. C. — President Hardy L. Liston of Johnson C. Smith university, Charlotte, was elected president of the North Carolina Negro College Conference here last week.

He succeeds Dean James Boyer of St. Augustine's college, Raleigh. Other officers named for the 1955 session were Dr. A. L. Turner, dean of the N. C. College Law school, vice president; Dr. George E. Davis, Elizabeth City State Teachers college, Elizabeth City, secretary; Dean Rudolph Jones, Fayetteville State Teachers college, assistant secretary; and Dean Foster P. Payne, Shaw university, Raleigh, treasurer.



REV. DANIEL W. WYNN

Wynn Speaks At P.-T. A. Program

Seven local public schools presented a joint program commemorating the founding of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers at the Institute High School on last Sunday.

The Rev. Daniel W. Wynn chaplain of Tuskegee Institute spoke on the present issue in education, and early changes anticipated. Pointing out that transition inevitably brings problems Mr. Wynn gave pracitcal ways of overcoming some of the obstacles. Children will be helped, he said as parents and teachers cease being minority and become citizens of the world.

The Tuskegee Institute High School chapel orchestra, under the direction of G. W. Whitehead was featured on the program. Mrs. I. K. Campfield, prominent civic leader, conducted the traditional candle lighting ceremony. She called for renewed dedication of effort in all activities advancing child welfare.

Mrs. Winifred Davis presided and introduced the P.-T. A. presidents of the sponsoring schools. The participating units were Brownville No. 1, Chambliss Children's House, Harris-Barrett Lewis Adams, New Rising Star Tuskegee Institute High, and Washington Public.

K. B. Young, high school principal, made remarks before the program was concluded with refreshments and silver offering.

Tuskegee Benefit Makes $500 Goal

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., April 14—Due to the close cooperation of parents, teachers and community people, the P-TA of the Chambliss Children's House, Tuskegee Institute, realized well over $500 from their chicken and chitterlings dinner at the school.

Calls for dinners to be taken home kept two teams of workers busy during the entire afternoon.

Wendell Gaillard was overall chairman of the chicken and chitterlings dinner committee. Mrs. L. B. Hastings was chairman of the food and service committee.

Mrs. Hastings commended William E. Brunson, Joseph R. Battle, and W. D. Stafford and their staff of workers for preparation of food and service.

Mrs. Vera Foster, president of that school's P-TA, was on hand during the entire afternoon and served as a waitress, together with Mrs. Laura N. Jones, principal; Mrs. John Yeatman, Mrs. Annie Margaret Gunn, Mrs. Juette Neal, vice president, Mrs. Clara E. Williams, Mrs. Ann Boss, Mrs. Ruth Curtis.

Also, Mrs. Ann Odom, Mrs. Laura Buck, Mrs. Calhoun, Mrs. Marge Williams, Mrs. Ardelle Cooper, Mrs. Bessie Dawson, Mrs. Ware, Mrs. W. Copridge, Mrs. Mamie Ford, Mrs. Addie Taylor.

Mrs. Vera Dockery and Mrs. Harriette Booth assisted Gaillard with the tickets and other financial business.

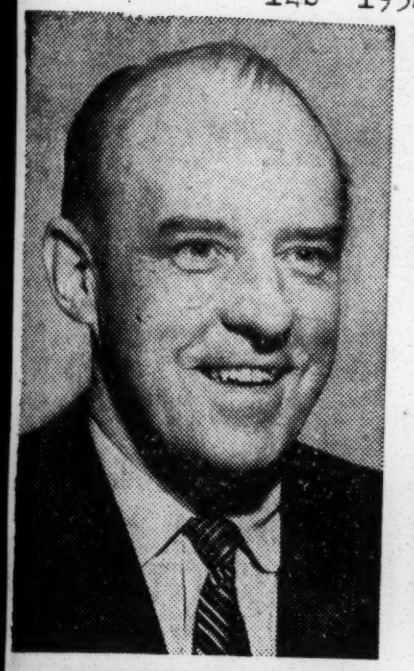
Tessie M. Oliver Heads N. C. P.-T. In Alabama

ANNISTON, Ala.—The Alabama Branch of National Congress of Parents and Teachers, with a membership of approximately 2,000,000 representing the sixty-seven counties in the State of Alabama, held its fortieth annual session in Anniston.

Miss Tessie M. Oliver, who has so capably served this organization as chairman of the home service department, treasurer, chairman of the political action committee and historian for several years, was elected president of this organization for a period of two years.

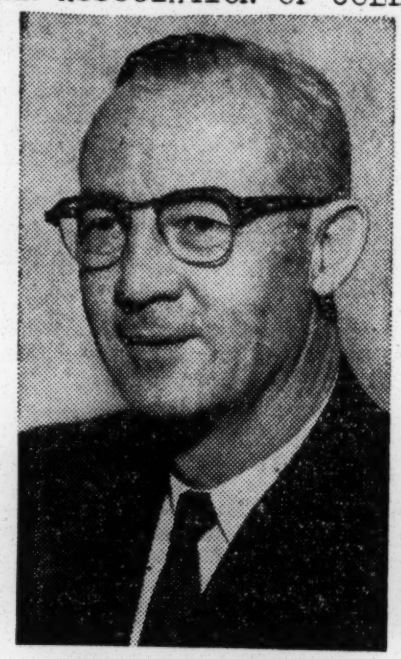
Other officers elected for this administration are: Mrs. A. M. Norris, vice president, Montgomery; Mrs. Carolyn Watts, recording secretary, Tuscaloosa; Mrs. Corene Turner, corresponding secretary, Anniston; Mrs. Ruby C. Todd, treasurer, Vernon; Mrs. Alice Martin, parliamentarian, Montgomery; Mrs. Carrie Russel, historian, Birmingham, and Mrs. Mitchell, chaplain, Elmore County.

14b 1954 SOUTHERN ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS



SPENCER F. McCALLIE, JR.
Heads secondary group

DR. C. V. TROUP
Georgian elected



JAMES L. BUFORD
Vanderbilt man named

Courier-Journal Photos
L. O. TODD
Chosen by research unit

Courier-Journal

Four Groups of Educators Elect Leaders

Four groups of educators yesterday elected leaders at meetings here.

Spencer J. McCallie, Jr., Chattanooga, was elected chairman of the Commission on Secondary Schools of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

His father, the late S. J. McCallie, also held that post at one time and later was association president. McCallie, Jr., is headmaster of the McCallie School, a private school for boys founded by his father and uncle.

McCallie is the first secondary private-school man to head the commission in about 20 years.

S. A. Brasfield, Jackson, Miss., was chosen vice-chairman, and Dr. Raymond G. Wilson, Atlanta, was re-elected secretary.

The Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, a group of Negro educators meeting at Central High School, chose Dr. C. V. Troup as its new president. He is president of Fort Valley, Ga., State College.

Others elected by the Negro group: first vice-president, Dr. C. W. Seay, Lynchburg, Va.; second vice-president, Dr. Hardy Liston, Charlotte, N. C., and secretary-treasurer, Dr. L. S. Cozart, Concord, N. C. Dr. Cozart was chosen for his 22d term. Dr. J. E. Codwell, Houston, was re-elected chairman of the association's Commission on Secondary Schools.

The Southern Association's Commission on Research and Service elected L. O. Todd, superintendent of schools at Meridian, Miss., as chairman. Herbert Wey, University of Miami, was named secretary.

James L. Buford, director of admissions and registrar at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, was elected president of the Southern Association of College and University Registrars.

John Hunter, Louisiana State University, is the new vice-president. Miss Jeannette Boone, Sweet Briar College, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

The Secondary School Commission of the Southern Association voted an honorary life membership to Dr. Frank Jenkins, Atlanta. He is retiring after 19 years as executive secretary of the commission.

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Thurs. 12-2-54

Dr. Carmichael Elected By Dixie School Group

Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, president of the University of Alabama, yesterday was named president-elect of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

He will take office at the 1955 convention in Miami Beach November 28 through December 1.

W. S. Milburn was installed as president of the association yesterday at the final session of the four-day convention at the Brown Hotel. Milburn, principal of Louisville Male and Girls High, was elected last year.

He is the first principal of a public high school to head the association in its 59 years.

Dr. Leo Chamberlain, vice-president of the University of Kentucky, and Dr. N. C. Turpen, superintendent of Fayette County schools, Lexington, were named to the executive committee.

President-elect Carmichael is a first cousin of Louisville's school superintendent, Omer Carmichael. Oliver Carmichael is a former chancellor of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, and is an ex-president of the Carnegie Foundation for The Advancement of Teaching.

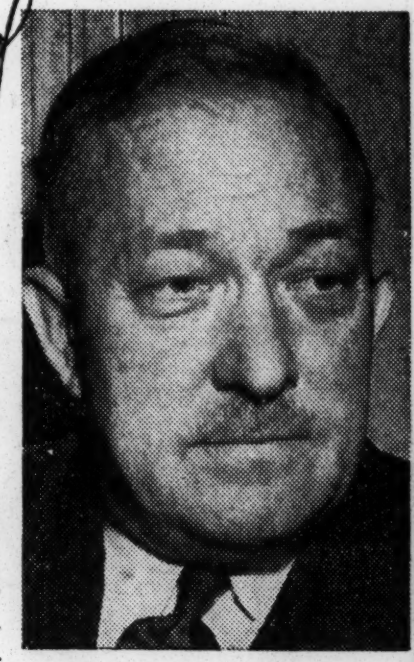
Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Thurs. 12-2-54

Students On Hand

A sort of "cheering section" from Male and Girls High was on hand yesterday to see Milburn become president of the association.

The group included Bob Metry, 16, of 1215 Wolfe, editor-in-chief, and Alfred Towell, 17, of 114 E. Jefferson, associate editor of The Brook 'n' Breck, school paper; Mrs. Mary Hodge Cox, faculty adviser of the paper, and Armand Ostroff, 18, of 219 E. Oak, Male and Girls High graduate.

The event was properly recorded by the two editors and Ostroff took a picture of Milburn being installed. Ostroff is a photographer for the University of Louisville student newspaper. He is a freshman at the U. of L.



DR. O. C. CARMICHAEL

Educators Urged Not To 'Duck' Segregation

'Silent' Resolution Is Passed Here After Protest

By JEAN HOWERTON

The Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools was cautioned yesterday against dodging the segregation issue.

The advice came from the Rev. Andrew G. Smith, a Catholic priest who is president of non-segregated Spring Hill College in Mobile.

He asked for a resolution on segregation, but none was proposed.

Priest Protests

At the end of a report by the chairman of the resolutions committee, which did not mention segregation, Father Smith hopped to his feet and said:

"We should not turn away from one of the problems that is very acute in 1954. I would like to know the attitude of this organization toward seeing what we can do to give equal education to all our citizens.

"We're dodging . . . if we do not face the problem before us."

Father Smith, who said he was not trying to cause "strife," then asked the resolutions chairman, F. Edward Lund, to propose such a resolution.

Lund, president of Alabama College at Montevallo, said the resolutions committee felt that the association had faced the problem in its studies of the segregation question and in a talk heard by the association yesterday morning.

"We felt there was nothing we could do by taking action," Lund said.

Resolutions Approved

As soon as Lund sat down, the association president, Dr. Carlyle Chamberlain, Raleigh, called for a vote on the routine resolutions proposed. They were approved, and Chamberlain moved on to other business.

Father Smith raised his hand once as if to protest, then just smiled and kept quiet. There was mumbling in the audience.

After the meeting he told a reporter his school has about 1,000 students and, "It's not segregated, either."

He said Negroes were first admitted to night classes off campus two years ago, and to classes on campus this year. He estimated that about 20 or 25 Negroes are enrolled.

The morning talk to which Lund referred was made by J. Curtis Dixon, Atlanta, vice-president and executive director of the Southern Education Foundation.

He described the May 17 Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools as "nothing more or less than one more milestone in the long road the Negro has traveled since he was brought to this continent in chains."

Said Dixon: "Segregation has actually been on its way out for a long time and has been breaking down at the edges for more than a generation. . . . In two great wars . . . we, along with other free peoples, have preached the right of men everywhere to be free and equal.

"We have encouraged long oppressed peoples to rise, and that which is happening in our own country is nothing more or less than the formula we prepared and presented to people in other sections of the world."

Courier-Journal Photo

YOUNG NEWSMEN from Louisville Male and Girls High School interview their principal, W. S. Milburn, before his installation as president of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Bob Metry, left, 1215 Wolfe, is editor, and Alfred Towell, right, 114 E. Jefferson, is associate editor of The Brook 'n' Breck, the school's paper.

Revolution Unlikely

Dixon said that contrary to many opinions, he does not think the decision will produce revolution. It will simply accelerate processes which have been at work, he said.

"We must realize that the old concept of master-servant in the relationship of Negro and white in the South is now gone and will never return again," Dixon said.

He said the court's decision "is the beginning of a tremendous job for all of us—the job of integration—a job which requires patience, tact, and understanding."

Financial and practical problems such as what to do with two sets of schools and two sets of teachers must be faced, Dixon said.

'No Permanent Delay'

"It would seem logical for us to recognize . . . that there can be no permanent forestalling of integration," Dixon said.

He added he believes that various plans proposed for circumventing the decision would not be legal. These include proposals to transfer all education to a private-school basis, and to gerrymander school districts so as to make them all white or all Negro.

Dixon urged a "positive, cooperative study to bridge the gap (in attitudes) between people. The decisions will be made by Negroes and whites sitting around a table in Podunk and working this thing out," he said.

Another speaker at the final meeting of the association was Arthur L. Benson, director of teacher examinations at the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N. J.

He predicted that training of teachers would probably be extended over a longer period in college.

2 Schools Are Dropped

At its annual business session, the association approved dropping two Kentucky high schools from its accreditation list. They are the Owen County High School, Owenton, which does not pay its teachers the $2,000 minimum salary recommended by the association, and Butler High School, Princeton, which has been consolidated with another school.

Kentucky schools given accreditation were London High, Bourbon County Vocational High in Paris, and Bell County High in Pineville.

The association elected to membership Sacred Heart Junior College, Belmont, N. C.; Navarro Junior College, Corsicana, Tex., and Florida Christian Junior College, Tampa.

Other Colleges Elected

It also elected David Lipscomb College, Nashville; McNeese State College, Lake Charles, La.; the University of Houston, Tex.; Lambuth College, Jackson, Tenn., and the University of Tt. Thomas, Houston, Tex.

Chaflin College, Orangeburg, S. C., was removed from probation and restored to full recognition. Miles College, Birmingham, was continued on probation.

The association's commission on colleges and universities expressed "grave concern" over the increase in regulatory measures being imposed by State governments in the South on institutions of higher learning. These include minimum student-teacher ratios and minimum class sizes which have already resulted in the "deterioration of educational standards."

M. C. Huntley, dean of Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, was re-elected chairman of the college and university commission, and Dr. Leo Chamberlain, vice-president of the University of Kentucky, was re-elected secretary.

Body formed to aid desegregated areas

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (NNPA)— P. B. Young Sr., Norfolk editor and publisher, and Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, are two of 11 members of the governing board of the Southern Education Reporting Association, an impartial fact-finding service.

Establishment of the service to implement newspaper coverage of educational developments was announced Sunday by Virginius Dabney, editor of a Richmond (Va.) daily, who will serve as board chairman.

"The aim of the non - profit agency," Mr. Dabney said, "will be to provide public school administrators and other community leaders with objective information on community problems and developments which arise in the wake of the recent Supreme Court decision against racial segregation in the public schools."

'Entering Difficult Period'

"The South is entering a very difficult period," he added. "School administrators and trustees — state, county and local— in each of the 17 states affected will stand to benefit by the experience of school administrators in the other 16 states.

"It will be the aim of the Southern Education Reporting Service to assist in filling the need for such information and providing it on a strictly facual, non-partisan basis.

Other members of the board are:

T. R. Waring, Charleston, S.C., vice chairman; Frank Ahlgren, Memphis, Tenn.; Coleman Harwell, and Charles Moss, both of Nashville, Tenn.; Chancellor Harvie Branscomb of Vanderbilt University;

H. I. Willett On Board

President Henry Hill of the George Peabody College for Teachers; Dr. Gordon Blackwell, director of the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina, and Dr. Henry I. Willett, superintendent of schools, Richmond, Va.

Executive director of the service will be C. A. McKnight, Charlotte, N.C., editor, who has taken a year's leave of absence to direct the project. Headquarters will open in Nashville about July 1.

A team of experienced southern newspaper reporters, working under Mr. McKnight's direction, will gather information for the service and send periodic reports to the headquarters. The reports will be supplemented by special factual studies and other available materials of interest.

OPINION

Non partisan?

With funds obtained from the Ford Foundation, a Southern Education Reporting Service has been set up to tell the "story of desegregation."

Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, an able journalist, has been named chairman of an 11-member board, which has two colored members.

Says Mr. Dabney, his service "is not to hasten or slow the coming evolution, but to give to all the benefit of the experience of each.

"Information provided will be on a strictly factual, non partisan basis."

A "non partisan" news service can be used two ways.

1. To give widest publicity to ways and means of delaying and nullifying the Supreme Court's decision; or

2. To give widest publicity to the most successful methods of implementing the decision.

We have our suspicions as to how some subscribers will use this "non partisan" service.

At first glance it is difficult to believe that this country, where there are more and better newspapers than any place in the world, still needs a Southern educational reporting service.

The Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser is gleeful over the appointment of Mr. Dabney to head this "non partisan" job.

The Advertiser reminds us that Dabney "believes in segregation" and has condemned the Supreme Court's decision.

Whatever our views on the subject, let's concede the news service starts out with a chairman who is definitely partisan.

John Davis Elected Top Executive

BATON ROUGE, La. — John Davis, instructor of Speech and Advisor for Forensic Activities at Southern University, was elected Executive Secretary of the Southern Intercollegiate Forensic Conference at a special business meeting of the organization which was held last week at Florida A. & M. University Tallahassee.

The Southern University instructor stated that the Spring Tournament which will feature all forensic activities will be held in March at Texas Southern University at Houston.

Discussion and Debate topics for the tournament will be announced at a later date.

14b 1954

TEXAS INTERCOLLEGIATE STUDENT ASSOCIATION

Students approve end of segregated schools

DALLAS, Texas (ANP) —The Texas Intercollegiate Student Association, an organization of 36 Texas universities and colleges, adopted a resolution calling for complete elimination of segregation in institutions of higher learning in Texas, last week.

The resolution stated in part: "An integrated school system will provide a wholesome atmosphere for the exchange of ideas from the cultures of the various racial and ethical groups."

14b 1954

THE CONFERENCE OF PRESIDENTS OF LAND GRANT COLLEGES

Topics Will Include Desegregation, Home Economics Matters

Journal & Guide
Oct. 10-16-34

WASHINGTON, — The conference of presidents of Negro land grant colleges will hold its 32nd annual session October 19-21, at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare here in the nation's capitol.

The topic for discussion will deal with home economics education, including employment for home economic majors, and criteria for evaluating home economic departments. Representatives from the home economics departments of land grant colleges will attend the conference. Issues relating to to Negro land grant colleges, desegregation with reference will be discussed, as well as ROTC affairs and special projects.

Norfolk Va.

AMONG HIGHLIGHTS of the conference will be an address by Dr. S. M. Brownell, U. S. commissioner of education, during the Oct. 20 afternoon session; and a dinner meeting sponsored by Dr. Mordecai W. Johson, president of Howard University, and his administrative staff, also on October 20.

P. 13

A special address will be delivered during the dinne rmeeting by Dr. Roger Albright, director of educational services motion picture Association of America. Other specialists from various governmental departments and colleges will work in co-operation with conference members and participate in the discussions.

KEY OFFICERS OF the conference are Dr. Robert P. Daniel, Virginia State College at Petersburg, president; Dr. B. C. Turner, South Carolina State College, Orangeburg, vice-president; Dr. R. B. Atwood, Kentucky State College, Frankfort, Dr. F. G. Clark, Southern University, Baton Rouge, treasurer; and Dr. C. V. Troup, Fort Valley State College, Georgia, assistant secretary. Each is president of his respective institution.

Legislation creating land grant colleges was first enacted in 1862 through the Morrill Act. This act provided public lands for colleges in order to promote agriculture and the mechanic arts. Successive acts have provided for the further development of co-operative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land grant colleges.

Journal & Guide

The conference embraces seventeen land grant colleges and seven associate institutions. Thy are located in Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas, Virginis, Tennessee, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia.

Norfolk Va.

School presidents elect new officers

Afro American P. 9
Baltimore Md.

14b

WASHINGTON, (NNPA)—The thirty-second annual session of the Conference of Land-Grant College Presidents came to an end, Thursday, with the election of officers.

B. C. Turner, president of South Carolina State was elected president of the group to succeed Robert P. Daniel, president of Virginia State College.

G. W. Gore, president of Florida A. and M. College was elected vice president to succeed Dr. Turner.

Sat. 10-30-34

R. B. ATWOOD, president of Kentucky State College, C. V. Troup, president of Fort Valley (Ga.) State College, and Felton G. Clark, president of Southern University were re-elected secretary, assistant secretary, and treasurer, respectively.

New members of the executive committee are Dr. Daniel and L. A. Davis, president of Arkansas State. Dr. Daniel replaced J. F. Drake, president of Alabama State College, and Dr. Davis replaced Dr. Gore.

In addition to officers of the conference, who are ex-officio members of the executive committee, other members of the executive committee are G. L. Harrison, president of Langston University; Rufus E. Clement president of Atlanta University; S. D. Scruggs, president of Lincoln University (Mo), and E. B. Evans, president of Prairie View (Tex.) A. and M. College.

The terms of Dr. Harrison, Dr. Clement and Dr. Scruggs do not expire until next year. Dr. Evans was re-elected for a two-year term.

— o O o —

ONE OF the resolutions adopted by the conference pledged support to the principle of inviting institutions of higher education to share in the international programs designed to furnish "technical aid, knowledge and assistance" to underdeveloped countries.

In another resolution, the conference took "cognizance" of efforts to provide educational opportunities to all citizens and the "continuing concern" of the United States Supreme Court "to clarify the concept of the Constitution" to implement this principle.

Translated into common parlance, the latter resolution means simply that the presidents of colored land-grand colleges, the majority of which are located in states opposed to integration in public education, approved the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in education.

EDUCATORS MEET — Conference President Robert P. Daniel (left) meets with Samuel M. Brownell, U.S. Commissioner of Education, at 32nd annual session of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges in Washington.

Land Grant College heads skirt issue

Afro American P. 22
Baltimore, Md.

Await high court decree before mixing students

"There are no white students at A.M. and N. None has applied. The attitude of the state is to abide by the Supreme Court decision. Colored Land Grant Colleges can still continue to exist by rendering a specialized service to all students, without duplication of already existing facilities."

R. B. Atwood, president, Kentucky State College at Frankfort, Ky.:

"I have one white student and one white faculty member.

"The Governor has already announced the state will abide by the Supreme Court decision and has appointed a Committee on Desegregation.

"The South is very low in schools. We need all institutions. The name and function may be changed. If you are not offering a very good program you may be eliminated. Nobody wants to exterminate themselves but we will do it if that's what is needed."

F. G. CLARK, president, Southern University, New Orleans, La.:

"Louisiana is resisting desegregation as far as it is legal. There are no white students or faculty members at Southern. It is against the law."

G. L. HARRISON, president, Oklahoma, Langston University at Langston:

"The Oklahoma Board of Regents has opened all schools in the state regardless of race. We don't have any forms for race at Langston so I don't know if we have any white students or not."

R. E. CLEMENT, president, Atlanta U., (Georgia):

"Nothing has been done in Georgia since the Supreme Court decision. We have always had white students and faculty members at Atlanta U. We don't have any white students now.

"Some colored schools will have to justify their existence after integration. There are about five I can name now that have no reason for existence but I won't."

R. O'HARA LANIER, president, Texas Southern University (Houston):

"I rather not make any statement on the situation in Texas. There has been some conflict. I would rather have statements come from state officials. Texas is going to abide by Supreme Court decision.

"I think all good schools will continue to exist after desegregation and we are striving to make Texas Southern a good school."

LUTHER H. FOSTER JR. president, Tuskegee Institute (Alabama):

"Alabama hasn't done anything about desegregation since the Supreme Court decision. We don't have any white students or faculty members at Tuskegee. There is no law against it but we pick our students and faculty on the basis of what we have to offer.

"Tuskegee is over 75 years. You don't get rid of a school that old with a $10,000,000 plant over night. It will continue to exist for a long time."

WASHINGTON

Ten college presidents out of those visiting D.C. for the 32nd annual Land Grant College conference, expressed a "wait and see" attitude when asked about integrating their student bodies, Tuesday.

Sat. 10-30-34

The college officials said they "would wait and see what the Supreme Court decree brings," before mixing their colleges.

President W. J. Wallace of West Virginia State College, who for the first time this fall has 185 white students out of a total of 983, said: "Things are going along smoothly."

College presidents queried by the AFRO as to whether or not they have or anticipate having any white students replied as follows:

—o O o—

F. D. BLUFORD, A and T College:

"I have not enrolled any white students at the school. It is too early at this time to say whether or not I anticipate mixing the school."

B. C. Turner, South Carolina State College: "No, I have no white students enrolled."

He also stated it was too early, and he would await the Supreme Court decree.

—o O o—

J. F. DRAKE, Alabama A. and M. "I have not enrolled any white students."

Lawrence A. Davis, Agricultural Mechanical and Normal, of Arkansas:

"My teachers have had several inquiries from white students, and I hope in at least a year, following the Supreme Court decree, the school will be mixed."

C. V. Troup, Fort Valley State College Georgia:

"I may as well speak frankly. Even in light of the Supreme Court ruling, I believe my state will be one of the last to submit."

He said he had received no applications from white students.

—o O o—

A. V. BOSWELL, vice president of Tennessee A. and I. State University: "I have not enrolled any white students yet. We are governed by the State Board of Education, and pressure was brought last year when two white students who wanted to enter the school, brought a test case before the Board which they lost."

W. K. Payne, Savannah State College, Savannah Ga.: "We have no white students enrolled."

—o O o—

G. L. HARRISON, Langston University, Langston, Okla: "No whites enrolled."

Felton Clark, Southern University, Baton Rouge: "None."

Rufus Clement, Atlanta University: "None."

LAWRENCE A. DAVIS, president, Arkansas A.M. and N. College:

B. C. Turner Is Land Grant College Head

WASHINGTON, — (NNPA) — The 32nd annual session of the Conference of Land-Grant College Presidents came to an end mid-day Thursday with the election of officers.

President B. C. Turner of South Carolina State was elected president of the group to succeed President Robert P. Daniel of Virginia State college, and President G. W. Gore of Florida A. and M. college was elected vice-president to succeed Dr. Turner.

President R. B. Atwood of Kentucky State college, President C. V. Troup of Fort Valley (Georgia) State college and President Felton G. Clark of Southern university were re-elected secretary, assistant secretary, and treasurer, respectively.

New members of the executive committee are Dr. Daniel and President L. A. Davis of Arkansas State. Dr. Daniel replaced President J. F. Drake of Alabama State college and Dr. Davis replaced Dr. Gore.

In addition to officers of the conference, who are ex-officio members of the executive committee, other members of the executive committee are President G. L. Harrison of Langston university, President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta university, President S. D. Scruggs of Lincoln university (Missouri), and President E. B. Evans of Prairie View (Texas) A. and M. college. The terms of Dr. Harrison, Dr. Clement and Dr. Scruggs do not expire until next year. Dr. Evans was re-elected for a two-year term.

One of the resolutions adopted by the conference pledged support to the principle of inviting institutions of higher education to share in the international programs designed to furnish "technical aid, knowledge and assistance" to underdeveloped countries.

In another resolution the conference took "cognizance" of efforts to provide educational opportunities to all citizens and the "continuing concern" of the United States Supreme court "to clarify the concept of the Constitution" to implement this principle.

Translated into common parlance, the latter resolution means simply that the presidents of colored land-grant colleges, located in states the majority of which are opposed to integration in public education, approved the Supreme court decision outlawing segregation in education and the restoring of five school segregation cases to the docket for further argument on how and when the court shall put its decision into effect.

College heads consider Afro-American P.I. bid to join white group

BALTIMORE

Although no official word had reached B. T. Turner, president of the colored Association of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges, Thursday, that the white comparable association had invited APLGC's members to become members of the larger organization, Mr. Turner told the AFRO "we welcome the membership."

Mr. Turner pointed out that his executive committee would have to meet to consider the invitation. One of the things to be considered would be whether there would be just one conference or whether there would continue to be two, he said. He added that acceptance of the invitation "would probably result in some modification" of the present conference's program.

The invitation had been extended Wednesday by Dr. Frederick L. Hove, president of the white Association of Land Grant Colleges, which was holding its national convention in Wasington.

* * *

MR. TURNER revealed that in November, 1953, at Columbus, Ohio, a committee from the white association conferred with his executive committee and discussed the various factors that would be involved in the merging of the membership.

Pointing out that his conference is a conference of presidents of land grant colleges rather than a conference of the colleges themselves, he added:

* * *

"I THINK that the individual institutions which are represented in the conference of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges will be pleased to have membership in the Association of Land Grant Colleges.

"Some of the aspects of the relationship will have to be worked out," Mr. Turner continued, "but we feel that can be done quite amicably and there will be no difficulty about it."

14b 1954

COLLEGE FORUM—Negroes

The 1953 United Negro College Forum will be held in three sessions this year and will be devoted to discussions of new horizons in health, education and human relations. The meetings will be held Oct. 27, Nov. 5 and Nov. 18 at the Cosmopolitan Club, 129 East Sixty-fifth Street. Emphasis will be placed on current opportunities and problems facing Negroes in various fields today. The forum sponsors are the New York City clubs of eleven leading Eastern women's colleges, the American Association of University Women (New York Branch) and the United Negro College Fund.

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FORUM

President Names L. D. Milton To White House Education Conference

WASHINGTON, D. C. ——(SNS) —President Eisenhower Thursday inappointing Lorimer D. Milton of Atlanta to the Committee for the White House Conference on Education slapped directly at Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia.

The question of the participation of colored persons in the White House Conference on Education was raised when Dr. Samuel M. Brownell, United States Commissioner of Education, addressed the Conference of Land-Grant College Presidents in October.

Mr. Brownell was reminded by Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, and other college presidents that in 1951 Gov. Talmadge had refused to name any colored persons as delegates from Georgia to a White House Conference on Youth and President Truman had to intervene to have colored persons from Georgia attend the conference.

Dr. Brownell the nassured the land-grant college presidents that colored educators and laymen would participate in the White House Conference on Education to be held in 1955. The first move toward that end has been the appointment of Mr. Milton as one of the 33 persons who comprise the full committee.

The conference will "consider and report to the President on significant and pressing problems in the field of education." In letters to the governors of all states and territories, President Eisenhower has stressed that the primary responsibility for meeting these problems lie with the states and local communities" and that "the Federal Government should strengthen and not interfere with state administration of education."

Each state will hold its own conference on education prior to the White House conference to discuss its own problems, make appropriate recommendations, and name delegates to the White House conference.

Congress appropriated $700,000 to assist the states in holding these conferences. The share allotted to Georgia is $14,456.

14b 1954

Land Grant College Heads Invited To White House Confab

WASHINGTON. — (ANP — Samuel M. Brownell U. S. Commission of Education, assured the Land Grant college presidents last week that their group would have a greater participating role in the White House conference on education to be held in November, 1955.

The statement was made at the 32nd annual session of the conference of college presidents recently held at the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The education commissioner recognized the fact that such conferences, as the one called by the White House, have in the past been shy of inviting direct representation from the Negro Land Grant college group.

He stressed the necessity of having the Negro Land Grant institutions represented in 1955, because he was sure that the leadership of these colleges could contribute much information of importance for improving community understanding of desegregation.

Theme of the three-day conference was devoted to "Home Economics Education," and was attended for the first time by heads of departments of home economics in each of the member institutions.

Discussions stressed the importance of home economics in relation to the individual, the family, community and world. The group developed a program for determining the home economics employment potential, improving home economics departments within land grant schoo's, and making the public aware of the opportunities afforded the home economics graduate through teaching, business, research, administration and service abroad.

Six resolutions were adopted at the close of the conference one of which "resolved that the conference take cognizance of current efforts to provide educational opportunities to all citizens of our democracy and the continued concern of the Supreme court to clarify the concept of the Constitution as related to this issue."

The presidents also commended efforts of citizens of various communities toward the implementation of this principle.

In discussions of the progress and problems of desegregation, it was brought out that in five southern states, no action has been taken toward the integration of white and Negro students in public schools and colleges. On the other haind several states are abiding by the Supreme court decision, to the extent that both students and faculty members are being integrated.

Dr. B. C. Turner, South Carolina State college, was elected president of the conference, to succeed Dr. Robert P. Daniel, Virginia State college. Dr. G. W. Gore, Florida A. and M. State university, was elected vice-president.

Drs. R. B. Atwood, Kentucky State college, secretary; C. V. Troup, Georgia, Fort Valley State college assistant secretary, and Dr. F. G. Clark, Louisana Southern university, treasurer were re-elected to their previous posts.

The executive committee includes Drs. F. D. Bluford, North Carolina A. and T. college, chairman; G. L. Harrison, Langston university; R. E. Clement, Atlanta university; S. D. Scruggs, Lincoln (Mo.) university; R. P. Daniel, Virginia State college; E. B. Evans, Prairie View A. and M. college; Lawrence A. Davis, Arkansas A. M. and N. college and C. V. Troup Fort Valley State college.

Educators To Have Greater Role In White House Confab

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The 32nd annual session of the Conference of Presidents of Negro Land Grant Colleges, meeting in Washington last week, received a solemn promise from U. S. Commissioner of Education Samuel M. Brownell that their group would have a greater participating role in the White House conference on education to be held in November, 1955.

It appears that in the past, such conferences, as called by the White House, have been shy of direct representation from the Negro land grant college group. Dr. Brownell stressed the fact that the institutions would be represented in 1955, while at the same time he told the leading educators from several states that their leadership might likely prove an important factor in improving community understanding of desegregation.

The commissioner was one of several authorities on education who addressed the land grant college presidents during their three-day conference, held at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The theme of the meeting was devoted to "Home Economics Education," and saw in attendance the heads of departments of home economics from each of the member institutions. Representatives from government, private industry and educational institutions contributed to the conference theme.

Discussions stressed the importance of home economics in relation to the individual, the family, community, and world. They developed a program for determining the home economics employment potential, improving home economics departments within the land grant schools, and making the public aware of the opportunities afforded the home economics graduate through teaching, business, research, administration, and service abroad

The conference ended with the adoption of six resolutions, one of which stated: "We resolve that the conference take cognizance of the current efforts to provide educational opportunities to all citizens of our democracy and the continued concern of the Supreme Court to clarify the concept of the Constitution as related to this issue. We further commend the efforts of the citizens of the various communities toward the implementation of this principle."

In discussions of the progress and problems of desegregation, it was brought out that in five southern states, no action has been taken toward the integration of white and Negro students in the public schools and colleges. On the other hand, several states are abiding by the Supreme Court decision to the extent that both students and faculty members in public schools and colleges are being integrated.

Dr. B. C. Turner of South Carolina State College was elected president of the conference to succeed Dr. Robert P. Daniel of Virginia State College. Dr. G. W. Gore, Florida A. and M. State University was elected vice-president. Dr. R. B. Atwood, Kentucky State College, secretary; Dr. C. V. Troup, Georgia, Fort Valley State College, assistant secretary, and Dr. F. G. Clark, Louisiana Southern University, treasurer, were reelected to their previous posts

The Executive Committee consists of Dr. F. D. Bluford, North Carolina A. and T. College, chairman, Dr. G. L. Harrison, Langston University, Dr. R. E. Clement, Atlanta University, Dr. S. D. Scruggs, Lincoln University; of Missouri, Dr. R. P. Daniel, Virginia State College; Dr. E. B. Evans, Prairie View A. and M. College; Dr. Lawrence A. Davis, Arkansas A. M. and N. College; and Dr. C. V. Troup, Georgia Fort Valley State College.

Land-Grant College Heads Invited To White House Meet

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 11-3-54

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Samuel M. Brownell, U. S. Commission of education, assured the Land Grant college presidents last week that their group would have a greater participating role in the White House conference on education to be held in November, 1955.

The statement was made at the 32nd annual session of the conference of college presidents recently held at the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The education commissioner recognized the fact that such conferences, as the one called by the White House have in the past been shy of inviting direct representation from the Negro Land Grant college group.

He stressed the necessity of having the Negro Land Grant institutions represented in 1955, because he was sure that the leadership of these colleges could contribute much information of importance for improving community understanding of desegregation.

Theme of the three-day conference was devoted to "Home Economics Education" and was attended for the first time by heads of departments of home economics in each of the member institutions.

Discussions stressed the importance of home economics in relation to the individual, the family community and world. The group developed a program for determining the home economics employment potential, improving home economics departments within land grant schools, and making the public aware of the opportunities afforded the home economics graduate through teaching, business, research, administration and service abroad.

Six resolutions were adopted at the close of the conference, one of which "resolved that the conference take cognizance of current efforts to provide educational opportunities to all citizens of our democracy and the continued concern of the Supreme Court to clarify the concept of the Constitution as related to this issue."

The presidents also commended efforts of citizens of various communities toward the implementation of this principle.

In discussions of the progress and problems of desegregation, it was brought out that in five Southern states, no action has been taken toward the integration of Negro and white students in public schools and colleges. On the other hand, several states are abiding by the Supreme Court decision, to the extent that both students and faculty members are being integrated.

Daily World

Dr. B. C. Turner, South Carolina State College, was elected president of the conference, to succeed Dr. Robert P. Daniel, Virginia State College. Dr. G. W. Gore, Florida A and M State University, was elected vice-president.

Drs. R. B. Atwood, Kentucky State College, secretary; C. V. Troup, Georgia, Fort Valley State College, assistant secretary; and Dr. F. G. Clark, Louisiana Southern University, treasurer, were re-elected to their previous posts.

The executive committee includes Drs. F. D. Bluford, North Carolina A. and T. College, chairman; G. L. Harrison, Langston University; R. E. Clement, Atlanta University; S. D. Scruggs, Lincoln (Mo.) University; R. P. Daniel, Virginia State College; E. B. Evans, Prairie View A. and M. College; Lawrence A. Davis, Arkansas AM and N College; and C. V. Troup, Fort Valley State College.

Mrs. Hobby Names Director For White House Conference

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

P-1

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Oveta Culp Hobby announced this week the selection of Clint Pace to serve as Director of the White House Conference on Education to be held in Washington, D. C., next year.

Fri. 10-22-54

Nominated for the position by Neil H. McElroy, recently appointed as Chairman of the White House Conference by President Eisenhower, Mr. Pace was sworn in by Parke M. Banta, General Counsel for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The oath was taken in the office of Samuel M. Brownell. Commissioner of Education. Those in attendance for the ceremony included Under Secretary Nelson A. Rockefeller, other officials of the Department and of the Office of Education, and representatives of national organizations in education.

REGIONAL OFFICE

Mr. Pace, formerly on the staff of the Dallas (Texas) "Morning News", has been serving as Director of the Southwest Regional Office for the National Citizens Commission for The Public Schools since 1951. With headquarters in Dallas, this region included the States of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Arkansas, and Louisiana. The National Citizens Commission for The Public Schools encourages citizen interest and action at the local level for the solution of school problems and the improvement of education.

In his new position Mr. Pace will plan and carry out the program of the White House Conference on Education which President Eisenhower called for in his State of the Union Message. The President serves as honorary chairman of the White House Conference Committee.

STATE LEVEL

Commissioner Bronwell today said that much of the preliminary planning for the National White House Conference scheduled for 1955 will tie in with plans for forty-eight State Conferences on Education as authorized by the Congress to study at the State level the problems and progress of American education. Both Secretary Hobby and Commissioner Brownell expressed deep satisfaction in the fact that the new Director for the White House Conference on Education has had broad experience in the local community and State educational problems through his work with programs of the National Citizens Commission.

Mr. Pace has entered upon his new duties and will move his wife and three sons from Dallas to Washington, D. C., in the near future. In Dallas, Mr. and Mrs. Pace have been active in local school and church work. Mrs. Pace is an official of the Parents-Teachers Association at the Lelia P. Cowart School, where two of the Pace children are enrolled. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pace attended the University of Texas. Mr. Pace is a native of Mangum, Oklahoma, and attended schools there and in Vernon, Texas.

WHITE HOUSE SETS TALKS ON SCHOOLS

1955 Conference to Stress Needs of Pupils on High and Grade Levels

P. 23 C

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—A four-day White House Conference on Education was scheduled today to open Nov. 28, 1955.

A program committee decided that the needs of grade and high schools presented the most pressing educational problem.

Neil H. McElroy, chairman of the President's Committee on the Conference, announced its scope after a meeting. He said details would be worked out with the help of an advisory committee of education leaders to be named. The advisers' group was authorized by the Presidential committee.

Mr. McElroy, who has been president of the Proctor & Gamble Company of Cincinnati since 1948, is 49 years old. He is a native of Berea, Ohio, and has been active in educational and civic affairs for several years.

While finding "immediate" problems in elementary and secondary schools, the McElroy committee said the need must be considered in relation to education from early childhood through adult life.

National Interest Stressed

The committee said that education, in its broad interpretation, included the "home, schools, church and many other institutions, public and private."

A policy statement voted today declared a belief "in the traditional concept of state and local control of education while recognizing the national interest in education." It said that the committee would assist "when invited" in planning conferences in the states and territories.

Headquarters have been set up in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare with Clint Pace, a former Dallas, Tex., newspaper, as director. Mr. Pace has served as Southwest director of the National Citizens Committee for the Public Schools, of which Mr. McElroy is a member.

The last Congress voted $700,000 to be apportioned among the states, with $5,000 as the minimum, for state conferences in the coming year. The findings of these will be preserved to the National Conference.

Five Aims Outlined

The committee in charge of the nation-wide educational effort announced five purposes:

"1. Bringing about a more widespread knowledge and appreciation of and interest in education;

"2. Helping to create a continuing concern on the part of great numbers of citizens to face their responsibilities toward education;

"3. Serving to bring about an analysis of the current conditions of our education system;

"4. Providing examples of solutions to educational problems and inspiration for an accelerated effort in planning morre action programs in school improvement;

"5. Providing the basis of a report to the President concerning the significant and pressing problems in the field of education, and recommendations in so far as possible for their improvement."

The committee said it would have in mind the entire educational system.

PRESIDENT PICKS EDUCATION AIDE

Asks Neil McElroy to Head Conference on Schools—Names Fiscal Officers

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Sept. 27—Neil McElroy, president of Proctor & Gamble Company of Cincinnati, was asked by President Eisenhower today to assume the chairmanship of the White House conference on education.

The President wrote Mr. McElroy that he wanted the conference to "be organized and conducted in such a way as to be a significant influence on the improvement of education in this country." This view, he said, was shared by Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and Dr. Samuel Brownell, Commissioner of Education, who have been in touch with Mr. McElroy.

President Eisenhower called upon the states and territories last week to join in the conference. It will seek solutions to educational problems, including teacher and facility shortages, and ways of keeping in school youngsters who would add to the country's trained manpower.

The White House conference probably will not be held until early next year, after completion of state conferences, whose results will be correlated in the final conference, to be held in Washington. Federal allocation of $700,000 has been made by the President to help defray the costs of the state meetings.

Mr. McElroy, who is 49 years of age and a native of Berea, Ohio, is a member of the National Citizens Commission for Public Schools and of the National Fund for Medical Education. He also has been active in educational and civic affairs in Cincinnati. He has been president of Procter & Gamble since 1948.

Recess Appointments Made

Three recess appointments in connection with new legislationp that reorganized the Export-Import Bank were announced by Murray Snyder, assistant press secretary. The legislation, adopted by the last session of Congress, set up a five-member board of directors, with three Republicans and two Democrats. The appointments involved changes in titles.

Maj. Gen. Glen E. Edgerton, who had been managing director, was nominated as president. Lynn U. Stambaugh of North Dakota, deputy director, was named first vice president. They are Republicans. Hawthorne Arey of Nebraska, assistant director, was nominated as a director. He is a Democrat.

Mr. Snyder said the two remaining directorships would be filled soon.

Named to the Mississippi River Commission were Brig. Gen. William E. Potter and Brig. Gen. Charles G. Holle. These appointments are routine rotation of Army engineers on the commission.

General Potter of Omaha is Missouri River division chief of the Army Engineers, and General Holle of Atlanta is Southeastern division chief.

Talks Politics

The President talked politics this morning with two Republican candidates for Congressional seats in Colorado. Mrs. Ellen Harris, who seeks a seat now held by Representative Byron G. Rogers, Democrat, said the President "told me to get out and meet as many people as I can in getting my message across to them."

Representative J. Edgar Chenoweth of Trinidad, seeking a third term, also visited President Eisenhower.

Tomorrow, the President will see Robert T. Stevens, Secretary of the Army, and Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, Army Chief of Staff. Secretary Stevens has been visiting western Army posts.

Another caller will be Dr. Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

School Meet Raises Dixie Negro Query

Special to The Constitution

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21—The question whether some Southern states will have Negro representation in their state education conferences and at the November, 1955 White House conference on education was raised here by Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University.

U.S. Commissioner of Education Samuel M. Brownell told Clement that state meetings would be left up to state authorities but expressed confidence Negroes would get proper representation at the White House conference.

Clement told Brownell he was glad "to hear the word going out from Washington that we are to be included." He added, "You know, by November, 1955, there may be no public schools in Georgia."

"If the word doesn't go out from Washington," Clement continued, "we may not be represented. Georgia's Negro population, one-third of the state's, must be represented in the Georgia and White House meetings."

Dr. Mays Is Named To Theological School Fund

Dr. B. E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, has accepted an invitation to serve as a Director of the American Association of Theological Schools Fund, Inc.

The invitation was extended Dr. Mays by Dean Edward H. Roberts, chairman of special committee of the American Association of Theological Schools.

As the Rockefeller Brothers Fund which has given considerable thought and study to the program of this organization, plans to contribute significantly to it, John D. Rockefeller III wrote to Dr. Mays personally urging him to accept this assignment to work with this program because, Mr. Rockefeller said, "We have high hopes that it will make a significant contribution to the quality of young men entering the Christian ministry."

The purpose of this proposed A. A. T. S. fellowship program is "to encourage young people who have exceptional qualities of intellect, character, and leadership to enter the protestant ministry. Fellowship will be awarded only to those who can meet entrance requirements for a fully accredited theological school and who can meet the criteria in the areas of intellect, character and leadership.

Business officers name W.C. Ervin

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — W. C. Ervin, business manager of Paine College, was elected president of the American Association of College Business Officers at the recent 15th annual meeting of the group held at Lincoln University.

Other officers elected were: James B. Clark, treasurer, Howard University, vice president; L. A. Little auditor, Southern University, secretary; William Jones, business manager, North Carolina College, treasurer; and Jordan A. Davis, business manager, Hampton Institute, placement officer.

The executive committee includes the newly elected officers and J. W. Bryant, business manager, Texas College; James Cephas, treasurer-business manager, Virginia State College; and George H. Valentine, business manager, Wilberforce University.

14c 1954

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION
FISK UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Behind The News

By Reid E. Jackson

How religion helps improve our society

IN CASE YOU might not know, one of the potent agencies for improving race relations in this country is sponsored by a religious group.

Dr. Jackson

Its official title is the Race Relations Department of the American Missionary Association, with its headquarters at Fisk University in Nashville.

This department, in turn, is a part of the Division of Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Church. From its very beginning, this organization has sought to better the condition of colored Americans.

A Voice Of Protest

Founded in 1846 by a group of religious leaders who objected to the exclusion of colored people from the churches of that day, it immediately became a strong voice of protest in abolitionist movements.

As a first step, it worked with the Freedmen's Bureau to establish schools for our people in the South. Among these were Howard, Fisk, Hampton, Talladega, Lemoyne and Tougaloo.

To deal directly with interracial problems, the Race Relations Department was created in 1942. The first director was Dr. Charles S. Johnson, now Fisk University president.

His successor was youthful and vigorous Dr. Herman H. Long, University of Michigan graduate. Under his guidance, the techniques of the department are taking fuller form.

"We do not engage in theoretical research," explains Director Long. Rather, our full-time three-member staff "studies actual public policy issues that probably will be decided by legislatures or courts.

"Our analyses show that these decisions usually are based on the social effects of the practice under discussion," Dr. Long says.

Sensing this, the Race Relations Department has constantly gathered data that describe the real impact of segregation practices upon the pattern of living for minority people.

Two major studies, already published by the department, are bound to have their influence in present efforts to bring about integration.

Restrictive Covenants

The first was a survey of racial restrictive housing covenants in Chicago and St. Louis. Here it was shown that restrictive covenants were actually withdrawing more housing from the market than that which was needed by minority groups.

To assemble this data, the department used the new technique of the "self-survey."

In this procedure hundreds of volunteer workers of differing racial, religious, social and economic backgrounds go out into the community to get the facts.

As Dr. Long puts it, "an unusually large number of citizens will be having a new experience of democratic working together on the solutions of common problems thereby helping to improve sound group relations."

Concrete evidence of the worthwhileness of this technique has been provided by self-surveys the department has already completed in San Francisco, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Kalamazoo, Mich., Burlington, Iowa, and Trenton, N.J.

Presently, the department is conducting a similar survey in Baltimore.

Sponsored jointly by the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations and the Baltimore Commission on Human Relations, the survey is penetrating into six areas.

These are education, employment, housing, interfaith, public accommodations and social welfare.

A Thousand Workers

Almost 1,000 Baltimore residents are entering the homes of minority families to ask them what difficulties they are having to work and live happily in their own communities.

Many of these survey workers are getting a liberal education free of charge. One such made this voluntary comment:

"People who say that colored residents 'want everything,' are 'never satisfied' and 'spend money recklessly,' should see inside the miserable little homes, sub-standard in every way, with no hot water to keep clean.

"More than this, only one or two rooms heated by separate stoves, large families crowded into tiny rooms, not enough money or clothes to go around, only one salary coming and an excessive rent to pay, and fear of being laid off with no reserve."

While it is good that the Congregational Church is willing to pay money to help improve human relations in our society, there is something that we can do ourselves.

Without waiting to be asked, we should have courage to survey our own personal situations objectively and then place the facts of our own problems in the hands of those who are better able to help us.

14c 1954

BETHUNE FOUNDATION

Mrs. Bethune To Receive $1000 For Foundation

NEW YORK —(ANP)— A gift of $1000 to carry on the work of the Bethune Foundation will high light the testimonial dinner honoring Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune on Friday, April 12, at th hotel Capitol.

Mrs. Pearl Cotton, president of the Bethune Circle No. 6 which on Friday, April 23, at the Hotel of the Bethune Circle No. 6which is sponsoring the banquet, in announcing the gift said:

the gift said:

The check will serve to aid in continuing the work in the education of our young people which has been led for the past 50 years by the woman whose name our group so proudly bears.

The testimonial, marking half a century of service of Bethune Cookman college, will draw support from the newly - formed Newark chapter of the Circle, of which Mrs. Daisy Moore is president. Young people will also have their part in the banquet, under the leadership of Barbara West of the Circle youth group.

Sharing honors with Mrs. Bethune on the dais will be Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, Judge Thomas Dickens of New York's Municipal court; Mrs. Gertrude Ayer, first Negro woman principal of the New York City school, and Mrs. Ada Lee of Jacksonville, Fla., founder of the first Circle.

group so proudly bears.

The testimonial, marking half a century of service of Bethune-Cookman college, will draw support from the newly-formed Newark chapter of the circle of which Mrs. Daisy Moore is president. Young people will also have their part in the banquet, under the leadership of Barbara West of the circle youth group.

Reservations from organizations and individuals all along the Eastern seaboard have been reported by the dinner committee. Guests will be present from Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Connecticut and Westchester.

Sharing honors with Mrs. Bethune on the dais will be Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, Judge Thomas Dickens of New Yorks Municipal court; Mrs. Gertrude Ayer, first Negro woman principal of the New York City school, and Mrs. Ada Lee of Jacksonville, Fla., founder of the first circle.

Reservations for the testimonial may be obtained by writing Mrs. Pearl Cotton, 62 W. 132nd St., New York City.

Mrs. Bethune to Get $1,000 for Foundation

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — A gift of $1,000 to carry on the work of the Bethune Foundation will highlight the testimonial dinner honoring Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune on Friday, April 23, at the Hotel Capitol.

Mrs. Pearl Cotton, president of Bethune Circle No. 6 which is sponsoring the banquet, in announcing the gift said:

"The check will serve to aid in continuing the work in the education of our young people which has been led for the past 50 years by the woman whose name our

Canada Lee Foundation Celebrates on Radio

NEW YORK—With coast-to-coast and local broadcasts, the Canada Lee Foundation last week was involved in a full schedule of activities of national commemoration and rededication.

A coast-to-coast National gram presented Oscar Hammerstein 2nd on "Collector's Item," a program devoted to exploring the aspirations of the actor to the work of the Foundation.

New York's radio station WMCA presented a panel discussion on "The Negro in the Arts—Are Times Improving?" Barry Gray served as moderator of a panel which included a Broadway producer, Clarence Derwent, a theatre dramatist, Marc Connelly, and an actress, Muriel Rahn. Also in line with the Foundation's program, actor Frederick O'Neal was interviewed on the WNYC Norman Wayne program. Stations WOV and WLIB also planned special programs.

The National Achievement Awards presentation will be made this week at the Skyline Room of the Hotel Theresa. At this public affair the Canada Lee Foundation will make awards to "persons of the theatre for their outstanding contributions towards integration of minority peoples in the performing arts." The Seagram Vanguard Award will also be made to a new talent of the year.

14c 1954

Carnegie Fund Has 17 Million In Assets

NEW YORK — The Carnegie Corporation was founded in 1911 by Andrew Carnegie for "the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States and of the British dominions and colonies." Its present assets are about $177,000,000. The income from $12,000,000 may be used in British dominions and colonies; the rest must be used in the United States.

14c 1954

COMMONWEALTH FUND

INSTITUTIONS GET HARKNESS WEALTH

Commonwealth Fund, Schools, Hospitals Will Share in $60,000,000 Bequests

Gifts to charities totalling $60,000,000 were disclosed yesterday in an accounting settling the estate of Mrs. Mary Stillman Harkness, widow of Edward S. Harkness, financier and philanthropist.

The accounting, filed in Surrogate's court, revealed that Mrs. Harkness left a gross estate of $20,564,145 at her death. She left $2,000,000 for charitable and educational purposes.

Mrs. Harkness was the life beneficiary of her husband's residuary estate of more than $55,000,000, which, under his will was to be shared by institutions named in his testament.

Half of it goes to the Commonwealth Fund, a fourth to Presbyterian Hospital, and a fourth to several other institutions.

Lawyers List Inventory

The inventory was filed by Sage, Gray, Todd & Sims, attorneys for the executors, Malcolm P. Aldrich and the New York Trust Company. It listed stocks appraised at $5,660,663 bonds, $10,724,777; cash, $1,081,167; real estate, $663,689, and miscellaneous property valued at $1,947,720.

The executor's report covered the period from Mrs. Harkness death to Sept. 28, 1954, and showed that the estate had earned $391,289 in that period. It had paid administration expenses of $10,678,956, including Federal estate taxes of $7,392,977, New York estate taxes of $2,011,519 and Connecticut succession taxes of $1,841. The total estate taxes were $9,406,338. The executors also listed legacies of $9,142,058 that were paid.

In her will Mrs. Harkness made bequests of $250,000 each to the Commonwealth Fund, Presbyterian Hospital, Babies Hospital and the Tuskegee Industrial Institute, Tuskegee, Ala. She also bequeathed $50,000 to the Marine Historical Association of Mystic, Conn.

Half Interest to Sister

To her sister, Miss Charlotte Rogers Stillman, 1,060 Fifth Avenue, Mrs. Harkness left a half interest in her residuary estate and directed that at Miss Stillman's death the principal go to the Commonwealth Fund.

The other half of the residuary estate was bequeathed in trust for the benefit Elizabeth Kendall Newell, niece; Henry Calhoun Taylor, nephew; Jessie Stillman Taylor, grandniece, and Helen Armstrong Husted, the principal of those trusts passing to their issue.

The Commonwealth Fund, which was established in 1918 by Mr. Harkness's mother, Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness, to promote or maintain physical and mental health, had a principal of $50,000,000 at the death of Mr. Harkness in January, 1940. By the term of his will the fund now receives half of the principal of his residuary estate.

Mr. Harkness bequeathed a fourth of his residuary estate to the Presbyterian Hospital and directed that the remaining fourth be shared equally by the College of Physicians and Surgeans at Columbia University, Metropolitan Museum of Art, Yale University, New York Public Library, Harvard College, St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H.; Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, Hampton, Va.; New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, Charity Organization of the City of New York and Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga.

14c 1954

DAVELLA MILLS FOUNDATION

$11,000,000 LEGACY PROVES A DILEMMA

Times

Trustees of Jersey Fund Find Giving Away Cash Can Be as Difficult as Earning It

A25c

DONOR SET '55 DEADLINE

N.Y.

Late David Mills Organized Foundation 20 Years Ago— First Valued at $1,600,000

Sun, 10-1-54

By CHARLES ZERNER

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Sept 30—Five non-salaried trustees of the Davella Mills Foundation have found that giving away an $11,000,000 fortune to worthy causes and persons can become as difficult as earning it.

With a climactic effort this winter, they expect to meet the March, 1955 deadline specified by the donor, David B. Mills, Canadian-born spark plug and auto accessory manufacturer, who died in February, 1944, at the age of 87.

In 1935, when Mr. Mills organized the foundation, he directed that the funds be distributed within twenty years for religious, charitable, scientific and educational purposes.

To Mr. Mills, who was the first president of the trustees, and his four colleagues, the task had seemed simple. The initial fund was 52,500 shares of General Motors stock, then valued at $1,600,000.

Suggested Policy Adopted

Since the income was substantial, the trustees adopted Mr. Mills' suggested policy that, until the latter years of the foundation's life, the principal be conserved.

Mr. Mills also had advised the other trustees that he believed they could meet their responsibilities with no more than four meetings a year. After two quarterly meetings that schedule was changed to monthly sessions, as appeals, applications and sometimes hysterical demands were received by the hundreds at the foundation's office here.

Investigating and processing the applications became a full-time job for Stanley H. Hutchinson, the foundation's executive director. Paul H. Hudson, a director of the Empire Trust Company of New York, one of the five original trustees, and now president, pitched into the job, along with the other trustees. Mrs. Elizabeth G. Keeler of New York, a former secretary to Mr. Mills, found the task too burdensome and resigned. Her place was filled by Judge Richard Hartshorn, now of the Federal District Court of New Jersey.

The problems of the trustees mounted as the income from General Motors increased. They shrank to insignificance, however, after Mr. Mills died. A childless widower whose wife, Ella C. Mills, had died in 1931, Mr. Mills had bequeathed the residuary estate to the foundation.

The trustees were somewhat appalled when they discovered the residuary consisted of 53,000 additional shares of General Motors stock with a 1944 value of $3,100,000. The original bloc of 52,000 shares had, of course, also appreciated to an approximate value of $3,000,000.

Confronted with Dilemma

Within a few months, the trustees were confronted with the dilemma popularized in the play "Brewster's Millions," to wit: giving away money can become a complex and trying problem. Special and emergency meetings were called to act on the ever-mounting applications for aid, and the policy of conserving principal was abandoned.

Of the more than 5,000 applications from man yparts of the world that have been processed in almost twenty years, 3,500 have received grants, the larger sums (up to $525,000) going to libraries and hospitals in the United States and Canada. The trustees will earmark the last of the gifts within the next month or two, preliminary to the preparation of the first accounting and report next summer.

Homes for the aged, Boy and Girl Scout units, Young Men's Christian Associations and the Red Cross were among the other recipients. More than $400,000 has been given also in individual annual grants to 500 students in over 200 colleges. Among the major gifts for libraries were those to McMaster University of Hamilton, Ont., $500,000; Rollins College in Florida, $525,000; New York University Law Center. $500,000, and $250,000 for a new library building here in Montclair. A grant of $500,000 estabished and paid for three years' operation of the International Film Library, organized to produce documentaries "for the better understanding of different nations, races and religions."

In addition to Mr. Hudson and Judge Hartshorn, the directors include Harold H. Helm, president of the Chemical Bank and Trust Company of New York; Howard S. Dodd, vice president and counsel for the foundation, and Alfred A. Ritchie, treasurer, who is a retired accountant.

In retrospect, the trustees can reflect with some relief that Mr. Mills sold the Rajah Company of near-by Bloomfield, the foundation of his fortune, to a group of employes in the early Thirties.

ENLIGHTENED PHILANTHROPY
BY THE FIELD FOUNDATION.

Since its first philanthropic award 12 years ago, the Field Foundation has appropriated approximately $4½ million for exclusively charitable, scientific and educational purposes -- of which $715,866.85 was expended during its fiscal year ending Sept.30th, its just released report reveals.

Among the many fields to which the foundation contributes in the hope of helping mankind, is that of interracial and intercultural relations. In this eara the organization made made specific bequests to 17 agencies throughout the nation. Indicative of the scope of usefulness of the foundation's bequests in this vital field are its contributions to the National Urban League, NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Howard University and Hampton Institute.

The deep insight of the foundation's administrators into the basic needs in the interracial milieu is illustrated by the objectives of some of the awards: to improve pediatric training of medical students (for the better treatment of infants and children), "to prepare southern leadership to take full advantage of any opportunities for fuller citizenship and better educational opportunities which may arise in the new year, "to improve the graduate training of young Harlem Hospital surgeons the preparation of a hand book for training police officers in racial tension problems, and for the conduct of a variety or race relations courses and programs.

Less well known and not as greatly endowed as some of the older and better publicized foundations, the Field Foundations, financed by the wealthy publisher, merchant, and industrialist, Marshall Field, Jr., of Chicago wisely recognizes the need for helping to advance the ststus of America's largest minority and to aid in the solution of its most persistent and difficult domestic problem. The scope and range of its bequests show a welcome disposition not to avoid certain so-called "delicate" or "controversial" projects and activities. When great wealth demonstrates such social awareness and courage we have cause to be grateful for the free enterprise system which made possible philanthrophy of this character.

Journal and Guide
p. 2. Section 2
Sat.1-9-54
Norfolk, Va.

Field Foundation Makes Provision

$7,500 Grant Paves Way For School Study Program

14c

MONTEAGLE, Tenn. — A grant of $7,500 has been made to the Highlander Folk School by the Field Foundation for a program to provide for an orderly transition from a segregated to an integrated school system in the South," Myles Horton, director of Highlander, announced this week.

Part of the grant will be used for scholarships to Highlander's workshop on the Supreme Court desicion on segregation in the public schools, June 27 to July 4. These scholarships, covering room, board and tuition, are available to community leaders.

Among the discussion leaders will be Dr. Mozelle Hill, Atlanta University, and Irene Osborne, American Friends Service Committee, and others who worked with Harry S. Ashmore in preperation of the book, "The Negro and the School."

Special attention will be given to the study of communities where integration has taken place and to recent progress in human relations made in the South.

The workshop will end July 4 with an Independence Day celebration of the Supreme Court decision in public schools.

FORD FOUNDATION FUND FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF EDUCATION
SOUTHERN EDUCATION REPORTING SERVICE

Johnson Only Negro Member

Agency Studying School Segregation 'Problems' in South

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—(INS)—An agency designed to provide the facts about Southern school segregation problems went into operation last week.

The agency is the Southern Education Reporting Service, financed by the Ford Foundation Fund for Advancement of Education.

Its executive director, C. A. McKnight, on leave of absence from his post as editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, said results of the study will be presented to editors, educators, legislators and local officials of the seventeen segregation states.

First results of the group's work are expetced about Sept. 1. Reports will be circulated to about 25,000 persons in tabloid newspaper format about once a month thereafter.

An executive committee to function between meetings of the full board of directors was named Sunday. It includes McKnight, Frank Ahlgren, editor of the Memphis Commercial-Appeal; Charles Moss, executive editor of the Nashville Banner; Coleman Harwell, editor of the Nashville Tennessean; Harvie Branscomb, chancellor of Vanderbilt University; Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, and Henry Hill, president of Peabody College.

Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, is chairman of the board of directors. He and McKnight will meet soon with Ford Foundation officials to decide on a budget. Mentioned at Sunday's meeting was a posible figure of $100,000.

DR. CHARLES JOHNSON
. . . he can tell them

Education for Dixie Laaaards

THE GROUP of Southern newspaper men and educators who last week in Nashville organized the Southern Education Reporting Service are to be commended for their plan to launch a special news reporting service to keep Southerners informed on the problems raised by the Supreme Court's ruling against school segregation.

Operating in seventeen states, the service will seek to prevent distorted news or misinformation concerning the region's progress of transition to desegregated schools.

It is clearly obvious that, in view of ignorant opposition developing in various parts of Dixie to the Supreme Court's ruling, a great deal of education needs to be done if the implementation of the court's decision is to be speedy and peaceful.

We hope that the new service will leave no stone unturned to point out to the hundreds of Southern communities and counties that desegregation will not have the dire consequences that propagandists are predicting.

Millions of white children outside the South have attended school with colored children with no more difficulty than if they were white.

Indeed, one of the remarkable results has been the cordial relations, friendship and camaraderies that has developed between children of the two races wherever they have gone to school together.

In extremely few instances has this attendance at interracial schols led to more intimate association between the two societies, but what it HAS done is to teach tolerance, fairplay and justice between our diverse peoples and to give them a sense of oneness.

It will be all to the good for this Southern Education Reporting Service to let the communities of the South know how the problem is being solved in those places where school boards have desegregated the schools.

We can be sure that with such outstanding men as C. A. Knight, editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, Virginius Dabney of the Richmond (Va.) Times Dispatch, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, P. B. Young, editor of the Journal and Guide, Frank Ahlgren, editor of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, and other educators and journalists of note, the Southern people will be well informed, the impact of the Supreme Court's decision softened, and desegregation facilitated.

Ford Education Grants Reach 26 Million Total

By Fred M. Hechinger

The Fund for the Advancement of Education has distributed grants totaling $25,952,810 since it was established by the Ford Foundation on April 3, 1951. Of this total, about 43 per cent went to privately supported educational institutions, 51 per cent to public schools, colleges and universities, and the rest to various independent organizations, the fund announced yesterday in its "Report for 1952-1954."

Clarence Faust, president of the fund, said that five priority areas had been given special consideration in these grants They were:

1. Teacher training to improve not only the supply but the quality of teachers.

2. Clarification of the role education is to play in American society.

Approach to Desegregation

3. Equalization of educational opportunities, especially in preparation of the desegregation development to be expedited by the Supreme Court ruling against segregation.

4. Finding new and adequate ways of financing education.

5. Improvement of the curriculum, especially by finding better ways of co-operation between high schools and colleges.

"One of the problems to tackle," Mr. Faust, said "is what to select. if you can't teach everything you would like to teach, so that pupils are given a chance to exercise sound and discriminating judgment."

Threat to Quality Seen

Stressing the prospect of increasing enrollments, the fund's report warns that "more alarming, however, is the prospect that, in our frantic efforts to accommodate greater numbers of students, the quality of education will be neglected. . . . Simply to staff our rapidly increasing number of classrooms, we may in desperation be driven to employ persons unqualified because of personality shortcomings, inadequate education, or sheer lack of intelligence, to teach the young."

The report points out that in 1900 only two of every ten youngsters of high school age were in school. Today it is eight of ten. In 1900 only two of every hundred went to college. Today it is twenty out of a hundred.

In his foreword to the report, Owen J. Roberts, chairman of the fund's board of directors, writes: "Many millions of dollars are spent each year in the United States in support of formal education. Of this total only a small fraction is available for the support of new and experimental programs. Yet the story of human advance is the story of the unconventional which has become the commonplace, the untried which has become the routine, of the nonconforming which has become the customary."

Bi-racial Research

Among important activities of the fund was an extensive research program on the biracial aspects of Southern education and publication of two volumes, "The Negro and the Schools" and "The Schools in Transition."

In a special fellowship program for high school and college teachers awards have been made to 757 persons on the high school level and to 984 college faculty members.

Another important fund experiment is the better use of the best available teachers by bringing a greater number of pupils in contact with them. The use of "classroom aids" in larger classes has been tried successfully in Bay City, Mich. Time-consuming routine tasks are taken over by the aids.

$5,000 GRANT—Miss Violet E. Myers, assistant to director of American Library association, discusses $5,000 Ford Foundation grant to James E. Shepard Memorial library with North Carolina college officials at Durham, N.C. College officials are, from left, William Jones, business manager; D. E. Moore, dean of the NCC library school; J. E. Parker, director or visual-aids department. and Dr. Benjamin F. Smith chief librarian, submitted the prize - winning project that will study various aspects of industrialization as it affects the field of job opportunities.

Ford Foundation Sets $25 Million For Education

NEW YORK—(INS)—Ford Foundation trustees voted an appropriation of 25 million dollars for the next eight to 12 years toward the Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Chairman Henry Ford II announced in New York that the purpose of the grant was to enable the Fund to continue its programs with schools, colleges and universities on which it has concentrated since its establishment in April, 1951. Ford said:

"In the judgment of the trustees of the Foundation and the Directors of the Fund, it will enable more effective long-rang planning and operations in the Fund's chosen areas."

The Automobile Executive enumerated the areas as the clarification of the functions of Education: improvement of curriculum: improvement in teaching: improvement of Educational Management, and reduction of inequalities in Educational Opportunities.

He said the grant reflected endorsement by the trustees of the Fund's program.

Ford Foundation Sets $25 Million For Education

NEW YORK—(INS)—Ford Foundation trustees voted an appropriation of 25 million dollars for the next eight to 12 years toward the Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Chairman Henry Ford II announced in New York that the purpose of the grant was to enable the Fund to continue its programs with schools, colleges and universities on which it has concentrated since its establishment in April, 1951. Ford said:

"In the judgment of the trustees of the Foundation and the Directors of the Fund, it will enable more effective long-rang planning and operations in the Fund's chosen areas."

The Automobile Executive enumerated the areas as the clarification of the functions of Education: improvement of curriculum: improvement in teaching: improvement of Educational Management, and reduction of inequalities in Educational Opportunities.

He said the grant reflected endorsement by the trustees of the Fund's program.

VI Teacher On Tour Of America

In Chicago last week to see her brother and also to continue her tour of the United States was

REHENIA GABRIEL

Miss Rehenia A. Gabriel of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, where she is a teacher in the Charleotte Amalie high school.

Miss Gabriel was awarded a Ford Foundation scholarship which will enable her to study in America for one year.

She won the trip by submitting the best individual's program the theme of which in her case, was Building Better Human Relations. She had more than a score of competitors.

VISITS CHICAGO SCHOOLS

While in Chicago as guest of her brother, Ramon C. Gabriel, 1857 Washington blvd., a free lance artist, she made a study of several secondary schools including Wells, New Trier, Hyde Park and Senn high schools.

During the second half of her journey in the West, Miss Gabriel will visit several Indian reservations and also the University of New Mexico.

Miss Gabriel is a product of the University of Puerto Rico, and holds a masters degree from New York university and a bachelors degree from the Northern Illinois Teachers college.

Talmadge's Paper Raps Ford Grant

Gov. Tamadge's political weekly, The Statesman, Friday charged that Southern income tax money is, in effect, being spent to foster a fight on Southern segregation.

An unsigned particle criticized a recent grant of approximately $25,000 by the Ford Foundation to the Southern Regional Council. It called the foundation "a charitable fiction."

The council was organized in 1944 to work for better race relations. Marion Wright of Linville Falls, N.C., is president; Dr. Rufus Clement of Atlanta is chairman of the executive committee, and Dr. George Mitchell of Atlanta is executive director. There are both white and Negro members.

The paper said the Ford Foundation is exempt from federal income taxes. Thus the money which Southerners pay in federal income taxes, in effect, goes to support an organization working "to destroy our way of life," the paper said.

Leonard Haas, Atlanta member of the council's executive committee, said the organization represents an effort by Southerners to build cooperation and mutual trust between the races. The foundation money was specifically marked for local organizations to work along these lines, he added.

Talmadge raps Ford Foundation's grant

ATLANTA (ANP)—Last week, Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, hit at the recent grant of more than $200,000 by the Ford Foundation to the Southern Regional Council.

Through his political organ, the Statesman, Talmadge, declared that the money would be spent to foster a fight on segregation in the South.

The governor sught to arouse Georgia taxpayers by claiming the fact that since foundations are tax exempt it meant that the whites of the South were helping finance an organization seeking "to destroy our way of life."

Ford Fund To Finance South Reporting Service

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—(ANP) —A Southern Education Reporting service has been established by the Ford Foundation Fund for the advancement of education, it was announced this week by Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Dabney, well known as a liberal southern white editor, will be the chairman of the service which to set up headquarters in Nashville, July 1, to work as a kind of information gathering agency on developments in the South in connection with the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

Among the members of the Reporting Service governing board are P. B. Young, Sr., editor-publisher Norfolk Journal and Guide, and Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president, Fisk University.

NON-PROFIT AGENCY

"The aim of the non-profit agency will be to provide public school administrators and other community leaders with objective information on community problems and developments which arise in the wake of the recent Supreme court decision against racial segregation in public schools.

"The South is entering a very difficult period. School administrators and trustees—state, county and local—in each of the 17 states affected, will stand to benefit by the experiences of school administrators in the other 16 states. It will be the aim of the Southern Education Reporting service to assist in filling the need for such information, and providing it on a strictly factual, non-partisan basis . . .

"This is what we hope to provide. Those of us who are associated with this undertaking feel that it will perform a very useful public service."

Ford Foundation Sets $25 Million For Education

NEW YORK—(INS)—Ford Foundation trustees voted an appropriation of 25 million dollars for the next eight to 10 years toward the Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Chairman Henry Ford II announced in New York that the purpose of the grant was to enable the Fund to continue its programs with schools, colleges and universities on which it has concentrated since its establishment in April, 1951.

Ford said:

"In the judgment of the trustees of the Foundation and the Directors of the Fund, it will enable more effective long-range planning and operations in the Fund's chosen areas."

The Automobile Executive enumerated the areas as the clarification of the functions of Education: improvement of curriculum: improvement in teaching: improvement of Educational Management, and reduction of inequalities in Educational Opportunities.

He said the grant reflected endorsement by the trustees of the Fund's program.

FORD FOUNDATION HITS PROBE HALT

Protests Lack of Chance to Reply at Hearings

By HARRY SNYDER

WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP)—The Ford Foundation protested Saturday that it had been "maligned in public" at a House probe of tax-exempt foundations and not given a chance to make reply in the same kind of forum.

It said it was a "puzzling and unexpected act of injustice" for the investigators to shut down public hearings suddenly and to limit the defense of the Ford and other foundations to written statements or closed hearings.

H. Rowan Gaither Jr. included this criticism in a 42-page statement describing the activities of the multi-million-dollar organization of which he is president and trustee.

The statement was filed with a special House committee headed by Rep. B. Carroll Reece (R-Tenn.) according to rules announced when the group cut short its hearings early this month.

Gaither said:

"To leave this investigation in any sense incomplete would be a reflection on the Congress and a disservice to the public.

'Immense Cost'

"Moreover, it would leave the door ajar to repeated investigations with all of their immense cost in terms of time, money and an effort to the Congress and to the foundations . . ."

Gaither said the Ford Foundation and other philanthropic organizations have been "maligned in public by the witnesses called by this committee," and added:

"This testimony has ranged from sweeping innuendoes to detailed allegations of wrongdoing. We have grave doubts as to the validity of any of the material charges against American philanthropy and education, and insofar as they refer to the Ford Foundation, we state they are erroneous and baseless."

In its public hearings, the committee heard, over frequent and vigorous objections by Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D-Ohio), considerable criticism of the foundations from members of its own staff.

Norman Dodd and Thomas McNiece, committee research workers, accused some foundations of using tax-free money to foster socialism and subvert the course of public education.

'Master Plan' Hit

Without naming either the staff workers or Aaron M. Sargent, a San Francisco lawyer-witness who criticized the Ford, Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations in particular, Gaither said they advanced a theory about foundations which is "erroneous and could cause grave damage."

This theory, he said, is to the effect that foundation trustees generally are schemers with "a master plan for society" who have "engineered a giant conspiracy" of subversion.

Said Gaither: "This theory is the sheerest nonsense . . . an affront to the common sense of the American people, who have presumably been the objects of the conspiracy and whose major decisions it is said to have dictated."

"Although the overwhelming majority of the press has derided the conspiracy theory presented in these proceedings," Gaither said, "Important segments of the public may have gained the impression that it has been proved to the satisfaction of this committee."

'Special Consideration'

He said he and other trustees are concerned with this possibility, and added:

"Accordingly, we hope this committee will take positive steps to dispel any such impression, because it carries damaging implications not only for all private philanthropy, but for all science and education."

With regard to a suggestion by Dodd that the committee give "special consideration" to the Ford organization, Gaither said the research director's comments have been studied and "we are, frankly, at a loss to understand what they mean and what criticism is intended."

The foundation, he said, is dedicated to the solution of human problems but has "never had the slightest interest in discouraging any responsible criticism of the educational system and we are not involved in any attempt to indoctrinate adults, encourage national and international planning by the federal government, diminish the importance of Congress, or establish control over human behavior.

He added that the foundation has not established funds or supported any projects "directed toward national planning or politics."

Two General Themes

Gaither said he doesn't believe the committee's hearing record substantiates allegations contained in a speech by Reece at the time he asked the House to authorize the investigation.

"These allegations follow two general themes," he said, "that certain present or former employes of the foundation are of 'dubious' loyalty, and that certain grants have been made to individuals or organizations of questionable loyalty or for questionable purposes."

Gaither said the foundation personnel record "does not contain a single instance of anyone having been hired in any capacity by the Ford Foundation who had ever been a member of the Communist party or of any other subversive organization."

He also said all employes are carefully investigated "and in no instance to date has any incident arisen or any information been discovered leading us to doubt the loyalty of any employe."

"Without exception" he said, "we reject the insinuations made in the record of the hearings of this committee to date that certain Ford Foundation employes are disloyal or subversive. Based on our investigations we believe these insinuations are erroneous and without substance."

'Wrong Interpretations'

Gaither also said certain references to some individuals who have received help from the foundation have not been based on fact and in some cases wrong interpretations were placed on quotations taken out of context.

He said the foundation would not make a grant to a subversive individual or organization "as a matter of policy and patriotism as well as for reasons of scientific integrity."

The record, he said, shows that of the hundreds of grants made none has gone to any organization on the attorney general's list of subversive groups nor to any individual known to be subversive.

Gaither said the potential usefulness of foundations would be destroyed "if the nation were to abandon its heritage of freedom as well as for reasons of science and accept the conspiracy theory advanced in the record of these hearings."

He added:

"On behalf of the trustees of the Ford Foundation, I join in the rejection of this frightened and misguided conspiracy theory."

His fellow trustees, he said, include Henry Ford II, president of the Ford Motor Co.; Laurence M. Gould, president of Carleton College; Benson Ford, vice-president of the Ford Motor Co.; Frank W. Abrams, retired Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey executive; James F. Brownlee, investment banker; John Cowles, Minneapolis and Des Moines publisher; Donald K. David, educator; Mark Ethridge, publisher; Louisville Courier-Journal; Benson Ford, vice-president of the Ford Motor Co.; Laurence M. Gould, president of Carleton College; John L. McCloy, New York bank executive

BIRACIAL GROUP IS GIVEN $240,000

James Roosevelt

Southern Regional Council Plans Educational Work

P. 24

ATLANTA, April 10 (AP) — The Southern Regional Council today announced a $240,000 grant from the Fund of the Republic, a Ford Foundation agency, to aid it in its efforts toward "equal opportunity for all the people of the South."

The money, the biracial organization's executive committee added, will be used in an educational program extending into 12 states and lasting 18 months.

It will result, the announcement, in strengthened organizations in Alabama, Arkansas, the Carolinas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

The state groups, it added, will be enabled to employ professional staffs of white persons and Negroes and maintain a full-time human relations service "directed by local leadership."

The announcement noted that the supreme court decision on public school segregation is pending and said the next 18 months can be a critical period calling "for all that is best and responsible in Southern life.

"It is our hope and belief," the committee said, "that the Southern Regional Council, through its expanded state services, will make an important contribution to this effort."

The council was founded in 1944 as successor to a similar organization, the commission on interracial co-operation. It claims for its achievement assistance in securing the right of Negroes to vote, employment of Negro policemen, impartial law enforcement, curbing racial tension, correction of school inequalities and dropping of racial barriers.

Marion A. Wright of Linville Falls, N. C., is president of the council and Dr. Rufus E. Clement, Atlanta, is chairman of the executive committee.

14c 1954

Ford Foundation Helps To Promote African Studies

WASHINGTON — The African studies program at Howard University will be expanded during the next three years as the result of a [illegible] grant from the Ford Foundation, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of the University, announced today.

According to Professor E. Franklin Frazier, Head of the Department of Sociology, the purpose of the grant is:

1. To povide increased opportunity for students of Howard University and African students at the University to study Africa and its problems in the modern world.

AFRICAN STUDENTS

2. To provide training and education for a small number of graduate students who will either continue their studies at other centers of African studies or be prepared to work in the African field where a basic knowledge and understanding of the economic, social and political problems of Africa are required.

These studies will be carried on under the direction of Dr. Frazier, Dr. Rayford W. Logan, Head of the Department of History, Professor Anthony S. Reyner, Department of Geography, and Professor Mark Hanna Watkins, Department of Anthropology.

Professor Frazier served as Chief of the Division of Applied Social Sciences of UNESCO, Paris, 1951-53. As part of his studies, he visited research institutes in most of the areas of Africa south of the Sahara. Recently, he presented a paper at the 30th Institute of the Norman Wait Harris Foundation of the University of Chicago on the 'Impact of Colonialism on African Social Forms and Personality.' Professor Reyner is author of "African Manpower in World Politics." He was a Fulbright Fellow in France, where he made a study of the administration of French overseas territories, and has recently returned from a trip to West Africa. Prof. Reyner has traveled and carried on research in Africa and Latin America. Professor Watkins is author of "A Grammar of the Language of Chichewa" and is currently engaged in the preparation of a grammar of the language of another African tribue, the Sekwena.

The program of the courses will include the Human Geography of Africa, Peoples and cultures of Africa, History of Colonization in Africa, Administration of Overseas Territories, Economic Problems of Africa, the Impact of Western Civilization on Africa, and practical linguistic anaylsis of an African language, beginning with Yoruba.

Under the terms of the grant, there will be a number of graduate fellowships and undergraduate scholarships availables for exceptional students who will devote themselves to preparation for advanced studies in the African field. The program will be inaugurated with the first semester of the 1954-55 school year.

Ford Fund Hits End of Hearings

Criticizes House Inquiry Methods

The Ford Foundation yesterday issued a detailed statement, requested on July 2 by the House Special Committee to Investigate Tax-Exempt Foundations, stating that its entire resources are devoted to "charitable, scientific and educational activities" for the public welfare.

Commenting on the committee's avowed intention to determine whether any foundations are acting for subversive or other improper purposes, H. Rowan Gaither jr., president and trustee of the Ford Foundation, said:

"The Ford Foundation has not used any of its resources for un-American or subversive activities" nor "for political purposes, propaganda, or attempts to influence legislation."

Mr. Gaither said that "the Ford Foundation, along with others, has been maligned in public by the witnesses called by this committee in the opening weeks of the hearings. We have grave doubts of the validity of any of the material charges against American philanthropy and education, and in so far as they refer to the Ford Foundation, we state they are erroneous and baseless."

Mr. Gaither's statement was presented Friday in Washington to the committee's chairman, Rep. Carroll Reece, R., Tenn. It was released for publication by the Ford Foundation last night.

The committee canceled its public hearings on July 2 after repeated clashes over procedure between Chairman Reece and Reps. Wayne L. Hays, D., Ohio, and Gracie Pfost, D., Idaho. Further testimony was to be given in secret or in sworn statements to the committee. The Carnegie Corporation of New York filed its statement July 12, stating its aims are wholly "pro-American" and criticizing the termination of hearings as "obviously unfair and prejudicial."

The Ford statement said that the foundation "had hoped to have the opportunity of replying to the charges in public," and regards "the decision of the committee to discontinue public hearings and to limit the foundations' defense to written statements or closed sessions as a puzzling and unexpected act of injustice."

"To leave this investigation in any sense incomplete," the statement continued, "would be a reflection on the Congress and a disservice to the public." An incomplete investigation, it said, would leave the way open for further costly investigations "and their unavoidable effect on the morale, initiative and freedom of scientific, educational and charitable organizations."

The statement reviewed the record of the hearings by the committee, with its allegations that foundation trustees were out of touch with their staffs, who presumably had their own master plan for society, and that there was a plot by these staff members and the nation's educational leaders to subvert the people and their institutions.

"This theory is the sheerest nonsense," the statement commented.

The statement said that of a total $5,600,000,000 in private giving by Americans each year, only 3 per cent comes from foundations.

The statement said that foundations are uniquely fitted to fight social and physical ills; they can finance projects even when they are unpopular with the public; they can co-ordinate attacks on problems with many causes, and they have the financial resources to carry long-sustained research to a conclusion.

Mr. Gaither's statement traced the history of the foundation and outlined its main areas of attention as: Promotion of international understanding and peace; strengthening of democratic processes and institutions; helping to make our free economy stronger and more stable; advancing of education on all levels, and the fostering of knowledge to increase human progress.

Projects Carefully Screened

He said that the trustees "take their responsibilities most seriously" in seeing that the foundation's funds are given only for scientific, educational and charitable purposes under a program of careful selection to the relatively few projects it can support. He said the foundation seeks to administer its gifts "in ways which give general strength to its grantees"—schools and other organizations—as well as ralizing the particular aims of the grants.

In setting forth the long and painstaking process by which the foundation makes grants, Mr. Gaither noted that these are made either directly to an institution, or through an independent outside agency, such as the Social Science Research Council, the Fund for the Republic, Inc., and the Fund for the Advancement of Education.

He noted that the foundation had granted a total of $119,000,000 from January, 1951, to Dec. 31, 1953, giving $87,500,000 to institutions inside the United States, $19,000,000 to American institutions operating abroad, and $12,500,000 directly to foreign institutions.

"Every cent of this money has been spent for one ultimate purpose," Mr. Gaither's statement said, "a stronger American society and a stronger free world."

He said the foundation has granted $30,850,580 to the Fund for the Advancement of Education between 1950 and the end of 1953, and that the fund, in turn, has disbursed $22,242,568 to schools, colleges and teachers in the United States. The foundation also granted $22,400,000 to the Fund for Adult Education, of which $9,000,000 went for the development of educational television.

In international activities, he said, the foundation aids three types of projects; foreign economic development, research and training in overseas problems, and educational activity on international affairs.

After summarizing the main aims and divisions of the foundation, Mr. Gaither said that even in its brief existence, it had enjoyed "an unusual opportunity to observe American philanthropy in action" and to study the work of other foundations.

"We attach great importance to the successful defense of private philanthropy in America because it is an important exercise of the right of private association and private action, and we have seen the collapse of free forms of society where such rights are curtailed," he said.

Mr. Gaither said that the Reece committee can render a "great service" in its report to Congress by denouncing irresponsible testimony insinuating that the foundations are subversive; by restating the "vital role of private philanthropy in America and in the free world"; by encouraging the growth of philanthropic institutions, and by testifying "to the adherence of the vast part of American philanthropy to the law, to public policy and to our national objectives."

Denies Hiring of Reds

In a supplement to the statement dealing with accusations that the foundation had hired or harbored subversives, Mr. Gaither said that after an exhaustive review of every case raised before the committee, the foundation's trustees did not find "a single instance of any one having been hired in any capacity by the Ford Foundation who had ever been a member of the Communist party or of any other subversive organization."

"In no instance to date has any incident arisen or any information been discovered leading us to doubt the loyalty of any employee," he said.

Regarding charges that the foundation had made "dubious" grants, the statement said that as a matter of policy and patriotism as well as for reasons of scientific integrity" the foundation would not make grants to subversive organizations or persons; that its record shows it had never made such grants; that its trustees and staff make no grants without thorough investigation, and that is entire program is "totaling pro-American and actively anti-subversive."

"Affront to Congress"

To allegations in the hearings that the entire $15,000,000 of the foundation's grant to the Republic was an "affront to Congress" because it planned to study Congressional investigating methods, Mr. Gaither replied that the fund had granted $50,000 for a study of these methods by a special committee of the American Bar Association.

He said that critics of the study had made no attempt to learn whether the study would be a fair one, and had falsely

"I am sure that when this committee reviews the facts it sought to determine the truth before he spoke."

$60½ Million Spent By Ford Foundation

Post's Times Herald Wash. D. C. 4-Sept

The Ford Foundation—the Nation's richest—last year spent $60,500,000 in a multitude of projects aimed at advancing human welfare, H. Rowan Gaither, Jr., Foundation president, announced yesterday.

Gaither, in his annual report, criticized fellow philanthropists for pussyfooting and reaffirmed his earlier opposition to such investigations of tax-exempt foundations as the one recently conducted by Rep. B. Carroll Reece (R-Tenn.).

"Today, timidity characterizes too much of our current corporate and individual giving . . . There is an unfortunate tendency for donors to select the safe and sure—safe in the sense that few will criticize the gift; sure in that the result of the gift may be predicted . . . Progress requires the breaking of new and uncertain ground," Gaither declared.

Source of Funds Cited

Then, in an unspecified slap at the Reece Committee's remarks that America's foundations were backing Communist-inspired projects, Gaither said "our preoccupation with the internal threat of Communist strategies and tactics" overlooks the fact that foundation funds come from the philanthropy of private enterprise.

"Criticism which is based on a willful misconception of the purposes of a foundation, or which is motivated by partisan or selfish consideration, does a distinct disservice to the public welfare," Gaither declared.

The Reece Committee first aired charges against America's philanthropic foundations, then closed the public hearings before the foundations could testify in reply.

In reviewing assets, the report indicates the Ford Foundation was worth more than 520 million dollars at the close of 1953. Of this amount, some 417 million dollars was in Ford Motor Class "A" stock and another 97 million dollars in Government securities. Income from dividends last year brought into the foundation more than $48,200,000.

73½ Pct. Are U. S. Grants

The foundation's grants of $60,500,000 last year represent a little more than half of the 119 million dollars it has disbursed since it began in January, 1951.

To date, the foundation has put 73.5 percent of its grants into institutions within the United States, 16 percent into American institutions operating abroad, and 10.5 percent into foreign institutions.

"The Foundation sought to support institutions and activities which might help strengthen the economic, social and political fabric of nations whose welfare is of significance to the Free World . . . In many of the opportunities for improving international and intercultural relations and for increasing world understanding, private philanthropic assistance is more appropriate and sometimes more effective than governmental action," Gaither reported.

Sampling of Grants

A random sampling of grants last year shows the Foundation spent: $500,000 for an agricultural college at the American University of Beirut, $1,213,000 for research on the USSR and the orientation in the United States of Iron Curtain refugees; $5,500,000 for a diagnostic clinic at the Henry Ford Hospital; $10,100,000 for the improvement of formal education in the United States; $280,000 to establish agricultural extension departments in five Indian universities; $425,000 for the Institute of International Education's student exchange program; $200,000 for an export magazine on American culture called "Perspectives, USA"; $410,000 for scientific research in Israel; $522,000 for a village aid program in Pakistan; $1,000,000 for the United Negro College Fund; $420,000 for undergraduate fellowships in the behavorial sciences; and $230,000 for an appraisal of technical assistance in Latin America.

14c 1954

FREEDOMS FOUNDATION

Freedoms Foundation Plans Shrine at Capital

WASHINGTON, March 25 (UP).—The Freedoms Foundation announced tonight it would construct through nation-wide contributions a "Freedom Shrine" here as a monument to American individual rights and aspirations.

Kenneth B. Wells, president of the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge, announced that General of the Army Omar N. Bradley had accepted the chairmanship of a national committee to raise $3,500,000 from the public for construction of the 100-foot high monument.

DIME CONTRIBUTIONS

President Eisenhower has contributed the first dime to the shrine's eraction, Wells said. Similar contributions of dimes will be collected in a nation-wide fund drive on Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22, 1955.

Several possible Washington sites for the shrine are under consideration in cooperation with interested official governmental planning and arts groups, Wells said.

Wells described the shrine as taking the general form of the "credo of the American way of life," with the basic rights of free Americans enumerated on its four sides. It will be topped by a perpetual "freedom flame" flanked by busts of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln and Franklin.

BACKED BY JURISTS

Bradley announced that so far 165 chief and associate justices of State Supreme Courts had indorsed the project and agreed to serve on the national committee of origin for the freedom shrine.

14c 1954

FUND FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF EDUCATION

Ford Fund Elects McGill, Gifford

NEW YORK, April 16 (INS)—The Fund for the Advancement of Education announced today that Ralph McGill and Walter S. Gifford have been elected directors of the fund.

Both McGill, editor of The Atlanta Constitution, and Gifford, who served as U. S. ambassador to Great Britain, were elected to three-year terms on the board of directors.

The fund, established by the Ford Foundation in 1951, is concerned with support of new programs in the field of formal education.

Three Howard Teachers Win Study Awards

Three Howard University teachers have been selected fellows of the Fund for the Advancement of Education. They will study teaching techniques of other schools during the 1954-55 term.

Dr. Vada Easter Adkins, 3511 Stanton road se., assistant professor of history of music, will study music curriculum at several schools including Sarah Lawrence College and the University of Chicago.

Dr. Virginia W. Callahan, 3801 Connecticut ave. nw., associate professor of classics, will study art and archaeology, Latin and Greek literature) at the American Academy in Rome and at the American School in Athens.

Dr. Harold C. Lewis, 5207 21st st. se., associate professor of history, will study the cultures of India and the Middle East at Columbia University of Pennsylvania.

Ford Fund Elects McGill, Gifford

NEW YORK, April 16 (INS)—The Fund for the Advancement of Education announced today that Ralph McGill and Walter S. Gifford have been elected directors of the fund.

Both McGill, editor of The Atlanta Constitution, and Gifford, who served as U. S. ambassador to Great Britain, were elected to three-year terms on the board of directors.

The fund, established by the Ford Foundation in 1951, is concerned with support of new programs in the field of formal education.

Prober Is Critic of Foundations

WASHINGTON, May 12 (AP) — A House investigator said Tuesday he has found evidence that funds of some tax-exempt foundations have been "used to finance ideas and practices" at odds with the U.S. Constitution.

Norman Dodd suggested that a special House committee studying the tax-exempt foundations ask the organizations give "special consideration" to the Ford Foundation and the work it is doing. Dodd is research director for the House group.

The committee's second day of public hearings brought disclosure also among the organizations it is studying is the Facts Forum Foundation created by H. L. Hunt, wealthy Texas oil man and supporter of Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis). Facts Forum was not mentioned in Dodd's report.

Dodd suggested that the committee give special attention to Ford Foundation, one of the newest giant foundations, which, he said is unprecedented in size and 'is the first foundation to dedicate itself openly to 'problem solving' on a world scale."

Cite Report from Hiss

Dodd and Rene Wormser, committee counsel, cited a report from Hiss as president of the Carnegie endowment in 1947 in which Hiss urged wide educatinonal and other endowment activities in support of the United Nations, which he helped found as a state department official and secretary general of the San Francisco conference which drew up the U. N. charter.

Hiss was convicted and imprisoned later on charges of lying in connection with testimony he had assisted a Russian spy ring while a government official.

Stress Global Viewpoint

"We should check on whether it [the Foundation] is responsible for the present floundering foreign policy, since thehre seems to be a close connection between the secretary of state and Alger Hiss," Hays continued.

Dodd said the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations especially have spent funds for 'awakening the people of this country to an international viewpoint," as opposed to the doctrine laid down by George Washington against entangling alliances. He also said that foundations have financed "social scientists" or "social engineers" who attempt to use educational institutions as instruments for social changes.

"It seems incredible that the trustees of typically American fortune created foundations should have permitted them to be used to finance ideas and practices incompatible with the fundamental concepts of our Constitution," Dodd testified before the committee. "Yet there seems evidence that this may have occurred. . . .

Zeal for New Order

"In what appears from our studies to have been zeal for a radically new social order in the United States, many of these social science specialists apparently gave little thought to either the opinions or the warnings of those who were convinced that a wholesale acceptance of knowledge acquired almost entirely by empirical methods would result in a deterioration of moral standards and a disrespect for principles.

"Even past experience which indicated that such an approach to the problems of society could lead to tyranny, appears to have been disregarded.

"Both the general and specific studies pursued by the staff during the past six months lead me to the tentative conclusion that, within the social science division of education, the foundations have neglected 'the public interest' to a severe degree."

Dodd suggested that the committee consider the tendency of foundation trustees to abdicate responsibility, once funds have been set aside for specific purposes.

FOUNDATIONS HIT AS FOES OF AMERICAN WAY

Probers Cite Plea by Hiss for U. N.

BY JOHN FISHER
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, May 11 — Charges that wealthy tax exempt foundations have been used to finance propaganda and educational activities contrary to traditional American concepts were made today before a special house committee investigating foundations.

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, formerly headed by Alger Hiss, spy-perjurer now serving a prison term, and the Rockefeller Foundation were mentioned particularly by Norman Dodd, research director for the

FIGHTS CHARGE FOUNDATIONS AID U. S. FOES

Carnegie Officials Reply to Probe

New York, July 11 [Special] —The Carnegie corporation spoke out today in defense of itself and other tax exempt foundations against charges by witnesses in a congressional investigation of such foundations that their tax free dollars are being used to promote socialism and globalism.

The corporation made public a 32 page statement by its president, Charles Dollard, describing and defending its activities and a 19 page memorandum commenting on specific attacks in congressional testimony against certain Carnegie-financed projects.

Assails Ending of Hearings

The statement and memorandum have been sent to the special house committee to investigate tax exempt foundations, of which Rep. Reece [R., Tenn.] is chairman, it was said. This committee, which held several public hearings early this year, voted July 2 to discontinue public hearings and to continue its studies by receiving written statements and by other means.

The corporation also made public a letter to the committee signed by John E. F. Wood of New York City, its counsel, in which Wood assailed the committee for terminating publi chearings without giving officials and representatives of foundations under attack an opportunity to testify.

Calls It "Pro-American"

"I do not remember another instance in which the judge and jury heard the plaintiff's case in extenso and with full publicity, only to desert the courtroom as soon as the defendants appeared," Wood asserted. "I doubt that any other congressional inquiry ever followed a procedure so alien to American standards of justice and so obviously unfair and prejudicial to a group of respected persons and institutions."

Dollard said in his statement that the Carnegie corporation, largest of six philanthropic trusts set up by the late Andrew Carnegie and now administering the income from assets of $178,861,599, regards its entire program as "pro-American."

"It is the whole purpose of the corporation trustees and officers to work in behalf of their county, to strengthen it, and to ensure its future," Dollard said.

"To strengthen education in America, to encourage the healthy growth of colleges and universities, and to promote that experimentation and innovation which is characteristically American and in the profoundest sense pro-American objectives. It is to just these objectives that the corporation is dedicated."

Dollard said the corporation has always examined carefully the individuals and organizations which apply for grants.

No Gift to a Subversive

"Since the first list of subversive organizations was published by the attorney general," he said, "the Carnegie corporation has never made any grants, gifts, loans, contributions, or expenditures, either directly or indirectly, to any organization so listed, or to any individual or organization that was known or believed to advocate the overthrow of the constitutional government of the United States by force or violence or other unlawful means."

Once a grant is made, however, Dollard said, the foundation does not tell the recipient what conclusions to reach in research, how or what to teach his students, or what to say in the book he may be writing. To do so would be exercising "thought control" over recipients of grants, he added.

Freedom "Right to Be Wrong"

This policy of non-interference means that the foundation cannot endorse all of the things done and said under its grants, he said, and that occasionally things will be done under such grants which are repugnant to the foundation itself. This, he asserted, is a price which must be paid for freedom.

"Freedom is, in one sense, the right to be wrong," he said. "If you leave a scholar, or a cab driver, free to find the right answer, you have also left him free to find the wrong answer. The history of our nation provides abundant evidence that men who are not free find very few answers of any kind."

Dollard conceded that in recent years the foundation has given large sums for research and teaching in the social sciences but denounced what he said was an attempt in the committee's public hearings to "attach a sinister significance to the social sciences."

He said foundation activity in the field of international affairs has been directed toward elimination of war.

Defends $300,000 Study

"The Carnegie corporation has given money to enable Americans to gain a more adequate knowledge of the world at large," he said. "It has given money to enable Americans to study the problems of war and peace. It has given money to develop experts on international affairs. The corporation does these things because it considers them essential to insure America's future as a nation. The gravest threats to America's future are on the international scene."

Dollard complained that excerpts from writings under foundation grants were presented out of context in the committee hearings. Referring to a six year study of the Negro problem by Dr. Gunnar Myrdal of Sweden, which cost the foundation $300,000, Dollard said any person who reads all of Myrdal's report, "An American Dilemma," will sense Myrdal's "deep affection for this country."

The Foundations' Case

Non-Profit Funds, With $7,500,000,000 Resources, Help Advance Education, Health, Social Welfare

This is the first of two articles describing the accomplishments and objectives over the years of the leading philanthropic foundations of this country. The second article will appear tomorrow.

By M. Jay Racusin

An Oxford University scientist and a colleague of his, making a systematic study some years ago of anti-bacterial substances, found themselves stalled at a critical point.

In their search for something that might be useful to mankind they had run out of money. They needed additional equipment and materials for one of their vital projects.

The scientist, a professor of pathology, unable to raise the funds in England, applied to the Rockefeller Foundation. He explained that he had recently engaged a German refugee biochemist to collaborate with him and needed $1,250 for the purchase of laboratory materials to enable him to go ahead. The foundation gave him the grant. The year was 1938.

The outcome of their work was the purification and development of penicillin as one of the most beneficent and powerful germ killers of modern times.

The scientist and his colleague were Dr. Howard Walter Florey and Dr. Ernest Boris Chain. They shared the Nobel Prize with Sir Alexander Fleming, who discovered the mold from which penicillin is extracted.

Practical Achievement

This points up the contributions and practical achievements of the nation's great foundations even with such comparatively trivial outlays as the $1,250 involved in the penicillin project.

The interest of state and Federal legislative committees in the operations of the country's philanthropic foundations has focused public attention on these organizations and prompts a closer look at their origins, purposes, practices, resources and accomplishments.

What is a foundation? It is a non-profit organization set up by an individual or group of individuals, usually endowed with substantial sums of money or valuable securities or properties, whose capital or income or both are to be used solely for charitable purposes.

Foundations are generally licensed by states as corporations and are occasionally chartered by the Federal government, and may be called by various names such as trusts, institutes, endowments, funds or charities. If they conform to their announced philanthropic purposes, they are exempt from local, state and Federal taxes. Since 1950, all such organizations desiring tax exemption must file applications with the Internal Revenue Service.

Authorities differ on the number and resources of these groups. Dr. Ernest V. Hollis, of the United States Office of Education, told a Congressional committee in 1952 that there were from 32,000 to 35,000 such organizations with total resources of $7,000,000,000. A recent Reece committee report placed the number at about 7,000 and resources around $7,500,000,000. The Internal Revenue Service list of organizations granted tax-exemption status totals more than 56,000. This list, which admittedly is not policed thoroughly, includes many religious as well as charitable organizations.

$300,000,000 Annual Gifts

The disbursement of these foundations were estimated by a Reece committee researcher at around $300,000,000 a year. Dr. H. Rowan Gaither jr, president of the Ford Foundation, said, however, that only $168,000,000 is given each year by foundations. This is only 3 per cent of the total of $5,600,000,000 distributed annually by private philanthropies in America.

During the whole of the nineteenth century only seven persons of wealth established foundations in the United States. In the first decade of the twentieth century, twelve new foundations were established and at least twenty-two in the second. Thereafter, during the era of great foundations, they increased by leaps and bounds.

Before the advent of the big foundations, endowments were generally confined to some limited purpose such as support of a school or a church, care of orphans, crippled children or the indigent aged.

The immense resources of the newer organizations, however, required broader fields of activity and their purposes were extended to "improvement of social and living conditions," "promoting the advancement and diffusion of knowledge," and "promoting the well-being of mankind and understanding between nations throughout the world."

Research Venture Capital

They are usually supervised by boards of trustees, generally unpaid and free from political controls of legislative and pressure groups, and carefully chosen for breadth and diversity of interests. While a few have research organizations of their own, most of them try to achieve their objectives through grants to universities, research centers, hospitals, fellowships, scientists, scholars and organizations active and experienced in chosen fields.

Education and research in the physical and social sciences are the most favored fields of the foundations today. The greatest amount of foundation money in recent years has been spent in education, with medicine and public health running a close second, and social welfare third.

They are concerned with preventing human ills rather than immediate palliation of them. They provide the venture capital for research and discovery, and the scientists, scholars and other workers provide the intelligence.

On the basis of the latest figures available, the ten largest foundations in the nation have combined total resources of $1,590,125,901. About seventy have resources of $10,000,000 or more.

Although established at different times in the last half-century, they have given away in varied forms of philanthropy during these five decades a total of about $1,400,000,000.

The leader of these giant charities, in point of assets, is the Ford Foundation, with current resources in excess of $518,000,000.

The largest total of benefactions was made by the Rockefeller group with their much older history. These include the Rockefeller Foundation, General Education Board and the China Medical Board. Their combined disbursements over fifty years amounted to $828,830,379. These do not include the personal benefactions of John D. Rockefeller sr., John D. Rockefeller jr., or the Rockefeller Brothers Fund.

Top Ten Foundations

	Established	Current Estimated Assets	Total Grants
Ford Foundation	1936	$518,000,000	$151,000,000
Rockefeller Foundation	1913	$344,492,852	$828,830,379
General Education Board	1903
China Medical Board	1928
Carnegie Institution	1902	$253,519,258	$243,589,636
Advancement of Teaching	1905
International Peace	1910
Carnegie Corp.	1911
Duke Endowment	1924	$105,924,742	$60,337,540
Commonwealth Fund (Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness, Edward S. Harkness)	1918	$85,168,614	$32,353,189
Kresge Foundation	1924	$85,149,762	$18,860,601
W. K. Kellogg Foundation	1930	$66,550,323	$32,536,405
Charles Hayden Foundation	1937	$52,292,865	$22,536,405
Mayo Association, Inc. (Mayo Clinic, Rochester)	1919	$44,536,164	$8,664,914
E. R. Higgins Scien. Trust	1948	$34,491,321	$2,640,000
Totals		$1,590,125,901	$1,401,349,069

14c 1954

GENERAL

Probing the Foundations

Says Influence Good But Some Are Useless

By RAYMOND MOLEY

The House Committee on Tax-Exempt Foundations, headed by B. Carroll Reece of Tennessee, has had an exceedingly bad press, especially in some New York and Washington papers. The New York Times has been especially vehement.

I do not know how much care and research the editorialist on The New York Times devoted to this subject. But I submit that it seemed important enough to me to read the entire hearings of the committee from March to June, to talk at length with the capable chief counsel, Rene Wormser of New York, and to read every word of the hearings of the 1952 Cox committee on the same subject. I might add that some time ago I served for four years as the executive director of a foundation and have, in the years since, carefully followed the activities of the major foundations, especially in the field of social science.

OF THE MANY charges that some witnesses made against foundations, some may well be irrelevant and impossible of substantiation. It is true also that some witnesses were most responsible people and made legitimate and serious criticisms of some foundation activities.

The hearings were terminated because Wayne Hays, a minority member, made orderly procedure impossible. In practically every session he interrupted scores of times with irrelevant speeches and insulting comments about witnesses and members of the committee. From time to time when called to order by the chairman he would threaten to terminate the hearings by walking out. Reece was unable to maintain a quorum in such instances because of the almost continuous nonattendance of his two Republican colleagues. This behavior by Hays was, so far as I know, without a parallel in congressional hearings.

The Cox committee barely scratched the surface of the subject.

Since a foundation of the sort within the scope of this committee's inquiry enjoys a tax exemption, the money it spends is for the most part public money. Every dollar of its exemption must be made up for by the taxpayers. The public is entitled to periodic accounting of how this money is being spent.

The Reece committee has estimated that there are about 7000 foundations in the United States, with assets of about $7.5 billion. This power is an immense and to a large degree a decisive influence in the whole field of higher education. It also reaches into the lower schools and into practically all private welfare activities.

MOST OF THIS vast influence has been good. the Rockefeller Foundation, to cite only one example, particularly in its earlier and major work in medical research and education and in public health, has been a mighty force. It has been in the field of the so-called social sciences and modernized education that most of the mistakes of foundations have been made. For it is easy in such fields of human knowledge, where there are no truly scientific standards for guidance, to skip into unwholesome propaganda and political activities.

Other undesirable features have appeared. Some foundations have been mere tax-dodging affairs. Some have been narrowly conceived and dedicated to strange and useless ends.

Congress has a duty to check the operation of the tax-exemptions which it has granted and also to provide legislation to guide the treasury. The Reece committee, or rather a majority thereof, can well dispel much of the misapprehension created by its critics by producing a judicious and constructive report based upon the best that the public hearings produced and upon the written statements of the foundations themselves.

(Released by The Associated Newspapers)

14c 1954

SCHOLARSHIP FUND TO BENEFIT SOUTH

Rockefeller Grant to Be Used to Improve Graduate Study in Twelve States

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 21—The Council of Southern Universities will meet next month to work out details of a multi-million-dollar scholarship program to raise the level of graduate study in the South's universities and colleges.

The program, to cost an estimated $2,500,000 over the next ten years, will be financed by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation's general education board. The Tennessee Secretary of State, G. Edward Friar, this week issued a nonprofit, general welfare corporation charter to the council to assist administration of the grant.

Dr. Leonard Beach, dean of the Vanderbilt University Graduate School here, said the exact amount of the grant has not been determined, adding: "It will be a substantial grant and will be in the millions."

Details to Be Announced

He said the money was part of the final liquidation of the general education board, an operation expected to require about ten years.

Details of the scholarship plan and its administration will be decided when the council meets some time in September, possibly in New York. At that time, Dr. Beach said, about twenty educators will be named to a board to administer the program and a director will be named to function as executive officer.

He indicated the director already had been chosen but said an announcement on this point would await the council's meeting.

Scholarships will be offered first at the graduate level only, though they may be extended later to undergraduates. They will be available to all Southern colleges and universities with graduate schools in at least twelve Southern States and possibly more.

Negroes to Be Included

States definitely included in the program at present are Arkansas, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Kentucky, Mississippi, North and South Carolina. Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Dr. Beach said it would be premature to say how many institutions would participate or how many scholarships might be offered. The scholarships are expected to be worth up to $1,800 a year. They will be available to both white and Negro students and to both academic and technical institutions.

Eight universities are participating in formation of the council, but Dr. Beach emphasized that there would be no preference for these institutions in the awarding of scholarships. These universities are Vanderbilt University, the Universities of North Carolina, Virginia and Texas, Emory, Tulane and Duke Universities and Rice Institute.

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD

14c 1954

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD

$14C,000 Three-Year Grant to provide in-service training for Negro Teachers

Establishes $140,000 Grant For Teachers

Call Kansas City, Mo.

P. O. Sec. 11-19-54

NEW YORK. — The General Education Board last week announced the establishment of a $140,000 three-year grant to provide in-service training for Negro teachers under the auspices of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, a philanthropic organization concerned with the problems of Negro education. Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, former president of Tuskegee Institute, is director of the Fund.

The fund will administer the grant in cooperation with Howard university in two phases.

One aspect will be a 10-week's workshop program during the next three summers; the other phase will be directed towards providing intensive in-service training in the basic scences for hgh school teachers.

Under the program, a total of 24 selected hgh school teachers will receive scholarships from the fund.

Through the program the fund hopes to improve the training of a considerable number of Negro high school teachers, and also to demonstrate ways of remedying present weaknesses in the secondary education of Negroes.

Two other activities of the fund also have received support from the GE board through grants is aid made during the third quarter. The first of those, a $6,680 award, financed an exploratory study of ways of improving the secondary and higher education of Negroes. A second grant will provide funds through 1955 for an intern training program for business officers in a number of colleges.

14c 1954

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD

E BOARD ESTABLISHES $140,000 GRANT FOR NEGRO TEACHERS

The General Education Board last week announced the establishment of a $140,000 three-year grant to provide in-service training for Negro teachers under the auspices of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, a philanthropic organization concerned with the problems of Negro education. Dr. Frederick D. Patterson former president of Tuskegee Institute, is director of the Fund.

The fund will administer the grant in cooperation with Howard University in two phases.

One aspect will be a 10-week's workship program during the next threes ummers; the other phase will be directed towards providing intensive in-service training in the basic sciences for high school teachers.

Under the program, a total of 24 selected high school teachers will receive scholarships from the fund.

Through the program the fund hopes to improve the training of a considerable number of Negro high school teachers, and also to demonstrate ways of remedying present weaknesses in the secondary education of Negroes.

Two other activities of the fund also have received support from the GE board through grants in aid made during the third quarter. The first of these, a $6,680 award, financed an exploratory study of ways of improving the secondary and higher education of Negroes. A second grant will provide funds through 1955 for an intern training program for business officers in a number of colleges.

WILLIAM PENN INSTITUTE: Four high school graduates—three from Philadelphia and one from Virginia—were recently awarded scholarships by the Alumni Association of the William Penn Business Institute and are pursuing courses in stenography and junior accounting at the institute. Studying under the grants are Corrine E. Gilliam, a graduate of Edward Wyatt High School, Emporia, Va.; Thelma N. Wilson, Levenia C. Jackson and Jacqueline L. Walton, graduates of Box Vocational, William Penn High and Girls High, respectively.

SHAW UNIVERSITY: A number of activities will highlight Founders' Day here Nov. 19. Topping the calendar will be services marking the 89th anniversary of the institution. Delivering the principal address at a chapel service will be Dr. Ruth Grett Quarles of Baltimore, Md., a Shaw graduate...Later in the day, the faculty, alumni and friends will gather around the grave of Dr. Henry Tupper, founder and first president for a memorial service to the pioneer leader. Miss Margaret E. Roscoe, "lMss Shaw of 1954-55" will lay a wreath on the grave of the former president.

Other events include a Founders' Day dinner, reception and the annual executive board meeting.

SOUTH CAROLINA COLLEGE won 29 entries in the Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges, for 1954-54, according to a recent announcement.

Those winning the distinction were graduating seniors and first year students exhibiting high scholarship and leadership abilities. The electees are:

Majorie L. Alston, Rosaline L. Duncan, Yvonne P. Green, Angie E. Holmes, E. Jacqueline Jenkins and Marlene L. Linton, all of Charleston; Sarah W. Hubbard, Nathaniel Irvin, Benjamin F. Payton and Paul R. Webber, all of Orangeburg; Carroll V. Bing, Jr., Allendale; Doris V. Funnye, Georgetown; New Hickman, Bishopville; Vermelle Jamison, Islandton; June E. Jenkins, Ruffin; Willie C. McMillan, Bamberg; James W. Norris, Jonesville; Eleanor E. Reid, York; Jeanette Pinckney, Awendaw; and Samuel E. Watson, Camden.

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY (Mo.): Two essay contests on journalism and integration were announced by the school of journalism, sponsor of the projects. The first contest, based on the subject, "What I Think of the Newspapers in My Town," highlights the fifth annual National Scholastic Essay Contest. Limited to 1,000 words each, the contest is open to high school students throughout the United States. Deadline for filing is March 1, 1955.

The second contest also open to high school students on the same basis, features the subject, "What School Integration in Missouri Means to My Community." Deadline for this contest is Feb. 1, 1955 .....Prices range from $100 to $50.

NORTH CAROLINA COLLEGE: A recent addition to the NCC faculty is Mrs. Angie K. Corley of Washington, D. C., who has been appointed to the college's home economics department. Mrs. Corley is a temporary replacement of Miss Gladys Cooper who is on leave of absence. The new economics teacher received her B. S. from South Carolina A & M College and M. A. from New York University.

When the Southeastern District Home Demonstration Clubs Federation held its 10th annual meeting here last week, Mrs. Marie C. Moffitt, ininerant home economic teacher at NCC, played a prominent role at the conference. She addressed the group in the subject, "Today's Home Builds Tomorrow's World"....Mrs. Leah Powell of Sampson county is president of the organization.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY: Benjamin F. Kraft, superintendent of building and grounds, will receive an M. S. in education from Columbia University, school officials announced here last week. Kraft is a Southern graduate and has been employed by the school since 1938.

He is a member of the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity, Prince Hall Masons and the American Legion.

SAVANNAH STATE COLLEGE Veterans' Club met recently and elected the following officers for the 1954-55 school year.

James O. Thomas, Jr., president; William N. Weston, vice president; Delores Atterberry, secretary; Willie B. Hooks, assistant secretary; Er-Bruce, parliamentarian; Wilbert Lewis, chaplain; Charles W. Alderman, sergeant-at-arms, and Evans Jemison, reporter...Other news: the college announced the appointment of a recent graduate to its administrative staff. She is Miss Emmelyn Franklyn, appointed clerk in the comptroller's office.

A & T COLLEGE: Four local cadets last week received citations for high academic achievement at members of the Air Force and Army ROTC units. Receiving badges at a ceremonial review were Cadets Felix Barbour, Roanoke, Va.; Edwin H. Cook, Wilson; Wesley C. Clark, Dunn, and Linis L. Stuart, Waynesboro Va.

CENTRAL STATE COLLEGE last week received notification that the division of fine arts has been certified by the Ohio State Department of Education and is now authorized to offer the M. A. in education. Notice of approval came from R. M. Eyman, superintendent of public instruction.

PRAIRIE VIEW COLLEGE: "Let's Read" will be the theme of a Book Bazaar to be sponsored by the R. Banks Library of the college Nov. 14. More than 500 books will be on display at the public affair.....

Head Coach W. J. "Billy" Nicks, who lead the Prairie View Panthers to a national football championship last year, was cited at homecoming ceremonies last week for his services athletic director. A $500 United States saving bond was presented to "Billy" as a "token of esteem" by T. R. Solomon, chairman of the Billy Nicks Recognition Committee at half time during the Prairie View and Texas College game. The Panthers then proceeded to hand Texas College a 19-6 defeat.

Handy Foundation opens NYC office

NEW YORK—(ANP)— A new national office for the W. C. Handy Foundation for the Blind, Inc. has been opened here at 55 W. 42nd st., it was announced last week.

The national office of the foundation offers service to blind people throughout the nation. There is a local chapter in New York which serves the Bronx-Manhattan area. The foundation plans to establish other chapters where ever needed.

HERBERT HOOVER FOUNDATION

14c 1954

FOUNDATION FORMED FOR HERBERT HOOVER

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 1—The Herbert Hoover Foundation, an organization pledged to preserve the birthplace of the former President and to "advance the educational, scientific and public welfare principles for which he stands," was incorporated here Wednesday.

Rear Admiral Lewis L. Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and secretary to Mr. Hoover during his Presidency, heads the foundation.

The humble frame cottage in which Mr. Hoover was born eighty years ago is situated in a twenty-acre park at West Branch, a small village ten miles east of Iowa City. The cottage, which still contains many of its original furnishings, has been maintained as a memorial by the Hoover Birthplace Society.

The foundation is an outgrowth of the society, John M. Henry, vice chairman of the new group's executive committee, said. Within a year the foundation plans to take over the development and operation of the birthplace site.

No formal agenda of projects has been drawn up yet for the foundation, but consideration will be given to the establishment of scholarships and teaching chairs at colleges and sponsorship of publications, Mr. Henry added.

Details of these plans will be discussed next month, when the executive committee and trustees meet here.

'To Further His Ideals'

Herbert Hoover Foundation Incorporated at Des Moines

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 1 (AP).—Incorporation papers were filed here today for the Herbert Hoover Foundation, Inc., by a group of persons who said they wish to "further the ideals of Herbert Hoover."

Rear Adm. Lewis L. Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and secretary to Mr. Hoover during his Presidency, was listed as chairman of the foundation. Other officers and trustees included nationally known newspaper and magazine publishers and industrialists.

Projects to be undertaken will not be decided upon until initial meetings of the executive committee and the annual meeting of the board of trustees have been held, said John M. Henry, director of public affairs for "The Des Moines Register and Tribune." Mr. Henry was listed as vice-chairman of the foundation's executive committee, and William B. Anderson, of West Branch, Iowa, as chairman.

Committee Members

Among those on the executive committee were: John D. Farrington, of Chicago, president of the Rock Island Railroad; Dr. Virgil M. Hancher, of Iowa City, president of the University of Iowa; Fred Maytag 2d, of Newton, Iowa, head of the Maytag washer interests, and De Witt Wallace, of Pleasantville, N. Y., publisher of "Reader's Digest" magazine.

Two of Mr. Hoover's sons, Herbert jr., of Washington, and Allan, of New York, were named as vice-chairman and executive committee member, respectively.

Trustees named in the incorporation papers are:

MRS. GEORGE AKERSON, Wellesley Hills, Mass.
BEN S. ALLEN, Palo Alto.
WILLIAM B. ANDERSON, West Branch, Iowa.
WILBER BRUCKER, Washington.
DR. L. R. CHANDLER, San Francisco.
J. REUBEN CLARK jr., Salt Lake City.
MYERS Y. COOPER, Cincinnati.
GARDNER COWLES, New York.
JAY N. DARLING, Des Moines.
RALPH EVANS, Davenport, Iowa.
JOHN D. FARRINGTON, Chicago.
FRANK L. FETZER, Denver.
GEORGE C. FOERSTNER, Amana, Iowa.
MICHAEL GALLAGHER, Cleveland.
ROBERT K. GOODWIN, Des Moines.
GEN. LESLIE R. GROVES, Darien, Conn.
HOWARD HALL, Cedar Rapids.
DR. VIRGIL M. HANCHER, Iowa City.
H. J. HEINZ jr., Pittsburgh.
JOHN M. HENRY, Des Moines.
CHRISTIAN A. HERTER, Boston.
JOHN B. HOLLISTER, Cincinnati.
HERBERT HOOVER jr., Washington.
ALLAN HOOVER, New York.
CHARLES F. HORNER, Kansas City.
ROY HOWARD, New York.
PATRICK J. HURLEY, Santa Fe N. M.
COMDR. E. L. JAHNCKE, New Orleans.
JESSE JONES, Houston, Tex.
H. V. KALTENBORN, New York.
CLARENCE B. KELLAND, Port Washington, N. Y.
DR. JULIUS KLEIN, Washington.
HERMAN M. LANGWORTHY, Kansas City.
HANFORD MacNIDER, Mason City Iowa.
FRANK MASON, New York.
A. C. MATTEI, San Francisco.
FRED MAYTAG 2D, Newton, Iowa.
M. M. MEYERS, Omaha.
LESLIE MILLER, Cheyenne, Wyo.
RAYMOND MOLEY, New York.
FELIX MORLEY, Washington.
MAURICE PATE, New York.
EDGAR M. QUEENY, St. Louis.
L. C. RUMMELS, West Branch, Iowa.
ARCH W. SHAW, Winnetka, Ill.
JOE W. SMITH, Council Bluffs, Iowa.
GEORGE SOKOLSKY, New York.
HARRISON SPANGLER, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.
VINCENT STARZINGER, Des Moines.
DR. J. E. WALLACE STERLING, Palo Alto.
LEWIS L. STRAUSS, Washington.
R. DOUGLAS STUART, Ottawa.
W. H. VANDER PLOEGH, Battle Creek.
DE WITT WALLACE, Pleasantville, N. Y.
GEN. A. C. WEDEMEYER, New York.

Fine example—Among the Jefferson County industries that underwrites college educations for promising youth is the Birmingham Slag Co.'s Ireland Foundation, Inc. This year's winner of four-year scholarships to the colleges of their choice are (left to right) Leon Minor, Oak Grove; Terry Pierce, Ramsay; Bobby George, Ensley, and Joe L. Ezell, Hooper City.

Training programs—

Industry and education walk together toward great future

Alabama industry and education are walking hand in hand toward a greater future for this sovereign state, truly "The Heart of Dixie."

This industry-education love affair is fostered by mutual need, cooperation and faith in the future.

The story is woven by industrial minds alert to their dependence on the continuing supply of trained young men and women, and by youth with an ambitious eye to the promise of tomorrow in its home state.

And the ultimate aim of both is the same: Bigger and better industry for bigger and better schools, training programs and jobs. They are interlocked.

A great number of representatives of industry are currently studying Alabama as a possible site for new or additional plants. Quite a few of them have contacted the Trade and Industrial Education Service to see what assistance industry will get here in training people for jobs in these new plants and factories.

HERE ARE SOME of the ways the education service helps further industry and education in Alabama:

1. The employing firm may select the people who are to be employed and put them on "trainee's wages" during an intensive training period. Facilities owned by the schools may be used if available. Trade and Industrial Education funds may also be used to train qualified instructors.

2. Special classes can be arranged for people already employed by industry for their further training and increased value to their employer.

3. Other special classes can be set up to raise the general educational level of employes, in high school subjects.

4. Further training of foremen and supervisors.

5. Recruiting and training replacements, a long range plan for industry that needs a steady supply of new workers.

This statewide program, directed by J. F. Ingram of Montgomery, is just one way Alabama extends a glad hand of welcome to new industry, which in turn will help boost Alabama schools to a proud place among the nation's schools.

One way is through scholarships which enable deserving high school graduates to go to college and prepare themselves for careers in industry.

The Birmingham Slag Co. is a good example. It's Ireland Foundation Inc., each year sends four Jefferson County youths to college for further training.

The young man selected — white and Negro — are selected on their scholastic records, character and personality, and financial need.

The scholarships are maintained at the school of the student's choice so long as he maintains his scholastic record. He is under no obligation to the Foundation whatever, its trustees stress, other than to keep his record on the level of achievement for which he was selected.

These are but two examples of the continuing friendship, and interdependence, of Alabama education and industry.

Joe Louis Ezell Wins Ireland Foundation Scholarship Ward

Joe Louis Ezell, senior at Hooper City High School, Sayreton, has been awarded an Ireland Foundation Scholarship by the Ireland Foundation, Inc.

He plans to enter Talladega College next year where he will major in mathematics and minor in secondary education. He is the son of Mrs. Lessie Ezell and the late L. W. Ezell of Tarrant City.

Mr. Ezell is president of the Rhythm Club, treasurer of the student council, secretary of the Boys Glee Club, member of the National Honor Society and of the choir at Hooper City High School.

Meantime he is vice president of the Junior Choir and is a Sunday School teacher at the Mount Herman A. M. E. Zion Church.

JOE LOUIS EZELL

$6,500 in prizes to 6 Tuskeegeans

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Six members of the 1954 graduating class at Tuskegee Institute here won James Foundation scholarships for graduate studies at Tuskegee and other universities. The students and their scholarship allocations are:

Euphestine Clark, Tuskegee Institute, $1,400 for study at the University of Chicago; Rosa Lara Crumes, Tampa, Fla., $900 for study at the University of Michigan; Willie B. Dillard, Greenwood, Miss., $500 for study at Tuskegee Institute;

Carrie B. Hayes, Tampa, Fla., $1,400 for study at the University of Illinois and Gwendolyn F. Martinez, Shreveport, La., $1,400 and Carole Toye Patterson, Tuskegee Institute, $900 for study at schools to be determined later.

The James Foundation provides a sizeable portion of the institute's fund for fellowships

Church & School

14 c

The James E. Shepard Memorial Foundation of North Carolina college at Durham, will benefit from proceeds of the opera presentation of "The Medium," authored by Charles Monetti and which will be staged in Duke Auditorium on the campus, Monday, May 10. The cast will include local musicians and students and teachers at the college. Mrs. Neil Hunter, music librarian at the school and a teacher, will be presented in the title role. Defender p. 7

From the headquarters of the American Bible Society in Richmond, Va., announcement was made that the National Baptist Trainipg Union and Sunday School Congress will sponsor a Nation-wide Bible reading period, May 2-9. Both the BTU and the Congress urged all churches schools and related institutions to take part in this spiritual venture. Dr. W. H. Jernagin is president of the BTU. Champ Sec.

In Daytona Beach, Fla., it was announced that the white Baptist Women's Missionary Union has passed a resolution to invite Negro boys to attend its Baptist Boys' meeting in Tampa in October. Armand Ball of Jacksonville, secretary of the WMU Boys' division said the delegates will eat, sleep, work and play together at the two-day interracial meeting.

Mrs. Clishie Pettigrew Howell, English teacher at Booker T. Washington High school, Atlanta, Ga., is one of the 18 outstanding high school teachers who recently received John Hay Whitney awards for study in the Humanities at Columbia and Yale universities. The awards are for the academic year 1954-55. Sat. 5-1-54

Dr. William A. Banner, associate professor of Christian history at Howard University's School of Religion, will return to Yale, his alma mater, during the 1954-55 school year as a visiting professor of Christian ethics in the Yale University Divinity school.

Shepard Foundation In Founder's Day Meeting

Waived, 16 attended

14c

DURHAM, N. C. — The annual membership meeting of the James E. Shepard Memorial Foundation will be held in the Music Assembly of North Carolina College's Administration Building at 4 p. m. on Wednesday, November 3.

The meeting will be part of a day-long celebration in honor of the late Dr .James E. Shepard, founder and first president of the North Carolina College at Durham.

Dr. J. MO Hubbard, Sr., secretary of the Board of Trustees of N. C. College, is president of the Foundation and will preside at the meeting.

Other officers are H. M. Michaux, vice-president; Mrs. V. G. Davis, secretary; Asa T. Spaulding, treasurer; and James T. Taylor executive secretary.

The Foundation has set up scholarships and proposes to erect a statue in Dr. Shepard's honor. Contributors of $5 or more to the Foundations' funds are eligible to attend the general membership meeting.

18 Teachers Receive John Hay Whitney Study Awards

NEW YORK — Eighteen outstanding American High School teachers have been selected by the John Hay Whitney Foundation as recipients of awards for study in the Humanities at Columbia and Yale Universities. The awards are for the academic year of 1954-1955. They give the recipients an opportunity to study under great teachers and to explore fields of knowledge which their present duties and the formal requirements of usual academic courses of study towards a degree have prevented them from doing.

The teachers selected for the program, which is in its third year, are evenly divided between men and women and are drawn from the teaching fields of English, Social Studies, Latin, French, Science, Music, and Art. The program brings together men and women from Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Washington and Maine and enables the teachers to share each others ideas and experiences and to obtain working familiarity with new subject matters.

Nine John Hay Fellows will study at Columbia University, New York City, and nine at Yale University, New Heaven, Conn. Each Fellow will follow a schedule of courses best suited to his or her needs and interests.

Each John Hay Fellow receives individual stipends covering the recipient's school salary for the year 1954-1955 in addition to full tuition costs and transportation expenses for the teacher and the teacher's dependents.

Forty former John Hay Fellows have already returned to their teaching posts in the two years that the program has been in operation. These Fellows have come from school systems in selected states located in the North West, Middle West, South and North East regions.

In announcing its selections, the Foundation pointed out that it has sought teachers who are both eager to learn and eager to teach and who have shown a marked inclination to devote their careers to the special needs of secondary school instruction. A minimum of five years actual classroom experience at the Senior High School level is required of each candidate. The age limits are 30 to 45. The teachers selected will not take professional or methodological courses, nor will courses be taken for credit toward a degree. The teacher's own classroom specialty will not make up the major share of his work study. All Fellows, upon completion of the year, will return to their home schools and to their normal teaching programs.

From the year's experience it is hoped that each Fellow will derive a broader vision of knowledge as a whole, an increased awareness of the interelation of subject matters, and a refreshed conviction of the general human values which originally led him to direct his life's work toward the guidance of youth. His future role has been described by Professor Harry J. Carman, chairman of the Humanities Committee o fthe oFundation, as one of "quiet thoughtful leadership" within his own community. Other members of the Committee are William C. De Vane of Yale College, Charles S. Johnson of Fisk University, Russell Lynes of Harper's Magazine, Thomas C. Mendenhall of Yale University, Marjorie Hope Nicolson of Columbia University, Ordway Tead of the Board of Education of New York City, and Cyril W. Woolcock of Hunter College High School.

The followships are named in honor of John Hay, Secretary of State under President William McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt. Secretary Hay was the maternal grandfather of Mr. John Hay Whitney, president of the Foundation.

The John Hay Fellows to attend each university are listed below, together with their teaching subject and home schools:

COLUMBIA

Brown, James Harlan, science, French, A. G. Parrish High School, Selma, Ala.; Corbin, Miss Lucia Gray, art, Roosevelt High School, Atlanta Georgia; Davidson, Miss Carolyn, English, Center High School, Troup County, Gabbettville, Georgia; Dolmetsch, Carl Richard, Jr. English, Oak Park & River Forest High School, Oak Park, Ill.; Howell, Mrs. Nishie Pettigrew, English, Booker T. Washington High School, Atlanta, Georgia; Hunt, Hubert Charles, science, Bellingham High School, Bellingham, Washington; Klobucher, Miss Marion, English, Ellensburg High School, Ellensburg, Washington; McAuliffe, Miss Ruth Gregory, history, Latin, Academy of Richmond County, Augusta, Georgia; Rumble, Douglas, Jr, music, Henry Grady High School, Atlanta, Georgia.

YALE

Bolam, George Eugene, English, Hartford City High School, Hartford City, Indiana; Bruner, Miss Mary Alice, American history, Shields High School, Seymour, Indiana. Bush, Miss Sara M., English Centralia Township High School, Centralia, Illinois; Cox, Robert Thurston, Language Arts, Social Science, R. A. Long High School, Longview, Washington; Davis, Jerome Leonard, English, Central High School. Fort Wayne, Indiana; Dryden, Miss Wilma June, English, dramatics, Urbana High School, Urbana, Ill.; Gioannini, Miss Annette English, Latin, Gloom Township High School Chicago Heights, Ill.; Greaves, Frederick John, biology, Roosevelt High School, Seattle, Washington; Rutledge, William Kelly, music, Houlton High School, Houlton, Maine.

Three Teachers Win Awards

Three Atlanta teachers are among 18 teachers from American high schools to win awards from the John Hay Whitney Foundation for study in the humanities at Columbia and Yale Universities.

They are Mrs. Nishie Pettigrew Howell, teacher of sophomore and junior English classes at Booker T. Washington School; Miss Lucia Gray Corbin, art teacher at Roosevelt High, and Douglas Rumble Jr., teacher of music appreciation and choral work at Henry Grady High.

These three teachers from the Atlanta Public School System plan to spend the academic year of 1954-55 as fellows at Columbia University, New York.

Win Opportunity Fellowships

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — Some 17 Negroes were among 48 persons winning Opportunity fellowships for the 1954-'55 school year it was announced this week by the John Hay Whitney foundation, donors of the awards.

This raised the total to 103 Negroes among 243 winners during the five years of the foundation's existence. The foundation is a kind of successor to the famed Rosenwald fund of some years ago.

Winners of the 1954-'55 awards were:

Miss Yvonne Patricia Carter, Philadelphia, to continue study at Harvard university law school; James Ellis Christopher, Jersey City, N. J., to continue work toward a master's in geology at Ohio State university;

Joseph H. French, Columbus, Ohio, student at the College of Medicine, Ohio State university, to begin internship at Philadelphia General hospital; Gilbert Harris, Jr., Garden City Park, Long Island, N. Y., recently discharged from the armed forces, to continue art studies at Art Students League of New York and study and paint in Mexico;

Mrs. Dorothy Esther Hoover, Hope, Ark., graduate student, University of Arkansas, to complete work for doctorate in math at University of Michigan; Miss Rhea Jackson, New York, to continue study of voice in Europe;

James Atwood Jones, Boston, graduate student, Columbia university, for work toward doctorate in social psychology, Harvard university; Mrs. Mary Ruth Lowe, New York, Brooklyn law school student, to work toward master of law degree, Harvard university;

Thomas Orestes Meeks, Jr., radiological physicist, to start doctorate research program in physics at Polytechnic institute of Brooklyn; George Bodine Oliver, Chicago, continue study toward doctorate in literature, Pennsylvania State university;

Gregory Frame Simms, Newton, Kas., work toward master's in voice at Conservatory of Paris, France; David Leandor Stratmon, Southport, N. C., completion of dissertation in Liberia for doctorate in political science from University of Michigan;

Ubert C. Vincent, New York, graduate study for doctorate in clinical psychology at Columbia university; Miss Mary Elizabeth Williamson, Washington, D. C., Mount Holyoke college student, master's in literature at Columbia;

Mrs. Marie Villa Wood, New York, Howard university history instructor, complete dissertation in Haiti for doctorate in history from the American university; James Edward Jones, Little Rock, Ark., continue law study at University of Wisconsin, and Dr. Claudius Shropshire, continue second year's residency in surgery at Wadsworth General hospital, Los Angeles.

Robert C. Weaver, director of the fellowship program, praised the work of such past winners as Mattiwilda Dobbs and Samuel Cullers as examples of how these awards "discover persons of exceptional promise, accelerate their development and afford a democratic society the chance to utilize more fully their talents."

Distinguished scholars to Negro schools

NEW YORK — Professors under the Whitney Visiting Professors Program for 1954-55 of the John Hay Whitney Foundation have been appointed to Bennett college, at Greensboro, N. C. and Morehouse college at Atlanta, Ga.

The program is designed to make use of the talents of distinguished professors who are about to retire. Under it, the teachers spend a full academic year at independent, liberal arts colleges which could not otherwise afford to hire them.

Dr. Manmatha Nath Chatterjee, appointed to Bennett, was professor of social science and philosophy at Antioch college. Morehouse appointee Wilbert Snow was professor of English Literature at Weslevan university.

Fourth John Hay Whitney Program Is Announced

Wired p. 3 Atlanta, Ga. 11/6

NEW YORK — The John Hay Whitney Foundation announced today that nominations for the 1955-56 John Hay Fellows Program will be welcomed on behalf of qualified teachers in the public high schools in the States of Alabama, Georgia, Indiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Tennessee, Vermont and Washington. A total of twenty fellowships will be awarded to teachers from the public high schools of these nine states for studies in the field of the humanities. The awards provided by the Foundation will include full salary, tuition and transportation. Men and women selected for these awards will participate in special programs which each Fellow will develop in cooperation with the faculties of Columbia and Yale University. Fellows will audit lectures or participate in selected courses, but it is not the intention of the program that work be taken for credit toward academic degrees.

Teachers of all subjects who meet the following eligibility requirements may be nominated. The candidates must: (1) Be teaching currently in one of the designated states; (2) Be between the ages of 30 and 45 at the time application is made; (3) Have at least five years of high school teaching experience, the most recent two of which shall have been in the present employing school system; (4) Be permanent instructors who spend at least half of their assigned school time in actual classroom teaching; (5) Have demonstrated the personal and professional qualifications which will enable them to profit by the year of study, and to stimulate their colleagues and students upon their return.

While such fields as languages, literature, social studies and the fine arts are most commonly associated with the humanities, nominations will be welcomed for all eligible teachers of other subjects who have shown their broad interest in the humanistic tradition.

As in the past three years during which the program has been in operation, each teacher accepted for study as a John Hay Fellow must be granted a year's leave by his employing school system and must agree to return to it following his university work for at least one year. All applicants are nominated by the local superintendent of schools or other official who is in a position to help plan a proposed program of graduate studies and to utilize the Fellows' new experience upon their return to high school teaching.

In announcing the program, Harry J. Carman, Chairman of the Division of the Humanities, said: "The current discussions concerning our public schools emphasize the importance of finding and encouraging gifted and well-trained teachers. The Foundation is again able to assist twenty outstanding public high school teachers so that they may spend a year studying the humanities. It is our hope that they will return to their classrooms refreshed intellectually and spiritually and be a source of inspiration to both their students and their colleagues."

The second twenty John Hay Fellows are returning this fall to their teaching posts; the third group of eighteen Fellows will be in residence at the two universities this fall. These groups represent the fields of Art, English, Dramatics, History and Social Science, Latin, Music, French, and Science. The Fellows have come from school systems in selected states located in the Northwest. Middle West, South and Middle Atlantic regions. Because of the measure of the promise which has been revealed in these regions, the nine states for the fourth year program have been selected from among those regions which have participated previously.

Inquiries from teachers and administrators should be directed to the Division of the Humanities, John Hay Whitney Foundation, 630 Fifth Avenue, New York 20, New York. The deadline for receipt of completed nominations is December 15, 1954.

EDUCATION IN REVIEW

Some Facts About the Major Foundations Attacked in a House Committee Report

By BENJAMIN FINE

The major educational foundations came under attack last week on charges that they are financing "ideas and practices incompatible with the fundamental concepts of our Constitution." Spokesmen for the foundations promptly denied the accusations.

The charges were made in a staff report to the Special House Committee to Investigate Tax-Exempt Foundations. The report said that grants by foundations had been used for directing education "toward an international viewpoint and disregarding the traditions to which it had been dedicated," and for changing school curricula "to the point where they sometimes denied the principles underlying the American way of life."

The report, based on a six-month study by the staff of the House committee, was sharply criticized. Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio and a member of the committee, said he felt it was based on conclusions reached, at least tentatively, before the formal research even began.

Dean Rusk, president of the Rockefeller Foundation, said his group is looking forward to the opportunity to present its views at public hearings of the House committee which got under way in Washington last week and will continue on Tuesday.

"The foundation," he said, "fully acknowledges its public responsibility arising from its charter, the wishes of its founder, and the privileges it enjoys under certain Federal and state tax legislation. At the same time, it regards as fundamental the application of private initiative to the philanthropic field and the public policies which allow maximum freedom for citizens who work at public tasks on a voluntary nonpolitical and nongovernmental basis."

Another Expression

Clarence Faust, president of the Fund for the Advancement of Education, expressed astonishment that American education was charged with being unified and centrally controlled.

"One of the most striking characteristics of American education from its beginnings, and one which has been a source of its vitality and of the hopes of improving it;" he said, "has been the wide diversity of theories and practices it exhibits and the constant controversies concerning the purposes and methods of education in which educators and laymen interested in improving it engage.

"All this," he added, "is in the best tradition of American democracy."

The House committee is the second to study the foundations. Two years ago, a group headed by Representative E. E. Cox, Democrat of Georgia, gave them a clean bill of health.

What are the foundations now under attack, and what do they seek to do?

Here are some facts and figures relating to the largest and most influential of the educational foundations.

FORD FOUNDATION

The Ford Foundation is by all odds the largest as well as most recently formed of the major educational foundations. Its current assets are $518,865,000. During 1952 grants of $37,865,000 were made to scores of educational groups and institutions. The purpose of the Ford Foundation is listed as: Advancement of human welfare, world peace, and the strengthening of freedom and democracy.

The two major divisions of the foundation are the Fund for the Advancement of Education, and the Fund for Adult Education. The former has assets of $55,000,000, including $25,000,000 recently received for disbursement over the next five years. Since the fund was founded in 1951 it has spent $22,000,000. Its purpose is to give grants to schools and colleges for experimental and pilot projects, management surveys and improvement of teaching technique.

The Fund for Adult Education has assets of $8,800,000. Last year the fund spent $3,000,000. The major objectives are to develop adult liberal education, improve methods and opportunities and to provide guidance in international affairs, economics, politics and the humanities for those whose formal education has ended.

CARNEGIE GROUP

For many years the name of Carnegie has meant a great deal in the field of education. Through Carnegie grants many school and college projects have developed. There are three major divisions:

Carnegie Corporation (founded in 1911). Its assets are $178,861,599, and it has an annual income of about $6,000,000. The purpose of the corporation is listed as: Advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding to the people of the United States, Great Britain, the dominians and colonies. Research and teaching programs in higher education, improvement of curriculum, and studies in the social sciences and in foreign fields are also included.

Carnegie Endowment. It has assets today of $16,336,414, and spends $523,000 annually. The purpose of the endowment is to promote international understanding, study national problems and attitudes, teach international relations and sponsor round-the-world tours for scholars and especially those interested in the United Nations and its development.

Carnegie Foundation. It has assets of $13,500,000 and an annual income of $500,000. It has spent $62,763,560 since it was established in 1905. The foundation is principally devoted to providing retirement pensions for college and university professors. It also provides grants for educational programs which it deems significant or which might have beneficial results in strengthening school programs.

ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

Established in 1913, the Rockefeller Foundation, along with the Carnegie group, has since dominated the field of educational endowment. The Rockefeller Foundation has current assets of $350,000,000. During the last forty years the foundation has spent $505,580,678. Its major purpose is to promote the well-being of mankind.

This foundation does not engage in research itself. Through grants to universities, research institutions and other agencies it has aided hundreds of research projects in many areas of education and science.

W. K. KELLOGG FOUNDATION

The W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich., is a comparative newcomer in the field. Its assets are $46,000,000, from which annual grants of $3,000,000 are made. Many of its grants are for health and nursing. It receives and administers funds for the promotion of health, education and welfare of mankind, with particular emphasis on children's welfare.

JOHN HAY WHITNEY FOUNDATION

The John Hay Whitney Foundation does not list current assets as such, but it receives what money it needs for current projects from its founder, John Hay Whitney. In the last four years of operation it has given $800,000 in grants, which included $585,000 in fellowships. The objectives of the foundation are to promote the development of knowledge by grants to minority groups. It provides funds for high school teachers to continue their own studies, and offers opportunities in the educational field for retired professors.

* * *

Educators almost unanimously say that the impact of the foundations has been beneficial, and that their work has been of great value to American traditions and objectives. Critics hold that some of the foundations have aided projects that are un-American. That is the issue now under study by the House committee.

Grant of $80,000 given students

14c

CHICAGO — Dr. Franklin C. McLean, secretary and treasurer of National Medical Fellowships Inc., announced this week that grants totaling $80,000 were awarded to 51 colored physicians and students of medicine and related fields for the year 1954-55.

In addition $14,000 was made available for loans.

National Medical Fellowships Inc. was incorporated in 1946 as a non-profit organization to improve medical practice through the advancement of education and research.

At the present time the organization limits its activities to the field of colored students or practioners in medicine. Offices are located at 951 E. 58th St. Inquiries by qualified applicants are welcome.

Recipients Listed

The following is a list of this year's recipients of awards from National Medical Fellowships:

Dr. John W. V. Cordice Jr., New York City; Dr. Wallace T. Dooley, Iowa City, Iowa; Dr. Harold E. Farmer, Wayne, Pa.; Dr. John E. Hall, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Charles H. Hunter, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Wendell M. Lucas, 450 Park Road, N.W., Washington;

Dr. Marcus W. Moore Sr., 2511 Harlem Ave., Baltimore; Dr. Frank A. Perry, New York City; Dr. Frederic R. Randall, New York City; Dr. Roy E. Boggs, Chicago; Dr. Cyril L. Crocker, Freedmen's Hospital, Washington; Dr. Frederick D. Drew, 134 Seaton Place, N.W., Washington;

Dr. Harold A. Garnes, E. Elmhurst, N.Y.; Dr. James L. Gilbreath, Eloise, Mich.; Dr. Howard O. Gray, Eloise, Mich.; Dr. John B. Harris, Chicago; Dr. William H. Hayling, New York City; Dr. Laurel E. Keith, Boston;

Dr. Muriel Kowlessar, Rochester, N.Y.; Dr. LaSalle D. Leffall Jr., Washington; Dr. Ernest W. Lowe, Roxbury, Mass.; Dr. James H. Robinson, 1258 N. 54th St., Philadelphia; Dr. George Shepard Jr., Washington; Dr. Warren J. Strudwick, 212 W St., N.W., Washington;

Dr. Vertie R. Thompson, Howard University, Washington; Dr. Richard H. Timpton, Chicago; Dr. James B. Williams, Omaha, Nebr.; Dr. Kenneth W. Anderson Jr., Chicago; and Dr. Frank Mitchell Jr., Chicago.

Student Grants

Scholarships for undergraduate medical students were awarded to:

Tazewell Banks, 1748 Swann St., N.W., Washington; Miss Gloria E. Cochrane, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Charles S. Davis, Harvey, Ill.; Rodney W. England, Springfield, Ill.; Robert E. Garrison, Columbus, Ohio; Edsel K. Hudson, Chicago; Alfred B. Jefferson, Portsmouth, Ohio; William N. London, Chicago; J. Spencer Munroe, Toronto, Canada;

Robert F. Murray Jr., Newburgh, N.Y.; Charles B. Payne Jr., 23 Saunders Ave., Philadelphia; Philander Ricks Jr., Waukegan, Ill.; Vernon L. Walton, Joliet, Ill.;

The following persons received predoctoral fellowships in the sciences basic to medicine:

Jewell E. Berry, Versailles, Mo.; Paul L. Brown, Southern University, Baton Rouge, La.; Miss Gertrude L. Cain, West Virginia State College, Institute, W. Va.; Lewis A. Gist Jr., 10 E. 32nd St., Richmond, Va.; John W. Johnson, Wichita, Kan.; Virgil E. Matthews, Chicago; Lee B. Stephens, Atlanta, Ga.; Fred R. West, Tuskegee Institute, Ala.; and Raymond Wilkins, Chicago.

14c 1954

NATIONAL SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE AND FUND FOR NEGRO STUDENTS, INC.

Scholarship fund gives $35,115 to 103 students

Afro American
Balto Md
Sat 1-24-54

NEW YORK (ANP)—The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, Inc., an educational group dedicated to increasing educational opportunities of students at interracial colleges, last week made a big stride in that direction when it awarded scholarships, totaling $35,115 to 103 students in 24 states and the District of Columbia.

The awards ranged from $100 to $400 and cover the 1954-55 academic year.

Initiated in 1949, the fund's program, while geared to the interracial advancement of students, also aids them in bridging the gap between some $48,200 in scholarships and the students' total financial needs.

However, the most timely of the four classes of awards given by the fund, according to Dr. Robert C. Weaver, chairman of the agency's board of trustees, is the two-way integration program, supported by grants from the Old Dominion fundation.

This aids 25 colored and white students attending formerly "all-white" or "all-colored" colleges and universities, largely in the south.

Awards More Significant

"The two - way integration awards are made more significant this year in the light of the Supreme Court's recent decision outlawing segregation in education," Dr. Weaver remarked.

In the past six years, the fund has aided approximately 3,000 students to gain admission to interracial colleges, and spent a total of $750,000 in scholarship grants. The fund maintains its national headquarters here.

NEW NEGRO SCHOOL

The community is fortunate in having received from the Olin Foundation a grant of $600,000 for the construction and equipment of a new vocational high school for Negroes. In making the announcement last week, the Board of Education said the new school will be located on the campus of the present WESTERN HIGH School in Ensley. The new facility, it is said will afford Negro youth training in several fields not now available.

This philanthropic foundation, established by the late Illinois industrialist, F.W. OLIN, devotes itself tothe aid of education through t e provision of funds for the construction of educational facilities.

A recent study published by the National Planning Association Committee of the South on the subject of Negro employment in the Birmingham metropolitan area emphasized that on the whole, improved education seems to offer the greatest hope for expanding the Negro employment p[illegible]prtunities. The F.W. OLIN VOCATIONAL HIGH SCHOOL should makea substantial contribution to bettering the economic status of the Negro in our community.

Birmingham is deeply grateful to the OLIN FOUNDATION for this fine gift.

NEWS
Birmingham,Ala.
P.14 Tues. 5-11-54

Phelp-Stokes Fund honors Tobias, Patterson at dinner

NEW YORK (ANP) — The Phelps-Stokes Fund last week honored at a dinner here the outgoing director of the fund, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, and the incoming director, Dr. F. D. Patterson, at the Savoy-Plaza

Speakers included: Dr. Anson Phelps-Stokes, fund president emeritus and formerly secretary of Yale University and canon of Washington Cathedral and John D. Rockefeller, 3rd, whose interest in the General Education Board, in education and in African advancement, have been related to Phelps-Stokes.

Dr. Anson Stokes, president of the fund, reviewed some 40 years of work of the fund, described progress made among colored people during his 50 years of race relations and in African development.

Tribute To Career

The speaker paid tribute to Dr. Tobias for his career, first in education, then his 20 years as an executive in national Y.W.C.A. work, and as a statesman in interracial and international affairs.

In his response, Dr. Tobias said the influence of the fund could be described as not a rich fund, but which often is supplemented by other funds to do work in its field.

He further said that while effective philanthrophy required the joining of the personal interest of many people in the objective of human relations as an ultimate goal to be de-

...erson reports ...hite House

...GTON (ANNPA) — Dr. ... D. Patterson, director ... Phelps-Stokes Fund, ... President Eisen... today that a delegation ... Negro educators be sent ... inauguration of Tuskegee ... called at the White ... report to Mr. Eisenhower on his recent mission to Nigeria for the International Bank on Reconstruction and his visit to the Gold Coast and Liberia.

Dr. Patterson spent three months in Nigeria with the International Bank, which had an economic and social survey made of Nigerian resources His field was education.

At the request of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, he said, he also visited the Gold Coast and Liberia.

Talked With Nkrumah

Dr. Patterson said he had talked with Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Prime Minister of Nigeria, on the use of personnel. He said Nigeria is very much in need of people.

A delegation of colored Americans sent to West Africa, Dr. Patterson, said "would be a very fine gesture and would also do a lot for the United States.

"I do not think Liberia is moving ahead educationally as rapidly as they ought to," Dr. Patterson said. "I am not in position to say that it is not as rapidly as they can move under the circumstances.

"I was a little bit distressed to say that the one agricultural and technical school they have has been pretty much isolated from the economic and social developments in Liberia."

Final Rites For Ex-Phelps-Stokes Official

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — Funeral services for Lee A. Roy, former executive secretary of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, were held here last week at the Thomas C. Bible funeral home.

Roy died in Florida at the age of 64. Some time ago he suffered a heart attack which forced him to take a rest.

After nearly 30 years of service with the fund, Roy resigned as executive secretary on July 1, 1948. Throughout that period, he maintained a deep interest in Liberian affairs and in particular the educational development of the country.

Beside his work with the fund, Roy also served as assistant secretary-treasurer of the board of trustees of Booker Washington Agricultural and Industrial institute at Kakata, Liberia.

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, former director of the Phelps-Stokes fund, upon learning of the death of Roy, wrote:

"Roy was a distinguished personality without claiming the headlines; rather he preferred not to appear too much in the limelight, contenting himself with doing a full day's work in the interest of humanity and for the good of human relationships.

"His long term of service with the fund is an inspiring chapter of that organization. His interest in Liberia and the development of the Booker Washington institute in the trying days of that institution will ever remain a treasured memory with all who were associated with it on this side and the other side of the water."

Survivors include the widow, Mrs. Estelle King Roy, and three daughters, Mrs. Richard Biggs, Carol Roy and Mrs. James Shaw.

Phelps-Stokes Fund elects two trustees

NEW YORK (ANP) — The Phelps-Stokes Fund recently announced the election of two new members to its board of trustees.

Elected were Lansdell K. Christie, president of the Christie Scott Co., as well as the Liberia Mining Co., and Chauncey L. Waddell, securities analyst and a former member of the Board of Higher Education in New York, a trustee of the United College Fund and Atlanta University and Morehouse College.

14c 1954

CIO $75,000 Given NAACP

NEW YORK — The Philip Murray Memorial Foundation has made a grant of $75,000 to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Formal presentation of the award was made May 12, at the International Center of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, by Walter P. Reuther, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Arthur B. Spingarn, NAACP president, accepted.

The Foundation was established to commemorate the life and work of the late president of the CIO who was also a member of the board of directors of the NAACP.

The grant is being made to help the NAACP develop a climate of opinion receptive to the eradication of segregation. The $75,000 will be set aside in a separate fund by set aside in a separate fund by the NAACP for financing such projects as films, literature and community action programs to improve race relations.

WALTER REUTHER

In addition an annual Philip Murray Award will be established as a companion to the Spingarn Medal. The new award will be presented to an American for outstanding contributions to interracial justice.

Mrs. Roosevelt Praises Murray Fund

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

(From her syndicated "My Day" column.)

I WAS VERY HAPPY to attend the other day, as a member of the Philip Murray Foundation Board, a luncheon at which the National Council of Churches received a substantial check. This foundation has recognized the fact that Philip Murray was a deeply religious man and it has generously aided Catholic, Jewish and Protestant charities.

Philip Murray was a loyal supporter of his own church, but he was also a man of broad vision and many sympathies. Those who spoke at the luncheon emphasized that he was a statesman as well as a labor leader.

I know that the trust and confidence and mutual respect which grew up between my husband and Philip Murray was due to the fact that my husband felt that Mr. Murray understood the problems of government, and always considered the welfare of the people and the country as a whole as well as the welfare of the workers whom he represented.

This meant that Philip Murray had to have the trust and confidence of the men with whom he worked and who elected him to office. He kept this all his life, and it is good to have him followed in office by a man like Walter Reuther who has integrity, understanding and ability.

One of our metropolitan newspapers has just praised Mr. Reuther for having moved so quickly to crack down on officials who have misused the welfare funds of certain CIO unions.

Human nature is weak and apparently these men have fallen before temptation, but this discovery of misuse of funds may be of real value since it should cause a closer scrutiny by the unions themselves of how funds are invested and controlled, and how their own leaders conform to the ideals of service which are inherent in any leadership.

John W. Vandercook Says:

Howard, NAACP All Got Share Of Murray Foundation

During recent broadcasts, John W. Vandercook has covered a number of important news events in his program which is sponsored by the CIO. Here are some highlights from his nightly ABC radio programs heard in St. Louis over KXOX, 7:15 p.m.):

ON MONDAY NEXT, Harvard University will formally accept what is modestly called a "contribution" of $35,000. That contribution comes to Harvard from the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation and brings close to its conclusion an almost unique page in the long, astonishing story of American philanthrophy.

Philip Murray, the vastly respected president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, died in 1952. Within a very short time, nearly one million dollars had been contributed as a mark of genuine affection, as well as admiration, for the dead labor leader.

With little fanfare, that million dollars has now been given away.

The beneficiaries of what might almost be called Philip Murray's posthumous generosity —for his associates have tried to do with that money what they have felt Murray would have wished them to do—express, I think, a kind of balance, a degree of easy, almost instinctive tolerance, a sense of the community of human purpose, that one would be unlikely to find in any country but our own.

Philip Murray was a Roman Catholic. One grant from his Memorial Foundation went to establish a labor center—called a "cultural and educational rallying point"—in a desert town in Israel.

Two hundred thousand dollars was given to the Protestant National Council of Churches. A diagnostic clinic has been established at new Providence Hospital in Washington, D. C. Seventy-five thousand dollars has been contributed to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Howard University in Washington and Roosevelt University in Chicago have received grants to establish chairs—professorships—in the social sciences and in international studies.

A CATHOLIC FOUNDLING home in Pittsburgh is the richer to the extent of $150,000. And, omitting many smaller gifts—a reading room has been set up at the headquarters of the American Association for the United Nations in New York City.

That, substantially, is the whole story. The affection of many men for one man has been quietly translated into quiet good for all sorts and conditions of men, not with studied regard but with complete disregard for their religion, their politics, or the color of their skins.

The Philip Murray Foundation, having done its work and given away its million dollars, winds up its business. Another singularly American gesture has been made —one touched with a peculiar grace.

There is no harm in congratulating ourselves, once in awhile—lest we forget that there are a good many clear eyes, kind hands and level heads among us.

WHEN GEN. EISENHOWER first became President Eisenhower, anyone could see with half an eye that the new Chief Executive found his meetings with the White House correspondents an ordeal far more alarming than a beach-head landing under enemy fire.

For a year or more, the atmosphere at those conferences was certainly less than happy. Seasoned Washington reporters learned, to their dismay, that when they tossed their questions at the President, much of the time Mr. Eisenhower simply didn't know what they were talking about.

Worse, for the personal standing of the President with 200-or-so men and women who report on him to the country and to the world—Mr. Eisenhower sometimes let himself voice a half-answer or an only partial truth, which then promptly collapsed under the withering fire of further questions.

A degree of hostility grew up between the reporters and the President which—frankly — was sometimes painful to watch. Then gradually, there was a change, a change that is now complete.

FIRST OF ALL, the White House correspondents learned to phrase their questions more descriptively—to make, some times, little speeches of their own so that if that particular topic in the news was unfamiliar to Mr. Eisenhower (it is admitted the President isn't much of a reader), the question itself would help fill him in as to what it was all about.

The ex-general became more relaxed. Nowadays, though it certainly would not be accurate to say that Dwight Eisenhower relishes the mental duelling, the swift give-and-take of a press conference as did Harry Truman and Franklin Roosevelt—he at least is no longer anything like so ill at ease.

With a kind of anxious good nature, President Eisenhower will now have a stab at trying to think of something to say about almost anything. It's a news conference style, on the part of the star performer, which tends to produce many fragments of news, rather than any one big story.

Open to Journalists

Reid Foundation Offering Foreign Study Grants in '55

Fellowships carrying grants of $5,000 each were again offered American newspaper men and women for study abroad during 1955 by the Reid Foundation at the annual meeting of the board in New York.

Applicants are required to have completed five years of experience on daily newspapers or press associations in the United States and must regard journalism as a continuing career. They must be sponsored by the leading executives of both editorial and business departments of the employing newspapers. Also required is a summary of their journalistic and educational background and a clear statement outlining their reasons for wanting to study a given nation or area. Choice of work in Europe, South and Central America, the Far East, Near East or Africa is offered. Applications will be received until Oct. 1.

Six Now Studying Abroad

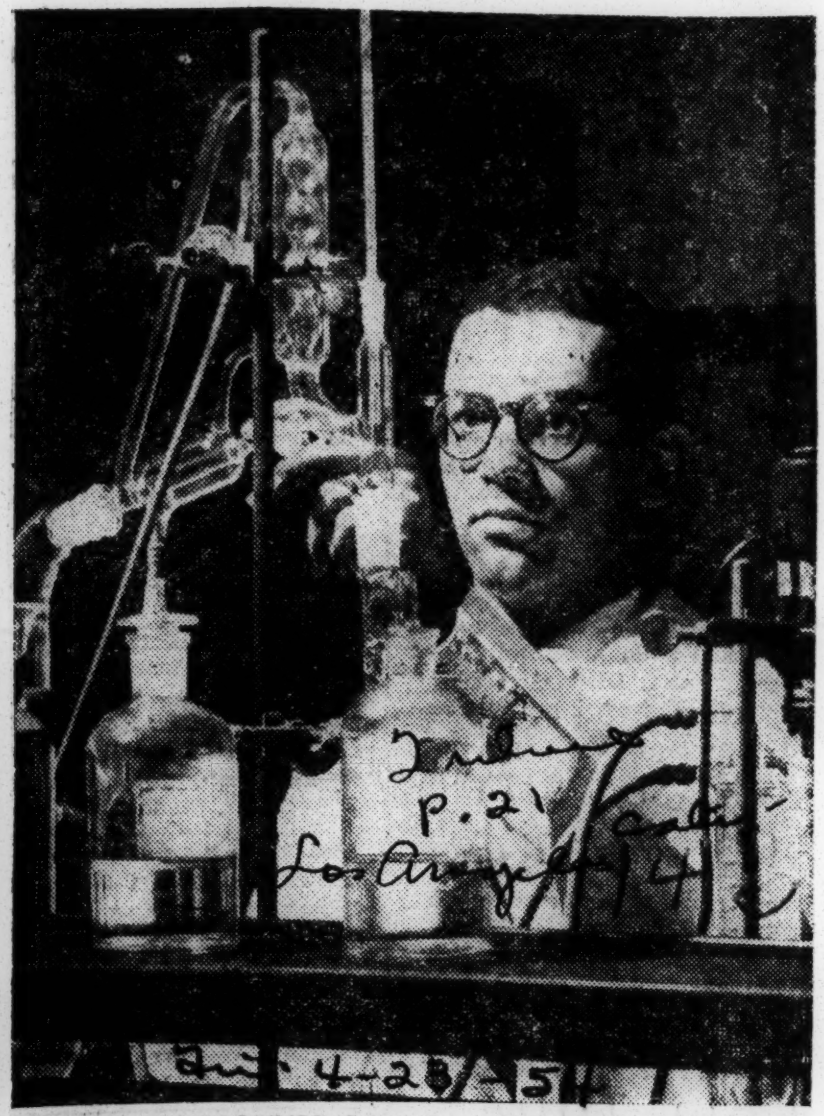
Six fellowships were granted last year. Individuals now abroad are: Omar Garrison, of the "Los Angeles Mirror," in Italy and Spain; Rex L. Karney, of "The Wisconsin State Journal," in South America; John G. Morgan, of "The Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette," in India and Pakistan; Wilfrid K. O'Driscoll, of "The Utica (N. Y.) Daily Press," in Europe; C. Robert Perrin, of "The Detroit Free Press," in Europe, and Ellis D. Roberts, of "The Decatur (Ill.) Herald Review," in Great Britain.

The board also elected directors and officers of the Foundation. The directors re-elected were Dr. Charles Seymour, former president of Yale University; Ferdinand Eberstadt, of New York, president of F. Eberstadt & Co.; Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and executive vice-president of "The Houston (Tex.) Post," and officers of the Foundation: Mrs. Ogden Reid, president; Whitelaw Reid, vice-president and treasurer; Ogden R. Reid, second vice-president, and John L. Gray, of the firm of Root, Ballantine. Harlan, Busby & Palmer, secretary.

Committee Re-Elected

Fellowship grants are awarded annually by the fellowship committee. Members of this committee also were re-elected by the board. They are: Wright Bryan, editor of the "Cleveland Plain Dealer"; Erwin D. Canham, editor of "The Christian Science Monitor"; Gardner Cowles, editor of "Look" magazine; Norman Chandler, president of the "Los Angeles Times"; Barry Bingham, publisher of "The Louisville Courier Journal" and "The Louisville Times"; E. Palmer Hoyt, editor of "The Denver Post"; Whitelaw Reid, editor of the "New York Herald Tribune; Basil L. Walters, executive editor of the "Chicago Daily News," and Wilbur Forrest, chairman.

Application blanks may be obtained by addressing Mr. Forrest, chairman of the Fellowship Committee, New York Herald Tribune, 230 W. 41st St., New York 36. N. Y.



CHEMIST RECEIVES GRANT — Dr. Irvin W. Elliott, professor of and head of the department of chemistry at Florida A and M university, recently received a grant from the Research Corporation of New York for support of a project.

Florida A.-M. chemist gets research grant

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Dr. Irvin W. Elliott, 28, head of the department of chemistry at Florida A. and M. University, recently received a grant of $1,780 from the Research Corporation of New York for support of a research project.

The award, known as the Frederick Gardner Cottrell grant, will be used in support of a research project currently being conducted by Dr. Elliott, "Bimeolecular Compounds from Reduction of Quinoline, Isoquinoline, and Acridine."

14c 1954

RICH'S FOUNDATION

Regents Consider Expanding Atlanta Division's Degree Program

BY. M. L. ST. JOHN

The Board of Regents Wednesday announced it is studying the status and functions of the Atlanta Division of the University of Georgia to determine whether this school should offer degrees in more fields.

At the same time, the board approved establishment of an electronic computor laboratory —"a giant mathematical brain" —for the Georgia Institute of Technology.

It accepted gifts of $85,000 each for Rich's Foundation and the Georgia Tech Research Institute to obtain the equipment. It also approved a $170,000 building to be financed through the University System Building Authority.

Thomas Bradberry, Atlanta architect, was employed to draw plans for the building to house the laboratory. Building funds are expected to be allocated within three months.

The machine, the first to be placed in any school in the South, will solve complicated problems that normally require months, within a few minutes or a few hours. Tech's machine will be made available to business and industrial groups for complex mathematical calculations.

News of the study of the Atlanta Division's status and functions came when the board rejected a request for graduate work in business administration at this institution.

The board said that such a program would jeopardize continued accrediting of the Atlanta Division, that the board doesn't have funds to finance it, and that there already is an excellent institution in Atlanta offering the master of business administration degree.

"The chancellor (Harmon Caldwell) and the Board of Regents are studying the status and the functions of the Atlanta Division, and pending the completion of that study the board does not feel it wise for any change to be made," the regents said.

The Atlanta Division, a unit of the parent institution in Athens, at present offers degrees in only two fields. It offers the bachelor of business administration degree, and the bachelor of science in nursing degree. It also offers three years' work leading toward degrees in other subjects.

L. R. Seibert, secretary of the Board of Regents, said the study is being made to determine whether additional degrees are needed in the Atlanta Division or whether they would duplicate work offered in other institutions. The study also will show the cost of installing such work, he said.

President O. C. Aderhold of the University of Georgia and Dr. George Sparks, head of the Atlanta Division, are participating in the study, Chancellor Caldwell said.

At its meeting, the board also appropriated an additional $15,000 for Negro scholarships, running this fiscal year's total to $190,000, an all-time high. Seibert reported that the $175,000 appropriation will be exhausted before the year closes. The state makes educational grants to Negroes who cannot get desired college work in Georgia. They use the money to attend colleges in other states.

The regents designated officials to examine the "security questionnaires" of employes of the University System. They include the chancellor, the presidents of the units, the security officer and the deputy security officers.

14c 1954

ROBERT A. TAFT MEMORIAL FOUNDATION

HOOVER HEADS ROBERT A. TAFT MEMORIAL FUND

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, July 13 — A nonprofit organization to "perpetuate the ideals" of the late Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio was founded today by close friends and associates with President Eisenhower as honorary chairman and former President Hoover as chairman.

The organization, to be known as the Robert A. Taft Memorial foundation, will use its funds for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes. Articles of incorporation were filed at Baltimore.

Rule Out Propaganda

With headquarters in Washington the foundation will aid schools, libraries, individuals, and publications "to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding." The articles of incorporation state "no part of such funds shall be used to carry on propaganda or otherwise to influence legislation."

Robert A. Taft Jr. said he has had several talks with officials of Yale university exploring the possibility of establishing some sort of memorial at that school, which the senator attended.

The foundation will provide an opportunity for the senator's friends and citizens thruout the country to make contributions to his memory. The trustees will meet in the near future to elect officers and decide among numerous proposals for memorials to Taft which have been advanced in various quarters.

MacArthur a Trustee

Among the trustees of the foundation are Gen. Douglas MacArthur, State Secretary Dulles, Treasury Secretary Humphrey, Agriculture Secretary Benson; Senators Bricker [R., O.], Bridges [R., N. H.], Byrd [D., Va.], Dirkson [R., Ill.], George [D., Ga.], Knowland [R., Cal.], Ferguson [R., Mich., and Millikin [R., Colo.]; Gen. A. C. Wedemeyer, Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Strauss, Mrs. Garvin E. Tankersley of Washington, Gen. Robert E. Wood, and Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth.

Foundation Organized In Memory of Sen. Taft

WASHINGTON, July 13 (AP).—A non-profit organization to "perpetuate the ideals" of the late Sen. Robert A. Taft, R., Ohio, was founded today, with former President Hoover as chairman.

The organization, described as non-political, will use its funds for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes. It is called the Robert A. Taft Memorial Foundation, Inc.

A statement announcing that articles of incorporation were filed in Baltimore today said President Eisenhower has agreed to serve as honorary chairman for the first term.

A list of original trustees included high officials of the Eisenhower administration, close friends and associates of the Ohio Senator, who died July 31, 1953.

With headquarters in Washington, the foundation will aid schools, libraries, individuals and publications "to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding."

The organization's announcement added that it will accept contributions from "the Senator's many friends and citizens throughout the country who have wanted to make a contribution in his memory."

Speaking for the Senator's family, Robert A. Taft jr., of Cincinnati, said he has had several talks with Yale University on the possibility of setting up some sort of memorial at that school, Sen. Taft's alma mater. It was decided, he said, that a specific provision should be set up for Yale in any national fund rather than have a separate fund set up at the school.

The articles of incorporation state "no part of such funds shall be used to carry on propaganda or otherwise to influence legislation."

Original trustees include Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, Sen. John W. Bricker, R., Ohio; Sen. Styles Bridges, R., N. H.; Clarence Brown, R., Ohio; Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey, and Douglas MacArthur, General of the Army.

FOUNDATION LISTS $5 MILLION GRANTS

NEW YORK, Jan 25 (AP) — The Rockefeller Foundation announced grants of $5,367,964 during the fourth quarter of 1953 for scientific projects in the United States and abroad.

The announcement said the general education board, an associate organization, made grants of $1,050,000 during the same period in connection with the termination of its activities.

A conditional grant of $1½ millions to the California Institute of Technology was the largest made by the foundation in the three-month period. The money will be used for research in chemical biology.

Grants by the general education board included three major appropriations for Negro education. A half million was given to Miles college, Birmingham, Ala.; a quarter million to the Southern Education Foundation for Training Negro Elementary and Secondary school administrators, and $100,000 to the United Negro College fund, a co-operative agency representing 31 Negro colleges.

The fund also granted $200,000 to the national Woodrow Wilson Fellowship program.

Rockefeller Fund Makes Known Grant To Interracial Project

NEW YORK — (NNPA) — The Rockefeller Foundation Wednesday (August 25) announced a grant of $100,000 to Karamu House in Cleveland——one of the nation's most successful interracial enterprises — toward a new music building.

Karamu will observe in 1955 the 40th anniversary of its work with colored and white people in Cleveland. During the years of its operation it has won wide recognition for the way in which its activities in drama, music, the dance and the plastic arts have been employed to stimulate individual development and cooperative group action.

4,000 PERSONS

Approximately 4,000 persons participate in its varied activities, and its board of trustees includes leading colored and white citizens of Cleveland.

In order to serve its community better, Karamu House now plans the addition of several buildings and the expansion of existing facilities. The Foundation's grant, payable when Karamu House secures an equal sum from other sources for the same purpose, will be used toward the costs of constructing and equipping a music building.

The Foundation also granted 28,500 pounds (about $85,000) to Nuffield College, Oxford University, for the establishment of a research and training program for specialists in African studies.

VISITING SCHOLARS

This grant is intended to aid in meeting the urgent need for wider understanding of African affairs and for a greater number of persons trained in this field.

Centering around the research of three members of the Nuffield faculty widely experienced in African economic, political, and administrative problems, the program will offer research facilities to visiting scholars from other universities, particularly those in Africa.

Another provision of the plan will offer African nationals and others interested in field work there a year of intensive preparatory study at Oxford at the graduate level.

14c 1954

ROOSEVELT COLLEGE FUND

$26,092 FOR COLLEGE

CHICAGO (ANP)—A gross of $26,092 for 1954 was reported last week by the Salute to Roosevelt College Fund, which earlier this year held its fifth annual dinner.

Rust Foundation Fellow, German Teachers on Visit to Arkansas State College; Visit Merrill High

By John Howard

PINE BLUFF—A Rust Foundation Fellow from Greece and three German teachers here on a month's study of education in Arkansas visited the AM&N college Thursday and Friday.

Bruce M. Lansdale, a Rust Foundation Fellow and a graduate of the University of Rochester, N. Y., is a member of the faculty at the American Farm school in Thessolonica, Greece. Mr. Lansdale, Rust Foundation grant gave him a one - year study of agricultural schools in America. He pointed out that his study is concerned with agriculture offered at schools similiar to agriculture offered at his school in Greece.

Three of the 11 German teachers now in Arkansas also visited the college. Representing the group were Miss Hedwig A. Ebert of the Blytheville center; Miss Gertrud M. L. Sack, Morrilton center, and Heinrich Kalb of the Benton center.

The group spent Thursday in consultation with departmental heads in Elementary Education, Agriculture, Personnel and held conferences with a group of Student Teachers at the college. Friday the entire group visited Merrill high school to see on-the-job teaching done by student teachers from the AM&N college and then returned to visit the AM&N college elementary practice school.

Standing front row, left to right: Johnnie B. Johnson, dean of Men; Bruce M. Lansdale, Rust Foundation Fellow from Greece; Miss Hedwig A. Ebert, Detmold, Germany; Dr. Cleo Owens Hearnton, director of Teacher training; Dr. J. B. Jones, director of personnel; Miss Gertrud M. L. Sack, Goslar, Germany and Dean John Wilson. Back row: A. G. Kirby, director Agriculture education; Heinrich Kalb, Wilhelmahaven, Germany; Dr. Ed McCuistion, director of Negro education, Little Rock, and John Howard, art head and director of Public Relations.

SEVEN SUBPENAED IN SENATORIAL PROBE OF SOUTHERN ORGANIZATION

Hearing to Begin Next Tuesday in N.O.

At least seven persons have been subpenaed to appear before a Senate internal security subcommittee which is scheduled to investigate the Southern Conference Educational Fund in connection with possible Communist activities at hearings here next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The hearings will be held in the federal court room. They will be open to the public.

The hearings were announced Monday in Memphis, Tenn., by Mississippi's Sen. James O. Eastland, a member of the subcommittee who did not identify the organization by name.

However, Eastland described the organization as one "masquerading behind the facade of a humanitarian education institution."

Subpenaes reportedly were issued for the following:

Aubrey Williams, magazine publisher, Montgomery, Ala., president of the fund group.

Mrs. Clifford J. Durr, Montgomery, Ala., a former member of the organization.

Miles Horton, director of the Highland Folk school, Monteagle, Tenn., a member of the board.

James A. Dombrowski, New Orleans, executive director of the fund.

Thomas Dean Ludwig, of the Farmers Mutual Insurance Company, Greenville, Tenn.

Dr. Alva Wilmot Taylor, Nashville, Tenn.

Leo Sheiner, Miami, Fla., attorney.

In Washington, a spokesman for the subcommittee said "the majority of the leadership" in the fund once were officials of the now defunct Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which was cited by the attorney general as a Communist-front organization.

The spokesman said about a dozen witnesses will be heard and subpenas had been issued for all officers of the organization except Benjamin E. Mays, Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., vice-president.

The spokesman declined to name other witnesses, but he said, some have had not been previously identified with the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

The spokesman said a subpena had been issued for Dombrowski; however, the executive director said he had not been served with it.

The organization's headquarters are at 822 Perdido.

Both Williams and Mrs. Durr said in Montgomery that they had received subpenas.

Eastland made the announcement of the hearings at a dinner in his honor in Memphis at which he was presented four national awards for his efforts in fighting Communism during the past eight years.

Dombrowski, declaring the conference is not a Communist-front group, quoted from a statement issued by the fund's board of directors a few weeks ago in which the board said the fund was organized about 10 years ago with the objective to "uphold and promote the highest traditions of the democratic way of life."

The statement said the group was no more "subversive" than the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Dombrowski said in a statement late Tuesday:

"The attack upon the Southern Conference Educational Fund is part of the McCarthy-Jenner-Velde effort to destroy all liberal thought and action in the US.

"The SCEF and its president, Aubrey Williams, have been singled out for attack at this time because of Mr. Williams' close connection with Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal, a special target of the McCarthy forces.

"Also, because the fund and Mr. Williams have become a symbol of Southerners who oppose segregation in public schools and who have taken a forthright stand for integration and full citizenship for everyone.

The SCEF is a corporation composed of 27 members of its board of directors, all residents of the South. On the board are a number of distinguished educators, including seven college deans and presidents.

Well Defined Purpose

"The fund and the board, for the past decade, have had a well defined single purpose — to end discrimination based on race and thus to assure to every Southern child the privilege of sharing equally an American dream of equality, brotherhood and true democracy.

"It may be that this fight against discrimination may in the eyes of Sen. Jenner and Sen. Eastland constitute a threat to the internal security of our country, but to me it is making brotherhood and democracy real and safe-guarding those values which have made America great and strong.

"Speaking personally, I have been intrigued with the preoccupation of the Republicans and McCarthy with numerology. Witness McCarthy's use of the expression 'Fifth Amendment Communists.' In line with this kind of numerology perhaps the best characterization of my own personal philosophy would be the second commandment — Christian."

Dombrowski said, "We're certainly not a Communist front group and this will be brought out at the hearing."

He said the fund was organized after the dissolution of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

Dombrowski said that numerous references had been made by Sen. William Jenner, chairman of the subcommittee, during the past several months that the organization was connected with Red activities.

"When you say this is a little investigation, that is putting it mildly," Dombrowski said. "From what I understand the committee apparently will make a thorough investigation."

He said, however, that as far as he knew no records of the organization had been subpenaed.

Eastland said he was not at liberty to divulge any of the facts for all to see."

The hearings here will be conducted by Sens. Pat McCarran, Nev.; John L. McClellan, Ark., and Eastland.

Williams, last Saturday in Montgomery, termed hus subpena to appear before the subcommittee at attempt to "smear" the Roosevelt administration.

In a written statement, Williams hinted that the subpena resulted from his outspoken criticism of Sen. McCarthy and his fight against racial discrimination "against my fellow Americans."

Williams said the Jenner committee "seems to be concerned mostly with smearing the Roosevelt New Deal with which I was privileged to be connected. I judge that they will use this occasion to smear me, and through me, the Roosevelt administration and all that it stood for."

Williams said he had opposed and would continue to oppose the Benson sliding-scale parity agricultural program, McCarthyism and all that it stands for and discrimination "against my fellow citizens."

He added, "Also, as president of the Southern Conference Education Fund, I have opposed and will continue to oppose racial segregation and discrimination. I have spoken, written, appeared on television, collected money, held meetings and solicited memberships in this organization because I believe in it and what it is doing."

Williams, publisher of the Southern Farm and Home magazine, was former director of the National Youth Administration under the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In Montgomery, Tuesday, Mrs. Clifford J. Durr, wife of a former attorney for the federal communications commission, said she had been subpenaed along with Williams to appear before the subcommittee here.

Mrs. Durr, who works in her husband's law office in Montgomery, is a former board member of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

She said she resigned from the organization in 1950 only because the Durrs moved to Denver, Colo., but added, "I haven't given up my principles."

Dombrowski said the news of the hearings "is a sad reflection on the state of democracy, when one considers that we are fighting to win the rights of full citizenship for everybody.

'Tactics Not New'

"These smear tactics are not new to us. We are used to criticism and have received much of it. Why even the President's loyalty has been questioned."

The conference operates on a "modest" budget of $22,000 to $25,000 a year, Dombrowski said, adding that the work of the fund is to fight for the abolition of discrimination "against American citizens because of race or color or creed."

Dombrowski said the Southern Conference Educational Fund was organized in 1946 and in 1948 absorbed the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

He said the organization now has about 3000 contributing to the fund.

The Southern Conference for Human Welfare was investigated by the House un-American activities committee in 1947 and described as "one of the most unscrupulous and most successful Communist-front organizations in this country."

According to the House report, Dombrowski was an officer of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which also sponsored a speech by Henry Wallace at a time when Wallace was described by Carroll Reece, then Republican national chairman, as "the leading American exponent of the Moscow party line."

Dombrowski listed the following persons as officers of the Southern Conference Educational Fund:

Rudolph Moses, secretary, Keystone Life Insurance Co., New Orleans, treasurer.

Dr. William Obrinsky, New Orleans, member of the board.

Dr. Frederick Rhodes, New Orleans, member of the board.

Dombrowski, executive director.

Williams, president.

Modjeska M. Simkins, secretary, South Carolina Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Columbia, S. C., vice-president.

John Bolt Culbertson, attorney, Greenville, S. C., vice-president.

Alva W. Taylor, former professor, Vanderbilt school of religion, Nashville, Tenn., secretary.

Directors of the fund are, according to Dombrowski:

Wilma M. Alexander, Richmond, Va.

Albert E. Barnett, professor of New Testament, Candler school of theology, Emory university, Ga.

Mary McLeod Bethune, founder and professor emeritus, Bethune-Cookman college, Daytona Beach, Fla.

James P. Brawley, president, Clark college, Atlanta.

Charlotte Hawkins Brown, founder and president emeritus, Palmer Memorial Institute, Sedalia, N. C.

A. J. Clement Jr., district manager, North Carolina Life Insurance Co., Charleston, S. C.

John Wesley Dobbs, grand master, Prince Hall Masons of Atlanta, Ga.

Roscoe Dunjee, publisher and editor, "The Black Dispatch," Oklahoma City, Okla.

E. Franklin Frazier, professor of sociology, Howard university, Washington, D. C.

Charles G. Gomillion, dean of students, Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.

Myles Horton, director, Highlander Folk school, Monteagle, Tenn.

James L. Hupp, dean of students, West Virginia Wesleyan, Buckhannon, W. Va.

Thomas W. Johnson, attorney, Mason, Ga.

Dr. C. Herbert Marshall II, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Paul R. Schroeder, Atlanta.

Howard L. Parsons, associate professor of philosophy, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.

Charles H. Thompson, dean of the gradaute school, Howard university, Washington, D. C.

Lulu B. White, director of branches, Texas Conference, NAACP, Houston.

William J. L. Wallace, president, West Virginia State college, Institute, W. Va.

Herman H. Long, director, Race Relations, American Missionary Association, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. J. Echolls Lowery, Mobile, Ala., and E. Franklin Frazier.

Senate aid in error—

Southern Conference not on Red-front list

WASHINTON, March 11—(AP)—The Justice Department said today the attorney general never cited the now defunct Southern Conference on Human Welfare as a Communist front.

The Senate internal security subcommittee is planning hearings at New Orleans next week on the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., and a subcommittee aid said yesterday it has information that this group now includes the "majority of the leadership" of the former Southern Conference on Human Welfare.

This aid, Frank Schroeder, erroneously stated that the Southern Conference on Human Welfare had been cited by the attorney general.

However the House un-American activities committee said it twice cited the Human Welfare Conference as Communist front, in 1944 and again in 1947. The House group also said the California state committee on un-American activities had listed that conference as Communist controlled.

many distinguished civic leaders in the Southern states. Its sole concern throughout the years has been with the evil effects of racial segregation in education, hospital services, transportation and other public facilities. Its goal of harmoniously ending all racial barriers is our goal.

"How can you presume to sit in judgment on the patriotism of an organization which shares with Vice-President Nixon the conviction that 'every act of racial discrimination or prejudice in the United States hurts America as much as an espionage agent who turns over a weapon to a foreign country.

"We vigorously protest the unfairness of the hearing. We further demand that as an act of simple decency and common sense, you make appropriate apologies to those individuals whose names have been sullied in the press."

The letter was signed by Rev. L. A. Alexander, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. Andrew W. Simkins, secretary, South Carolina Conference, NAACP; Rev. B. L. Davis, Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, president emeritus, Bethune-Cookman College, Dayton, Fla.; Rev. W. T. Crutcher, Knoxville, Tenn.; Roscoe Dunjee, editor and publisher, Black Dispatch, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Rev. L. A. Offutts, Louisville, Ky.; Percy Green, editor and publisher, The Jackson Advocate, Jackson, Miss.; Rev. J. A. Baker, Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. Lulu B. White, director of Branches, Texas Conference, NAACP; Rev. R. E. James, Knoxville, Tenn.; Rev. M. M. D. Perdue, Louisville, Ky.; Rev. A. I. Owens, Louisville, Ky.; Dr. O. B. Taylor, M.D., Knoxville, Tenn.; Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, Richmond, Va.; Rev. F. R. Gordon, Knoxville, Tenn.; Rudolph Moses, New Orleans, La.; Dr. Frederick Rhodes, M.D., New Orleans, La.; Rev. E. F. Brooks, Louisville, Ky.; Bishop Frank Madison Reid, prelate of the 7th Episcopal District of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, Columbia, S. C.; Rev. R. A. Council, Knoxville, Tenn.; Rev. M. L. Gardner, Louisville, Ky.; L. E. Austin, editor and publisher, Carolina Times, Durham, N. C.; Louis L. Redding, attorney, Wilmington, Del.; L. C. Bates, editor and publisher, Arkansas State Press, Little Rock, Ark.; Rev. C. W. Sims, Louisville, Ky.; Dr. James P. Brawley, Atlanta, Ga.; T. G. Nutter, attorney, Charleston, W. Va.; Anderson H. Brown. Charleston, W. Va.; Dr.

32 Negro Leaders Condemn Jenner's Attack On SCEF

Thirty-two Negro leaders from 15 Southern states and the District of Columbia Tuesday morning submitted an open letter to Sen. William E. Jenner condemning his attack on the Southern Conference Educational Fund as "an attack upon the Negro community of this nation."

Sen. Jenner's sub committee on internal security will hold an investigation into the activities of the SCEF, Inc., opening Thursday at the Post Office building here.

The signers of the letter include men and women prominent in the fields of Negro education, medicine, business and religious leaders.

The open letter to Sen. Jenner follows:

"This organization has spearheaded the fight against segregation in the South. When your statements and those of your fellow committee members smear the Fund's leadership, you are also disparaging the hopes and ambitions of the Negro people.

"It is ridiculous to impute disloyalty to the SCEF. Its board of directors, composed equally of whites and Negroes, includes

SENATOR LABELS SCEF AS VICIOUS

Eastland to Talk Over Contempt Citations

(The Times-Picayune Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, March 23—Sen. James O. Eastland, returning to his office Tuesday after a three-day hearing at New Orleans, described the Southern Conference Education Fund as a "particularly vicious organization."

Sen. Eastland headed a staff of the Senate internal security committee that conducted hearings at New Orleans Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the ramifications of the fund.

The Mississippian said that when the transcript of the hearings is available he will discuss with the full committee the question of whether or not to bring contempt of the committee citations against at least two witnesses, who declined to answer questions of the committee but at the same time declined to invoke the Fifth Amendment on the ground they might incriminate themselves. Two Miami, Fla., witnesses took refuge behind the Fifth Amendment.

He did not identify any particular witness or witnesses. The senator said he thought the hearings had served a "valuable purpose."

One of the witnesses who declined to answer certain questions of the committee was Mrs. Virginia Durr of Montgomery, Ala., Mrs. Durr, sister-in-law of Associate Justice Hugo L. Black, said in a public statement published in Washington Tuesday that she was "not a Communist nor have I ever been." She said she stands in utter and total contempt of the committee who questioned her and her husband at New Orleans.

When her husband was a member of the federal communications commission, Mrs. Durr was active in Virginia politics. She lived at Alexandria, Va. In 1948 she ran for the United States Senate in Virginia on the Henry Wallace "Progressive ticket." She also made several unsuccessful attempts to unseat Rep. Howard Smith of Virginia, a Conservative member of Congress from Northern Virginia.

Senator Jenner Is Challenged On Red Charges

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — Senator William E. Jenner, of Indiana, chairman of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, was challenged Monday to submit to a grand jury any charges of Communist activities he may have against the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., or divest himself of senatorial immunity and repeat such charges.

The challenge was hurled at Jenner in a telegram sent to him by Aubrey Williams, president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc.

In his telegram, Mr. Wliliams referred to a recent press dispatch quoting Senator Jenner as saying investigations being carried on by the Internal Security subcommittee included a probe into the 'Communistic activities" of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

Mr. Williams, in his telegram, said:

"Your charge, thinly disguised as a mere statement of a routine investigative activity is as dishonest as it is contemptible. You well know that in the prevalent state of fear and hysteria, the words you use stand for subversion and disloyalty to the United States.

"Any investigation that may have been made by your committee or its staff has been ex parte and has not included an interview with me as president nor any person responsible for the activities of the fund.

"If I or any other person connected with the fund have been guilty of any of the things implied, there are laws on the statute books appropriate to the situation.

"For my part, if you have any charges against me I suggest that you refer them to a grand jury in order that the truth of the matter may be arrived at in the American way by trial in an impartial court, before an impartial jury on the basis of evidence and not of gossip and the right to be confronted by my accusers.

"If you deem criminal procedures inappropriate to the situation, then in all fairness you should step from behind the shield of your senatorial immunity and make your charges directly rather than by inference and innuendo.

"I do not believe that you will dare take either of the two courses for you also know full well that the only activity in which the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., has been engaged in has been its fight for the abolition of discrimination against American citizens because of race, color or creed, the ending of segregation in schools and colleges, the opening of hospitals to Negroes and the doing away with all forms of inequality.

"You may regard this as un-American, but it is unthinkable that any American jury will agree with you."

AP Wirephoto

SUBCOMMITTEE WITNESSES—Montgomery's Aubrey Williams and Mrs. Clifford F. Durr appear as witnesses at the Senate Internal Security subcommittee hearing in New Orleans yesterday. Standing are attorneys for the two witnesses, John P. Kohn and Clifford F. Durr, both of Montgomery.

Stormy SCEF Hearing Opens At New Orleans

By FRED ANDERSEN
Advertiser Assistant Managing Editor

NEW ORLEANS, March 18—Five gruelling hours of grim charges and countercharges today before a one-man Senate subcommittee failed completely to label the Southern Conference Educational Fund as a Communist organization.

In the course of the testimony given by three witnesses, Aubrey Williams, Montgomery publisher, and Mrs. Virginia Foster Durr, wife of a Montgomery attorney, were identified respectively as president of the fund and as a former director not active for more than two years.

3-Hour Grind

Dr. James A. Dombrowski, executive director of the fund, who spend more than three hours on the stand, told subcommittee Chairman Sen. Eastland (D-Miss) that Williams and Mr. Durr were among several people who had been active in the corporation at one time or another.

In addition, Mrs. Durr was vice president and a member of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, an organization for Human Welfare, an organization which preceded the fund, Dr. Dombrowski said. Williams was also active in the conference, but Dombrowski was uncertain as to his connection, he added.

Direct Question

In response to a direct question to Dombrowski, declared firmly: "I am not now nor have I ever been a Communist, a member of a Communist Party, or under Communist discipline."

As the long day drew toward a close in a courtroom of the New Orleans postoffice, Dr. Dombrowski seized an opportunity to make a declaration of liberal principles which apparently caught Eastland and Richard Arens, his chief investigator, by complete surprise. They had born down heavily on the fact Dr. Dombrowski was one of 280 Americans who signed an amnesty petition for the 12 convicted Communist leaders in New York in 1952.

Dr. Dombrowski, who never raised his voice all day, gave his answer:

"Everyone who has ever tried to do something for his fellow man has been abused by the use of whatever label was in style at the time.

"I think America is losing the thing that has made her strong —the right of dissent.

"I judge a man, the Bible says he should be judged—by what he is, and not by what somebody else says about him."

Through the entire day, the conduct of the hearing stirred repeated murmurs at the press table, where 14 reporters labored under the glare of television kleig lights and back of a row of microphones and newsreel cameras.

After two members of the New Orleans Young Men's Business Club had called the SCEF a "Communist-front organization," John P. Kohn, Montgomery attorney who is representing Mrs. Durr, startled Eastland and Arens by rising to inquire whether he would have the privilege of cross-examining any witnesses who mentioned his client by name.

The Mississippi senator frowned and growled he has no intention of standing still for heckling during this hearing, it is unheard of for a witness before a congressional committee to be cross-examined. It will not be done here."

When Kohn pressed for an idea of the "ground rules" for the investigation, Eastland snapped, "I will decide those as we go along and announce them when I desire. Sit down, Sir. You are out of order."

In the same vein, Eastland gave short shrift this afternoon to a list of formal exceptions filed for Dr. Dombrowski by Ben Smith, of New Orleans, his attorney.

Before Smith had finished offering the exceptions and requesting Eastland to study them, the senator pounded his gavel and declared, "they're overruled. I don't care to see them."

One of the morning witnesses was Leo Scheiner, a Miami, Fla., lawyer. Scheiner took refuge behind the First, Second, Fifth, Sixth, eighth, Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution, in refusing to reply to a question about his association with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

Eastland roared, "You're on solid ground when you slink behind the Fifth Amentment. All the rest of that stuff is bunk."

At another point, Eastland pointed an accusing finger at Scheiner and told him, "You're going to take orders from me. Do you understand that? Keep your mouth shut."

One of the most voluble and re appearing witnesses all day was one Paul Crouch, who said he was the top man in the South for the communists from 1928 until 1942, when he became "disillusioned."

Crouch, a greying, balding man of about 50 with an ever-present smirk, told The Advertiser he had "testified before every Congressional committee investigating communism. I guess I'm the most subpoenaed man in America — what you might call an unwilling professional witness," he declared.

Crouch identified Dr. Dombrowski as a former communist and told of a trip the two men allegedly took across Central Florida, singing the Communist "International" at the top of their lungs as they rode.

Dr. Dombrowski promptly shot back at Eastland, "That man is a liar."

Eastland then summoned John Butler, who said he was a nursery operator in Dallas, Tex.

Butler said Dr. Dombrowski was introduced to him in July, 1942, one Sunday afternoon in a room on the 10th floor of the Thomas Jefferson Hotel, in Birmingham as a Communist.

Dr. Dombrowski's answer was the same: He's a liar, too."

Eastland and Arens brushed aside queries about possible perjury citations, all three witnesses were under oath.

Dr. Dombrowski said he had met Bob Hall, and knew of Alton Lawrence, whom Butler said were the treasurer and chief recruiter of the Alabama Communist party from early 1951 to mid-1943.

Justice Department records show Crouch, the unwilling professional witness," was court martialed in April, 1925, by military authorities in Hawaii and given a four-year term in Alcatraz for "misconduct, violation of good order and military discipline and organization of a secret organization." He served two years on The Rock," Justice Department files show.

Eastland, who is sitting as a one-man committee for the hearings, is in a political battle for his life in neighboring Mississippi where he is being opposed for renomnation by young Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, of Laurel.

In the courtroom today were about a dozen Negroes. In a front row seat was A. P. Tureaud, president of the New Orleans chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Eastland several times during the day took occasion to reprimand Arens, his chief counsel.

As compared with the treatment given Scheiner and Max Shlafrock, Miami contractor who was the other morning witness, Dr. Dombrowski was handled gently.

Communist Front

Repeatedly, Arens sought to link Dr. Dombrowski with organizations branded by the House Un-American Activities Committee as Communist front groups.

Dr. Dombrowski replied he did not think "very much' of that body, but he had lent his name and sometimes his contributions to groups "whose goals were liberal —like my own."

He went over again and again his contention, "I am not a specialist on Communists and I am not here to testify about Communists."

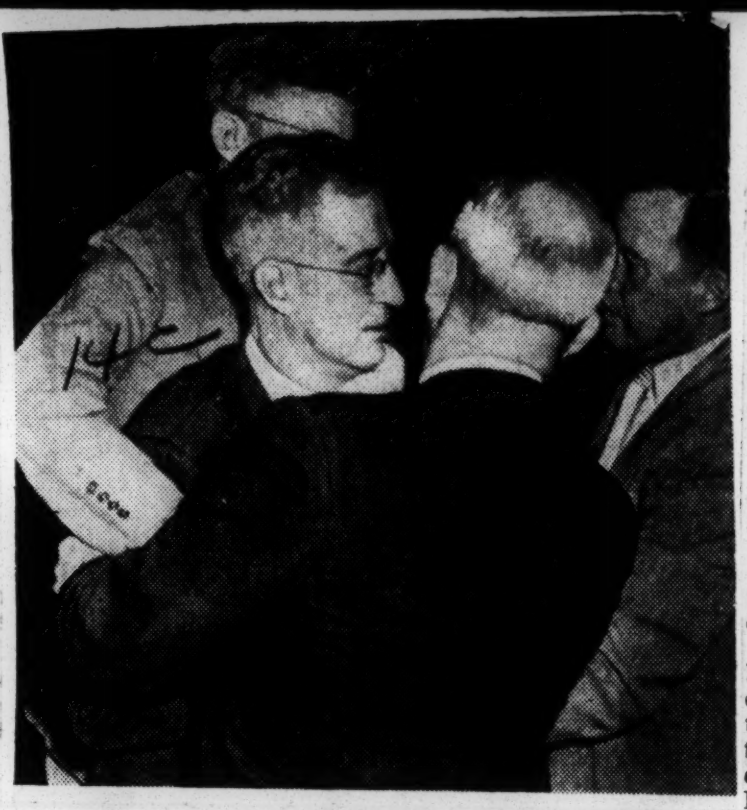
He told Eastland he would not furnish a list of the contributors to the fund, a list Dr. Dombrowski estimated contained 3,000 names.

Immediately after the long session ended, the fund director was served with a subpoena to bring the records with him tomorrow. He is faced with possible citation for contempt of the senate if he fails to do so. That carries a possible prison term.

Today, under oath, he refused to name even one contributor. He is faced with possible citation for contempt of the Senate if he fails to do so. That carries a possible prison term.

Williams and Mrs. Durr are also expected to face their accusers tomorrow on the second day of the hearings.

All day today, reporters at the press table could listen to the Eastland hearings and see out the window where an American Flag fluttered gently.



Flareup at Jenner Hearing

Clifford J. Durr of Montgomery, Ala., (wearing glasses) is restrained by deputy marshals after he threatened to kill a witness during a hearing of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee in New Orleans Saturday. Durr attempted to attack Paul Crouch, an ex-Communist, when the latter said Durr's wife knew of a Red conspiracy in America.

Durr Attacks Witness at Red Hearing

Frail Former FCC Chairman Defends Wife's Name; Others Ejected From Room

NEW ORLEANS, March 20.—(U.P.)—Clifford Durr, frail former Federal official, grabbed ex-Communist Paul Crouch and shouted "I'll kill you" today after Crouch testified Durr's wife was a pawn in a Red plot reaching into the White House during the New Deal.

A tense, three-day hearing by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee on alleged Communist activity in the South ended on this violent note after seven persons were accused of past Communist ties. Several were threatened with contempt action by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), the only committee member present. Two were removed from the courtroom.

Durr, a former Federal Communications Commissioner, is the husband of Mrs. Virginia Durr, a sister-in-law of United States Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black.

Durr grappled with Crouch as he left the stand after testifying Mrs. Durr "had full knowledge" of a conspiracy by a Communist espionage ring that allegeldly piped out secret information from the White House from 1934 to 1952.

"You dirty dog! I'll kill you for lying about my wife," Durr yelled as he grabbed Crouch's

Attorneys and U. S. marshals dragged Durr from Crouch. White-faced and trembling, he was then led from the courtroom by friends. He had attended the hearing today under the eye of a physician. He was ordered to bed after the outburst.

Crouch yesterday charged that Durr had been a Communist while Durr was acting as an attorney for Aubrey Williams. President of the Southern Conference Education Fund, which was under investigation in the hearing.

Earlier today, Miles Horton, teacher at the Highland Folk School at Monteagle, Tenn., was ejected from the courtroom after he clashed with Eastland.

"They're treating me like a criminal!" Horton shouted as marshals tugged him out.

Mrs. Mildred White testified yesterday that she attended the school as a Red "to recruit Party members."

The Durr-Crouch incident broke out after Crouch, once convicted of treason and sentenced to 40 years, said five top Communists, Joseph Gelders, the Rec. Malcolm Dobbs, Howard Lee, Joseph Lash and Gilbert Parks, had "easy access" to the White House.

"They got all kinds of information from Government officials from 1934 to 1942," Crouch said. "President and Mrs. Roosevelt never had the least suspicion they were agents. However, Mrs. Burr had full knowledge of the conspiracy."

Crouch was joined in his accusations by John Butler of Dallas, Tex., also a former Communist. Crouch and Butler said Mrs. Bur rwas influenced by Communists, but said they could not say whether she was one herself.

Leo Sheiner, Miami attorney, was removed from the courtroom yesterday after he attempted to speak from the spectators' gallery. The attorney was named as a "top Communist in Florida" by Crouch.

Eastland closed the hearings by saying that a full report would be submitted to the committee in Washington and "no judgments will be drawn here."

SOUTHERN EDUCATION GROUP which met here last week to study and help make plans to implement the recent Supreme Court's decision on segregation in public schools. Left to right, center are: James A. Dombroski, New Orleans; Aubrey Williams, editor, Southern Farmer, Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, Daytona Beach, Fla.; Mrs. Lula B. White, Houston, Texas; Bishop S. L. Greene, Atlanta; Dr. James Hupp, West Va.; Left row sitting: Dr. Lincoln Barker, Maryville, Tenn.; Dr. O. B. Taylor, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. Jessie Guzman, Tuskegee Institute, and Mrs. Lincoln Barker, Maryville. Left to right standing: Charles Gomillion, Tuskegee; Franklin Thomas, Tulsa, Oklahoma; unidentified man in sport shirt; Rudolph Moses, New Orleans; Mrs. Alfred Maund, New Orleans; John M. Coe, Pensacola, Fla.; W. E. Hogan, Dallas, Texas; Dean Odum, Atlanta; John Wesley Dobbs, Atlanta; Howard L. Parson, Knoxville; Alfred Maund, New Orleans, Dr. Alfred E. Barnett of Emory University was not present for the photo. ⌐

32 Leaders Petition Senator

Probe of SCEF Seen As Attack on Negroes

NEW ORLEANS—In a trenchant open letter last week to Senator William E. Jenner, chairman of the U. S. Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, which is investigating the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., with headquarters here, thirty-two race leaders from fifteen states charged his attack on the fund is an attack upon "the Negro community of this nation." The letter reads in part:

"This organization has spearheaded the fight against segregation in the South. When your statements and those of your fellow committee members smear the fund's leadership you are disparaging the hopes and ambitions of the Negro people.

"It is ridiculous to impute disloyalty of the Southern Conference Educational Fund. Its board of directors, composed equally of whites and Negroes, includes many distinguished civic leaders in Southern States. Its sole concern throughout the years has been with the evil effects of racial segregation in education, hospital services, transportation, and other public facilities. Its goal of harmoniously ending all racial barriers is our goal."

Meanwhile, James A. Dombrowski, the fund's director, charged last week that Senator James O. Eastland (Democrat-Mississippi), who initiated the investigation of communistic activities against the fund declared in 1945 on the Senate floor that "The Negro soldier was a dismal and utter failure. He was a disgrace to the flag of his country . . . He will not fight. He will not work!"

* * *

INTERESTING enough, no Negro members of the SCEF board had been subpenaed for the investigation despite the fact that fifteen members of the board are Negroes.

Signers of the letter were Bishop Frank Madison Reed, prelate of the Seventh Episcopal District of the AME Church, Columbia, S. C.; the Revs. L. A. Alexander, Knoxville, Tenn.; B. L. Davis, Louisville, Ky.; W. T. Crutcher, Knoxville; L. A. Offutts, Louisville; J. A. Baker, Louisville; R. E. James, Knoxville; M. M. D. Perdue, Louisville; A. I. Owens, Louisville; F. R. Gordon, Knoxville; E. P. Brooks, Louisville; R. A. Council, Knoxville; M. L. Gardner, Louisville; G. W. Sims, Louisville, and J. Echols Lowery, Mobile, Ala.; Mmes. Andrew W. Simkins, South Carolina NAACP secretary, and Mary McLeod Bethune, Daytona Beach, Fla.; Roscoe Dungee editor, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Percy Green, editor and publisher, Jackson, Miss.; Mrs. Lula B. White, Texas NAACP branches director; Dr. O. B. Taylor, Knoxville;

Others were Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, Richmond, Va.; Rudolph Moses, New Orleans; Dr. Frederick Rhodes, New Orleans; L. E. Austin, editor and publisher, Durham, N. C.; Louis L. Redding, attorney, Wilmington, Del.; L. C. Bates, editor and publisher, Little Rock, Ark.; Dr. James R. Brawley, Atlanta, Ga.; Atty. T. G. Nutter, Charleston, W. Va.; Anderson H. Brown, Charleston, W. Va.; Dr. Herman H. Long, race relations director, American Missionary Association, Nashville, Tenn.; E. Franklin Frazier, Washington, D. C., and Atty. Martin A. Martin, Richmond, Va.

Dombrowski Defies Subpoena As Investigation Nears End

BY JACK WILLIAMS

NEW ORLEANS —(INS)— The director of the Southern Conference Education Fund refused to obey a Senate subpoena as a subcommittee neared the end of its probe of the group Friday afternoon in New Orleans

James A. Dombrowski said he would not comply with a subpoena directing him to produce the names and contributors of the organization's heads.

The hearing, was temporarily insion by Sen. James O. Eastland (D) terrupted during the morning ses-Miss., the acting chairman, after one witness refused to answer questions.

She was Mrs. Virginia Durr of Montgomery, Ala., who was described by two ex-Communists as being "under Communist party discipline."

Mrs. Durr is a sister-in-law of Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black.

The Montgomery woman was denied a request to read a prepared statement after her refusal to answer committee questions. In the statement, she termed the committee hearing "a kangaroo court" and denied that she is or has been a Communist.

An FBI counter-spy, Paul Crouch, testified he knew Mrs. Durr as a "constant contributor to Communist publications."

Another self-described former Communist, John Butler of Dallas, Texas, testified that Mrs. Durr "was always mentioned by my party bosses." He said he did not know if she ever were a member of the party.

The Witch Trial At New Orleans

It don't look like everybody was satisfied with what went on down in New Orleans in the investigation of the Southern Conference educational Fund judging what Allen Rankin had to say in his column in the Montgomery, Alabama Journal.

Says Mr. Rankin: "Incredible is the word for the so-called "Communist hearings" in New Orleans last week.

Incredible is the word for this witch trial and inquisition inflicted on three Montgomery and (incidentally, American) citizens in the name of "democracy."

Last week we saw the amazing spectacle of a U. S. incoveniencing, browbeating and humiliating Alabama and its citizens in the name of "communism."

To his Senate Internal Security subcommittee, "investigating communism," Eastland summoned three Montgomerians: Aubrey Williams, publisher; Clifford J. Durr, former Federal Communications Commissioner, and his wife, Virginia Foster Durr.

Eastland admitted to a newsman: "I don't think either of the Durrs or Williams are Communists."

Yet these people were summoned to New Orleans for a tragifarce which purported to be a Senate probe into "alleged Communist influence in the Southern Conference Education Fund." They were inconvenienced by being called away from their jobs and their normal lives for three or four days. They were accused and insulted and browbeaten.

Undoubtedly many ignorant and unthinking people were made to suspect that these three Montgomerians were the more "Communistic" because they were called to this hearing and attempts were made to place them in an unfavorable spotlight. Certainly they were not more "Communistic" for this reason.

We repeat: Senator Eastland himself admits that he doesn't think any of them are Communists.

Yet Mrs. Durr was allowed to be internationally insulted by an unsavory professional accuser, Paul Crouch, a self-admitted ex-commie who openly boasts that he was a top Communist for 17 years devoted to the overthrow of the U. S. government by force and violence.

This was the kind of man who was allowed to "testify" against and flagrantly insult a Montgomery lady and free-speaking American, as yet proved guilty of nothing, but voicing her beliefs.

This was the kind of man Cliff Durr, his patience and nerves hounded ragged, flung himself upon while shouting: "You son of a bitch, talk about my wife like that and I'll kill you."

No one can editorially condone this kind of violence. But one can understand how it can become the natural result of indignation and rage against such obviously un-American persecution as that inflicted on the Durrs at the New Orleans "trial."

Cliff Durr suffered a "heart condition" as the result of his furious outburst. He had to be taken off to the hospital. If he had died of a heart attack, methods as unfair and un-democratic as those used by the High Lord executioners of the Spanish Inquisition would have killed him. To the extent that Mr. Durr is now hurt such methods have injured him.

Is this kind of Political witch-hunting and citizen-baiting a true investigation of Communism in any sense?

It is not. The U. S. Constitution provides a very effective system of law courts for the trial of any U. S. citizen dangerous to his fellows or his country. The Smith Act further authorizes the trial of any suspected Communist in our established law courts.

Why, then are citizens allowed to be embarrased and humiliated in extra-legal "courts" that function mainly for the political glory or vainglory of such demagogues as Senator Eastland?

Eastland and McCarthy are not "trying" their "victims" for communism. They are trying them for the same thing the Spanish Inquisition tried them for — heresay — for disagreeing with men.

It is no news to recall that the U. S. Constitution guarantees freedom of thought and expression. Lamentably, we have of late developed a band of witch-hunters who nonetheless, are allowed to "try" and harrass their fellow Americans to place themselves, the accusers, in the political spotlight.

We believe and hope that demagogues who try to capitalize on such persecution as this are on the way out.

Nine reporters who covered the New Orleans "trials" informally voted that the trials themselves were a greater threat to our American system than anyone who was or could be on trial under such circumstances.

Did they have a right to "try" these judges? As much right as these "judges" had to try those before them.

Fortunately, the U. S. Courts so far have consistently" "acquitted" all Americans accused simply of speaking their own opinions. The legal courts do not convict Americans for heresay. This is the startling privilege only of political demagogues.

South-Wide Anti-Bias Meet Planned

ATLANTA — (ANP) — A Southwide conference to speed compliance with the Supreme court decision outlawing school segregation was proposed here last weekend.

Eighteen distinguished southern liberals announced this project at a meeting of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc.

Aubrey Williams, Montgomery, Ala., publisher who heads the fund, presided at the gathering which included Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune; Dan Wesley Dobbs, Republican national committeeman from Georgia; Mrs. Lula White, NAACP director of Branches from Houston, Texas., and the Rt. Rev. S. L. Green, president of the Council of Bishops, AME Church of Atlanta, Ga.

Plans Laid For Southwide Meet To Study Ruling

Support of the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation, was brought Saturday in Atlanta by a southern interracial educational group, which adopted a resolution "heartily" endorsing the historical action of the nine-man court.

The action was taken by the Board of Directors, Southern Conference Educational Fund, which held an all day meeting at the Red Cross Center, on Peachtree Road.

This was the gathering of known liberals and supporters of such measures from both major races. Present were, the executive directors, and outstanding fighter for equal rights, James A. Dombrowski, of New Orleans, La.; Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, and a host of businessmen, educators, etc. from all parts of the south.

In addition to their resolution, the group announced plans for a Southwide Conference, to which all individuals and organizations, interested in gaining compliance with the Supreme Court's ruling, are invited.

Atlantans were also represented at the Saturday gathering, and there were many, who although they were not present, are members of the group. These include the publisher of the Carolina Times, an Arkansas newspaperman, many ministers, the president of a Houston manufacturing firm, etc.

Atlantans in the group were: Albert Barnett, Emory University; John W Dobbs, Grand Master, Prince Hall Masons, the Rt. Rev. S. L. Greene, AME Bishop, and William A Calder, Professor at Agnes Scott College, and E. J. Odum, Morris Brown College.

The resolution said:

"The Board of Directors of the Southern Conference Educational Fund heartily endorses the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

"For the past decade the Fund has devoted its efforts to the elimination of racial segregation and discrimination. It now offers this background of research and regional activity to all Southerners who sense that quick compliance with the ruling is demanded by our democratic and religious ideals.

"We urge our fellow-Southerners to recognize this opportunity to build for a future of unprecedented amity and prosperity."

Others present were: Aubrey Williams, Montgomery, Ala., fund president; treasurer, Rudolph Moses, who is secretary-treaure, Keytone Life Insurance Co., New Orleans; Lincoln Barker, Maryville Tenn.; John M Coe, Pensacola Fla.; Charles Gomillion, Tuskegee Institute; Jessie Guzman, Tuskegee; W. E Hogan, Dallas; James L. Hupp, W. Va.; Howard L. Parsons, Knoxville; O B Taylor, Knoxville; Franklin Thomas, Tulsa; Mrs. Lula B White, Houston, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Maund, New Orleans.

—Photo by The Times-Picayune.

JAMES A. DOMBROWSKI, AUBREY WILLIAMS
Fund director, president among witnesses.

Hearings on Educational Fund Start Here Today

Know of No Reds in Organization, Say Leaders

The director of the Southern Educational Fund, Inc.—the organization being investigated by the Senate internal security subcommittee—said Wednesday that as a student he joined the Socialist party and remained a member for five years.

This, he said, would presumably be part of the line of questioning when the subcommittee opens its hearings in New Orleans. The first session is to get under way in a federal courtroom at the post office building at 10 a. m. Thursday. Committee investigator Frank Schroeder said the meeting would be open to the public.

The fund director, James A. Dombrowski, was interviewed Wednesday at the St. Charles hotel along with Aubrey Williams, fund president and publisher of the magazine, Southern Farm and Home. In an hour and a half conversation the two men asserted:

1. They were not members of the Communist party and that to their knowledge on one belonging to the organization was a member.

Says They Will Answer

2. The hearings were not aimed at exposing Communists but had the twofold purpose of (a) linking the organization with communism and thereby silencing it as an opponent of racial segregation and (b) obtaining "headlines and votes" for Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), subcommittee member.

3. Though they did not intend to do so they would actually be serving the nation better by refusing to answer questions pertaining to their political beliefs.

4. They preferred a public hearing and did not have "anything to hide."

5. Paul Crouch, former Communist and an expected subcommittee witness, allegedly "betrayed the Army for the Communists" then turned around and betrayed the Communists and couldn't be believed.

"I have a little office (822 Perdido) and a secretary and sometimes some volunteer help," said Dombrowski. "I raise the money for us by myself, about $20,000 a year. When I think of us being thought of as a threat to the internal security of the United States—well, it's amusing and its tragic."

Meanwhile, a conference was scheduled Wednesday night at the St. Charles hotel by Richard Arens, chief counsel for the subcommittee; Schroeder, and Edward R. Duffy, another committee investigator and Sen. Eastland. The senator was scheduled to arrive in New Orleans at 8:50 p. m. aboard the passenger train, the Southener.

Founded In 1936

Dombrowski and Williams said originally the fund was founded as the Southern Conference on Human Welfare, in 1936 or 1937 as the outgrowth of studies conducted by governmental agencies on conditions in the South.

They said that in Birmingham, Ala., 1200 "liberal southerners and industrial leaders" attended a meeting and founded the organization. At that time, they said, Williams was a member of the board and Dombrowski administrator.

The organization had broad aims such as passage of social security and other legislation, they said. In 1946, they said, the Southern Educational Fund, Inc., was formed and the SCHW was allowed to die. With organization of the fund, they continued, the group's work was narrowed almost exclusively to activities encouraging abolition of racial segregation and discrimination.

Williams said he presumed he would be painted as a "dupe" of Communists because "four or five years ago" he signed a petition advocating world peace. He said subsequently the press indicated the organization behind the petition was Communist domniated and that he learned "the American contingent" in the organization "couldn't get over its point of view" and he gave it up.

Dombrowski said he, too, presumed the subcommittee would handle him in a similar fashion. He said while a student at the Union Theological seminary in New York, N. Y., in 1927 he joined the Socialist party and remained a member until 1932.

In recent years, he continued, he signed a petition advocating the civil rights of Communists be protected.

"I wasn't advocating the doctrines of communism," said Dombrowski. "I was advocating that their civil rights be protected. I'll do that for any man."

The two men said they felt when they entered the subcommittee hearing they would be "entering the atmosphere of the courtroom."

About 3000 Contributors

Dombrowski said the fund did not have members, but solicited contributors. There are about 3000, he added.

The fund, he continued, sends literature, films (one of Williams debating with Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia), and other items on request to persons asking for them; conducted polls and did research on racial segregation and sponsored conferences to discuss such themes a "Racial Unity Through Equality of Educational Opportunity."

With regard to Crouch, Williams declared, "He claims to have been a behind-the-scenes manipulator and organizer. Anybody can claim that kind o stuff."

Williams said he would be glad to answer questions pertaining to himself but did not intend to "involve anybody else."

In a prepared statement Williams reiterated his claim the committee was seeking to destroy the fund's work by linking it with communism, and said:

"Americans are inherently decent and deeply committed to the right of dissent. They are fiercely independent and when enough of them have had their characters questioned and their reputations challenged, and have had their rights trampled on, they will rise and put a stop to these things."

Group Subpenaed

Besides Williams and Dombrowski, others known to have been subpenaed are:

Thomas Dean Ludwig, Greenville, Tenn.

Dr. Alva Wilmont Taylor, Nashville, Tenn., fund secretary.

Leo Scheiner, Miami, Fla., attorney.

Mrs. Clifford J. Durr, Montgomery, Ala., former board member.

Myles Horton, Monteagle, Tenn., board member.

Max Schlafrock, Miami contractor and fund sponsor.

Dombrowski said he thought it "highly significant" and a "tribute to their growing political power" that no Negroes, so far as he knew, had been subpenaed although many officials of the fund are Negroes.

The Young Men's Business Club Wednesday presented to the Senate subcommittee a report compiled by the YMBC's "anti-subversive" committee on the fund.

Senate Probers To Bypass Negro Members, To Quiz Only 4 Whites

To deliberately ignore Negro board members of the Southern Conference Educational Fund and interrogate only four white members during the scheduled hearings in the alleged communistic dealings of the SCEF this week, is a clumsy attempt to set back the Negro and halt the organization's movement for full citizenship for all, regardless of race or color, according to an official of the SCEF Saturday afternoon.

The four officials who will appear during the three-day hearings beginning Thursday are Aubrey Williams of Montgomery, Ala., president; Alva W. Taylor of Nashville, Tenn., former professor at Vanderbilt university school of religion; James A. Dombrowski of New Orleans, executive director, and Myles Horton of Highland Folk school, Monteagle, Tenn., director.

According to John Wesley Dobbs, vice-chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Georgia, "The truth about the SCEF is that it is an organization composed of right thinking American citizens, both white and black, who are opposed to segregation and discrimination against American citizens in the South, without regard to race, color or creed."

Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi, is expected to head the sub-committee investigating the alleged subversive activities within the SCEF. When this fact was known last week, an official of the organization told the Louisiana Weekly, "We know what to expect now."

In an editorial last month the Baltimore, Md., Afro-American, wrote:

"The scurrilous attack by Sen. William E. Jenner on the SCEF is clearly in line with the 'big lie' crusade being waged by certain Republican spokesmen.

"That (probe charge) is preposterous. Senator Jenner knows that the SCEF has never had anything to do with communism. He is well aware that the SCEF has restricted its activity to one objective.

"And that objective is to end discrimination and segregation in the South."

Negroes make up approximately 50 per cent of the board members of the organization.

Roscoe Dunjee, militant publisher of the Oklahoma Black Dispatch and one of the directors, in an editorial said, "In proportion as the SCEF continues to expose these evil conditions in the South, we shall continue to feel it is the most worthy and patriotic organization in that section." The publisher devoted the entire editorial page on the democratic activities of the SCEF in its struggle for full citizenship for all.

One official told the La. Weekly that "this was a clear-cut case to smear the SCEF in a last ditch stand, because they have no interest or sympathy for persons or organizations trying to wipe out the evils of segregation.

"The handwriting is on the wall, because the courts are rendering decisions favoring the abolition of discriminatory practices throughout the land," a reporter was told.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt made the following statement about the SCEF:

"It is such organizations as the SCEF that will really bring about the changes all of us hope for—not only in the South but throughout our country. Then we can say with truth and conviction that we move forward to ever better conditions for all of our people."

The Southern Patriot, news organ of the organization, was one of the award winning periodicals of 1954 for significant contributions to better human relations by the Lincoln university school of journalism department. Others named for a similar award were the Chicago Daily News and Time magazine.

Several other Negro leaders in the SCEF besides Dobbs and Dunjee are Rudolph Moses, secretary of the Keystone Life Insurance Company of New Orleans, treasurer; Dr. Frederick Rhodes of New Orleans, director; William J. L. Wallace, president of West Virginia State college, director; James P. Brawley, president of Clark college, director, and Charles G. Gomillion, dean of students at Tuskegee Institute, director.

Eastland's real target

For years extremely conservative Northern Republicans and reactionary Dixiecrats have maintained a working agreement in Congress.

It has been a simple 'I scratch your back, you scratch mine' arrangement operating to the mutual benefit of both groups.

But never has this unholy alliance so clearly bared its more ugly manifestations than in the current smear investigation of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund, as everyone including those investigating it know, has spearheaded the fight against segregation.

Its announced goal has been the ending of all racial barriers and inequalities in education, hospital services, transportation and other public facilities.

Such a goal to a dwindling number of Southern politicians is, of course, positive proof that the organization is communistic.

Responsible for this travesty, is Senator William E. Jenner. Mr. Jenner is no Dixiecrat. He's an extreme right - wing Indiana Republican.

He's also chairman of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee. It was Senator Jenner who ordered the probe of the Southern Conference Educational Fund and picked a Dixiecrat, James O. Eastland of Mississippi, to conduct it.

Senator Eastland, an apt student of mccarthyism, sat in New Orleans as a one-man committee. He announced his intention was to ferret out Communists.

But it developed his true purpose was to brow-beat, harass and publicly slander, in the name of the U.S. Senate, officers of an organization which has delivered sledge - hammer blows against segregation.

That Senator Eastland was allowed to borrow an instrument of the Federal government to propagate his un-American view on racial matters is one of the most shocking developments in a shameful era.

AP Wirephoto

NEW ORLEANS PRINCIPALS—Mrs. Clifford Durr of Montgomery, sister-in-law of Justice Hugo Black, powders her nose while she and her attorney, John P. Kohn, listen during the Senate internal security subcommittee hearing at New Orleans yesterday. Seated behind Kohn's elbow is Fred Andersen, Advertiser assistant managing editor. At right is John Butler of Dallas, Tex., who testified that Mrs. Durr was a friend of known Communists.

Four Montgomerians In Hearing Spotlight

By FRED ANDERSEN
Advertiser Assistant Managing Editor

NEW ORLEANS, March 19—An accused Montgomery attorney today rose before a Senate internal security subcommittee hearing and demanded either he or his accuser be indicted for perjury as the climax to a dramatic exchange of "you're a Communist" and "that's a lie."

Clifford J. Durr, counsel for Montgomery publisher Aubrey Williams and husband of Mrs. Virginia Foster Durr, another subpeonaed witness, made the demand after he had broken all precedent by cross examining Paul Crouch, self-identified former top southern Communist.

Sen. James Eastland, Mississippi Democrat who is holding the hearings, charges all alleged subversive activities of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, said his granting Durr the right to cross-examine Crouch was the "first time to my knowledge any witness before a congressional committee has been so cross-examined."

Precedent Broken

Yesterday Eastland had told John P. Kohn, Montgomery attorney who is representing Mrs. Durr, it was "unheard of and unthinkable" for a committee witness to be cross-examined.

Eastland said he was allowing Durr to ask Crouch questions because Williams "has shown every indication he wants to co-operate with the committee and has obviously answered each question to the best of his ability."

After Crouch had testified he talked with Williams on three occasions while he, Crouch, was engaged in organizing and directing southern Communist activities, Durr asked if he might question the witness.

Durr brought out the details of Crouch's court martial and conviction at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, and his sentence to a 40-year term for organizing a Red cell in the United States Army.

Reason For Leaving

Durr was pressing Crouch as to his reasons for leaving the Communist party and asked, "are you still a Communist/"

Crouch said, "no, sir."

"Can you prove it?" Durr persisted.

At that point, Richard Arens, chief counsel for the committee broke into ask Crouch, "is Mr. Durr a Communist?"

Crouch fired back without hesitation, "I don't know if he still is or not."

Durr immediately asked him, "was I a Communist?"

"Yes, sir," Crouch replied emphatically.

Durr then aatempted for 45 minutes to pin Crouch down on where, when and under what circumstances he had seen the attorney and connected him with the Communist party.

Rented Halls

"In various rented halls in Manhattan between 1938 and 1941," Crouch stuttered.

"Name one," Durr demanded.

Crouch replied it was "impossible to recall specific addresses."

"Did you ever meet me or talk to me at such a meeting?" Durr asked.

"No."

"Did anybody ever tell you I was a member of the Communist party? Durr queried.

Crouch said Robert F. Hall, early in 1938, told him the copy of the "New South" which was supposed to go to Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black frequently got lost or misplaced.

"I, as editor of the New South, the Communist publication, was told by Rob Hall that you, Mr. Durr, were a reliable Communist and if I would mail it to you, you would see it got to Justice Black," Crouch replied.

New Witness

Durr then removed himself from his position as Williams' attorney and was sworn as a witness, from where he told the open hearing:

"Every word this man (Crouch) has said about me is an utter, complete and absolute falsehood. We are both under oath. Therefore, one or the other of us should be indicted for perjury."

The reference Crouch made to Associate Justice Black had come up earlier in the day when Mrs. Durr was on the stand. At that time, Crouch accused Mrs. Durr of "using her position as the sister-in-law of Justice Black to aid the cause of the Communist revolution."

Pointed Out

Mrs. Durr sat silently through an awkward half-hour this morning while Arens pumped questions at her and then Crouch and John Butler, another self-identified ex-Communist, pointed her out as a party sympathizer.

Crouch did say of Mrs. Durr, however, "I doubt very much she is or ever has been a Communist."

When Mrs. Durr was summoned to the stand this morning, Kohn, as her attorney, clashed several times with both Arens and Eastland.

He accused the committee of trying to "brain probe" his client in contempt of the United States Senate.

Under Instruction

Under instructions from Kohn, Mrs. Durr sat in frozen silence while Arens asked her name, residence, occupation, and then droned through a lengthy list of organizations and asked her what her connection had been with each.

Arens said every group he asked Mrs. Durr about had been "cited by an agency of the United States government as being Communist-front or dominated."

Not until Arens asked her "are you a Communist" did Mrs. Durr open her mouth. Then she said loudly, "No."

Arens then asked her, "are you Mrs. Virginia Durr?"

"Yes."

Next he asked, "Are you under Communist discipline."

Again same a loud, firm, "No."

For the next 20 minutes her only reply, under prodding from Eastland and Arens was, "I stand mute to all questions."

Crouch was called for the fifth time in 24 hours and accused Mrs. Durr of "plotting with Communist leaders" and being "under party discipline."

'Lined Up Speakers'

Crouch also said the late Joseph Gelders, whom he identified as the then secrtary-terasurer of the Alabama Communist Party, told him Mrs. Durr had aided in lining up Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Justice Black as speakers at the organizational conference of the Southern Conference of Human Welfare in Birmingham in November, 1938.

Crouch finally said his only direct dealings" with Mrs. Durr closed Communist meeting, nor a high regard for the Congress room. I have come to the con-

Mrs. Durr's Statement

After she was released from the witness stand, Mrs. Durr issued this statement to newsmen:

"In the many years I lived in the United States because it was closest to them.

"After seeing and hearing all there existed the strongest bulwark for the protection of the liberties of the citizens of the union meeting one time, but said he had never seen here in any legislative pr clusion . . . This hearing is a kangaroo court where people, called as witnesses, are being tried as criminals—as traitors to their country . . . they have been pre-judged and condemned on the basis of testimony of paid informers. . .

"I wish to state I do not recognize the power of this committee to try me as a traitor. . .

'Total, Utter Contempt'

"I refuse to submit to the authority of this committee and I stand in total and utter contempt of it."

After a luncheon recess, Arens called Williams to the stand, where he identified himself as publisher of the Southern Farm and Home, and a resident of Montgomery.

Williams acknowledged he was president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund and had been "for five or six years."

He said Mrs. Durr had been on the SCEF board, but said he was not sure what her connection had been with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

He said his own connection with the SCHW began in 1946, when he was asked to serve as chairman of its nominating committee. He also was made a board member at the same time, Williams added.

Atmosphere Different

In a totally different atmosphere than prevaded the hearing yesterday, Eastland and Arens gently led Williams through a series of questions about his membership in and support of more than two dozen various organizations.

Williams' testimony was interrupted briefly by a near-violent side-show when Eastland paused to tell two Miami, Fla., witnesses they could be excused.

Leo Scheiner, Miami attorney, who clashed violently with Eastland and Arens yesterday, persisted in shouting he wanted to make a statement.

Eastland finally ordered United States marshals to "throw him out" and the burly lawyer was given a fast rush act to the door and a final, violent shove into the corridor.

The press corps, expecting bloodshed, departed en masse to the hall, but Scheiner made no move to strike his ushers.

SCEF Outlined

After that brief flurry, Eastland asked Williams to outline the objectives of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

"It fights racial discrimination," Williams answered. "We take a problem—such as the refusal of hospitals to accept patients because of color. We hold meetings. We have held meetings in various colleges in the South to influence young people to oppose segregation.

"We extend that fight against segregation straight across the board. We are dedicated to abolishing from the American way of life all discriminations based on race, color or creed," Williams explained slowly.

Eastland wanted to know then, "Who attends these conferences you hold?"

Enumerated Positions

Williams told him attendance and invitations were based on "people's show of interest and their contributions. Naturally, we seek sponsors with influence, such as college presidents."

The Montgomery publisher then enumerated the long list of federal positions he has held, dating back to his first federal post as Relief Administration for Mississippi under the Hoover administration in 1932.

Williams said he next was sent to Texas, still under Hoover, to organize relief in 250 counties there, and then went to Washington in 1933 as a field representative of Harry Hopkins in the Federal Employment Relief Administration.

He said he was named assistant Federal Relief Administrator in 1934 and Deputy Administrator of the WPA in 1935, the same year he was appointed executive director of the National Youth Administration.

'No Memory' Of Reds

From 1938 until the agency was liquidated in 1943, Williams said he was NYA administrator.

Williams told Arens he had "no memory" of knowing three men the committee counsel said were "top Communists" during that period.

Then Arens quoted from an address delivered in Madison Square Garden in 1947, and asked Williams whether he had made the speech attacking the government loyalty program and asserting "its all right for Communists to hold government jobs," Williams admitted those were his words.

Williams ridiculed a statement as an "aside made in jest" in Birmingham in 1938 when Arens quoted him as declaring to an audience, "I'm not sure class warfare isn't a good thing."

Williams denied ever subscribing to the Daily Worker, a Communist publication. He said he had seen Paul Crouch in Birmingham when the Southern Conference for Human Welfare was organized, and had been interviewed once by Rob Hall, in 1945, for the Daily Worker.

When Arens asked him point blank, "are you a Communist?" William answered:

"I am not now and never have been a Communist nor have I ever accepted party discipline. I have never knowingly associated with any Communist."

Butler was then called to the stand and swore Williams was introduced to him in Nashville in 1942 as "Comrade Williams."

Williams spoke up and challenged Butler to "meet me in the hall out from under the cloak of immunity of this committee and repeat that statement before the newspapermen. Do it and I'll sue you the minute you do."

Butler affirmed his willingness to do so, and when the hearing adjourned for the day, Williams rushed over to repeat his challenge in front of reporters.

Butler backed away, declared, "I'm not going to say anything except under oath before the committee."

Crouch followed Butler to the stand and gave his testimony seeking to link Williams with the Communist Party.

It was after this recitation Durr took over the cross-examination as Williams' attorney and wound up being sworn as a witness himself.

Dombrowski Recalled

Before the quartet of Montgomerians took the spotlight this morning to hold it for the whole day's session, Dr. James A. Dombrowski was recalled to the stand to answer a subpeona which had been served on him late yesterday.

Dr. Dombrowski, executive director of the fund of which Williams is president, again refused to furnish the committee with any portion of a list of 3,000 names he said represented the contributors to the fund.

Eastland informed Dombrowski he had placed himself in contempt of the United States Senate.

The senator said later he would make "strong recommendations" to the entire membership of the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which the internal security group is a subcommittee, about citations for contempt.

2 Main Witnesses

He indicated Dombrowski and Mrs. Durr were the two main witnesses so far who he believed had been contemptuous of the subcommittee.

Eastland ordered tomorrow's hearings to begin at 9:30 a.m., one half-hour earlier than today's session.

He said he "had no plans" tonight to recall Mrs. Durr or Williams.

Durr is expected to play a key role at tomorrow's hearings, however, as attorney for Myles Horton, director of the Highlander Folk School, at Monteagle, Tenn.

Five witnesses have been heard and two more excused because of illness attested to by doctors' certificates, Arens said.

The hearing thus has three possible witnesses to hear of the original 10 subpoenaed.

Eastland said he expected to wind things up sometime tomorrow afternoon.

Eastland's real target

For years extremely conservative Northern Republicans and reactionary Dixiecrats have maintained a working agreement in Congress.

It has been a simple 'I scratch your back, you scratch mine' arrangement operating to the mutual benefit of both groups.

But never has this unholy alliance so clearly bared its more ugly manifestations than in the current smear investigation of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund, as everyone including those investigating it know, has spearheaded the fight against segregation.

Its announced goal has been the ending of all racial barriers and inequalities in education, hospital services, transportation and other public facilities.

Such a goal to a dwindling number of Southern politicians is, of course, positive proof that the organization is communistic.

Responsible for this travesty, is Senator William E. Jenner. Mr. Jenner is no Dixiecrat. He's an extreme right - wing Indiana Republican.

He's also chairman of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee. It was Senator Jenner who ordered the probe of the Southern Conference Educational Fund and picked a Dixiecrat, James O. Eastland of Mississippi, to conduct it.

Senator Eastland, an apt student of mccarthyism, sat in New Orleans as a one-man committee. He announced his intention was to ferret out Communists.

But it developed his true purpose was to brow-beat, harass and publicly slander, in the name of the U.S. Senate, officers of an organization which has delivered sledge - hammer blows against segregation.

That Senator Eastland was allowed to borrow an instrument of the Federal government to propagate his un-American view on racial matters is one of the most shocking developments in a shameful era.

14c 1954

SOUTHERN EDUCATION FOUNDATION

Race Problem Most Critical, Educators Told

Special to The Constitution

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 2—J. Curtis Dixon of Atlanta, vice president and executive director of the Southern Education Foundation, Thursday termed segregation the most critical problem of our times next to the problem of international relations.

Addressing the Southern Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Dixon said that American progress has said to the world that "no man ... may be imprisoned in his darker skin."

He said the Supreme Court ruling that segregation is unconstitutional in public schools is part of "the second American Revolution." He urged a "postive, cooperative study to bridge the gap (in attitudes) between people."

Dixon added that unless educators find means to adjust to the new situation, "the Supreme Court will do it."

14c 1954

TEXAS EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION

ARMSTRONG FORTUNE LEFT TO FOUNDATIONS

Family Also Shares In Estate Of Texas Millionaire

FORT WORTH, Oct. 12.—(UP)—The will of George W. Armstrong, filed here for probate Tuesday, leaves the bulk of the multimillionaire's fortune to foundations.

It directs that most of his estate go to the Texas Educational Foundation and the Judge Armstrong Foundation. It also orders that $140,000 be set aside to pay debts cancelled through bankruptcy proceedings in 1923.

Judge Armstrong, who died Oct. 1 in Natchez, Miss., was an oil man and planter, and was chairman of the boards of the Texas Steel Company and the Liberty Manufacturers of Fort Worth.

The will leaves his wife $50,000 and 1,000 shares of Texas Steel. Three grandsons, B. V. Thompson Jr., Thomas K. Armstrong and George Armstrong III, were named to receive 250 shares in the same firm and $10,000 each. Bequests of $10,000 go to each of three other grandchildren, Melody Armstrong, Murray James and Betty Jane Johnson. Three nieces, Tillie McFadden, Mae Rene Egan and May Schults, are to receive $5,000 each.

U. S. Steel Foundation Gives $700,000 in Aid to Colleges

The United States Steel Foundation, Inc., announced yesterday its first aid-to-education project. The program calls for an expenditure of $700,000 this year.

The program, outlined in a statement from foundation headquarters, 71 Broadway, by Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the foundation's board of trustees, centers on giving financial support to liberal arts colleges. It also provides for support to the National Fund for Medical Education and the United Negro Colleges and for a limited number of graduate fellowships in major educational institutions throughout the United States.

Mr. Fairless said, "We are aware a large number of liberal arts colleges in the United States are operating at a deficit, and we are pleased to be joining other foundations and with industry, generally, in doing something toward relieving the serious financial plight of many privately supported colleges."

Formation of the foundation was announced Dec. 19, 1953. It is a non-profit foundation through which money will go to charitable, educational and scientific projects. It was incorporated in the State of Maryland, and its board of trustees is the board of directors of the steel corporation.

At its formation, a spokesman said the foundation would not operate on the scale of the Ford, Carnegie or Rockefeller Foundations, which were set up by individuals rather than by corporations.

Enders M. Voorhees, chairman of United States Steel's finance committee, said then the foundation's money for its educational and other programs would come from direct grants from the corporation. It does not hold non-voting stock in the company.

The money this year, in large part, will be spent on undergraduate institutions in fourteen states, most of which are highly industrialized states, Mr. Fairless said.

He said participants in the program include four associations of the many liberal arts college associations in the country. They are the Associated Colleges of Illinois, Inc., with twenty-two members; the Associated Colleges of Indiana, Inc., with twelve members; the Ohio Foundation of Independent Colleges, Inc., with twenty-two members, and the Pennsylvania Foundation for Independent Colleges, Inc., with thirty-nine members. Allocations within these state groups are decided through arrangements among the members of the several groups.

Mr. Fairless said although the foundation realizes there are many other worthy colleges in these and other states, it has "confined its program in the main to areas in which it had a natural interest."

In addition to these college groups, he said, forty-two other colleges in the four states and in Alabama, California, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, Texas, Utah, Virginia and West Virginia are included.

Grants Unrestricted

Mr. Fairless said the grants to colleges will be unrestricted in all cases, adding, "The foundation has no desire to share purely educational decisions or to become involved in the customary provinces of colleges and universities."

He said, however, the aid carries with it the "expressed hope" that the institutions will use a portion of each grant for "improving faculty compensation and development."

About one-half of this year's funds have been allocated to current college and university building and endowment programs. Most of these grants have been made already.

Negro Group Aided

Included in this phase is a grant of $100,000 to the capital program of thirty-one United Negro Colleges in twelve states. An additional $15,000 has been assigned the group for its 1954 operating deficit.

The sum of $50,000 has been allocated for operating expenses of eighty medical schools in thirty-eight states comprising the National Fund for Medical Education.

The program also includes ten two-year graduate study fellowships to be awarded to a group of about forty nationally recognized professional schools and universities. Each fellowship carries a grant of $3,000 to $3,600.

14c 1954

THE VIRGINIA RANDOLPH FOUNDATION,INC.

Foundation to honor Virginia woman educator

RICHMOND, Va. (ANP) —A new educational foundation, called The Virginia Randolph Foundation, Inc., was formed here last week.

A group of citizens obtained a charter from the Corporation Commission to finance a memorial in honor of a pioneer woman educator and to promote educational opportunities for children of the area.

The organization was established to honor the achievements of Mrs. Virginia Randolph, veteran school teacher, who devoted more than 50 years of her life to public school education in the South.

To Place Bust In School

Mrs. Randolph also will be immortalized with a bust to be placed in the lobby of the Virginia Randolph High School at Glen Allen, named in her honor many years ago.

Mrs. Randolph, now 80, retired in 1948.

Officers of the foundation are: Priddy Cosby, president; Juanita J. C. Whitaker, secretary; M. J. Robinson Sr., vice-president, and Melvin Glover, treasurer.

Form Foundation To Honor Pioneer Negro Educator

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — A new educational foundation, called The Virginia Randolph Foundation, Inc., was formed here last week, when a group of citizens obtained a charter from the Corporation Commission to finance a memorial in honor of a pioneer Negro woman educator and to promote educational opportunities for children of the area.

The organization was established to honor the achievements of Mrs. Virginia Randolph, veteran school teacher, who devoted more than 50 years of her life to public school education in the South.

Mrs. Randolph also will be immortalized with a bust to be placed in the lobby of the Virginia Randolph high school at Glen Allen, named in her honor many years ago.

Mrs. Randolph, now 80, retired in 1948.

Officers of the foundation are: Priddy Cosby, president; Juanita J. C. Whitaker, secretary; M. J. Robinson Sr., vice-president, and Melvin Glover, treasurer.

Form Foundation To Honor Pioneer Negro Educator

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — A new educational foundation, called The Virginia Randolph Foundation, Inc., was formed here last week, when a group of citizens obtained a charter from the Corporation Commission to finance a memorial in honor of a pioneer Negro woman educator and to promote educational opportunities for children of the area.

The organization was established to honor the achievements of Mrs. Virginia Randolph, veteran school teacher, who devoted more than 50 years of her life to public school education in the South.

Mrs. Randolph also will be immortalized with a bust to be placed in the lobby of the Virginia Randolph high school at Glen Allen, named in her honor many years ago.

Mrs. Randolph, now 80, retired in 1948.

Officers of the foundation are: Priddy Cosby, president; Juanita J. C. Whitaker, secretary; M. J. Robinson Sr., vice-president, and Melvin Glover, treasurer.

Tell It To Old Granma

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

That Erroneous Supreme Court Ruling

Editor, The Advertiser,

In the first place, the schools were not mentioned and not even thought of when the 14th Amendment was adopted. If the court can rule that equality before law can mean federal control of the schools, it can rule anything.

The court has taken over legislative powers. Congress has not passed laws as required by the Constitution to enforce such a ruling.

The court did not even consider the 10th Amendment, which states that all powers, not granted by the states to the federal government, shall be reserved to the states, or to the people. When did the states grant to the federal government the right to run their schools, or to dictate the manner in which they should be run?

The states have set up their own school systems and financed them. Then the federal government has no right to encroach upon the rights of the states to run their own schools.

The court says that, "We believe that segregation of the races deprives the children of equal educational advantages." That is the court's belief and believing a thing does not make it so.

The Negro race has greater advantages than it has ever had, and these advantages have been growing by leaps and bounds for the past few years. They have better schools, better buildings, better equipment, and better prepared teachers. They prefer to work their way up without undue molestation from other forces.

It is outrageous to force a system on the white and Negro people which neither wants. I have talked with some of the leading Negroes of this section, and they have talked with their people and they tell me that none of them want integration in the schools.

The court says separation in the schools makes the Negro children feel intimidated, or inferior to the white children. That is a weak argument. There is no comparison in the way they feel in segregated schools to the way they would feel in mixed schools. The whole argument is weak and farfetched.

The court has by-passed other rulings which granted separation of the races, when there were equal facilities. If those rulings were satisfactory then, they should be now.

If a person has been brought up right, he does not want to go where he is not wanted.

Why such a ruling anyway? What could be accomplished by it? What pressure was brought to bear on the court to cause them to make such a ruling? Was it because the Negro organizations for the betterment of the Negro race brought pressure on the court?

Many thousands of dollars must have been spent in the effort of this organization to deceive the people. They know it is not best under the circumstances, since it would cause greater disturbance to our section than anything since the Civil War, and this is just what the communists want. Of course the communists are in favor of just such a move.

Why not let the people of the South, both white and colored, work out their own destiny, since they are making such great progress?

Long-standing customs should be regarded, since they usually become the law of the land, and the will of the people. It has been the custom of the people of the South to be segregated from time immemorial.

Ariton, Ala.

The culture of the races differ and the Negro does not want to give up his culture for that of the white people.

T. G. PRITCHETT

Progress In Negro Education

Editor, The Advertiser:

I want to thank you for the excellent editorial about the school opportunities offered the children of Abraham's Vineyard in the newly reconstructed village school which has been provided for these pupils.

The editorial did not mention the fact that the pupils have the same length of school term as pupils in other schools in the city and county and that the same provision is made for free textbooks there as is made in other schools of this system.

The record of the Montgomery County Board of Education in provision for Negro children in this system has been called "a miracle," and, of course, I am agreeable to that compliment! It is a thrilling story to note the development of Negro schools, as well as progress in our white schools, during the 18 years of my service here as superintendent of schools. The Board of Education has adopted policies and authorized procedures which, when carried into effect, have made our school system a good one, although not perfect. Much improvement is needed yet in all areas of our service.

Thanks again for your thoughtful and helpful editorial. C. M. DANNELLY, Montgomery. Superintendent.

¶ Another point in The Advertiser's editorial should be clarified. We made the point that there are fewer pupils per teacher at the Vineyard school than at Harrison. Actualy, this comparison is meaningless because the three teachers at the Vineyard must, between them, teach all grades.—Ed.

NAACP Seeks Friendly Desegregation Program In Anniston Schools

ANNISTON, Ala. — NAACP petitions seeking friendly desegregation of schools have been filed with the Anniston City Board of Education.

They carried 43 signatures. Dr. Gordon A. Rogers, president of the Anniston Branch NAACP indicated that the petitions were prepared by the NAACP's legal staff.

Board of Education Chairman Noah C. Wilbanks declined comment on the matter.

White School in Alabama Bars 23 Negro Children

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 1 (U.P.)—Twenty - three Negro children tried to enroll today in a white school here, but were refused on the ground that they lived outside the school district.

School officials said the group, led by the son of Montgomery publisher Aubrey Williams, appeared to register for classes with other children at the white school. They were accompanied by two representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

School principal R. T. Anderson said he dealt personally with the group.

"They were registered just like any other group of children," he said. "We got their names and addresses and filled out regular registration cards. Then we checked their addresses and told them they all lived in a district that is served by a Negro school. They were trying to register at the wrong school."

The Negro pupils then withdrew in a "very orderly manner," Mr. Anderson said. He said the incident occurred without fanfare or confusion and was "a credit to the Negro race."

He said the grades which the children sought to enter ranged from the first to the sixth. He said there were no harsh words or threats of law suits.

It was the first incident reported in Alabama since the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

Aubrey Williams jr. led the pupils into the school single file. His father, Aubrey Williams sr., is the publisher of a Montgomery farm newspaper, and under the late President Roosevelt was director of the National Youth Administration and deputy administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

A Report On Segregation In Schools Is Given Folsom

CULLMAN, Sept. 14 (U.P.)—Gov.-nominate James E. Folsom received an oral report today on Alabama school problems and what other states are doing to maintain segregation.

The report was supplied by Dr. Austin Meadows of Huntsville, Democratic nominee for state school superintendent. The actual report was not made public but Folsom said it was a general outline of the entire situation and that it was receiving his "constant study."

Folsom and the legislative leaders also has recently appointed studies of educational situation with incoming cabinet members at what the governor-nominate termed their first "important policy meeting."

More Talks Planned

The meeting, which opened yesterday, also was devoted to Folsom's highway program and his plans to aid old age pensioners. Folsom said further discussions would be necessary before those programs could be completed.

Also discussed, he said, was the statewide Democratic rally to be held in Birmingham Oct. 21 honoring party nominees throughout the state.

Folsom said National Democratic Chairman Stephen A. Mitchell will be one of the speakers at the $25-a-plate dinner rally. Funds will go toward campaigns for national democratic congressional nominees in a drive to gain control of the Congress.

Folsom commented, "we can't stress too much the importance of winning a Democratic Congress. A Democratic Congress would veto the Republican scuttling of TVA and REA.

"I'm for giving farmers greater parity support," he added. "We've got 100 per cent tariffs and I think as long as we've got them we ought to have 100 per cent parity for our farmers."

Plans Trip North

Folsom said he planned to leave for the National Democratic meeting at Indianapolis within the next few days.

The governor-nominate disclosed that new industry and business consumed part of the session and that "I'm getting wonderful co-operation from both business and labor groups on our new industry plan and financing thereof."

Folsom said legislative reapportionment and a constitutional convention, which is expected to be called immediately after he is inaugurated Jan. 17, also were aired.

He said he had scheduled similar meetings with his leaders between now and inauguration day to further discuss legislative matters.

State Won't File Segregation Brief

Sykes Says Such Action Might Bind Alabama Legally Or Morally By Decrees

PHENIX CITY, Sept. 15 (AP)—Alabama won't file a brief in the school segregation cases now awaiting the Supreme Court's final decree, Acting Atty. Gen. Bernard Sykes said today.

Today was the deadline for notifying the court whether Southern states expected to submit briefs prior to arguments before the tribunal sometime after Oct. 1.

The Supreme Court has already held segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional but hasn't said how the ruling will be enforced.

Sykes released a prepared statement from his temporary office here, explaining that while Alabama is not directly involved in the pending segregation cases, the filing of a brief might obligate the state "legally or morally."

The only issue remaining before the Supreme Court, he said, is whether segregated schools shall be a violation, immediately or gradually, and if gradually, whether the Supreme Court or lower courts should issue the actual desegregation decrees.

The state's chief legal officer said briefs would have to be filed "on the basis that separate schools for races are illegal" since the Supreme Court has already ruled to that effect.

One purpose now in joining in the suits before the court, he added, would be "to help formulate decrees ordering the mixed attendance of white and colored pupils in the public schools."

"The facts surrounding Alabama's separate schools for white and colored," he said, "have not been presented to, and are not now before the United States Supreme Court. Alabama, by filing a brief in cases not arising within its own borders, in cases based on facts not the same as those in Alabama, may find itself either legally or morally bound by decrees requiring both white and colored pupils to attend the same public schools.

"Alabama should not be bound nor hazard the possibility of being bound by decrees rendered in response to matters arising in other states."

On segregation, Banks says—

City may find it easier to meet rule

The problem of meeting the Supreme Court's ruling on non-segregation in public schools may be simpler to handle in Birmingham than in many other places, City School Supt. Frazer Banks said today.

Dr. Banks told the Birmingham Protestant Ministers Assn. here today that this should be possible because city schools are built as near the children they serve as possible.

"In Birmingham like in most other cities our size, schools are built as near to the center of the population to be served as possible, except where the center of the population has shifted," he said.

"White elementary schools are near the center of population in white residence areas.

"Negro elementary schools are near the center of population in Negro centers.

"Making separate districts for each individual school should not make any great shift in school enrollment where there is enough room for all the children."

THIS WAS in answer to a question by one of the ministers.

Dr. Banks pointed out that just how Birmingham public schools will carry out the Supreme Court's plan to eliminate segregation will be decided by the State Board of Education set up in compliance with the Constitution of the State of Alabama.

The three problems discussed by the school superintendent were: Increase in enrollment particularly in the primary grades; increase in cost of services and the way in which the Legislature made its last appropriations.

DR. W. A. SHELTON, president of the association, appointed the following committee to plan the 1955 Festival of Faith:

Dr. R. Laurence Dill Jr., Dr. J. Wayne Drash, Dr. Edward V. Ramage, the Rev. John C. Turner and the Rev. Lamar Jackson.

The association also heard a brief discussion of the Brother Bryan Mission.

The meeting was held at the First Methdist Church, downtown.

Montgomery NAACP Requests Hearing To Discuss End Of School Segregation

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

The Montgomery NAACP Chapter has asked for a hearing before the Montgomery Board of Education to discuss ending segregation in the Montgomery school system.

Dr. Clarence M. Dannelly, superintendent of schools, said the mimeographed petition of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People was handed to him last week after a meeting of the Board of Education had adjourned.

As secretary of the school board, Dr. Dannelly said he would present the petition along with other usual business at the next meeting of the board next month.

He said it was a matter for the board and that he had no comment on the petition.

Seventeen of the 22 people signing the petition were residents of Abraham's Vineyard. The others were from various sections of the city.

T. L. Bear Sr., chairman of the board, said the petition would not come before him for action until it had passed through ordinary channels and was presented to the board.

He said all matters which come before the board are studied and decisions arrived at and comments made when the board convenes.

The action followed on the heels of an attempt of 23 Negro pupils two weeks ago to register at the white William Harrison Elementary School just off Norman Bridge road in the southern section of Montgomery.

They were denied registration at the white school with the explanation they would have to register in the school district in which they reside.

Registration in district of registration placed these Negro children in the Abraham Vineyard's Negro School district.

Released by Dr. Dannelly, the petition which was handed him by NAACP representatives reads:

"We, the undersigned, are parents of children of school age entitled to attend and attending the public elementary and secondary high schools under your jurisdiction.

"Pursuant to the state law racially segregated public schools are now being maintained by you for the children of Negro parentage.

"As you undoubtedly know, the United States Supreme Court on May 17, 1954 ruled that the maintenance of racially segregated public schools is a violation of the Constitution of the United States, and that ... in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place.

"Separate educational facilities are inherently equal.

"We, therefore, call upon you to take immediate steps to reorganize the public schools under your jurisdiction in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court on May 17. As we understand these principles, children of public school age attending and entitled to attend public schools cannot be denied admission to any school or be required to attend any school solely because of race and color.

"We request a hearing before the board for the purpose of discussing this petition. We further wish to point out our availability as parents and citizens of this community to be of whatever assistance we can to you in devising and implementing a program of desegregation in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision.

"We are further authorized to advise you that Montgomery branch of NAACP at a meeting on July 17th, 1954 voted to offer its services to the board to aid you in the implementation of a plan of desegregation and we request that Mr. R. L. Mathews, 1000 Ewell St., Montgomery, president of the branch be notified of the date of the meeting on this petition and be invited to be present."

It was signed by Mose C. Harris, 196 Martin Patton; Clayton Williams, 190 John Morris; Hubert Reynolds, 107 John Morris, Mary Campbell, 279 John Morris; Mrs. Alma Peeples, 146 Martin Patton; Zack Stovall, 140 Martin Patton; Willie Mullin, Martin Patton; Luesendy Lawrence, 218 John Morris; Johnie Mae Talbert, 222 John Morris; Annie Bell Connell, 233 John Morris; Charlie Dillard, 103 John Morris; Willie Mack Williams, 130 John Morris; Tobe Sankey, 160 John Morris; Anna Jane Wesley, 435 John Morris; Mrs. Martha Williams, Rt. 1, Box 12; Lorzenia Robinson, Rt. 1, Box 446; Ola Mae Bailey, Rt. 1, Box 31; all residents of, Abraham's Vineyard; Mrs. Bertha Butler, 746 Central St.; Mrs. Elizabeth Butler, 847 Corbett; Columbus Johnson, 847 Corbett; J. T. Primus, 647 Cleveland; and Mrs. Susie Anna Davis, 646 Clinton.

Signing as attorney was Peter Hall and E. D. Nixon as chairman of the NAACP education committee.

Parent - Teacher Association spokesmen for the Negro march on Harrison school said it was not sponsored by the NAACP. The movement was sponsored by the P-TA, the spokesman said.

Alabama Wants Neither Secret Hearings Nor Talmadge Spirit In Education

Important matters of public interest are involved in the special meeting of the State Board of Education which has been called for Friday morning by Governor Gordon Persons.

First there is the question of open or secret discussions.

At the board meeting held June 9th, newsmen were asked to leave while a conference was held with Dr. W. W. Hill, president of the Livingston State Teachers College. Also present was J. V. (Jake) Jordan, Budget Officer.

One member of the Board questioned any legal authority by which to eject the public and the press, but was overruled. The law states that such an executive session can be called only when the "character or good name" of a man or woman is involved.

After the meeting, the board member who had voted against going into secret session publicly re-affirmed his belief that there was "no basis" for barring the press. Yet by going into executive session the board had plainly stated by inference that either Dr. Hill, or Mr. Jordan, or somebody was under attack for doubtful "character or good name."

This demonstrates the dangers involved when public officials arrogate to themselves the right to determine what the public may, or may not know. It is to be hoped that the Board of Education meeting Friday will be open to the people.

A second matter of public interest Friday will be the nature of the discussions with, or about, President Hill. While members of the board have maintained silence on the June 9 meeting, the Associated Press reports that the "unfinished business" announced for Friday "apparently concerns" Dr. W. W. Hill.

Many years have passed since a state college president in Alabama has been confronted by circumstances that suggest political pressure. Alabamians have not shown any liking for the Talmadge-or Bilbo-type rule of education. Our people remember what a disastrous effect political manipulations had upon the educational institutions of Georgia, and how long a time was required for the damage to be repaired. Alabamians count on their State Board of Education to see that the spirit of Bilbo and Talmadge is not resurrected in this good state.

School Leaders Duck Any Stand On Segregation

Education Board Holds Long Talk With LSTC Chief

The Alabama Board of Education met in a lengthy four-hour session at the Capitol yesterday but managed to tiptoe by the segregation issue without comment.

This was the first meeting of the board since the May 17, U.S. Supreme Court ruling which banned segregation in public schools.

Top feature of an otherwise routine meeting was a closed door session with Dr. W. W. Hill, president of Livingston State Teachers College.

After the executive session had concluded, H. L. Upshaw, vice chairman of the board, said no action was taken. He declined to say what had been discussed with Hill but said the matter will be taken up again at the next meeting, something [illegible].

It had been reported before the meeting Dr. Hill's position as president of the college was in jeopardy but this was denied by board members.

A lively debate ensued between board members as they prepared to go into executive session. One member of the board questioned the legality of excluding newsmen from the session but when the question was put to a vote the board member taking sides with the press was outvoted.

Secret Sessions Prohibited

Title 14, Section 394 of the 1940 State code prohibits "executive or secret sessions" of any state board, commission or other agency which handles public funds. However, it provides an exemption in cases where the "character or good name" of a person is involved.

Before asking newsmen to leave the room, the board passed a number of resolutions including one which raised the salaries of the presidents of all state teacher colleges except Dr. Hill from $8,000 to $10,000 a year. This raise will go into effect Oct. 1.

The resolution, presented by Col. Harry M. Ayers, Anniston newspaper publisher, was amended to include the state's two Negro colleges—Alabama State at Montgomery and Alabama A. & M. near Huntsville.

Although Dr. Hill was not included in the salary raise, the board did approve an expenditure of $12,000 to be used for construction of a new $45,000 president's home at Livingston.

Half of Enrollment

Hill's school has an enrollment less than half those of the other three teacher colleges in the state—Jacksonville, Troy and Florence.

Earlier the board voted against appealing a recent Montgomery Circuit Court decision outlawing the 1953 Textbook Labeling Act.

Supt. W. J. Terry, who had previously discribed the law as "unworkable," said the Alabama Textbook Committee also voted against appealing the court ruling.

In other business the board named new members of the Alabama Textbook Committee to serve from July 1 through Jun 30, 1955. Appointed to the committee were:

Mrs. Genevieve R. Smith Jackson; Miss Mae Bryant, Foley; Mrs. Julia Collins, Auburn; Mrs. N. E. Leatherwood, Ragland; Mrs. Dot W Hipp, Fyffe; Mrs. Lena S. Thomas, Moundville; O. E. Brown, Phil Campbell;

Mrs Esther Hester, Cherokee; Miss Ellen Sellers, Dora; R. C. McCulley, Sylacauga; Charles P. Hayes, Kennedy; Mrs. Ruby Massie, Birmingham; Mrs. Opal Burnside, Montgomery and Mrs. Marguerite McCaslan, Union Springs.

The board voted unanimously to change the name of the Negro college in Montgomery to Alabama State College. The school has used that name for several years although its official title was the Alabama State Teachers College.

A committee was also appointed to study the possibility of deleting the word "teachers" from the names of the four state schools.

School Board Votes To Keep Segregation

Education Group Passes Resolution; Hill's Tenure At Livingston Ended

MONTGOMERY, July 9 (AP)—Alabama school officials acted formally today to continue segregation of the races in classrooms even as a Negro minister warned "we are facing a day of judgment."

On motion of Gov. Gordon Persons the State Board of Education adopted, unanimously a resolution to continue school operations through the 1954-55 school year on the same basis as now.

The board also pulled the rug from under Dr. W. W. Hill, president of Livingston State Teachers College who had been fired last month but held his office under a court order.

Gov. Persons in offering the segregation resolution observed state Constitution requires separation of the races in public schools and this is still the supreme law of Alabama.

Explains Law

He said no part of the Alabama Constitution was under attack in any of the cases which brought on the U. S. Supreme Court's historic anti-segregation decision last May 17.

The Rev. S. S. Seay, a Montgomery minister, raised the only voice against the board action.

"We are facing a day of judgment in America," he said, "And none of us is making preparation to meet this judgment."

The minister added that he didn't mean his remark as a "threat" but rather as a "prediction." He urged the board to "let things happen that can happen—now."

Among the things he said could be allowed with the opening of the Fall term of school would be admission of Negro students at the University of Alabama. The minister said he felt also that the state could begin intergrating Negro and white school teachers during the next school year.

Withdraw Charges

Before ending Dr. Hill's tenure at Livingston the board adopted a resolution withdrawing all charges that had been made against him.

Dr. W. J. Terry, state school superintendent, in calling for Hill's dismissal at the June 19 board meeting charged him with insubordination, incompetency and wilful neglect of duty.

The Livingston president went into Circuit Court here for a temporary restraining order which held up execution of the board's order.

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones ruled the board acted improperly in dismissing Dr. Hill without giving him 10 days written notice of the charges against him and a public hearing to answer them.

The resolution approved today merely mentioned "unreconcilable" differences between the board and Dr. Hill on administrative matters.

A resolution of protest from the Livingston Alumni Assn. at Mobile was read by board member Myron Rubey of Mobile.

Montgomery Attorney James J. Carter who represented Dr. Hill said he recognized the board's authority to fire Dr. Hill since the charges were withdrawn "and his name cleared."

Finding Ways To Do The Unconstitutional

Members of the Alabama Board of Education are scheduled to meet in Montgomery Friday, July 9 to, among other things find "ways and means of maintaining segregation in the public schools of Alabama." The United States Supreme Court on May 17 unanimously ruled that two-standard schools based upon race have no place in the field of public education. This is now the law of the land as interpreted and pronounced by the highest court of the nation.

Not to mention moral and ethical grounds, it looks bad indeed for public officials sworn to uphold and respect the law to be scheming to evade, dodge and disobey the law. Far better would it be for all to seek means to carry out the mandates of the court. Alabama must accept the challenge of living with change and of moving forward in the direction of the full promise of democracy.

Public education means too much to the survival of democracy to resort to emotionalism in seeking a way out of a situation which requires enlightenment, broad-mindedness and demonstrated bold goodwill. State-imposed segregation is without legal standing in this country and has never been justifiable. The Alabama Board of Education has a great opportunity to show that its members understand the issues of the new times. They have the opportunity to stand up and be counted in the parade of liberty-bearers for a democracy, which when it works, works for all alike. History will be a fearless witness of how well the members of the board live up to the freedom demands of democracy and the ethical requirements of Christianity.

Persons of vigorous goodwill owe it to the Alabama Board of Education to give creative assistance in finding ways to meet constructively the robust implications of the court ruling outlawing dual schools. To do so would obviously serve to strengthen our schools and improve our community relations. Healthy group relations is a product of friendly person to person relations.

We believe that positive action for implementing the court decision would far outweigh any negative designs for trying either to preserve the unconstitutional public school system or to delay de-segregation. This whole thing is enmeshed with a larger and dearer consideration. For underlying the school freedom issue is the basic and cherished concept of respect for law. Respect for law is the American way. Respect for law historically in this country knows neither racial nor sectional line. For it is the solid line of sound Americans.

Educators Vote NoIntegration; Dr. Hill Fired

State Board Okays Segregated Schools Through 1954-55

By BOB INGRAM

The Alabama Board of Education voted unanimously yesterday to continue segregation in the public schools of Alabama at least through the 1954-55 school year.

By a vote of 11-0 the board passed the resolution on segregation which had been introduced by Gov. Gordon Persons. It was the first official action taken by the board since the May 17 ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court.

The decision on segregation completely overshadowed another feature of the board meeting, the removal of Dr. W. W. Hill as president of Livingston State Teachers College. Dr. Hill was dismissed effective yesterday by a board vote of 10-1.

Lone Dissent

Member C. G. Dobbins of Montgomery cast the lone vote in favor of retaining Dr. He did so on the grounds he felt the board "did not have a case" against the Livingston president. Dobbins had voted against Hill's dismissal at the June 18 meeting also.

Persons pointed out in the segregation resolution the Alabama Constitution says: "Separate schools shall be provided for white and colored children, and no child of either race shall be permitted to attend a school of the other race."

He said further this particular constitutional provision "has never been stricken by any court in the land."

Ruling Not Final

Referring to the recent Supreme Court decision, Persons said "the ruling is not final in that the how, the when and the general and specific applicability of the decision has not, and will not be announced until after the beginning of the 1954-55 school term of the public schools of Alabama."

The three basic rulings of the resolution are as follows:

"First, that the public schools of Alabama will operate for the 1954-55 school year. . . on the same basis that they operated for the school year of 1953-54.

"Second, That no changes in this announced policy shall be made in any public school system in this state during the school year 1954-55, irrespective of any action by any court in any case in which a unit of the public school system of the State of Alabama is not a party.

"Third, That we call upon all interested persons, school officials, faculties, students, patrons and the general public to work together to make the 1954-55 school year in Alabama the best we have ever had for the advancement of our greatest resource, the children of Alabama."

Protest From Negro

The only protest to this resolution came from the Rev. S. S. Seay, a Montgomery Negro minister.

"Being a black man in this group of white people, I know you people are wondering why I am here," Seay said. "And I know the good Lord wants me to speak here today.

"We are facing a day of judgment in America, and it makes my heart sick to see that none of us have made any preparations to meet this day," the minister declared.

"I am here not to make a rebuttal to the resolution, nor to make any comment," he added, "I am only doing what I know God wants me to do."

Second Day Of Judgment

"There is going to be a second day of judgment, and a worst day of judgment, if we all don't do what we can do—peacefully," Seay said. "There are ways in which integration can be worked out in a peaceful process, and if we don't find these ways then we will be punished. Let me emphasize, I am not threatening you, just prophesying."

Seay urged the board to consider admitting Negro students to the colleges in Alabama and also said he felt it would be wise to begin the integrating of Negro and white teachers "on a small scale this fall."

No Comments Heard

None of the board members made any comment regarding Rev. Seay's remarks.

The board's action against Dr. Hill provided most of the fireworks of the meeting. A delegation of about 30 students, faculty members and citizens of Livingston attended the meeting and a number were sharply critical of the board's action.

The board adopted a resolution withdrawing all charges originally placed against Dr. Hill, but the resolution also included a paragraph which terminated his tenure in office effective yesterday.

One of the critics of the board's action was Mrs. Abbie Moore, a teacher at an elementary school near Livingston for 34 years.

"I can see no justification for the charges placed against Dr. Hill, and I fear that an able and respected educator is being sacrificed by selfish interests," Mrs. Moore declared.

Battle With Governor

Later, after the board had dismissed Dr. Hill, Mrs. Moore engaged in a sharp oral battle with Gov. Persons.

"This is the first time I have seen Alabama government in action at close range," Mrs. Moore told the governor. "Am I to follow this policy in my own class rooms?"

One of the persons attending the meeting was the wife of Dr. Hill, and as the meeting wore on she became obviously upset.

At one point, one of the board members turned to her and stressed the fact none of the board members "have anything against your husband personally."

The attractive Mrs. Hill snapped back, as tears streamed down her cheeks, "I think you should leave me out of this . . . will you please do that . . . just leave me out of it."

Statement To Board

James Carter, local attorney representing the absent Dr. Hill, made a brief statement to the board following its decision. Carter said:

"Now that all charges have been withdrawn, and Dr. Hill's name, ability and integrity are not questioned in the slightest degree, it is recognized that the board has the authority to fix the tenure of any president of a state teachers' college or any other employe of the board not under the merit system.

"This is a duty and a responsibility of the board. If the board elects to exercise its authority in this matter, it will, of course, accept and bear full responsibility in the forum of public opinion for the wisdom and justice of its action."

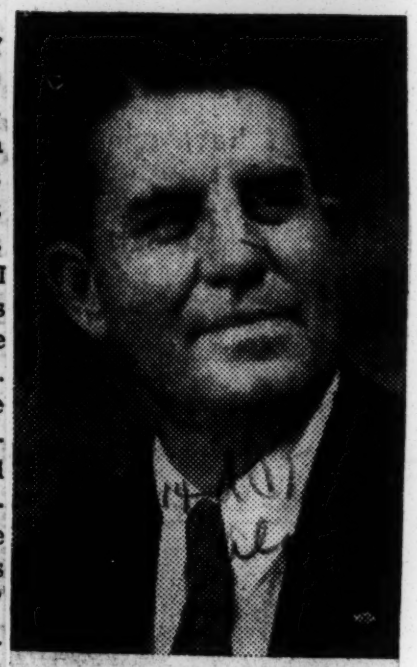
Acting Head Named

Later, the board passed another resolution appointing Dr. R. M. Lyon of LSTC as acting president of the instiution until a successor is named. The board had originally planned to retain Dr. Hill on the payroll as an advisory, but in a third resolution passed yesterday Dr. Hill was released immediately.

Dr. Hill was originally dismissed on June 18 on charges of incompetency and insubordination, but he appealed to the circuit court and the board's action was overruled by a temporary injunction.

Failing in this manner to dismiss Dr. Hill, the board merely dropped the charges and ended Hill's tenure of office.

Clyde A. Pruitt Is Named Superintendent Of Schools



CLYDE A. PRUITT

Clyde A. Pruitt, principal of Tallassee High School for the past several years, has been elected superintendent of Macon County Schools, effective next July 1 when B. L. Balch, present superintendent, retires. Mr. Pruitt joined the Macon County school system last Monday to serve as assistant superintendent until he takes over the top executive post.

Mr. Pruitt was born at Pine Hill, near Camden, Ala. He entered Auburn in 1925 and played football under the famous Auburn coaches "Mike" Donahue and Boozer Pitts. Mr. Pruitt was named on the "All Southern" (now Southeastern) team of 1922. During his senior year in college he was tapped by the ODK, national leadership fraternity and was elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. He was a member of the Alpha Gamma Rho social fraternity and was president of the Auburn Glee Club.

Upon graduation in 1925, Mr. Pruitt went to Notasulga where he taught and coached for three years. He produced one of the finest Notasulga football elevens to come from this community, beating such schools as Alex City, Tallassee, Columbus, Dadeville and Tuskegee, with only 13 players. Among the men who played on this team were the late Pat Evans, Marshall Segrest, Mack Segrest, Victor Copeland, George Boles, Bennie Higgins, Mack Jackon, Red Long, C. H. Whitman, Winston Stevenson, Cecil Wilkerson, Ira Cook and Olin Gutherie.

42,000,000 Names: A Study In Utter Folly

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones administered a fitting coup de grace to Alabama's textbook branding law, Act 888, yesterday, but there is no reason to suppose that this kind of legislative idiocy can't happen again. When the case against the law finally got to the courts there was hardly a voice raised in its defense. But when the act was passed last year by the state legislature, only one lawmaker voted against it.

Only one lawmaker voted against a law which would, by testimony produced in the court action against it, have cost an institution like API a million dollars and thousands of man-hours to attempt to comply with it. If API had attempted to comply with the law, it would have had to check the political leanings, if any, of an estimated 42,000,000 authors (including, of course, duplications) and counting not just the authors of books in Auburn libraries but books listed as parallel reading as well.

As the court noted, the end result of Act 888 would not be labelled textbooks "but no textbooks." It is jolting that a deliberative body of intelligent men could have passed such a stupendously unworkable law with hardly a discussion. There is a dangerous form of non-logic in the land, of which this law is only one example, which holds that anything aimed at communism is, ipso facto, all right. On such a premise it would be easy to justify the repeal of the U.S. Constitution.

Quite apart from its being an example of patriotism gone wild, the corpse of Act 888 should remain as a reminder to our legislators that it wouldn't hurt to read the laws they enact. A few seconds of reading Act 888, followed by a few seconds of thought, would have convinced any reasonable man that the proposal was, at least, unworkable; at worst, paralyzing to our state schools and colleges.

Unworkable Textbook Law Thrown Out

MONTGOMERY, May 10 (AP)—Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones denounced Alabama's textbook labeling act as "unworkable" and "unreasonable" today and then signed an order declaring the law unconstitutional.

The 1953 statute, which required school textbook publishers to designate any writings by Communist authors or others with subversive leanings, was attacked in a test suit filed by the publishers themselves.

They argued during a hearing last month that it was impossible to comply with the law. As proof, they submitted affidavits to show that neither the Justice Department nor the House Un-American Activities Committee was able to furnish lists of subversive writers.

Judge Jones mentioned that in announcing his decision and in holding the law "unworkable, vague and indefinite." He said the Legislature "failed to set up any sufficient guidance to those who must comply."

"It is impossible to give Act 888 (the textbook law) any intelligible application in the circumstances it is intended to operated," the court declared, and the State Board of Education and the State Textbook Committee have "no right or authority" to require publishers to comply.

Judge Jones said, too, that the act is "unreasonable, arbitrary and oppressive" and that it would deprive the schools of needed textbooks and other reading matter "which was plainly not the purpose of the act."

Let Us Be Candid

The Boutwell legislative committee on segregation has urged a special session to abandon Alabama's public school system.

Now the Constitution of the United States is what the United States Supreme Court says it is. Does anybody dispute that?

The Supreme Court has ruled that segregation violates the Constitution. Does anybody dispute that?

Therefore, the Boutwell committee's purpose is to evade the supreme law of the land. Does anybody dispute that?

The Advertiser wishes to make itself clear. This evasion may be desirable. It may be undesirable. It may be wise or unwise.

Certainly it would not be the first time Alabama has studied until it found the means of evading both the U.S. Constitution and the Alabama Constitution.

But in considering the Boutwell "take-out" of the public school system, let us candidly acknowledge that our purpose is evasion and weigh the step prayerfully.

Benjamin Mays Lays Out Blueprint for the South

Predicts End of School Jim Crow, Then Eyes Future

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Expressing his belief that the United States Supreme Court will rule that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays declared that in the very near future in the South "men will be competing with men . . . the best among men . . . and not just the best in certain racial groups."

Dr. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, made this forecast as he spoke to a capacity crowd of teachers, parents and other citizens in attendance at the Jefferson County Negro Teachers Association's first Cultural Forum held at the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church.

The appearance of this noted educator, scholar, world-traveler, orator and writer initiated the first of a series of cultural programs to be presented this year by the JCNTA, of which Prof. N. Judge King is president.

DR. MAYS pointed out that in a segregated society, many feel proud at just being the "best Negro doctor, the best Negro teacher, the best Negro preacher, the best Negro banker, and not the best among men."

He warned that such "tags" will soon be a thing of the past.

He said that the United States cannot remain half-segregated and half non-segregated, just as the United States "did not remain half-slave and half-free."

He suggested that the teachers be not afraid of losing their jobs if the Supreme Court outlaws segregation in the schools. He counseled them to be competently prepared when the "great change' takes place.

"I don't believe the South would mistreat its teachers or deny them job opportunities because of skin color. I believe that the South will judge everyone by his or her competency and merits and not by color."

* * *

THE SPEAKER deplored the "prophets of doom" who are spreading rumors that race riots and bloodshed will follow. He denounced such nonsense, pointing out that such things did not occur when the United States outlawed segregation in the armed forces, in schools on government reservations and many job opportunities.

Dr. Mays declared that segregation is not only un-Christian and unconstitutional, but "segregation is a badge of inferiority pinned upon the weak by the strong."

He pointed out that the 'badge" says:

1. Negroes are sub-human.
2. Negroes are unfit to live among others.
3. That police don't have to be equally just in treatment.
4. And that Negro children can be kicked around without anything being done about it.

* * *

"THE TRAGEDY of segregation in the South is that a majority of the Negroes have been conditioned to feel that they are inferior to others," the speaker declared.

Dressing his oratory to fit the program's theme, "The Role of Educational Leadership in Our Society," Dr. Mays expounded:

"Teachers constitute the most signficant group in our society in America."

* * *

HE POINTED out that teachers are "leaders" and that Jefferson County, Birmingham, the South and the United States comprise the "society."

He said that one of the prerequisites for being a leader is that the teacher "must know thoroughly what he or she teaches." If not, "you handicap our future doctors, our future leaders, our future legislators." He said they all have to come by the teacher.

"Teaching is a calling, not a profession," Dr. Mays explained.

He said that if a teacher knowingly teaches what he or she does not know, that teacher has "committed a crime." He said that it is not only a crime, but "distinctly immoral." He suggested that no one wants to be a criminal.

* * *

THE TEACHER'S role is to "know what you teach." To do that, one must study, study and study, the speaker said.

He said that the Ph. D. or master's degree is no guarantee that one is thoroughly or competently prepared. He pointed out that even a Ph. D. holder "will get rusty and behind the times" if he does not continue to study, study and study.

Dr. Mays said there are two kinds of teachers. They are:

1. Those who cannot do anything else, and
2. Those who know how and love to teach.

* * *

HE COUNSELED the teachers not to teach just to make a living, but to "make a life."

He said, "I don't know what kind of living Moses made, but he made a life. I do not believe that Jesus made a comfortable living as a carpenter, but I know he made a life.

"The Apostle Paul made a life. Due to his physical ugliness, it is very doubtful that Socrates made a living, but he did make a life."

Officials Remain Mum On Segregation Decree

By Bob Ingram
Capitol Reporter, The Advertiser

THERE HAS BEEN a considerable reluctance among officials to comment on the court decision outlawing public school segregation. This was plain at the state Board of Education meeting Wednesday.

INGRAM

Holding its first regular meeting since the May 17 decision, the board bypassed the question without the slightest comment.

The board conducted a mass of routine business in methodical manner. It almost seemed the members had spent hours rehearsing their lines to make certain there would be no slip-ups.

Gov. Persons has also followed this "speak softly" policy very closely. The governor has repeatedly refused to make any comment on the segregation question.

Even Gov.-nominate James Folsom who seldom hesitates to comment on any thing, has steered clear of this ticklish matter.

Possibly this watchful waiting has its merits. Most certainly when the NAACP gets ready to bear down, the first targets will be Georgia and South Carolina—the states where Govs. Talmadge and Byrnes have been so outspoken.

In this case, it could be he who speaks his piece may not get much peace.

Folsom Pleased

INCOMING GOV. FOLSOM checked out of a downtown hotel late Wednesday after three days of legislative conferences.

A spokesman for the governor said he was "extremely well pleased" with the conferences and felt that "much good had been accomplished" in his chats with 33 members of the new legislature.

The sole purpose of these meetings was to line up the new House and Senate members behind the Folsom platform, and judging from the atmosphere which was evident throughout the sessions, the man from Cullman must have done a good job of selling.

Folsom followers were particularly pleased with the outcome of one of the sessions between Folsom and a new member of the legislature from a South Alabama county.

There had been widespread reports that this man was preparing to form an anti-Folsom bloc during the next administration, but these rumors were quickly erased when the two men got together. The legislator not only denied the report, but made it more emphatic by inviting into the room several strong Folsom supporters from his own county to witness the denial.

Legislative Turnover

WHILE MENTIONING the new Legislature, it is interesting to note the vast turnover of personnel in both the House and Senate.

Of the 106 House members nominated in the recent elections, only 35 served in this capacity during the present administration.

The turnover in the Senate is even greater, with only four members of the present House being reelected.

However, this almost complete change in the Senate is to be expected. In most cases where two or more counties share the same senator, that position is alternately filled by a man from each of the counties.

Notes On An Incendiary

"WHAT makes a white man in Montgomery, Ala., do what Aubrey Williams, Jr., did?"

Many Montgomerians are asking that in genuine bafflement over why a man should defy the ancient folkways and dominant sentiment of the village as young Williams did in accompanying the 23 Negro school children in their effort to force their way into a white school.

It is a striking incident of human behavior when a man places himself beyond the pale with an open, calculated transgression of the tribal way and order without hope of gain. The dimensions of such defiance may be measured by the fact that more than half the businessmen of this city wear coats in the summer in obedience to punishing custom and shrink from the mild controversy of a letter to the editor.

We may substitute the name of Aubrey, Sr., for his son since their viewpoint on race matters is identical and since the longer history of the father provides more traction for a discussion.

AUBREY WILLIAMS — a nationally known alumnus of the New Deal. His political views were such that after a while the Senate rejected confirmation of his appointment to high office (loyalty was not the question).

Williams is a gentle, winsome radical who snoots reality. Marshall Field, one of the tamest Roosevelt multi-millionaires, at one point decided to expand his humanitarian exertions by becoming a newspaper publisher.

Merchant Field is a man of considerable quality, but he was not successful. He tried to publish a New York paper (PM) without advertisements. It cost him a hunk of grandpap's mercantile millions to learn that ads are closely attended as reading matter. PM, edited by a stall of self-conscious "liberals", died.

The only way Field was able to maintain life for his Chicago Sun was to graft it on the going Chicago Times.. Field finally decided that the cobbler should stick to his last and returned to merchandising.

HOWEVER, one of his enterprises, the Southern Farm & Home, survives in Montgomery. Field and an associate own the controlling interest. Williams publishes it.

The Farm & Home is a monthly tabloid with upwards of 800,000 circulation over the Southern region. Williams, with his ineffective idealism, gives his man-with-a-hoe clientele massive doses of sermons on the evil of McCarthy, how Point IV is working out in Pakistan, etc. It undoubtedly bores his subscribers.

Williams also harangues his Southern farmers on the evil of segregation. They cancel their subscriptions and write inflamed letters to the editor. Williams prints them.

★

SOME years ago, as many will remember, the lean and gentle Williams stood beside Gessner McCorvey and told a throng of Confederate descendants in the City Auditorium that he did not believe in segregation and had had colored guests in his home.

The result of all this is that Williams is a pariah in Montgomery. People looked through him or away from him.

The Advertiser, whose personal relationship with Williams has been one of personal amity, has before now referred to him as an amiable John Brown at Harper's Ferry, Ala. But here and over the country Williams is considered an incendiary.

The Advertiser considers his agitations unwise and of folly fabricated. The Advertiser deplores the Negro intrusion into the white school. Law or no law, it violates tradition, training and inclination and hence will be obeyed like prohibition.

But while deploring Williams' agitations (he is not, we understand, the author of the present incident) The Advertiser considers it fair to say that Williams behaves as he does out of conviction. He holds his views at considerable economic and social sacrifice.

★

WILLIAMS and his like-minded associates act unwisely in our view. Nevertheless, if Wililams were defending himself before a bar for opposing segregation he would not be without a brief. He probably reasons: "The United States Supreme Court says I'm right. The Democratic Party says I'm right. The Republican Party says I'm right. Adlai Stevenson says I'm right. Dwight Eisenhower says I'm right. A great element of the Protestant and Catholic churches say I'm right. Can you say I'm alone?"

No Immediate Threat To Montgomery Segregation

THE effort yesterday to register a group of 23 Negro children in a white school seemed to be purely a legal maneuver. It was a herald of things to come, but it presents no immediate difficulty.

Segregation in Montgomery schools is in no danger for the time being.

What happened was precisely what was expected. It was one salvo in a barrage of legal actons undertaken by Negro leaders to enforce local application of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling.

★

THURGOOD MARSHALL, the Negro lawyer who argued the case before the court, told The Advertiser in an interview some time ago that he well understood that it would be years before segregation was dissolved in some Southern areas and that it might be necessary to take legal action county by county.

The court's ruling did not specifically apply to Alabama. The court is stalling sudden application of its ruling by means of an announcement that it would say, after hearings, just how its ruling should be applied.

Negro leaders here do not expect any mingling of the races in Montgomery schools in this school year.

Their action yesterday in herding a group of innocents to a white school evidently was to create a case ("justiciable issue") that could be taken to court to compel, eventually, school de-segregation in Montgomery.

They went very much as the Negro golf players recently went to the white municipal course in Birmingham—without any golf clubs.

★

WE SUPPOSE that the Negro leaders anticipate that they may have to implement the court's ruling with local suits in almost all of Alabama's 67 counties. Such court action is a long-drawn process and, even when the courts are friendly, considerable periods of time are required for final action in the appellate chain.

What happened in Montgomery yesterday at the William R. Harrison Elementary School is a dot in the pattern of legal compulsion of the South planned and announced by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

For example, alongside yesterday's Alabama Journal story on the attack upon Montgomery's oaken segregation system was one from Dallas, Texas, saying:

> DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 2 (UP)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People formally petitioned Dallas schools yesterday to abolish segregation at once—and the superintendent of schools immediately rejected the petition.

★

THERE was yet another story in yesterday's Advertiser:

> CHARLESTON, W.Va., Sept. 1 (AP)—The same orderly pattern of integrating Negro pupils into West Virginia's public school system continued today. A total of 41 Negro students reported for classes in white schools as Brooke County opened its new term. White and Negro pupils already were mingling at other schools which opened Monday or Tuesday.

★

THERE you have the key to segregation. In West Virginia there are relatively few Negroes, and so there is no resistance.

In Montgomery, Ala., and Dallas, Texas, the proportion of Negro citizens is large and there is firm, and for the time fixed and unyielding, resistance to mingling.

CITY LIMITS

... By JOE AZBELL ...

Negroes Bar Whites

THE question of whether Negroes will enter the white schools of Montgomery became a very important one Thursday when 23 Negroe children attempted to register in Harrison Elementary School, which adjoins the Negro-populated Abraham's Vineyard.

Azbell

At the Montgomery county courthouse, the incident caused some refleotion on another long-established Negro community in Madison Park. The opposite approath has been taken by Negro residents there in a suburb of this the Cradle of the Confederacy.

The Negroes in that community insist upon segregation. And they have set up a legal code to keep the white man out.

Attorneys going over the records of the probate court have noted the unusual restrictions on several occasions and commented on it.

The official records show the first restriction code was set up by 31 Negro property owners of the Madison community Dec. 18, 1940. They were led in the move by General P. Madison of the large Negro Madison clan, who still lives in the community.

They filed on that date in the probate court this code of restrictions:

"Know all men by these presents: that we the undersigned persons being the owners of all the lands in the community known as Madison community desiring to confine the ownership of all of said lands to the colored people because we believe that good feeling in the community can best be accomplished by such ownership and race agitation can best be prevented by a restriction ownership;

"For and in consideration of the mutual benefits which will result in such course and in consideration of the sum of $1.00 paid by each to the other do hereby place a restriction upon the ownership of the said lands owned by us and make it a covenant running with the lands that none of said lands owned by us shall ever be sold or rented or leased to any person not of the colored race nor occupied by any person not of the colored race."

And to make certain that the code was carried out, the 31 Negroes set up a damage clause which read:

"And in the event that this convenant is ever violated by any of us that person so doing shall be liable in damages to the other owners of said land. . . . .

The code was signed by John H. Winston, Gen. Madison, Luerennar Ware, Lucy Casbet, Eli Madison, Devotie Ware, Martha J. Porter, Delamia Felder, Charles Mitchell, C. G. Trotter, Jerry Chambless, Bill Williams, Eddie Watts, David Charles, Curtis Williams, Frank Hendricks, Mose Williams, Andrew Hendricks, Isiah Henderson, Saul Williams, Rachel Fuller, Harvey Hall, Bennie Arms, Waller Henderson, Harvey Williams, Isaac Felder, Mary Harper, Stephen Gadson, Eliza Wilson, Emma Fuller, and Robert Taylor.

It's Good For Negro Business

STRANGELY, the code has protected the property in many ways. It has kept away the mortgage men who often foreclosed on property because they don't want to take a chance on ending up with a Negro restricted piece of ground. It means the only businessmen in Madison Park—grocers, filling station operators, etc.—can be Negroes.

While there is no prosperity story connected with Madison Park, there is a certain pride in the community in the ownership of homes and land. They are first rate citizens. Sheriff's deputies are seldom called to the community.

Because none of the people who signed the original code were available for comment yesterday, I don't know the origin of the colored-only code.

But a check of the tax assessor's office shows that the restriction covers between 1,200 and 2,000 acres of land along the Wetumpka highway near the overpass between the Alabama River bridge and Gunter Air Force Base.

The first code must have proved successful for in July 3, 1944, a second code covering more acreage was entered on the probate court records. It was signed by Arthur Madison, David Madison Ernest Taylor, Osie Motley, Juliette Smith, Addie Taylor, Ben Vinson, Horatius Ware, Carlton Coleman, and McKinley Faurier.

End Of The Line

AND STILL a third code of the same wording was entered on the records on Aug. 11, 1947. It was signed by Elijah Madison, Eddie Saunders, Will Moore, Louvenia Williams, Jack Cattrell, Lucile Peterson, Eula Washington, Lizzie Williams, Leola Tally, Paul Wood, Kelly Hadnott, Killis Draw, Henry Patton, James F. Motley, Maggie Gavin, Callie Ray, Annie Lee Hendrick, Louis Hendrick, Julia Lee Hendrick, George Madison, Mamie Guice, Lucas Molton, Archie Haggerty, Perry Wells and W. F. Madison.

The court house records show that this is the only property in Montgomery county restricted to use by Negroes. Yet there are many pieces of property restricted to whites.

The Madison community is considered by real estate men to be very valuable. In years to come, it no doubt will become a part of the city. Houses for whites have been built up in many areas along the Wetumpka highway. But when the white homes come up to the border line of the Madison community, construction will have to stop there.

There, a white man can't own an inch of ground.

Dispute over improvements—

Negro parents assert capital school board broke promise

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 7—(AP)—A group of Negro parents whose children tried to enter a white school are blaming the attempt on what they call broken promises by the City-County School Board.

In a prepared statement yesterday, the Parent-Teacher Assn. of the Abraham Vineyard School for Negroes said the Board promised to improve the Negro school but hasn't done it.

And that, the statement said, was why 23 Negro children sought enrollment last Thursday at the all-white William R. Harrison School just 200 yards away from the Vineyard school.

THE NEGRO PTA said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had nothing to do with the enrollment attempt and that an NAACP observer merely went along.

SUPT. C. M. DANNELLY said, "We've done everything we promised to do" about improvements. When the Negro pupils tried to enter the white school last week, Principal Robert Anderson turned them down with the explanation that they were in the Vineyard school district.

White School In Capital Turns Down
gro Youths Trying To Register

TUSKEGEE INST
ALA 3 AMA

Move Designed To Form Basis For Legal War

William R. Harrison On Talliaferro Street NAACP Testing Area

By JACK FREEMAN

A group of 23 Negro children tried to enroll at the new all-white William R. Harrison School on Talliaferro Street at the south end of Montgomery yesterday. They were turned down.

The move, apparently designed to serve as the basis for a lawsuit to bring Alabama's segergation laws before the U. S. Supreme Court, was the first effort Negroes in the state have made to enter white schools since the court ruled segregation in public schools constitutional.

Related story, pictures, map on Page 1-B.

Nesbitt Elmore, a white attorney representing the group, said, "We definitely plan to take the issue into court."

The probable issue in the suit, if decided by the Supreme Court, could affect school practices not only in the South, but throughout the country. It may test the common technique of "adjusting" school districts to segregate the races.

Federal Suit Likely

He said no decision has been made on when or where the suit would be filed, but said it would probably be in U. S. District Court here "since it is a federal question."

The reason principal Robert Anderson gave for turning down the enrollment applications was all the children lived in another school district, that of Abraham's Vineyard.

The Abraham's Vineyard school, with three classrooms and an enrollment of approximately 90 Negro students, is on the same block as the brand-new Harrison school, with more than 20 modern classrooms and an enrollment of more than 650 white students.

The Negro children, their parents and two "observers" from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People showed up at the white school yesterday morning after most of the white students enrolling for the year had left.

Led By Williams

They were "led into the school," according to Anderson, by Aubrey Williams Jr., son of the former administrator of the old National Youth Administration, now publisher of the Southern Farmer.

Williams said afterwards he went along because of "friendly interest" and "because I was interested in seeing democracy at work." He said he had nothing to do with organizing the group, but he was interested in seeing desegregation come about in the public schools.

The group, sponsored by the Abraham's Vineyard P-TA, was taken into Anderson's office where the children filled out the customary enrollment blanks. After checking the addresses on the blanks, Anderson told the children they would have to enroll at the Abraham's Vineyard school.

Horace G. Bell, treasurer of the Montgomery chapter of the NAACP, who accompanied the group as an "observer," said the group was treated "as cordially as possible."

Lawsuit For Sure

But he said a lawsuit would definitely come out of the incident. The issue, as he defined it, is whether the county can exclude Negroes from a school by manipulating the district line.

The Harrison school district is bounded on the south by Martin Patton road, directly behind the school. There is a Negro residential area across the street.

Bell said, "We are going to get together soon to decide what our next step will be. It is quite certain that we are not going to let the matter drop now."

His son, William Bell, applied for admittance to API in 1948, but later withdrew his application because "I was upset over all the talk around town about it." He is now teaching school at Clanton.

R. L. Mathews, president of the Montgomery NAACP branch, denied any knowledge of the plans to enroll the Negro children in the white school.

Bear Uncertain

T. L. Bear Sr., chairman of the Montgomery County Board of Education, said, "I don't know what we will do." He explained he had not expected anything like this so soon.

He emphasized Alabama's constitution forbids mixing the races in schools. All school officials are sworn to uphold Alabama's law, he said, and until the law requiring segregation is knocked out or changed, "No one connected with education could follow any other than the present procedure."

"If and when the Supreme Court hands down a ruling declaring segregation unconstitutional in all states, and the Alabama legislature passes a law in accordance with it," he said, "I don't know what we will do."

No Serious Trouble

Bear said he did not foresee any serious trouble in Montgomery because there are so many "good people, both white and Negro" here.

Dr. Clarence M. Dannelly, superintendent of schools, said he thought Principal Anderson an Asst. Supt. William S. Garr

NOT FOR THEM—Two of 23 Negro children who were denied admission to the William R. Harrison Elementary School yesterday walk down the stairs of the school after an inspection of the building. Harrison School, the newest unit in the school system within the city limits, is located on Taliaferro Street near the Negro-populated Abraham's Vineyard.

handled the situation "beautifully."

The president of the Alabama NAACP, W. C. Patton of Birmingham said other attempts are planned to enroll Negro children in white schools in the state. He declined to say where or when.

Negro children seek admission at Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 2—(AP)—Twenty-three Negro children sought unsuccessfully to enroll at a new, all-white elementary school today in what appeared to be the first of a series of similar registration attempts throughout Alabama.

The Negroes who appeared at the newly opened William R. Harrison School here, accompanied by their parents and two officials of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, were not accepted as students.

THEY WERE ADVISED by Principal Robert Anderson that they were not eligible to register at the school because they were from a different school district.

"We went through the regular process of taking information needed for enrollment cards used in schools throughout the county," the principal said." And the children and parents were informed that they lived in the school district served by the Abraham's Vineyard School.

"Since they live outside our school district, they were advised they could not be enrolled in our school and that they should enroll in the proper school."

ANDERSON SAID the group was led into the school by Aubrey Williams Jr., son of the publisher of the Southern Farm and Home Magazine and former administrator of the old National Youth Administration during the Roosevelt administration.

Two observers for the Alabama chapter of the NAACP, The Rev. Horace G. Bell and The Rev. D. Jackson, accompanied the group.

At Birmingham, W. C. Patton, president of the Alabama NAACP chapter, said other attempts to enroll Negro children in white schools are planned.

"The schools of Alabama are going to be asked to conform with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court," he said.

Patton declined to say where or when the other efforts are planned.

YOUNG WILLIAMS, contacted later, said he accompanied the group out of "friendly interest" and "because I was interested in seeing democracy at work."

He said he had nothing to do with planning the effort, but was much interested in seeing desegregation in public schools take place.

Asked if he or the others were aware that the state constitution prohibits enrollment of Negroes in white schools, Williams said, "I didn't think the Supreme Court decision was important. That was not the important issue involved."

Negroes Test Alabama School

Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 2 (AP)—A group of 23 Negro children sought unsuccessfully to enroll in an all-white elementary school today in an action that may set the stage for a lawsuit.

Nesbitt Elmore, a white Montgomery attorney representing the group, said, "We definitely plan to take the issue into court."

Won't Let Matter Drop

Another spokesman for the group, the Rev. Horace G. Bell, a Negro Congregationalist minister, said, "We certainly don't intend to let the matter drop here."

Mr. Bell accompanied the children and their parents to the school as an observer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

W. C. Patton, Birmingham, president of the Alabama N.A.A.C.P. chapter, said other attempts are planned to enroll Negro children in white schools. He declined to say where or when.

This was the first attempt by Negroes to seek admission into Alabama public schools since the United States Supreme Court ruled against segregation in public schools.

Reports from other Southern states showed no similar moves undertaken or planned by the N.A.A.C.P.

The Negro group showed up at the new William R. Harrison School which opened its doors to students for the first time today.

Robert Anderson, Harrison principal, advised the Negroes that they were not eligible to enroll as students there because they lived in another school district.

Children Denied Entry Into Montgomery, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(INS)—Twenty three Negro children tried to enroll in all-white Montgomery school Thursday in what was described as the first step to force Southern Education Boards to conform with the Supreme Court ruling.

W. C. Patton, President of the Alabama conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People chapters said all Boards of Education will first be asked to conform with the U. S. Supreme Court ruling which abolished segregation."

Doctor Clarence M. Dannelly, Superintendent of schools in Montgomery County, said, "This whole thing is part of a south-wide effort by the NAACP to end segregation in the public schools."

The Negro children who applied for admission in the William R. Harrison school were turned down on the grounds that they lived in another school district.

After their names and addresses were taken they were told to enroll in the Alabama Vinyard School, an All-Ngro school.

Nesbitt Elmore, Attorney for the Montgomery group, said his clients had not determined whether to go ahead with a suit against the Education Board now or wait until after additional Supreme Court hearings. But he said they plan definitely to enter a suit "at sometime."

Accompanying the children were two representatives of the NAACP and Aubrey Williams, Jr., son of the publisher of the Southern Farm and Home Magazine. Williams said he want along "because I want to see these children get decent schooling."

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled last spring that segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional, but means of effecting the ruling were not decided. However, the court set additional hearings for October on how to enforce their ruling.

Negroes denied Capital school admission will sue

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 3—The first attempt to enroll Negro students in an Alabama white school today appeared to be the groundwork for an NAACP court suit against school segregation in this state.

The appearance of 23 small Negro children at the new all-white William R. Harrison School here yesterday resulted in their being turned away "because they did not live within the school district."

Nesbit Elmore of Montgomery, a white attorney representing the group, said today a law suit will be filed, possibly in U. S. District Court here, "since it is a federal question."

THE MOVE — following the U. S. Supreme Court decision last Spring that school segregation is unconstitutional—came as a surprise in most quarters. It had been widely believed that Negroes would not attempt to enter Southern white schools until the Supreme Court had handed down its anticipated ruling setting down a pattern for a de-segregation program.

The 23 small children who attempted to enroll at the Montgomery school yesterday were accompanied by their parents and a Negro Congregational minister the Rev. Horace G. Bell, who said he was also a representative for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Rev. Bell later stated that "we do not intend to let the matter drop here."

Alabama NAACP President W. C. Patton of Birmingham, said Alabama schools "are going to be asked to conform with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court."

He said other attempts to enroll Negro children in Alabama white schools are planned.

WHEN THE CHILDREN attempted to register at the William R. Harrison School yesterday, they were told by school officials that they were not eligible because they lived in another school district.

"We went through the regular process of taking information needed for enrollment cards used in schools throughout the county," said Principal Robert Anderson, "and the children and parents were informed that they lived in the school district served by the Abraham Vineyard School."

The William R. Harrison School, which was opening its doors for the first time, is little more than a block away from the Abraham's Vineyard School, which is much smaller. A number of Negro families live in the section near the Montgomery city limits.

IT APPEARED the threatened court suit which may grow out of the incident could be aimed at testing one of the major tools which Alabama school officials have planned to use in slowing down a quick de-segregation program.

Almost all public elementary schools in Alabama, white and Negro, have definite boundary zones from which they take students. Students, in most cases, are required to attend the school in the school district in which they live.

Because Negro schools are usually located in Negro residential neighborhoods, school officials have looked to the district boundary lines as a kind of safeguard against a sudden and heavy breakdown in the segregated school program.

Rev. Bell said today the proposed court fight might center around the methods used to decide school districts. Charging that the lines are drawn so that Negro and white neighborhoods fall in separate school districts, he called that an attempt to achieve "segregation by gerrymandering."

The group of 23 Negro children was led into the white elementary school yesterday by Aubry Williams Jr., son of the former National Youth Administrator, now publisher of an Alabama farm periodical, according to Principal Anderson.

Williams said afterward that he went because of "friendly interest" and because "I was interested in seeing democracy at work."

ALABAMA SCHOOL BARS 23 NEGROES

All Are Refused Admittance to White Classes on Ground They Live in Another Zone

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 2 (UP)—Twenty-three Negro children tried to enroll today in a white school here, but were refused because they lived outside the school district.

School officials said the group, led by the son of a Montgomery publisher, Aubrey Williams Jr., appeared to register for classes with other children at the white school. They were accompanied by two representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

R. T. Anderson, school principal, said he dealt personally with the group.

"They were registered just like any other group of children," he said. "We got their names and addresses and filled out regular registration cards. Then we checked their addresses and told them they all lived in a district that is served by a Negro school. They were trying to register at the wrong school."

The Negro pupils then withdrew in a "very orderly manner," Mr. Anderson said. He said the incident occurred without fanfare or confusion and was "a credit to the Negro race."

Mr. Williams led the pupils into the school single file. His father, Aubrey Williams Sr., is the publisher of a Montgomery farm newspaper, and was one of the late President Roosevelt's most liberal New Dealers. He was director of the National Youth Administration and deputy administrator of the old Works Progress Administration.

Mr. Anderson said the grades that the children sought to enter ranged from the first to the sixth. He said there were no harsh words or threats of lawsuits.

It was the first incident reported in Alabama since the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

New Paper Comes Out

Special to The New York Times.

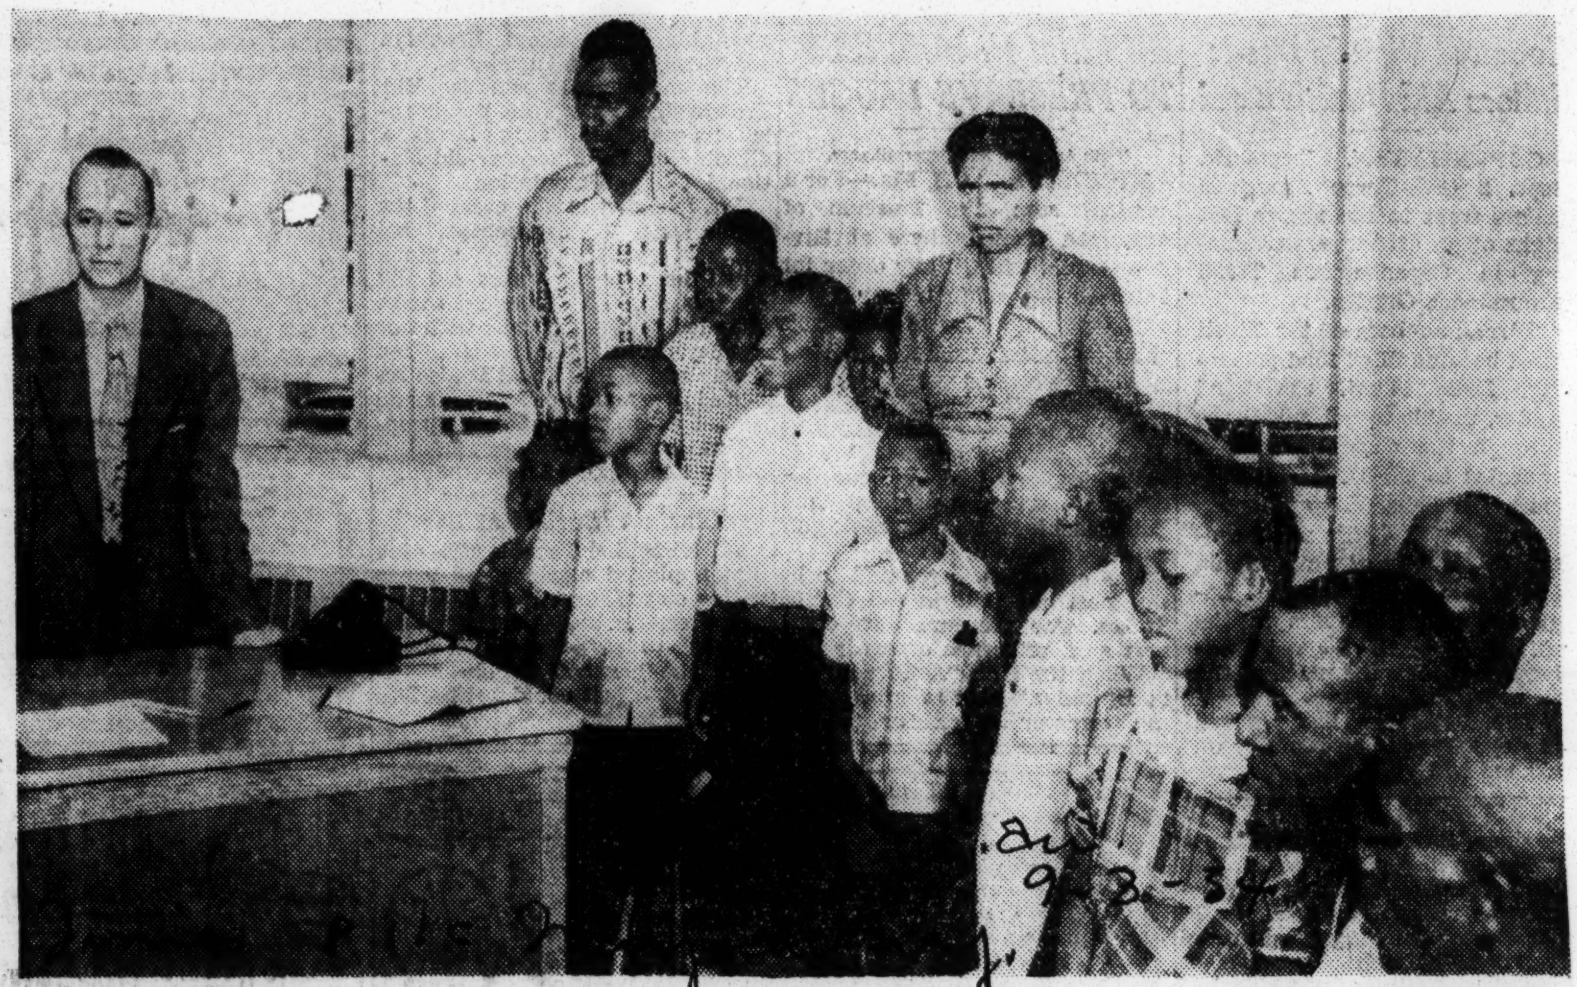
NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 2—The first issue of Southern School News, a sixteen-page tabloid devoted exclusively to problems arising out of the Supreme Court decision against segregation in the public schools, was published today by the Southern Education Reporting Service.

It is planned as a monthly publication. It was issued on the eve of a new school term that may be the last in which schools in most Southern states will be operated on a completely segregated basis.

Distributed free upon request, the first issue went to nearly 10,000 persons, including Governors, school officers, Boards of Education, school superintendents, university presidents, librarians, all daily and weekly newspapers in the seventeen "segregation" states and radio and television stations.

It covered developments in the segregation area since last May 17 when the Supreme Court ruled against separate schools but delayed, pending further arguments, issuance of a decree putting the opinion into effect.

It is edited by C. A. McKnight, editor of The Charlotte News, who is on a leave of absence to direct the project, which is financed by a grant from the Ford Foundation.



Associated Press Wirephoto

NOT ADMITTED: Some of the twenty-three Negro children who were denied admission to the William R. Harrison elementary school, the newest school in Montgomery, Ala. Children and parents are shown here with Principal Robert Anderson after he advised them that they would have to attend another school because they lived in another school district.

What Makes One School Better Than Another?

CERTAINLY no one will question the fact that the new William R. Harrison school is superior, physically, to the school now serving some 80 Negro students in the Abraham's Vineyard community. Still, no two schools anywhere afford equal advantages to pupils and this situation is no exception. Aside from the doubtful educational advantages of new bricks and modern design, the pupils of Abraham's Vineyard School have it better in some respects than the pupils of the new school.

For example, with three teachers for 80 pupils, children of the Vineyard will have a better teacher-pupil ratio than will those of Harrison. The Vineyard teachers are of comparable competence with those in the rest of the county school system. The Vineyard principal holds a master's degree and, like the other two teachers, receives the same pay (considering training and experience) as other teachers.

SOME time ago, the County Board of Education decided to abandon the Vineyard school, because of its size and condition, and to transport students to another school. Vineyard residents objected. They wanted their own school in their community.

At the requests of parents, the school was moved from its old location, near the Southern Bypass, to the back of the school's lot. The reason for the change was to locate the school more conveniently to the homes surrounding it.

★

AFTER the relocation, the Vineyard school was painted and repaired, another teacher was added, new furniture provided, running water and inside toilets installed, and a third teacher (there had been only two) added to the staff. Parents had asked for a lunchroom. None was provided, chiefly because the rule is that to be allowable lunchrooms must be self-supporting. It was decided that, with only 80 pupils, a lunchroom at Vineyard would not be practical.

Besides which, most children live within two blocks of the school and can easily go home at noon to eat with their families. Far from being a hardship, however, such an arrangement is often preferred by children as well as parents. But in most cases, because of distances from school, it is impossible.

Many white children from families living beyond the Vineyard must ride buses to school each day. They, too, are denied enrollment in the new Harrison School.

★

OUTSIDERS, unfamiliar with the facts, might decide that here is a clearcut case of genuine inequality in the education provided for white children and Negro. That conclusion would have to rest almost entirely on an architectural premise: the Harrison school is, esthetically, much superior to the Vineyard. It is also superior in this respect, and others, to many white schools in the city, just as the Vineyard school is superior to many, many rural schools, white as well as Negro. And Vineyard students enjoy many advantages denied white children of the city.

Segregation is one thing, but this is no simple case of white children having everything and Negro's nothing.

Negro P-TA Charges Board Of Education Didn't Keep Pledges

'We've Done All We Promised,' Dannelly Says

Abraham Vineyard Statement Denies NAACP Leadership

By JACK FREEMAN

The attempt of a group of Negro children to register at the white William R. Harrison School last Thursday was to protest the alleged failure of the Board of Education to carry out its promises to improve the Abraham Vineyard School, the school's P-TA announced yesterday.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had nothing to do with the action, the announcement says, and the move was not part of the NAACP plan to attack segregation in the Alabama public school system.

All the children who tried to register at the new white school are students at the Vineyard school.

The P-TA charges the board has failed to put gas or electricity in the school building, the work on the interior was never completed or cleaned up and the grounds have never been landscaped. It acknowledges the board has kept its promises to move the school building, install toilets and add a classroom.

Improvement Orders Placed

T. L. Bear, chairman of the board, said yesterday an order had been placed for installing gas service, the electrical installation was to be done by the maintenance crew of the school system, and the landscaping had been begun and would be completed.

Dr. Clarence M. Dannelly, county superintendent of schools, said, "We've done everything we promised to do."

The P-TA, through its attorney, Nesbitt Elmore, also had asked for a lunchroom in the school. This request was rejected by the board because of the small size of the school and the fact most of the students live within two blocks of it.

Statement of P-TA

The statement by the P-TA reads:

"The parents of the children involved in the registration attempt (at the Harrison School) took this action on their own initiative as a protest against the failure of the Board of Education to fully carry out its promises regarding the improvements in the Abraham's Vineyard School building. This was not a part of the NAACP plan to attack segregation in the Alabama public school system—in fact, the NAACP was in no way connected with this action. The NAACP official (the Rev. Horace Bell) who was present on the occasion attended in an unofficial capacity merely as a private citizen, as did Mr. Aubrey Williams Jr. Any inference to the contrary is false and misleading."

The 23 Negro children, accompanied by their parents, the Rev. Bell and Williams, applied for registration at the new $300,000 white school Thursday after most of the white students registering had left.

They were told by Principal Robert Anderson and Asst. Supt. William Garrett they did not live in the Harrison district, and were instructed to register at the Abraham's Vineyard School.

Campuses Are Adjacent

The campuses of the two schools are adjacent to each other. The buildings are about 200 yards apart. Across the street from both of them is a populous Negro residential area. The street, Martin Patton road, serves as the Southern district line for the white school.

Local NAACP officials have accused the Board of Education of "gerrymandering" the district, or manipulating the district lines to insure segregation. School officials have denied the charge.

The legal staff of the NAACP is reportedly studying bringing suit against the board to determine whether the districts have been gerrymandered and to test the constitutionality of the practice, which is used openly by some northern cities to effect segregation.

Education By Poison Label And Monkey Censorship – V

(From The Montgomery Advertiser)

It appears that the educators of Alabama are finally taking arms against the state's foolish textbook branding act.

Appropriately, the first organized opposition to Act 888 is reported from Birmingham, home of the author of the bill, state Rep. James B. Morgan, and also home of the super-patriots who started the whole thing with their idiotic attack on the textbook, The Challenge of Democracy.

In a meeting this week, the Birmingham Federation of Teachers denounced the act as "fantastic" and "absurd", which it is. The teachers noted, as we have previously, that the act would "virtually empty every school library in the states."

A history teacher made the point that the act, if enforced, would all but eliminate her job, because you "can hardly teach European history without mentioning political scienec theories." A school librarian noted that to comply with the law would be clerically impossible.

Dr. O. C. Carmichael, president of the University of Alabama, is quoted by The Birmingham News as saying that he and other college presidents in the state have been conferring with attorneys about the act. "I have no comment now," Dr. Carmichael said, "but we have not been idle."

Presumably, out of it all will come some planned assault against the poison label law which has ridiculed this state in the eyes of the nation.

It would be an error, we believe, to assume that because it is virtually unworkable it is not dangerous. The spirit of the act must be repudiated. The act is a palpable evil so long as it remains on the books, even if Dr. Terry's orders—for city and county superintendents to commence immediately their branding operations—are not complied with because of the cost.

Even if there is no mass labeling in our public schools and colleges, the law invites invasion of cranks, busybodies, superpatriots and just plain jerks. It does this by deputizing every taxpayer as a Watch & Ward censor with the right of injunction against any book—any book at all—used in any of the schools and colleges of Alabama, if not properly branded.

Act 888, aimed at ghosts, is a flesh and blood peril to sound education in our public schools and academic freedom in our institutions of higher learning.

Segregation Decision May Come Quite Soon

THE United States Supreme Court decision on whether school segregation in Alabama and other states will be forbidden may come a good deal sooner than expected.

It has been the fashion to expect that the court would not release its decision until about the time of the end of this school term. But Gov. Talmadge of Georgia is now predicting that the decision will be handed down tomorrow or "shortly thereafter."

Talmadge's prediction is based on deductions from those familiar with court procedure. There is nothing conclusive about this, but it is not likely that Talmadge made the prediction without considerable basis.

Moreover, it should be recalled that J. Thurgood Marshall, the able Negro counsel who argued the case for destroying segregation, issued a statement in Tuskegee some weeks ago predicting that the decision would come soon, certainly before June.

THERE are some knowledgeable persons who believe that, one way or the other, the court wil uphold school segregation, but the large majority believe that the court will destroy segregation. Our own guess is that it is highly unlikely that the court will leave things as they are, although the extent and schedule of the derangement are matters about which we have no speculation.

In any case, we do not expect to see "blood in the streets"; nor do we expect to see white children and colored children in the same classroom.

MEANWHILE, Senator Sparkman, the former Alabamian, said in a speech last week that he sincerely hoped that the court would uphold segregation.

But two years ago, Sparkman helped write with his own hand and ran on a campaign plank that demanded an end to school segregation. "I think I can sell it to the South," Sparkman said of the plank in Chicago at the 1952 convention. Here is what that Sparkman plank said:

> We are proud of the progress that has been made in securing equality of treatment and opportunity in the nation's armed forces . . . The [Truman] Departament of Justice has taken an important part in successfully arguing in the courts for the elimination of many illegal discriminations, including those involving rights to own and use real property, to engage in gainful occupations and to enroll in publicly-supported educational institutions. We are determined the federal government shall continue such policies.

That was the plank Sparkman helped write.

That was the plank he accepted along with his nomination for vice president.

That was the plank he ran on.

That is the plank, now that he seeks votes only in Alabama, he opposes.

He now says that on his honor he "never deviated" in 1952 from his Alabama stand!

For Prichard—

New School Is Promised To Negroes

MOBILE, June 3 (AP) — The Mobile County School Board, responding to a request by a Negro delegation, said today it planned to build a new high school for Negroes in the Prichard area.

The school commissioners said construction would start as soon as funds become available.

Federal aid has been asked but if action on this request is held up, the board said funds may become available from $1,000,000 in school bonds to be sold soon.

The delegation representing Negro organizations in the Prichard area requested that the high school be for Negroes.

No mention was made of the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in schools.

Day of decision nears—

Alabama still studying action if school segregation ruled out

BY REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 6 —(AP)—With the Supreme Court's ruling on school segregation only days or weeks away, Alabama educators and legislative experts haven't agreed yet on a fallback program.

But they may be getting close. Anxiety was quickened this week with a prediction by Georgia's Gov. Herman Talmadge that the decision may come Monday or soon afterward.

Many ideas have been suggested in Alabama. Some have been discarded as unworkable; others still are under consideration. But Director Charles M. Cooper of the Legislative Reference Service says no one individual has submitted a "real, whole plan."

"There are several ideas and we're working on them," says Cooper, whose office is doing much of the detailed research for the specially created legislative committee appointed during the 1953 session to study the segregation problem.

"But they're nebulous for the most part," Cooper added, "just a thought."

NEVERTHELESS, there is one approach which seems to be attracting more and more attention among school authorities. That is the authority already granted to local school boards to establish attendance districts and compel children to attend classes in their designated areas.

And out of that has grown the suggestion that compulsory attendance laws might be changed to permit children to attend other schools under certain circumstances.

In most cities, the educators say, attendance districts themselves will segregate white and Negro pupils in the event the Supreme Court outlaws the South's traditional dual school system.

Schools in Negro sections of town can be zoned for Negro children and those in white residential areas can be restricted to white pupils, the school authorities say.

But in fringe areas and in rural communities, where the two races live close together, the attendance district rule might not work. So some educators have proposed an elastic zoning arrangement, giving the boards wide lattitude in letting students attend other schools.

For example, suppose Negroes were eligible to enroll in a previously all-white school. White children who objected could transfer to classrooms elsewhere in white residential areas.

Whether that would be legally workable is another question. But it represents the thinking of a growing number of school authorities who talk freely in private but won't be quoted by name.

Another approach is one by State Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County (Tuskegee), whose original outline of a "free private school" system financed with state funds was junked by the Legislature last year.

Engelhardt is working on a plan to allocate funds directly on a per-student basis, patterned after the Southern States Regional Education Program for Institutions of Higher Learning. But the Macon County legislator hasn't worked out the details yet.

THAT IS ALL predicated, of course, on the possibility that the Supreme Court will outlaw classroom separation. If the justices leave the segregation laws undisturbed, the solution will be immeasurably simpler.

If the court, for instance, reaffirms its previous separate-but-equal doctrine but with a time limit for compliance, the school boards will face primarily a financial question. The cost in dollars and cents will be tremendous, but the approach is easy and direct.

But whatever the outcome, State Supt. W. J. Terry and other education authorities say there's no cause for panic. For one thing, the Supreme Court's ruling will apply only to the states involved in the litigation and only indirectly to Alabama.

As an illustration, they point to the famed Texas decision of 1936 which opened the doors of a white university to a Negro. Although that ruling came 18 years ago, there are five states which still don't admit Negroes.

Henderson Upholds Segregation, Wants Private School System

Negroes will be satisfied with equal, separate school facilities "if they know that's all they're gonna get."

That was the answer Bruce Henderson gave an elderly inquisitor Monday night as he spoke before a highly responsive audience of 175 at the County Courthouse.

Earlier, the candidate for governor had told his cheering listeners that to end segregation in Alabama would be "unthinkable, unbelievable, unholy and immoral."

The Henderson speech, first of a series sponsored by Montgomery Young Democrats, had two developments unusual for a political meeting. The first: Rev. Paul Mathison, pastor of Capitol Heights Methodist Church, opened the meeting with prayer asking God's guidance in electing men who would return the government to the religious principles that have made it great. The preacher then had the audience pray with him the Lord's Prayer.

Secondly, Mr. Henderson, interrupted by applause more than a dozen times in his speech, received a "curtain call" at the conclusion and responded with an additional three-minute speech.

The Wilcox County senator said the three main issues in the governor's race are school segregation, right-to-work law, and constitutional convention.

On the school question, Henderson said he favors Alabama adopting a private school plan similar to South Carolina's in the event segregation is ruled unconstitutional.

He said he is the only gubernatorial candidate who took a definite stand on the right-to-work law last summer. "I said then that if I were governor I would sign it," adding that he still stood for any law that would help the common laborer.

Examiner editorial that posted the Henderson, in one of many vigorous digs at Ex-Gov. Folsom, said that those who propose to rewrite the constitution would do so as a means of fooling the public. The revision, he said, would be too technical for the average man to understand and "would lead to socialism. We have a good constitution now, and it should stand."

After the wet-dry issue was brought up by a listener, Henderson called attention to a recent Examiner editorial that postd the question: How will Henderson replace the $12,000,000 in liquor revenue if the state will go dry? Without referring to the paper by name, he said that the figure used was erroneous, that the state in reality received only nine or 10 million annual from liquor taxes. He did not say how liquor revenue would be replaced.

AEA Officials Study Problem Of Segregation

BIRMINGHAM, March 24 (AP) —A committee of educators today said two methods could be used to delay or circumvent racially integrated schools if the U.S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation in public schools.

The committee reported to Alabama school administrators, meeting in advance of the full session of the Alabama Education Association getting under way tomorrow.

Court cases can be started on the segregation issue, the committee said, thus tying up enforcement of any such Supreme Court ruling in Alabama as long as the case is unsettled.

Rezoning Possible

School districts also can be rezoned to keep Negroes in one school and white children in another, the report added.

Another committee studying sales tax exemptions recommended this area was the most likely source of more school revenues.

Forty exemptions are costing the state—and the schools—37 million dollars annually in revenues, according to this report.

The administrators approved the nomination of I. J. Browder, Anniston, as vice president of their state organizations.

Outgoing AEA President G. Virgil Nunn expressed disapproval of the method used by the legislature in giving teachers "across the board" pay raises.

The Fairfield educator spoke out as around 10,000 teachers and school officials converged on Birmingham for their annual convention.

The gathering of the politicaly potent group will draw candidates for governor and other major state offices hoping for teacher support.

Funding for Alabama's public schools, teacher pay, and what to do if the U.S. Supreme Court outlaws segregated schools are prime issues of the governor's race.

Referring to recent "across the board" pay raises, Nunn said distribution of money appropriated for them should be left to local boards of education.

Such legislative actions give the impression of mistrust of the local boards, he declared.

The flat raises also have undermined carefully planned salary schedules based on training and experience, he asserted.

Nunn said the legislature has taken school matters in its own hands by passing bills regulating the use of textbooks, which "place a question mark in the minds of the public in regard to their teachers."

Prominent educators have criticized the 1953 Morgan Act, which requires principals to label textbooks to show whether its authors were Communist-influenced.

Nunn said campaign pledges and promises are "popular practice with politicians, and often based on more services but less taxes."

"Our most important task right now is to get candidates not to tie their hands," he declared. "Schools must have more money, and it's the job of each of us and the man who wins to find that money."

He warned against the danger of tax exemptions which he said are cutting an estimated six million dollars a year out of present school tax money.

Most of the exemptions, Nunn asserted, are results of "paying political debts."

Mrs. Laura Gaines Sprott of Troy, incoming AEA president said she would launch her administration with emphasis on professional unity in a large-scale move for increased public support of schools.

Mrs. Sprott said an effort must be launched immediately toward Alabama, will have two general sessions tomorrow, and affiliated professional organizations will be holding separate meetings.

Nunn and Dr. O. C. Carmichael, president of the University of Alabama, will speak at tomorrow AEA meeting.

Folsom, Allen, Pledge Campaign Crowds To Keep State School Segregation As Is

By GEOFFREY BIRT

Two candidates for governor, Lt.-Gov. James B. Allen and former Gov. James E. Folsom, have talked about segregation in the public schools.

Folsom spent Wednesday night and yesterday at Kowaliga, in Elmore County, before continuing his speaking tour last night in Clay County.

When asked what he would do if elected governor again and if the U.S. Supreme Court knocked out segregation in the schools, he replied:

'That's an 'if' and 'when' question. I say this: 99 per cent of both our Negro and white people want things to stay as they are and in my opinion that is how it's going to stay in Alabama."

Down in Mobile, Lt. Gov. Allen, discussing segregation in the public schools, promised the Mobile Association of Insurance Agents to keep segregation in the schools, but said he was nevertheless pessimistic over the outcome of the Supreme Court decision.

"Could Equalize Schools"

"The best decision we could hope for," Allen said, would be one upholding the principle of separate but equal facilities. If left alone by Washington," he continued, "I believe we could equalize our schools in the next decade or so."

Later Lt. Gov. Allen told the Mobile Junior Chamber of Commerce the gubernatorial race was between him and former Gov. James E. Folsom.

"The big issue will be: Shall we go backward with Folsom or forward with me?" he declared.

Allen criticized action of State Atty. Gen. Si Garrett in filing suit in the name of the state of Alabama challenging legality of the 1953 law giving the states ownership of the tidelands.

"If elected, I would be for dismissing the suit," he said.

"This suit is against the best interest of Alabama."

Allen also said that if elected he would set up a committee of 100 men to seek out new industry for the state. He expressed belief that expansion of industry rather than increased taxation was the answer to the state's economic problems.

THE BEAUTIFUL NEW TALLASSEE HIGH SCHOOL—This modern new building will house the students of West Tallassee, Ala. It is modern from every standpoint. Prof. S. B. Payne is the principal. The school is just a stone throw from the old site near Log Town.

Takes Issue With Folsom

Up in Bessemer, a third gubernatorial candidate, Henry W. Sweet, took issue with a statement made by Folsom last Monday at Boaville.

Folsom had said that he was "the only man running for governor this year, and the others are all running for second place."

Sweet wired Folsom: "Let's keep the record straight. I'm running for first place, too, and you know it better than any other person in the state."

Sweet, who was fired from his job as state docks director by Folsom, and later quit a similar post, under Georgia's Gov. Herman Talmadge, at the Savannah docks, said also:

"Every citizen in Alabama will find you (Folsom) out for what you are before this campaign is over. So, keep whistling in the dark, if you like, but remember that the great light of dawn is coming."

More Candidates Qualify

Meanwhile, more candidates yesterday qualified to run for various offices this spring.

Machinery Dealer Joe Money, who ran for governor four years ago, is a candidate again this year but for a different office. He's running for the legislature from Jackson County.

Money, who lists his legal residence as Scottsboro, qualified for House seat No. 2 from that county as candidates continued to put their names in the hat for the May 4 Democratic primary.

One of ex-Gov. James E. Folsom's former cabinet members also took his place alongside Folsom as a candidate for office. R. R. Wade of East Tallassee, who headed the State Labor Department during the Folsom administration, filed for House place No. 2 from Tallapoosa.

The former governor himself, of course, is running for a second term in that office.

Others qualifying yesterday were:

Joe Calvin of Decatur for State Senate from second district (Lawrence and Morgan counties).

Rep. J. B. Morgan of Birmingham for another term in the House from Jefferson.

Rep. John C. Weathers of Roanoke for renomination to the House from Randolph.

Reps. J. W. Springer Sr., and J. A. Crook for renomination to their present places in the House from Bullock.

J. Roy of Troy for Senate from 25th district (Coffee, Crenshaw and Pike).

Joe B. Davis of Braggs, Ala., for Senate from 16th district (Lowndes County).

Rep. A. Kenneth Holman of Ozark for another term in the House from Dale.

Woodrow Albea of Anniston for Calhoun County's seat No. 1 in the House.

Robert E. L. Key of Evergreen for solicitor of the 21st judicial circuit.

Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, running for the state Senate from the 26th district (Macon and Bullock counties).

V. Cecil Curtis of Phenix City, House place No. 2 from Russell County.

Rep. Robert L. Eslick of Huntsville for renomination to House seat No. 2 from Madison.

Rep. Emory Solomon of Headland for another term in House place No. 1 from Henry County.

W. Allen Davis of Ozark for the House from Dale.

To Run For Congress

Another Bankhead may run for Congress.

He is Thomas M. Owen, Wetumpka, grandson of Mrs. Marie Bankhead Owen, director of the State Department of Archives and History, and the late Dr. Thomas M. Owen, noted historian.

Owen's two great uncles were the late Sen. John H. Bankhead, and Speaker of the House William Bankhead. Actress Tallulah Bankhead is his aunt.

Owen said yesterday he was "very seriously" thinking of running for the House from the fourth congressional district against incumbent Congressman Kenneth A. Roberts, who is presently ending his second term.

Owen discussed his political ambitions immediately before leaving for Maxwell Air Force Base Hospital.

Veteran Of Korean War

He is a veteran of the Korean War, where he flew more than 100 combat missions as a jet pilot.

He recently was forced to bale out of his aircraft while on a routine flight in this country, and suffered slight injuries. He has been ordered a medical check.

Before joining the Air Force, young Owen was assistant floor manager of the House in Washington.

He said he would make up his mind finally on whether to run "within the next few weeks" but strongly indicated he expected to make the race.

Rep. Roberts has not yet qualified for renomination, but is expected to do so shortly.

Deadline for qualification in the May 4 primary is not until midnight, March 1.

Education By Poison Labels And Monkey Censorship—IV

DR. W. J. TERRY, state superintendent of education, has mailed copies of a letter about the state's book-branding Act 888 to all city and county superintendents of education. It's interesting reading, to say the least.

In the letter Dr. Terry attempts to explain how the act can be complied with. It is a manful attempt, but in our opinion the letter succeeds only in compounding the confusion of the poison label law. Moreover, it poses some more rather perplexing questions, but leaves them unanswered. Dr. Terry, it should be remembered, has praised the act and publicly expressed the hope that other states will adopt similar laws.

According to Dr. Terry's letter of instructions, principals of each school in the state must supply to the respective publishers a list of titles, copyright dates, and the names of authors of books used by the school. This includes, Dr. Terry says, books owned by the state, by the pupils, by the teachers, "or those in the school for any purpose."

THE publishers must then mail directly to each school the appropriate certifications for each of the millions of books—textbooks as well as library books—used or available for use in Alabama schools. "There are thousands of books in the elementary schools of the state which are no longer listed on our inventory and annual report forms," Terry warns the principals. These must be inventoried, investigated and branded too, Terry says.

In addition, local boards of education have bought books, Parent-Teacher Associations and individuals have contributed some, and many teachers have supplied books of their own for classroom use or reference, he advises. All should be certified as either written by persons not associated with any communist or Marxist group or sympathizing with them, or else branded as in doubt. Terry says:

> Again, I believe that it will be necessary for every book in the library to be labeled or else some teacher could inadvertently make an assignment in a book that had not been properly labeled. This could lead to embarrassment for school personnel and publishers should any person wish to bring suit against the use of the book in question. [It will be recalled that Act 888 makes every taxpayer an official censor—Ed.]

★

IF THE principals reading Dr. Terry's letter of instruction have not started writing their letters of resignation by the time they reach this paragraph, they have only to read further:

> In addition to the books normally found in our libraries, there will be copies of annual reports of the state department of education and other departments of government, courses of study and other materials that may be used in the instructional program from time to time. These books should be labeled.

In other words, the teachers must not only get certifications from national publishers, but they must also make sure that any Alabama educator or official of the state department of education who writes any kind of report used in any way has no record of improper thinking or doubtful affiliations. That of course means that Dr. Terry himself must be investigated by the principals.. Good luck, Doctor.

If it looks like the teachers and principals of Alabama will have nothing to do but investigate and stick on labels, read on:

> Another phase of this whole matter that will demand your most serious thought is how your teachers are going to answer the questions coming from the children and others as to what is communism, Marxist socialism, communist party, communist front organizations, etc. As you know a great wave of hysteria might well be started in our state through improper information about these subjects.

★

WHEN the kiddies see that label in their spelling primer, their little curosities will naturally be aroused. Unfortunately, however, Dr. Terry's letter is not too helpful to our nervous, mixed-up teachers, who're already apprehensive, thanks to Act 888, of every book and every author. You may be sure there won't be many clear answers.

TO TOP it all, Dr. Terry informs the local superintendents:

> This work will involve a tremendous cost to local boards of education and I regret to inform you that no provision was made in Act No. 888 for bearing this expense.

In other words, superintendents, get out and rustle up the dough yourselves or you'll be labeled a you-know-what.

★

IT SEEMS to us that Dr. Terry has quite effectively put the monkey on the superintendents' backs. And presumably they will in turn pass it to the principals, and they to those eternal buck privates, the teachers.

Inadvertently perhaps, Dr. Terry, by his letter, has joined The Advertiser in ridiculing Act 888 as unworkable. He may not agree with us now that it is also dangerous, since it opens the door to all kinds of mischief. But give him time.

Alabama Public School System Observes 100th Birthday Today

Alabama's public school system marks its first 100 years of existence today.

It was on Feb. 15, 1853 that Gov. J. A. Winston signed into law a legislative act which provided the first statewide tax-supported educational system. Designed to find funds to maintain public schools, the act authorized school taxes but did not make them mandatory.

But it did appropriate $100,000 which came from tax money.

The law also provided for a state superintendent, appointed at first by the legislature, three school commisioners for each county, one of them the probate judge, and three trustees in each school district.

There were no county superintendents. The commissioners ran the schools, with control over all money. Counties were authorized to levy a maximum 10-mill property tax for school purposes.

The first state superintendent was William F. Perry, and his report for 1854-55 showed 145,588 pupils between 5 and 18, divided roughly into four classes.

Actually, public education at the local level had its beginning in Mobile County in 1826 when the legislature authorized that county to established and regulate schools. Under that law, Barton Academy which opened in 1836 became the state's first public school.

Attorney Says—

Schools Will Get Few New Books

Test Case Planned For Morgan Law

MONTGOMERY, March 24 (AP) —State education officials have been advised that Alabama schools will get almost no new textbooks unless the Morgan Textbook Labeling Act is knocked out by the courts.

Attorney Truman Hobbs, in making the disclosure, said the American Textbook Publishers Institute is planning a lawsuit to test the constitutionality of the law.

Hobbs has been retained by the institute, which represents publishers of about 85 per cent of textbooks entering Alabama, to prepare for the court test.

Sponsored by Rep. Jimmy Morgan of Jefferson County in last year's Legislature, the law requires textbook publishers to certify whether authors are members of the Communist Party or Communist front organizations or ever have held membership in them.

To limit the possibility of children getting no textbooks because of the act, the Publishers Assn. is preparing material for a possible test case law suit, Hobbs said.

Publishers have been unable to obtain a list of the organizations and many of them are no longer in existence, the attorney added.

14d(1) 1954

ALABAMA

The Proper Approach To School Segregation

By J. D. Thompson, President of The Alabama State Teachers Association

SO MUCH has been said and is being said about the anticipated Supreme Court decision respecting segregation in public schools I have felt that the president of the Alabama State Teachers Association should have a little something to say on the subject. This is what I call an objective point of view.

As I understand it, at this stage the merits in the case, pro and con, are not being discussed. This is very well since both sides of the question have been sufficiently debated both in court and out. It would be well for everyone who is interested in this question and who wants to be intelligent about it to read these arguments. Another recommended reading is what Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, had to say on the matter. Many feel that his article is one of the sanest yet written on the subject.

In anticipation of a decision outlawing segregation in public schools Alabama and other Southern states face what they call a problem, although I would prefer to call it a situation. But in their efforts to deal with this situation it occurs to me that there might be some better approach than that of evasion at any cost. When one considers the strenuous efforts which are put forth to evade a possible interpretation of the United States Constitution he is left to wonder about the implications for constitutional law and order. Indeed, the question may be asked, what position is one to take when the decisions of the highest court do not suit him. The matter of trying openly to find a way of evading the law gives the problem a peculiar and questionable standing. All the while we have been taught to defend the country when called on, uphold the constitution of our government, and obey the laws of the land. To many, these are the essence of citizenship and patriotism.

If the problem was one of complying with the law it would be much simpler. Some scientific approach could be made. There would not be so much a question of will it work but one of how to make it work. In that case experimental situations could be set up. Examples could be pointed out. But the problem is altogether different when it is a matter where one does not want it to work. The problem then lies in the realm of prejudices and emotions. These things result from certain conditioning factors in the society. They are difficult to work with yet they can be changed.

GOV. PERSONS is to be commended for discouraging the interplay of emotions regarding this matter. A person is not likely to be either rational or consistent when he is steeped in emotions. Those people who speak of bloodshed in connection with this problem or question are yielding to their emotions or perhaps even to wishful thinking. And those who cry blood are for the moment forgetful that American democracy was born out of blood and fire. But at this stage in the 20th Century if we must still face our social problems with ideas of brutality perhaps we may well let schools go altogether. I for one believe that there is too much intelligence in Alabama for that.

But in this whole issue as in many others, certain positions are difficult to defend. Arguments which are used in defense today can be used in offense tomorrow. For example, some say that the North tries to impose its ideas and thinking upon the South. But at the same time there are those in the South who would impose their ideas and way of thinking upon all others in the South. After all, not all Southern white people have the same attitudes toward race relations.

Regarding a real "solution" to the problem I am about like everybody else. I know none. It is going to be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to circumvent something that is a universal trend, and probably even a Divine plan. Concerning the whole matter I believe that Negro leadership is willing to abide by the law. As for the Negro on the street, he is about like many a white person on the street; he is not too much concerned or worried about this matter one way or the other.

As a suggestion let us face facts. If we hope to get any place we must face them. Many a Negro in Alabama who would not dare to speak openly and frankly on the question of segregation has contributed money liberally toward the efforts to get the type of decision which is now commonly referred to as unfavorable if it comes. I believe that the real Negro leaders in the South are against segregation as a law and as a principle. But don't ask any Negro about this matter if there is the slightest possibility that his answer will jeopardize his job or welfare, which is possible. I do not believe that honest Negro leadership in the South will be willing to forfeit the benefits of a possible court decision for which he has worked and helped to pay; yet he is practical enough to know that segregation will not be completely ended overnight. These are some of the facts which may well be considered by all who are concerned with this matter.

Wed. 2-10-54

ANOTHER critical point is this. To one side, the question of mixing the races is pointed out as the main issue. But for the Negro, if I understand at all, the real issue is that of human dignity. What we need is to find some common ground and acceptable principles as a starting point. I recommend that the best minds of both races work together. However, I would like to emphasize best minds, not Negro "leaders" carefully "selected", who cannot be depended on even to tell the truth. There can never be a sensible solution derived from a combination of extreme prejudice and cowardice. Yet, honest differences of opinion are recognized as both healthy and normal. This situation should be faced with facts, honestly, sincerely and a charitable disposition. I believe that in all wise councils where there are two sides, each side will take some and give some. If one side insists on taking all and giving none then confusion lies ahead.

In conclusion, I have been disappointed because nearly all the discussions I have read recently respecting Alabama and this matter have dealt with what will not be done, or what not to do and how not to do. Various strategies for getting around doing things have been proposed. Almost no proposals have been made for what will be or should be done constructively. In other words, the proposals are negative rather than positive. If the whole emphasis were changed I believe that what appears to be a big problem would become a very small one.

Charges Intimidation In School Action Probe

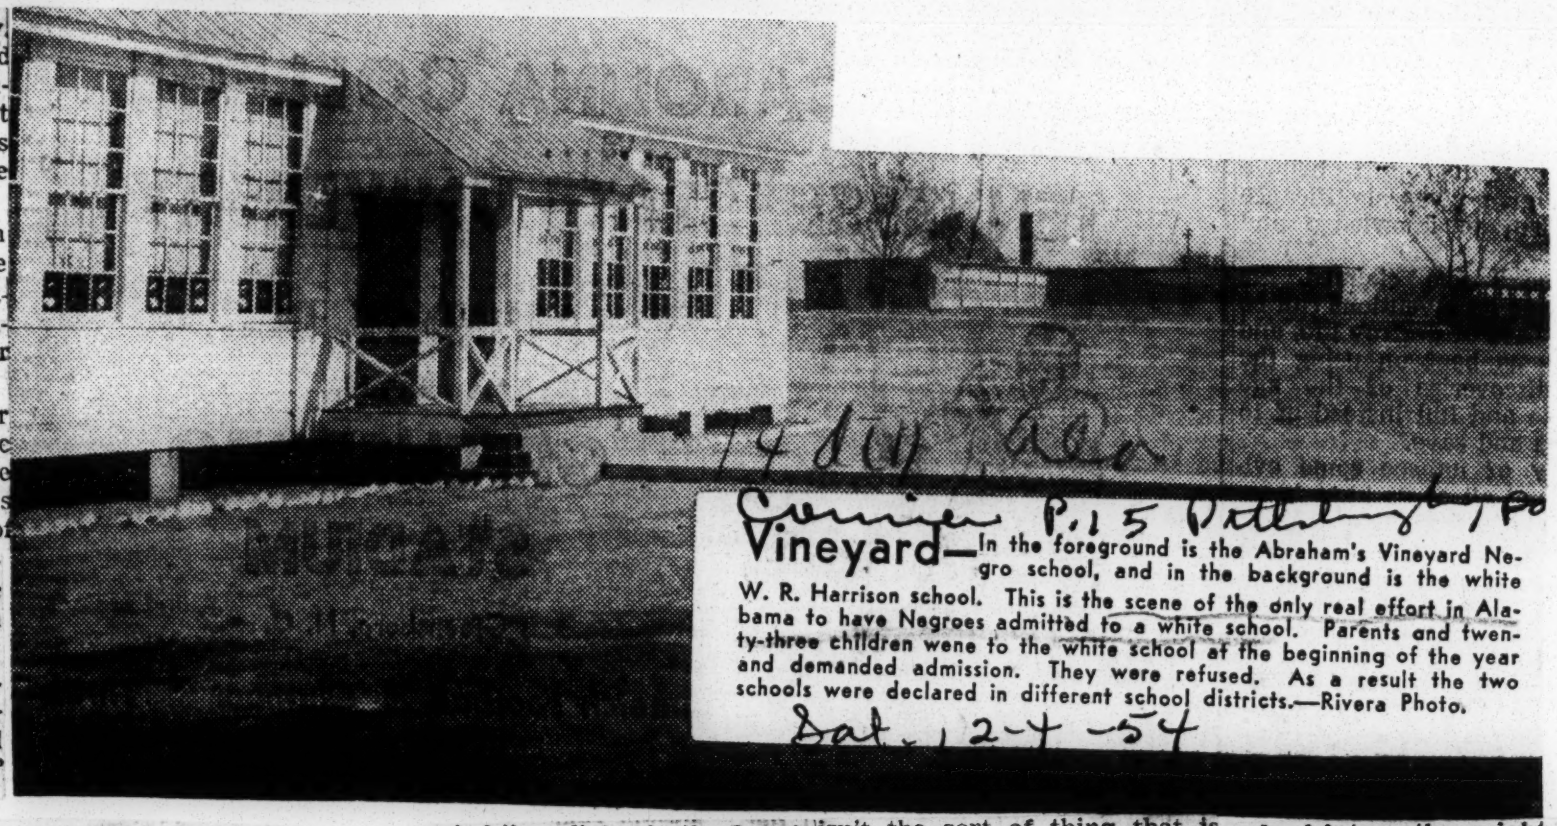
Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 10-9-54

BATON ROUGE, La. — Atty. Alex Pitcher last week denounced a proposed bar association investigation of his ethics as "an effort to intimidate law-abiding citizens in their lawful efforts to secure their rights." P. 18

The East Baton Rouge parish school board has requested the investigation as a result of Pitcher's unsuccessful attempt to enroll 39 Negro children in Gilmer Wright school.

The board has claimed Pitcher and Atty. Johnnie Jones took the children to the school without the consent of their parents. It has accused the two attorneys of "drumming up" business and violation of a bar association ethic prohibiting "fomenting litigation or strife."

"The charge that I was not authorized by the parents of children in the Gilmer Wright school situation is totally unfounded," Pitcher said.



14 d (1) 20 a

Courier P. 15 Pittsburgh Pa.

Vineyard—In the foreground is the Abraham's Vineyard Negro school, and in the background is the white W. R. Harrison school. This is the scene of the only real effort in Alabama to have Negroes admitted to a white school. Parents and twenty-three children wene to the white school at the beginning of the year and demanded admission. They were refused. As a result the two schools were declared in different school districts.—Rivera Photo.

Sat. 12-4-54

Poll of College Students Reveals

Unlearning Prejudices A Must for Both Races

Courier P. 3 Pittsburgh Pa.

By A. M. RIVERA Jr. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Integration is a two-way street and when it comes its implementation much will depend upon the flexibilities of whites and Negroes, perhaps as much as their sense of social responsibility.

It is a generally accepted fact among sociologists and psychologists that division based on race or class encourages and fosters suspicion and distrust—the seeds of group hate.

Following legal integration, it appears that both groups will have to do a lot of "unlearning" before the prejudices of both whites and Negroes can be pushed into the background.

Sat. 11-27-54

NEGROES HAVE a deep-seated and understandable prejudice against the white man in general and particular reservations against certain form of "intermingling." Since the women are more vocal about these peeves than men, we interviewed a group of Alabama State College co-eds.

A sophomore from Utah, Ala., said that she would welcome white male and female students to Alabama State. She also stated that she didn't mind them living in the dormitories and being an integral part of the college community. We asked her if she would object to white girls dating the Negro boys, her answer was no. She also replied in the negative when asked if she would object to her girl friends dating white fellows, but she wasn't sure that she would date white fellows.

It was the last phase of the questioning that brought the most interesting results since most of the respondents favored integration generally.

One junior from Mobile said that she thought she'd date white fellows if they were schoolmates. She added, however, that she did not expect many whites to come to Negro colleges. She explained that "facilities and reputation of a college will determine how many come."

* * *

A MALE sophomore from Detroit, Mich., said dating just isn't the sort of thing that is planned months in advance." He expressed the belief that if he was attracted to a white girl he would date her.

A male sophomore from Montgomery said, "I'm just against segregation in any form. Sure I'd date white girls if they appealed to me."

A senior from Montgomery said, "We must learn to live together." She didn't think that she would date a white student although she approved it for any one else who wished to do so.

* * *

ONE WOMAN teacher said, "I'm just prejudiced and I can't help it. I fear that white women will be raiding the race for our best men. Trained women do not have too much to choose from now," she said, "and I feel that we will be left out in the cold."

Of course, elementary school integration might be a far stretch from social integration, but since the questions are flying about we thought it might be interesting to feel out the Negro woman. For the most part she wants her own men and she wants her men to own her.

A 'Good Atmosphere' in Seaport Town

Everyone in Alabama Calls Mobile the 'Most Civilized'

Courier Sat. 11-27-54 Pittsburgh Pa.

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA Jr.

MOBILE, Ala.—Anyone in Alabama will tell you that Mobile is the most civilized spot in the state . . . and it is generally believed that this seaport city will be the first to attempt a school desegregation program.

Said Methodist minister, the Rev. J. E. Lowery, who serves as director of the Mobile NAACP Branch's desegregation program: "There is a good atmosphere here and I honestly believe Mobile County will comply with the Supreme Court decision."

The same opinion came from John LeFlore, long a fighter for first-class citizenship, and from C. H. Montgomery, president of the Mobile NAACP Branch. Mr. LeFlore, who is executive secretary for the Mobile NAACP, also thinks the Catholic influence here will help bring about the change.

Springhill College, a Catholic institution here, began a desegregation program two years ago, and it is believed here that the Negro Catholic grade school will be merged next year with the white Catholic grade school.

* * *

OTHER THAN having a strong NAACP branch and an alert Negro leadership, Mobile has seen more political action than any other part of the state, claims powerful labor organizations in which Negroes hold top positions, and has elected two Negroes to the Mobile County Democratic Committee.

It was learned from a very reliable source that some members of the school board here are ready to start a school desegregation program next fall by opening the doors of all first grade classes to Negro and white pupils.

Some Negroes in Mobile are willing to go along with such a program but opposition to the plan is expected to come from two distant points—the national office of the NAACP and the State Board of Education.

The NAACP is expected to come up with a "no compromise" plan, demanding full integration in all grades, and the State Deparement of Education is known to be against any form of desegregation.

In School Issue—

Negroes Deny Role By NAACP

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 7 (U.P.)—The parents of a group of Negro children who tried to enroll in a white school here last week denied that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had any connection in the unsuccessful try.

The Parent-Teachers Assn. of the Abraham's Vineyard School said the parents took this action on their own initiative as a protest against the failure of the Board of Education to fully carry out its promises regarding the improvements in the Abraham's Vineyards School building.

They did not specify in what way the board failed, but it was learned that the three-room Negro school was not fired for electricity, had been moved recently to a new site which still needed improvements, and the building was not clean for registration to begin on Sept. 2.

The PTA said, "This was not a part of the NAACP plan to attack segregation in the Alabama public school system—in fact, the NAACP was in no way connected with this action."

But a Negro went along with the group as an "observer," he said. Also, Aubrey Williams Jr., son of Montgomery Publisher Aubrey Williams Sr., accompanied the 23 Negro children into the school in their unsuccessful attempt.

The PTA said, however, that the NAACP official who was present on the occasion attended in an unofficial capacity merely as a private citizen, as did Aubrey Williams Jr.

"Any inference to the contrary is false and misleading," it added

Legal Minds Work To Hold Segregation

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (ANP)—Some of the best legal minds in the deep South, along with state legal departments down this way are working overtime trying to figure out how to defy the U. S. Supreme Court and make it legal.

Some states, not involved in the NAACP suit, have been worrying whether filing briefs would make them parties to the suit.

After heated legal debates in North Carolina as to whether the state's entry into the case as a friend of court would make it party to the pending cases and thus subject to any direct decree by the court, North Carolina's Gov. Umstead and Atty. Gen. Harry McMullin issued a joint announcement last week declaring that McMullin would file a brief.

Three lawyers, members of the governor's segregation advisory committee, have not decided whether McMillin or a member of the committee will appear in person to present North Carolina's position.

Also in the air was just what the state's position will be.

In Tennessee, where an announcement was made earlier that the state would present a brief advocating gradual desegregation on a grade-by-grade basis, it looks like state officials will pass up the opportunity to air their views before the high court.

Gov. Frank Clement said last week the state had only protected its right to submit a brief by stating its intention of doing so.

State officials indicated Tennessee may not submit a brief for these reasons:

1. Local school boards enjoy virtual autonomy, and a plan suggested by the state might not have approval of local authorities.

2. Many local authorities apparently prefer the state submit no brief.

3. Some officials believe filing a brief might be considered to place the state directly under the court's jurisdiction in the case, thereby reducing the time limit it might have for effecting desegregation.

Meanwhile, Arkansas' Atty. Gen. T. J. Gentry agreed to a request from the state board of education to file a friend of the court brief—a step which would direcly involve Arkansas for the first time in the May 17 Supreme Court ruling.

The board made the request after receiving petitions from 30 school districts in East Arkansas which are more directly affected by the decision because of large Negro populations.

Since briefs are due by October 1, Gentry will be forced to ask for an extension of time. The decision to file was brought to a head by recent petitions of NAACP branches.

Harold Weaver, chairman, West Memphis School Board, presented petitions from the districts asking that the board request the attorney general to intervene.

Weaver said the Supreme Court should fully realize the hardship a decision might work on some districts, such as his own, which has 2,500 Negro pupils and 1,600 white students.

"It would tear our school system all to pieces," he said.

While Arkansas and North Carolina prepared briefs for the high court, State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County told members of the Birmingham Rotary Club that a workable-save-school-segregation plan had been forwarded to Gov. Gordon Par-interest to them is ... anent alleged land misappro tion in the French Cameroo UN Trust Territory.

In this particular ins Theodore Mayi Matip of Union of the Populations o Cameroons stated that he petitioning on behalf of the can population of Eseka (Ca

School named after Comers' maid

EUFAULA, Ala., Dec. 28—The Barbour County Vocational High School at Old Spring Hill has been named after Rebecca Comer.

Rebecca Comer was the housemaid in the home of the founders of the Comer family.

The school teaches scientific agriculture to Negroes.

The Comer family donated the site on which the school is located. A canning plant costing $6000 was the gift of Mrs. Eva Ryding and the late Herbert Ryding.

Rebecca Comer was housemaid for John Pierce and Catherine Comer, the founders of the Comer family. In recognition of her service, Rebecca Comer and her husband were given 260 acres of land where they reared a large family.

Alabama politics—

It would cost $300 million to equalize state's schools

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 13—State Supt. of Education W. J. Terry came out this week with a lengthy set of figures calculated to prove it would take $300 million to bring Alabama's white and Negro school buildings up to par.

It wasn't so much the total amount—that whopping $300 million that caught the eye of some observers. State Department of Education figures for buildings and other school needs invariably are sky high.

What seemed more interesting, however, was Dr. Terry's figures which he said discloses exactly how much more is needed in each county to bring the county total to the so called ideal level.

SPARROW

Dr. Terry's figures in that respect, at least, proves something that has been talked hereabouts in recent days since the threat of an adverse U. S. Supreme Court ruling loomed on the horizon.

That is, that Alabama's Black Belt counties have been laggard in providing school facilities for Negroes.

Despite the fact that Negro children far outnumber white children in those counties, and the further fact that state school funds for buildings, etc., are allocated largelyl on the per pupil basis, Dr. Terry's figures show a wide disparity between the amounts needed to bring Negro and white up to standard.

Dr. Terry, himself a Black Belt county resident, does not directly accuse his Black Belt colleagues of spending most of the money for white buildings and very little for Negro school units, but his figures do exactly that.

TAKE BULLOCK County for instance.

Dr. Terry's figures list $3,025,000 as the total needed for buildings. Of that total, $3,940,000 is listed as needed to bring Negro school units to an acceptable standard and $85,000 for white school buildings.

Or, more properly, consider another typical Black Belt county, Lowndes.

The Terry estimate totals $3,052,000 as the total need for the county, all of it needed for Negro buildings.

HERE ARE THE totals for several other Black Belt counties, the first amount listed in each instance representing the total needed to modernize Negro school buildings and the second the amount needed for white school buildings:

Dallas, $5,327,500 and $769,500.
Greene, $1,980,000 and $15,000.
Hale, $3,112,500 and $150,000.
Macon, $3,340,000 and $280,000.
Perry, $2,999,500 and $782,000.
Sumter, $3,967,500 and $100,000.
Barbour, $2,771,000 and $875,500.
Wilcox, $3,305,000 and $70,000.

A breakdown as to the needs for Negro and white school buildings in Marengo and Montgomery Counties was not listed. Dr. Terry's report totaled $5,827,800 as the total need in Marengo and $3,469,600 as needed in Montgomery.

IN A DOZEN other counties adjoining the Black Belt, Dr. Terry's figures show, amounts needed for Negro school buildings far exceed the totals for white units.

With the first figure showing the amount needed to bring Negro school units to standard, here are how those counties compare:

Autauga, $1,550,000 and $550,000.
Butler, $2,160,000 and $922,500.
Choctaw, $2,647,500 and $600,000.
Clarke, $3,112,500 and $332,500.
Conecuh, $2,348,000 and $440,000.
Elmore, $2,747,700 and $1,609,500.
Henry, $1,650,000 and $297,500.
Lee, $2,797,500 and $1,587,500.
Monroe, $3,562,500 and $385,000.
Pickens, $2,225,000 and $835,000.
Russell, $3,127,500 and $1,452,500.
Talladega, $3,457,500 and $2,142,500.

ON THE OTHER hand, consider how the ratio is dramatically reversed in North Alabama counties.

In the following counties, the first figure represents the amount needed for white school units and the latter the amount needed for Negro schools:

Bibb, $2,370,000 and $1,252,500.
Blount, $2,292,500 and $240,000.
Calhoun, $4,012,000 and $1,880,000.
Cherokee, $862,500 and $360,000.
Chilton, $2,329,500 and $832,500.
Clay, $1,147,500 and $600,000.
Cleburne, $850,000 and $210,000.
Colbert, $3,840,000 and $1,620,000.
Cullman, $3,997,500 and $240,000.
DeKalb, $3,892,500 and $255,000.
Etowah, $6,553,000 and $875,000.
Franklin, $1,290,000 and $360,000.
Jackson, $4,365,000 and $502,500.
Jefferson, $22,776,000 and $21,205,000.
Lamar, $702,500 and $630,000.
Lauderdale, $2,967,500 and $610,000.
Lawrence, $1,872,500 and $1,290,000.
Limestone, $4,430,000 and $1,780,000.
Madison, $3,822,500 and $2,377,500.
Marion, $1,567,500 and $270,000.
Marshall, $4,265,000 and $210,000.
Morgan, $4,647,800 and $720,890.

Randolph, $1,267,500 and $922,000.
St. Clair, $2,466,000 and $1,050,000.
Shelby, $1,540,000 and $877,500.
Tuscaloosa, $5,652,500 and $3,958,500.
Walker, $5,035,000 and $1,350,000.
Winston, $2,670,000 (all for white schools).

AND THE TOTALS for a few other counties in widely separated areas:

Mobile, $9,350,000 white, $7,055,000, Negro.
Houston, $1,957,500, white, $2,312,500, Negro.
Pike, $2,285,000, white, $2,789,000, Negro.
Tallapoosa, $1,300,000, white and $1,925,000, Negro.
Coffee, $2,211,000, white, $1,437,000, Negro.
Covington, $4,902,500, white, $670,000, Negro.
Coosa, $900, white, $795,000, Negro.
Dale, $1,230,000, white, and $1,035,000, Negro.
Geneva, $1,632,000, white, and $870,000, Negro.

DR. TERRY'S estimates, particularly those relating to Black Belt counties, should throw additional light on a certain happening in the Legislature on the closing day of the session.

School forces in Alabama sponsored a large scale bond issue to provide money for needed school additions.

The bill passed the House without a hitch. But in the Senate it was killed by a combined assault of Black Belters.

The bill was killed during the last minute rush on the last day of the session.

Black Belters apparently were satisfied they had plenty of school buildings for white children and didn't want a bond issue because of the probability it would mean additional taxation.

Judge Jones Rules Textbook Label Law Unconstitutional Under 14th Amendment

Alabama's book labeling law, Act 888, is a controversy no more. Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones declared the law unconstitutional yesterday.

"Act 888 is void and unenforceable and is in violation of the due process clause of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States," the judge stated in his decree.

The law was passed by the Legislature last year and required textbook publishers to designation any and all writings Jones said the law is "unreasonable, arbitrary and oppressive," a list of subversive authors.

Judge Jones further called the law "unworkable, vague and indefinite," and said the legislature failed to set up any sufficient guidance to those who must comply."

The judge pointed out publishers had been unable to get information necessary to label the textbooks. During a hearing in his court they submitted affidavits saying neither the Justice Department nor the House Un-American Activities Committee could make available

Tested By Publishers

Act 888 was tested in court by publishers after the State Board of Education itself adopted a resolution urging the act be held invalid.

In his written decision Judge Jones said the State Board of Education and the State Textbook Committee have "no right or authority" to compel the publishers to "abide by that statute," he said. The court went on to declare that the "of the ... dedication of com-

Tell It To Old Grandma

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ no poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

Good Citizenship, Good Insurance

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—An experience I had recently indelibly impressed upon me the value of a Red Cross blood donor's card. I feel that is a civic duty to let others know what a blood card was worth to me, so that they may protect themselves at the same time they are giving blood for others.

Having been ill for some time, my younger son had, of course, not been able to donate blood. His brother's wife, who was already protected by her husband's card, had donated blood and had the card made out in my younger son's name. This procedure, by the way, is entirely in order and, in fact, is recommended by our Red Cross.

In December a Birmingham specialist prescribed especialy prepared blood for my boy. The day before he was to begin receiving the blood, I consulted the specialist about what I should do in regards to those who wanted to give blood for him. The doctor told me, as the boy already had a card, thanks to the donation given in his name, to tell these people to donate their blood through Red Cross. They would then receive blood donor cards for themselves.

While in the Jefferson Hospital, my boy was given seven pints of blood. When he checked out, there were charges in his bill for blood amounting to $175. In this bill, there were also credits totaling $175, which were given because he had the blood donor card. In other words, that card was worth $175 to me then, and if he needs more blood within the six months term, that same card will be worth that much more.

It is impossible to enumerate here the many therapeutic values of blood, and all the good reasons why people should give blood for the benefit of others; those reasons are already known to most of your readers.

The object of this letter is to bring to their attention the importance of having a card that enables them to get blood when it is needed by them or their blood dependents. It's too late to get the card when the blood is urgently needed!

As a father who realizes only too well the value of having blood available for a loved one, I cannot urge too strongly that others procure this protection for themselves and their families.

Six months blood "insurance" will be available to those who "pay the premium" by offering a pint of blood to the Bloodmobile when it comes to Montgomery next Wednesday.

Montgomery. W. G. WARD.

◆

For Segregated Private Schools

Editor, The Advertiser:

[In reply to Gov. Persons' request for advice on school segregation]: A breakdown of our traditional segregation policy is unthinkable. This policy has been tested by time and has proved to be in the best interest of both races. The people of Alabama, in my opinion, would not tolerate non-segregated schools, nor would they tax themselves to finance such schools.

Should the Supreme Court of the United States reverse an unbroken chain of its own decisions covering a period of 75 years and rule against segregated public schools, then I can see no alternative except to establish in Alabama a system of segregated private schools. Such schools, of course, should come up in every respect to the educational standards of our present public school system.

A constitutional amendment would be necessary to effect a changeover from public schools to private operation. If the court strikes down our segregation principle I have no doubt whatever that the voters of our state would overwhelmingly ratify such an amendment.

An amendment was proposed in the last session of the legislature, as standby legislation to meet any emergency arising from a court decision. I was among those who felt the amendment should have been submitted at that time, as a preparedness measure, but it was not submitted due to a widespread feeling that we should watch, wait and study the problem further.

It now appears that the court's decision may be handed down at a very early date. In that event I understand you are ready to call the legislature into extraordinary session. If and when we meet I believe dominant sentiment, in and out of the legislature, will favor such an amendment as that previously proposed.

Let us all devoutly hope and pray that the court will not attempt to strike down in Alabama and the rest of the South the policies and principles which long since became a vital part of our way of life, and under which we have maintained splendid race relations in a spirit of harmony and friendly understanding.

Our Negro citizens of Alabama are not clamoring for a breakdown of segregation. On the contrary, most of them agree that segregated schools are best. You and I know where the demand for abolition of segregation is coming from—it is coming from radical agitators and political race-rousers in distant states.

What our Alabama colored citizens want is a school system in which the facilities are separate but equal. Our state can take pride in the great advances of recent years in this direction. This program of equalization of facilities must and will be continued. It is my fervent hope that the court will stand by its previous decisions and hold again in favor of the "separate but equal facilities" doctrine, thus enabling us to preserve our public school system and move straight ahead with our equalization program. On that, we do not have nearly as far to go as some people seem to believe.

Federal interference with the operation of our schools would be intolerable. The people of Alabama will not submit to it. Non-segregated schools would, even if they ever existed, work to the great detriment of our Negro people, right at a time when they are making their greatest strides forward in education. Thousands of Negro teachers would be faced with the loss of their positions under a non-segregated setup.

In the impending crisis I hope for the best. But if the court outlaws public school segregation our course seems clear; we must move forward educationally under a system of segregated, privately operated schools. The people of Alabama are grimly determined to preserve our way of life, and to maintain home control of our educational program.

[REP.] WALTER C. GIVHAN,
Safford, Ala. Dallas County.

Button Gwinnett Says

(From Shades Valley Sun)

The School Segregation Problem

The governor's recent invitation to legislators, educators and others to submit suggestions on school segregation has been the occasion of renewed serious thought in many Alabama quarters on this important issue.

There has been occasion in the past to express in this column the (1) belief that the Supreme Court would ultimately find that the Fourteenth Amendment's requirement of equal treatment of all citizens is not satisfied by "equal" but separate facilities, but (2) hope that this decision might be delayed for the time to permit the process of gradual acceptance of the Negro in our Southern institutions of higher learning to penetrate downward to our high and then to our elementary schools. Today this belief persists, but the hope has been dimmed by reports, from those who think they know the trend in the Court, that segregation is to be immediately condemned.

What will be the effect of such a Supreme Court ruling in Alabama? It is difficult to know in advance of the event, no matter how much how many may speculate. It would seem desirable however, to cushion the heavy effect of the decision by some preliminary thinking on basic principles. Some of these are the following:

(1) The decisions of the Federal Supreme Court on the interpretation of the Constitution must be accepted as law. There should be no consideration of a policy of nullification.

(2) The possibility of modification of such a Supreme Court decision by amendment of the Constitution is so remote as to preclude any serious effort to bring it about.

(3) We must consequently lay our plans to conform to the decision, not immediately which would be humanly impossible, but gradually as funds and physical facilities permit.

(4) There should be no fear of a crisis. The pattern of segregation living as between the white and Negro elements of our School leaders say time ample in segregation case

(This is the first of two detailed stories on the problems Alabama may have to face when the Supreme Court rules on segregation, and the steps taken to meet them.)

BY REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 9 — (AP) — School authorities in Alabama say that whatever the Supreme Court does about classroom segregation, there's no need for hysteria.

No matter which way the court decides, explained State Supt. W. J. Terry, "we think we will have time in which to act. But, of course, we hope to be ready for it when it comes. We're working on that now."

Ultimately, the effect of the court's findings will be felt in Alabama and every other Southern state, but at the outset, Dr. Terry said, it will apply only to those directly involved in the litigation—South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia.

ALABAMA WILL FALL into the pattern in due course, he continued, but it may take more court orders to accomplish it.

A lawyer who has devoted months of study to the segregation problem, Director Charles M. Cooper of the legislative reference service, pictured it this way:

Suppose the Supreme Court holds that classroom segregation violates the federal Constitution. That order would be addressed directly to the states involved in the appeals and only indirectly to Alabama and the others.

So it would be up to the Negroes themselves to enforce it in Alabama by seeking admission to white schools and appealing to the courts if turned down. Whether any school authority would refuse to admit them is another matter.

AND IF THE Supreme Court decision comes late this Spring or early in the Summer, it won't take effect anyway until the start of the new term in the Fall, all of which will give Alabama added time.

Much the same reasoning will apply if the court sticks to its old separate-but-equal doctrine but with a fixed time limit for compliance, the course many Southern educators hope for in preference to mixed classrooms.

As far as the courts are concerned, Cooper explained, there would be a legal presumption of equal facilities throughout Alabama until Negroes made formal complaints in the various communities.

Then, he continued, the courts would have to determine whether discrimination did exist. That, too, would take weeks, perhaps months.

IT IS THE ABSENCE of a definite program that has some educators and legislators worried. Unlike South Carolina and Georgia where steps have already been taken looking toward a switch from public to private schools in the event segregation is outlawed, Alabama has adopted no stand-by legislation.

Two legislative groups are studying the problems, and Gov. Gordon Persons has appealed for ideas and suggestions from leaders in various outside fields.

Some educators have channeled their thinking toward the assumption that segregation will be abolished, not so much because they seriously believe that but because it's the most challenging of all the possibilities.

The "free private school" idea was explored by the 1953 Legislature and discarded for the time being. It may be revived later if nothing more acceptable can be found.

ANOTHER APPROACH under serious consideration now is an extra-legal form of segregation based on the power given to city and county school boards to fix attendance districts by residential zoning.

In the cities it might work because Negroes and whites generally live in separate communities, but in the rural school areas it would be of questionable value. How could you draw up an attendance district, for instance, that would segregate Negro and white children living on the same farm or plantation?

And yet it is in those rural communities where some school authorities say privately they hope for the least trouble, especially in the Black Belt.

With fingers crossed, they are gambling that many Negro tenant farmers and sharecroppers will be reluctant to send their children to white schools.

State Readies For Court Move On Segregation

Officials Believe School Fight Allows Time For Solution

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

School authorities in Alabama say that whatever the Supreme Court does about classroom segregation, there's no need for hysteria.

No matter which way the court decides, explained State Supt. W. J. Terry, "we think we will have time in which to act. But, of course, we hope to be ready for it when it comes. We're working on that now.

Ultimately, the effect of the court's findings will be felt in Alabama and every other southern state, but at the outset, Dr. Terry said, it will apply only to those directly involved in the litigation—South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia.

Alabama will fall into the pattern in due course, he continued, but it may take more court orders to accomplish it.

Cooper's Explanation

A lawyer who has devoted months of study to the segregation problem, Director Charles M. Cooper of the Legislative Reference Service, pictured it this way:

Suppose the Supreme Court holds that classroom segregation violates the Federal Constitution. That order would be addressed directly to the states involved in the appeals and only indirectly to Alabama and the others.

So it would be up to the Negroes themselves to enforce it in Alabama by seeking admission to white schools and appealing to the courts if turned down. Whether any school authority would refuse to admit them is another matter.

And if the Supreme Court decision comes late this spring or early in the summer, it won't take effect anyway until the start of the new term in the fall, all of which will give Alabama added time.

Much the same reasoning will apply if the court sticks to its old separate - but - equal doctrine but with a fixed time limit for compliance, the course many southern educators hope for in preference to mixed classrooms.

As far as the courts are concerned, Cooper explained, there would be a legal presumption of equal facilities throughout Alabama until Negroes made formal complaints in the various communities.

Then, he continued, the courts would have to determine whether discrimination did exist. That, too, would take weeks, perhaps months.

It is the absence of a defnite program that has some educators and legislators worried. Unlike South Carolina and Georgia where steps have already been taken looking toward a switch from public to private schools in the event segregation is outlawed, Alabama has adopted no stand - by legislation.

Two legislative groups are studying the problems, and Gov. Gordon Persons has appealed for ideas and suggestions from leaders in various outside fields.

Some educators have channeled their thinking toward the assumption that segregation will be abolished, not so much because they seriously believe that but rather because it's the most challenging of all the possibilities.

The "free private school" idea was explored by the 1953 Legislature and discarded for the time being. It may be revived later if nothing more acceptable can be found.

Another approach under serious consideration now is an extra -legal form of segregation based on the power given to city and county school boards to fix attendance districts by residential zoning.

In the cities it might work because Negroes and whites generally live in separate communities, but in the rural school areas it would be of questionable value. How could you draw up an attendance district, for instance, that would segregate Negro and white children living on the same farm or plantation?

And yet it is in those rual communities where some school authorities say privately they hope for the least trouble, especially in the Black Belt.

County legislators to wait for court action on segregation

Jefferson County legislators want to see how the U. S. Supreme Court rules on the school segregation cases before making any recommendation to Gov. Persons on what to do about it.

Chairman Larry Dumas, Sen. Albert Boutwell and all the other Jefferson House members are strongly opposed to abolition of segregation in the schools.

DUMAS POINTED OUT to other members of the group at a luncheon meeting yesterday that Alabama is not directly involved in the pending cases before the high court. And he said that "only one county in South Carolina is."

Because of this, he and other delegation members said they did not believe there is any necessity for "hurried action."

Sen. Boutwell and Reps. Dumas, Henry Beatty, Paul Meeks, James G. Allen, Jr. and James B. Morgan met in response to a letter from Gov. Persons on what should be done if the high court knocks out segregation.

SEN. BOUTWELL had declared earlier that "We will not accept abolition of segregation in our public schools in Alabama," adding that I think we will take the necessary steps to preserve our Southern traditions and way of life."

Beatty and Meeks both had proposed that studies be made of state and local police powers with a view to determining to what extent authorities could maintain segregation on a basis of health and mental tests in case of an adverse ruling.

The Proper Approach To School Segregation

By J. D. Thompson, President of The Alabama State Teachers Association

SO MUCH has been said and is being said about the anticipated Supreme Court decision respecting segregation in public schools I have felt that the president of the Alabama State Teachers Association should have a little something to say on the subject. This is what I call an objective point of view.

As I understand it, at this stage the merits in the case, pro and con, are not being discussed. This is very well since both sides of the question have been sufficiently debated both in court and out. It would be well for everyone who is interested in this question and who wants to be intelligent about it to read these arguments. Another recommended reading is what Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, had to say on the matter. Many feel that his article is one of the sanest yet written on the subject.

In anticipation of a decision outlawing segregation in public schools Alabama and other Southern states face what they call a problem, although I would prefer to call it a situation. But in their efforts to deal with this situation it occurs to me that there might be some better approach than that of evasion at any cost. When one considers the strenuous efforts which are put forth to evade a possible interpretation of the United States Constitution he is left to wonder about the implications for constitutional law and order. Indeed, the question may be asked, what position is one to take when the decisions of the highest court do not suit him. The matter of trying openly to find a way of evading the law gives the problem a peculiar and questionable standing. All the while we have been taught to defend the country when called on, uphold the constitution of our government, and obey the laws of the land. To many, these are the essence of citizenship and patriotism.

If the problem was one of complying with the law it would be much simpler. Some scientific approach could be made. There would not be so much a question of will it work but one of how to make it work. In that case experimental situations could be set up. Examples could be pointed out. But the problem is altogether different when it is a matter where one does not want it to work. The problem then lies in the realm of prejudices and emotions. These things result from certain conditioning factors in the society. They are difficult to work with yet they can be changed.

Wed. 2-10-54

GOV. PERSONS is to be commended for discouraging the interplay of emotions regarding this matter. A person is not likely to be either rational or consistent when he is steeped in emotions. Those people who speak of bloodshed in connection with this problem or question are yielding to their emotions or perhaps even to wishful thinking. And those who cry blood are for the moment forgetful that American democracy was born out of blood and fire. But at this stage in the 20th Century if we must still face our social problems with ideas of brutality perhaps we may well let schools go altogether. I for one believe that there is too much intelligence in Alabama for that.

But in this whole issue as in many others, certain positions are difficult to defend. Arguments which are used in defense today can be used in offense tomorrow. For example, some say that the North tries to impose its ideas and thinking upon the South. But at the same time there are those in the South who would impose their ideas and way of thinking upon all others in the South. After all, not all Southern white people have the same attitudes toward race relations.

Regarding a real "solution" to the problem I am about like everybody else. I know none. It is going to be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to circumvent something that is a universal trend, and probably even a Divine plan. Concerning the whole matter I believe that Negro leadership is willing to abide by the law. As for the Negro on the street, he is about like many a white person on the street; he is not too much concerned or worried about this matter one way or the other. As a suggestion let us face facts. If we hope to get any place we must face them. Many a Negro in Alabama who would not dare to speak openly and frankly on the question of segregation has contributed money liberally toward the efforts to get the type of decision which is now commonly referred to as unfavorable if it comes. I believe that the real Negro leaders in the South are against segregation as a law and as a principle. But don't ask any Negro about this matter if there is the slightest possibility that his answer will jeopardize his job or welfare, which is possible. I do not believe that honest Negro leadership in the South will be willing to forfeit the benefits of a possible court decision for which he has worked and helped to pay; yet he is practical enough to know that segregation will not be completely ended overnight. These are some of the facts which may well be considered by all who are concerned with this matter.

ANOTHER critical point is this. To one side, the question of mixing the races is pointed out as the main issue. But for the Negro, if I understand at all, the real issue is that of human dignity. What we need is to find some common ground and acceptable principles as a starting point. I recommend that the best minds of both races work together. However, I would like to emphasize best minds, not Negro "leaders" carefully "selected", who cannot be depended on even to tell the truth. There can never be a sensible solution derived from a combination of extreme prejudice and cowardice. Yet, honest differences of opinion are recognized as both healthy and normal. This situation should be faced with facts, honestly, sincerely, and a charitable disposition. I believe that in all wise councils where there are two sides, each side will take some and give some. If one side insists on taking all and giving none then confusion lies ahead.

In conclusion, I have been disappointed because nearly all the discussions I have read recently respecting Alabama and this matter have dealt with what will not be done, or what not to do, and how not to do. Various strategies for getting around doing things have been proposed. Almost no proposals have been made for what will be or should be done constructively. In other words, the proposals are negative rather than positive. If the whole emphasis were changed I believe that what appears to be a big problem would become a very small one.

Higher Teacher Pay Also To Be Sought

BY GENE WORTSMAN
Post-Herald Staff Writer

GADSDEN, Feb. 3—Lt. Gov. James B. Allen launched his campaign for governor here tonight promising to reapportion the State Legislature, an attempt to raise teacher pay and a continuing farm-to-market road program.

Before more than 1000 hometown neighbors and visitors from around the state, Mr. Allen said he believes his lengthy program could be accomplished without additional taxes.

He didn't ignore his favorite subject, ex-Gov. James E. Folsom.

"The main issue in the race for governor is whether this time next year we will have in Alabama a government of integrity and morality and decency and efficiency, or a throwback to four years of waste, extravagance, debauchery and corruption.

"The issue," Allen declared, "is, shall we go backward with Folsom, or onward and forward with Allen."

Folsom Program Flayed

He "unqualifiedly condemned" what he called the Folsom program of favoring the few and recommended a "forward looking government that is dedicated to the unselfish service of all the people."

On segregation in public schools, Allen said Alabama "will never" be ready to abolish its equal but separate facilities.

"So long as I am governor of Alabama, we will fight the breakdown of segregation on every front," he asserted. " . . . we will fight to a finish with every legal weapon we can find. We will never surrender the traditions of our people."

The kick-off banquet for Allen, held in the City Auditorium, was sponsored by the Etowah County Bar Assn.

Proceeds are to be turned over to Allen's campaign. An estimate of receipts made prior to tonight was that some $20,000 might be dumped into the Allen kitty.

Atty. Hubert Burns was chairman. Invocation was pronounced by Dr. Oscar Davis of the First Baptist Church.

Segregation Bill Will Be Ready

Post Herald

SELMA, June 27 (AP)—A bill to maintain segregation in public schools will be ready for the next Alabama Legislature if the U. S. Supreme Court Makes such action necessary, Rep. Walter Givhan said yesterday.

Givhan reported on a trip which he and two other legislators made to confer with Govs. Herman Talmadge of Georgia and James F. Byrnes of South Carolina.

Following Advice

Givhan said he and the other members of his "self-appointed" group were following the advice of Byrnes to wait and see what final action the Supreme Court will take.

While the Supreme Court has declared segregation in public schools illegal, it has invited the states which practice segregation to suggest plans for putting the decision into effect. The ruling won't become final until then.

Pattern Adopted

The legislation prepared for Alabama is patterned after a law already adopted in Georgia and pending in South Carolina, Givhan said.

One major clause would provide automatic curtailment of funds for any school that permits "mixing of the races," Givhan said. Another would make members of school boards of trustees judicial officers.

Members of the private committee with Givhan are State Sens. Gerald Bradford of Grove Hill, Sam Englehart of Macon and James S. Coleman of Eutaw. Coleman was unable to accompany the others on the recent trip.

14d(1) 1954

ALABAMA

Children Back At School After Protest Over Teacher Dismissal

BY EMORY O. JACKSON
(Birmingham World Managing Editor)

LINDEN, Ala. — (SNS) — Students were back at Linden Academy last Tuesday, April 6 after a one-day stay-away from school in a parent-sponsored protest over the notice of dismissal given Prof. George P. Austin by the Marengo County Board of Education.

Sixty-year-old Prof. Austin who has headed this formerly Baptist-related institution for approximately 30 years has been officially notified that he is being dropped from teaching employment here April 15. He is charged with insubordination, misappropriation of funds and incompetence.

Parents have been advised by Marengo County Superintendent S. D. McKnight that unless the children who left school for a protest vacation returned, the weight of the law would be invoked.

One parent said here Tuesday, April 6 that the Linden Academy P-T.A. met Wednesday night, March 31 at the school and voted unanimously to withhold their children from school until after the April 15 firing date of Principal Austin.

In an open letter to parents, dated April 5, Supt. McKnight wrote:

"It has come to my attention that certain elements of the Linden Academy P.T.A. and other individuals have gone on record as recommending and encouraging the pupils of this school to remain away from school until after April 15, 1954."

"This is to inform you that this action is unlawful and unauthorized by the Marengo County Board of Education. All pupils under sixteen (16) years of age are required by law to attend school unless authorized to be absent by the Marengo County Board of Education.

"It is to the best interest of you and the pupils that your child or children return to school immediately."

Copies of the lette. also went to the members of the Marengo County Board of Education, namely, M. K. McKee, president; T. W. Harris, vice president; T. A. Moseley, J. M. DeLoach, and L. L. Simmons, together to Atty. J. C. Camp and Atty. G. E. Sledge, the last of Greensboro.

Frank P. Thomas, editor and publisher of the Alabama Citizen, Tuscaloosa, and I went to Linden last Tuesday to check up on this "pupil strike" because it was unusual, and certainly something unexpected for the city which prides itself as "The Capitol of the Cow Country" and the heart of the Black Belt.

One parent said she had not returned her children to school and did not intend to do so until after the protest period had ended. She said that the attendance officer and also Deputy Sheriff Bradford had visited the homes of some of the striking school children suggesting that they go back to school. "Some of the parents have been frightened and sent their children back."

This parent related instance of alleged teacher brutality. When we visited the office of Supt. McKnight where we talked with him for over an hour he said that Prof. Albert Williams, a war veteran, reportedly had an encounter with a student and that he had suggested a "compromise" of the differences since legal action had been threatened against the teacher.

Community people suggested that the whole background of the predicament of Prof. Austin grew out of the ambition of Assistant Principal Richard Coats to ascend to the principalship of the school. In an interview Mr. Coats denied this and said that he would hesitate to be made principal and had never entertained any thoughts of riding into the principalship upon anything like this.

Mr. Coats had been a teacher without tenure status. He returned to the system as one of the two supervisors. The other is Mrs. Mayola Shialo, who was praised by Mr. McKnight. Both live at Thomasyon, Ala. He was later placed as assistant principal of the academy. Those of the school community were of the impression that Prof. Willie Fitts was the assistant principal.

In our interview with Supt. McKnight he cleared up this particular status by saying that officially that there had been no assistant principalship but that Mr. Fitts had been assigned that title by Prof. Austin. He asserted that Mr. Coats had been placed as second in charge to assist Prof. Austin whose duties had been whittled down to looking after the buildings and grounds.

We questioned Mr. Coats upon alleged charges of teachers seeking to register to vote reportedly being intimidated by two high-placed Negro educators in Marengo County. He stiffly denied that anything like this, to his knowledge had occurred. Supt. McKnight said nothing of the kind had happened. He expanded his remarks to say that he has expressed himself as discouraging going enmasse to register." But he said that this really was not in the scope of his activities. He is an elected county superintendent of education.

Mr. Coats admitted that he was not a qualified voter but pledged to become registered at the first opportunity.

Some community people had said that Mr. McKnight, the superintendent was "unapproachable." However, when we went to his office on second floor of the Marengo County Courthouse, he received us in a friendly way. He answered all of our questions fully and confronted us with a batch of evidence collected in support of the purported charges against Mr. Austin. We asked him about the report that the two Negro supervisors had no office out of which to work. He said that this was true but that they could use his office.

Sitting in the conference with us was Atty. Camp, one of the two lawyers preparing the case against Mr. Austin. He is a former mayor of Linden and is attorney for the board. Atty. Sledge is a special lawyer employed to help build the board's dismissal case. An auditor has been hired to gather and organize data dealing with alleged improper handling and accounting of funds by Mr. Austin. The superintendent described the notified-of-dismissal principal as one who excessively tips his hat to white people when he meets them on the street and who talks evasively in circuitouously when asked for specific information about anything.

"Has this dismissal matter been discussed with the three-man board of trustees or the P-T.A. leaders?", the superintendent was asked.

He had not done so but the matter had been brought up in conversation with one of the trustees. The superintendent insisted that his office was open for anybody to see him about anything. He showed us a petition which citizens had presented against Mr. Coats and said that a committee had followed it up and that he insisted that they talk facts.

He hinted that they did not talk facts and that he may have stoutly demand this. "They talk about how much love they had for Prof. Austin," he cited as an example.

Linden Academy, according to Mr. Coats, a graduate of Alabama State College, has a total of 689 students — 289 in high school and 600 in elementary school. Marengo County has 37 elementary and four Negro-serving high schools. None has either state or regional accreditment. According to the survey conducted by the State Department of Education it would take $5,827,800 to bring the Negro-enrolling schools up to acceptable standards. The white schools are already up to this level, according to this survey.

Marengo County which is in the seven-county First Congressional District has a population of 29,494 of which 9,016 persons are white and 20,478 are colored. There are 10,223 Negro persons of voting age with only 27 qualified voters, according to the survey conducted by Prof. J. E. Pierce, head of the political science department of Alabama State College.

After we had raised with Supt. McKnight just about all of the pertinent questions we had, the conversation switched back to the status of Acting Principal Coats. He said he did not intend to appoint him as principal of the academy. He said that the life of Mr. Coats had already been allegedly threatened by a community leader. We asked him whether he planned prosecution of the parents who kept their children out of school in protest of the Austin dismissal and whether there was strict enforcement of the compulsory school attendance laws. On the last question he intimated that no one during his superintendency had been prosecuted for violating this law. He let one draw the conclusion that attention had been given the threats against Mr. Coats and possible legal action against the parents of the striking school children.

Best information is that Prof. Austin will fight the ouster move. He has a number of influential white people behind him and has

Educator says—

If segregation ruled out, South won't rush into action

A Jefferson County school official yesterday said he thought the South would do nothing about a U. S. Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling "until the local courts made us do it."

Rayburn J. Fisher, assistant superintendent of Jefferson County schools and president of the Southeastern Association of School Business Officials, added in an interview with the New Orleans States in New Orleans, La., today that he foresaw "no overnight changes."

"If the ruling is against segregation, I think all of us in the South will go ahead just as we have been doing for some time. We would do nothing about the ruling until the local courts made us do it."

Fisher referred to five cases now under consideration by the high tribunal asking an end to segregation in schools.

The Alabama education was here today to preside over the opening session of the association's third annual convention.

Regardless of the court's decision, Fisher said he thought there would be "plenty of time for people to adjust to the new situation."

Textbook Law Under Hot Fire In Court Case

By MARIAN BOYLAN

Textbook publishers hauled the Morg ing act into court yesterday in an attem the state's books.

The state superintendent of schools for the publishers asked the court to de the law unconstitutional because, they declared, it can't be enforced.

After nearly seven hours of argument against the controversial bill Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones withheld immediate decision.

The challenge to the act, which meets virtually nobody's approval, came from three authors and 25 publishers, who said they could not comply with its provisions.

The law requires all textbooks be labeled with a statement saying whether the author is a Communist or a member of a Communist front organization.

Terry Testifies

State School Superintendent, W. J. Terry testified, in his opinion the publishers would cancel their contracts with the state unless the law is taken off the books.

He said, if the law is not declared void, textbooks now in use would have to be withdrawn by Jan. 1, 1955, because they aren't labeled.

Lloyd King, of New York, executive secretary of the American Institute of Textbook Publishers, told Judge Jones the publishers have not been able to get any list of subversive authors either from the Justice Department or from the House Un-American Activities committee.

He read a letter from chairman Clarence Velde (R-Ill) who said he could not furnish such a list.

Tried To Comply

King said the publishers have tried to comply with the Alabama law, but could not do so.

Attorneys for the Publishers Institute, Godbold and Hobbs, introduced an affidavit from the attorney general's office in Washington which said the Justice Department "does not maintain a list available to the public of persons who are known advocates of Communism or Marxist Socialism."

The affidavit was from Warren Olney III, third assistant attorney general for the United States.

A statement from President Ralph Draughon of Alabama Polytechnic Institute estimated it would cost API more than one million dollars to check some 200,000 books in the library. He said an average library book contains some 282 references.

Hearing Hits Snag

A brief snag in the procedure came earlier in the afternoon when a Birmingham attorney attempted to intervene in defense of the Act.

Fred Blanton sought to enter the controversy as an "interested taxpayer," but Judge Jones denied the request on the grounds parties to the suit were not properly notified.

However, the judge ruled Blanton was welcome to appear as a "friend to the court." Blanton, a former law professor at the University of Virginia, insisted the law is workable and can be enforced.

Co-respondents to the bill of complaint were the Alabama Education Committee and the State Board of Education.

State Attorney General Si Garrett, who represented members of the state committees, said he did not wish to impugn the legislators who passed the bill last September.

However, Garrett said "it would take the wisdom of a Solomon to determine what the act means and the patience of a Job to comply with its provisions."

He called the act the "most serious situation ever confronted in Alabama" and said it was "McCarthyism run riot."

Truman Hobbs, in a final plea to strike the law from Alabama's books said, "You can make this bill workable if you don't want to have textbooks."

Hobbs contended the act is an illegal delegation of authority as well as a challenge to the federal and Alabama constitutions.

Present in the courtroom yesterday as "friends" were Miss Carol Orr, Birmingham attorney, representing the state's colleges and universities, and Col. Marion Rushton, representing the Alabama Education Association.

Expert Says Integration Comes Slow

BIRMINGHAM — White people here, maybe a large portion of them, believed that segregation is wrong, but they also hold fast to the idea that no matter how wrong it is it will take years to equalize Negro and white schools, and that integration must be a gradual process unaccompanied by legislation.

Prominent educators said here last week that it would take at least 15 to 20 years to bring Negro schools up to white standards.

This was the opinion of Dr. Truman Pierce, speaking before a meeting of Alabama Secondary School Principals.

Dr. Pierce, who is director of Peabody College's Southern States Cooperative program, added:

"Segregation and public education are but one aspect of a much broader cultural problem."

He said that segregation is an emotional rather than technical problem and that drastic changes such as from segration to integration, do not come about suddenly.

Capitol Hill News

770 Local Teachers Get Salary Bonuses

Some 770 Montgomery County Teachers last week received $63 bonus checks, the second of four like payments approved in the most recent session of the state Legislature.

A total of $49,310.80 was paid Montgomery teachers.

Early payment of the money was authorized by Gov. Gordon Persons to enable the teachers to get the money before schools closed for summer vacation.

According to the Education Department 23,597 teachers received a total of $1,511,151.88. Of these figures 17,732 teachers in county systems received $1,135,557.28 and 5,865 teachers in city systems received $375,594.60.

The two remaining payments will be made next year.

Walter Givhan Promises

State Bill To Keep Segregation Ready

SELMA, Ala., June 26 (AP)—A bill to maintain segregation in public schools will be ready for the next Alabama legislature if the U. S. Supreme Court makes such action necessary, Rep. Walter Givhan said today.

Givhan reported on a trip which he and two other legislators made to confer with Govs. Herman Talmadge, of Georgia, and James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina.

Givhan said he and the other members of his "self-appointed" group were following the advice of Byrnes to wait and see what final action the Supreme Court will take.

While the Supreme Court has declared segregation in public schools illegal, it has invited the states which practice segregation to suggest plans for putting the decision into effect. The ruling won't become final until then.

The legislation prepared for Alabama is patterned after a law already adopted in Georgia and pending in South Carolina, Givhan said.

One major clause would provide automatic curtailment of funds for any school that permits "mixing of the races," Givhan said. Another would make members of school boards of trustees judicial officers.

Members of the private committee with Givhan are State Sens. Gerald Bradford, of Grove Hill, Sam Englehart, of Macon, and James S. Coleman, of Eutaw. Coleman was unable to accompany the others on the recent trip.

Givhan predicted if the legislation is offered it will be approved on the grounds that "the people will demand that regardless of what the politicians want."

A committee from the state legislature also is investigating school segregation problems.

14d(1) 1954

ALABAMA

State Facing New Year With No Solution To Possible End Of School Segregation

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

Alabama stepped cautiously into the new year with a worried feeling of uncertainty over perhaps the gravest problem since reconstruction.

Although the very tradition of white supremacy in the changing land of the South may be challenged by the Supreme Court's ultimate decision on school segregation, the birthplace of the Confederacy has found no solution.

Two other states, South Carolina and Georgia, have set up what amounts to free private school systems to function if segregation is abolished in the public schools.

A similar program was offered the Alabama legislature last year, but never got out of committee. House and Senate members were unwilling to gamble on any stand-by legislation that far ahead of the Supreme Court's ruling.

But the legislators did create a joint Senate-House segregation committee to study every possible approach and recommend definite action when the fate of the two-school system is known.

Then Gov. Gordon Persons, in a pre-Christmas letter to newspapermen, radio commentators, educators and legislators, appealed for ideas and suggestions, declaring the state must be ready for "any eventuality." The answers are being turned over to the committee members.

Still another lawmaking research group, the Legislative Council, is making a correlated study of the classroom segregation puzzle. Some faint outline of a pattern may develop at a council meeting here next Friday.

Governor Bewildered

Gov. Persons, admittedly bewildered, since there is no way to measure the intensity of the problem, based his thinking nevertheless on the assumption that the Supreme Court will:

1. Outlaw segregation altogether, or

2. Reaffirm the old separate equal doctrine with a fixed time limit for compliance.

The solution will be tremendously costly in terms of dollars but still much simpler to work out if the court follows the latter course. It will be primarily a matter of finding the money to finish the job of equalizing school opportunities.

Many counties have moved a long way in that direction, and the gap between white and Negro school expenditures is being steadily closed. But educators are quick to point out that much remains to be done.

A recent survey indicated, for example, that at least 100 million dollars will be needed to bring the Negro school buildings up to the white level throughout the state.

Only Part Of It

And that's only part of it. Stury courses and all other facilities would have to be brought to the same level, meaning perhaps the creation of special classes in some instances to accommodate a few Negro students.

But it would be basically a financial problem, and although the legislature probably would wrangle over which sources of revenue to tap, the members would know what their goal was.

With the outright abolition of classroom separation, however, the problem would be infinitely more acute. There would be no unity of thought because too many legislatures have varied ideas about the right answer.

Rep. Sam Engelhardt, of Macon County, proposed a far-reaching "free private school" program which would turn the classrooms over to local school corporations financed by state "grants."

But some legislators argued that if the Supreme Court says the states can't use tax money directly to discriminate between races, it would mean they can't do it indirectly, either.

The same reasoning might hold true on any other plan to use tax dollars to keep Negroes and white segregated in school.

Whatever the outcome, it may well call for a special session of the legislature this year at a time when political sympathies are divided over the election of a new governor. Whether they like it or not, the gubernatorial candidates almost certainly will be drawn into it.

Face Segregation Issue In This Administration, Allen Advises Persons

GADSDEN, Ala., Dec. 31 (AP)—Alabama mustn't count on federal funds as a way out of the school segregation problem, says Lt. Gov. James B. Allen, and it's up to the present administration to face the issue.

Answering Gov. Gordon Persons' appeal for ideas and suggestions about the pending Supreme Court decision, the lieutenant governor cautioned that "cries for federal aid offer no panacea for our problems. We must face our problems and work out our own solutions."

And if an "adverse decison" comes during the present Persons administration, Allen said "It poses a problem for this administration which should be met and a decision reached by it.

"The problem should not be passed on to the next administration."

Allen himself is an avowed candidate for governor in the 1954 election.

Asks for Suggestions

Waiting on School Decision Worries Alabama Governo

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Governor Persons has asked public and non-public leaders in Alabama to provide him with suggestions for handling the segregated school problem which is "bigger than any of us."

On Dec. 18 he sent out a letter to the various segments of leadership seeking to find ways to "be prepared" for any of three possible decisions the U. S. Supreme Court might hand down: (1) rejection of Federal jurisdiction; (2) "complete abolition of segregation' or (3) affirmation of the doctrine of 'Separate but Equal.'

* * *

HERE IS THE text of Governor Persons' letter:

Dear Sir:

The one thing which would most greatly affect us here in the South would be a breakdown of segregation in our public schools. A decision from the U. S. Supreme Court is expected in the near future.

The consequences of an unfavorable decision are, of course, unknown to any of us. What the decision itself will be is, of course, also unknown. However, it appears to me that perhaps the Court could decide along one of three general lines:

1. Rejection of the case on the assumption that the Federal Government's jurisdiction lies only in the District of Columbia. This seems highly unlikely.

2. Complete abolition of segregation. To me this is unthinkable in view of the fact that the present system of "separate but equal facilities" was itself long ago established by the Supreme Court.

3. Continuation of the present system, but with a definite time in which to completely comply with the "separate but equal facilities."

* * *

WE ALL KNOW every city and county in Alabama has, for many years, been making an all-out effort to provide equal facilities. Some have accomplished this. Others are still in the process.

I wonder, therefore, if you will take the time to write me your views and suggestions covering the problems which will confront us in the event of a Supreme Court decision based on the possibilities of No. 2 or No. 3.

No matter whether you are a Democrat, an Eisenhower-Democrat, a Republican, or whether you are pro or anti-Truman, pro or anti-Eisenhower, or pro or anti-Persons, this problem is bigger than any of us.

Sincerely,
GORDON PERSONS.

* * *

THIS LETTER went to 600 school officials, newspapermen and radio newscasters, and legislators seeking their views on how to approach the segregation cases.

Persons To Be On Hand For Segregation Parley

When Alabama lawmakers meet here Friday to begin a survey of the ticklish school segregation problem, Gov. Gordon Persons plans to be on hand.

Persons said yesterday he expects to sit in on the meeting of the Alabama legislative council with a school segregation committee created by last year's Legislature.

The Legislative council is scheduled to spend much of its quarterly meeting discussing ways to prepare for a pending Supreme Court decision on segregation in the public schools.

Gov. Persons recently appealed to newspapermen, radio commentators, legislators and educators for ideas on how to deal with the segregation issue. He promised to turn the replies over to the special segregation study committee.

County legislators to huddle on expected segregation ruling

BY FRED TAYLOR
Newsstaff writer

Jefferson County legislators will meet at noon tomorrow in an attempt to come up with a solution to problems expected to arise from an early U. S. Supreme Court ruling on racial segregation in schools.

Rep. Paul Meeks said he would suggest to the delegation that a "complete study" be made of state and local police powers with a view to determining to what extent authorities could maintain segregation on a basis of health and mental tests.

"I certainly think this could be done validly and without violation of the 14th amendment to the federal constitution," said Rep. Meeks, Birmingham attorney.

THE EFFECT of this suggestion was embodied in a recent proposal submitted to Gov. Gordon Persons by Rep. Henry Beatty, Birmingham lawyer and likewise veteran member of the delegation.

Sen. Albert Boutwell, who also is a member of a legislative interim committee on segregation, declared recently that "I think we will find a solution and take the necessary steps to preserve our Southern traditions and our way of life."

"eW will not accept segregation in our public schools in Alabama," he said.

REP. LARRY DUMAS, delegation chairman, said he was calling the group together in response to a letter from Gov. Persons asking "views and suggestions" on what should be done, if the high court rules out segregation.

Dumas is a member of the State Legislative Council, which will meet with the interim committee at Montgomery Friday to discuss problems likely to arise from the high court decision.

eBsides Dumas, Boutwell, Beatty and Meeks ,other delegation members are Reps. James G. Adams Jr., James B. Morgan, Hugh Kaul and Thomas E. Huey Sr.

Legislative Study Opens On Segregation Friday

Two Committees To Meet In Montgomery; Abolishment Brings No Problem At Maxwell

BY GENE WORTSMAN

Two legislative committees meet tomorrow in what probably will be the first of a series of historic discussions on segregation in Alabama's public schools.

Beginning at 11 a.m., the meeting will be in the chambers of the State Senate at Montgomery.

Larry Dumas, chairman of the Jefferson legislative delegation as well as a member of one of the two committees to meet in Montgomery, has called the Jefferson delegation together today.

It will meet to discuss segregation problems.

Meantime, first word of how nonsegregation already is working in Alabama came from the Air University at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery yesterday.

"Segregation in the Air Force was abolished in conformity with an executive order by President Truman, dated July 26, 1948, and an Air Force regulation of Sept. 14, 1950," wrote Lt. Col. William B. Abbot Jr., deputy chief of staff.

"I know of no 'incidents' at Maxwell Air Force Base attributable to the policy. It has not involved any particular problems to this command and is generally regarded as being successful," he explained.

The colonel's letter was in reply to one from The Post-Herald asking for particulars on how the policy was working at the air base.

Negroes Provide Idea

Rep. Sam W. Engelhardt, Jr. of Macon County said he has asked the Legislative Reference Service to work on an idea which came to him from "the Neroes themselves."

The plan would work on a contractural basis through the state superintendent of education, Mr. Engelhardt said.

However, he explained, it is a complicated procedure and will be explained in detail later.

Charles M. Cooper, director of the Legislative Reference Service, said the organization has been "trying to accumulate as much information as possible concerning the plans and proposals which are being made or which have been made in the Southern states regarding segregation in public schools.

"In other words," Mr. Cooper explained, "we are attempting to get ourselves in a position to be able to furnish members of the Legislature and other interested parties with background information on this subject."

Mr. Cooper was directed to begin his work by the Legislative Council last October.

He probably will report his preliminary findings to the council at tomorrow's meeting.

Persons Report Likely

Another report expected is one from Gov. Gordon Persons, compiled from answers to sme 600 letters he mailed to interested persons throughout the state seeking their advice on the problems.

Apparently very little is being done in the State Department of Education toward an eventual U. S. Supreme Court ruling on the matter.

Dr. W. J. Terry, superintendent, said yesterday he felt it would be unwise for him to make a statement. He did point out that the department is furnishing legislators with all the figures it may have which the legislators request.

Dr. Terry said he expects to be at the meeting tomorrow.

In a speech to the Birmingham Lions Club yesterday, he said only that "we can hope for the best."

The Legislative Council is meeting in regular session tomorrow. The other committee, composed of three senators and three representatives, was organized by direction of a resolution the Legislature adopted in 1953.

Purpose of this committee is to submit such proposed legislation as it thinks necessary "to protect the interests of the state and its citizens in the event of a decision by the Supreme Court . . . which destroys or impairs the principle of separation of the races in the public schools . . ."

The resolution, by Sen. J. Miller Bonner, noted:

"The policy of social segregation carries no implied or necessary imputation or inferiority, since, so far as the state is concerned, it is appliable to whites and Negroes alike, without hypothesis except social harmony."

Legislative Study Opens On Segregation Friday

Two Committees To Meet In Montgomery; Abolishment Brings No Problem At Maxwell

Continued from Page 1

the legislative council and a special Senate-House committee investigating the unprecedented problem.

Cooper also will outline plans already on the books in other Southern states to meet the educational upheaval expected if the high tribunal holds segregation of Negro and white pupils in public schols in unconstitutional.

The legislators also face the possibility the court will insist Negro school facilities be brought up to par with whites.

It has been estimated 100 million dollars would be needed to equalize buildings alone in the two shool systems. Improving other facilities will take much more money.

The Legislative Council, mindful the momentous decision is expected within the next several weeks, asked the special legislative committee to sit in on its regular meeting tomorrow.

It will be the first time the committee has met since it was set up by the 1953 legislature, and practically all the session is expected to be devoted to the segregation issue.

Persons Says Nothing On Segregation

MONTGOMERY, June 11—(U.P.)—Gov. Gordon Persons returned tight-lipped from the governor's conference on segregation today.

He said he had nothing to say about the meeting at this time.

Persons flew back to Montgomery after the two-day meeting. He returned to his office this morning.

The Alabama governor met with representatives from 15 other states. At the meeting, he said he did not see how the states represented could make any segregation plans until the Supreme Court handed down its final rulings in school segregation.

State's Moves On Segregation To Get Airing

The course Alabama should follow when the Supreme Court rules on school segregation will be given serious study by two state legislative groups here today.

Charles M. Cooper, director of the Legislative Reference Service, will explain several suggested programs to members of

Blames Dismissal on 'Personal Reasons'

Fired Ala. Teacher 'Tests' Law

VERNON, Ala.—A school teacher's charge that her proposed dismissal is based upon "personal grounds" may lead to a crucial test for the Alabama Teacher Tenure Law.

Mrs. Louella Williams of Fairfield told the five-man Lamar County Board of Education that the termination of her teaching contract was being based upon reasons other than an alleged decrease in teaching units.

The teacher, represented by Attorneys Arthur D. Shores and Orzell Billingsley Jr. of Birmingham, made her charges before F. M. Sizemore, board chairman of Sulligent; I. B. Hawkins and S. Y. Shelton of Vernon; W. Vance Johnson, Newport; and J. C. McAdams, Kennedy.

* * *

THE HEARING was held in a courtroom after Attorney Shores protested against efforts to hold a private session.

School Supt. A. A. Chandler, who reportedly had sought to have the hearings held in private was subjected to a one hour grilling by Atty. Shores.

Supt. Chandler testified that the proposed cancellation of Mrs. Williams' contract had been based upon a reduction of teaching units. But, Mr. Chandler also said that he had given Mrs. Williams no specific reason as to why she would be dismissed.

* * *

LAMAR COUNTY has 14,604 whites and 2,437 Negroes. A Federal-State survey of Alabama's educational needs reveals that Lamar County needs $702,500 to bring white schools up to acceptable standards and $630,000 for Negro schools, despite the fact that Negroes represent only 13 per cent of the population.

A 1952 survey of Negro voters in the county undertaken by Alabama State College revealed only seven Negro voters among the 8,300 on county lists.

Pelicans At Work

The South has as many Philadelphia lawyers as Philadelphia or any other section, but they have been conspicuously unproductive in contriving slick legal escapes from the Supreme Court's decision against school segregation. There have been such secessionist blunderbusses as Gov. Byrnes' plan to abandon the public school system. However, most of the states, in common with Alabama, have simply looked at the decree and decided to roll over and play dead.

An exception is Louisiana, whose lawyer legislators have devised a pretty ingenious out. Louisiana legislators contend that their schools are not segregated for racial reasons, but to promote "public health, morals, better education and the peace and good order in the state—and not because of race." Hence, segregation is a valid exercise of police power.

As a matter of fact, this evasion has a plain precedent in the case of laws recognizing Sunday as a day of worship. Under the Constitution of the United States, it would be illegal to set Sunday apart for reasons of religion and worship. But Sunday is nevertheless set apart for the devious reason that it promotes the general welfare to devote one day for rest.

Even so, Louisiana's fiction writers may expect a rejection slip from the Supreme Court.

Segregation And The Fourteenth Amendment

To the Editor:

The recent decision of the Supreme Court attempting to abolish segregation in our schools is based on the following from Section 1 of the XIV Amendment: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

The XIV Amendment was adopted by the 39th Congress held in 1866, and was ratified by more than three-fourths of the states, and made a part of the Constitution July 28, 1868. The question arises, is the XIV Amendment legally and morally a part of the Constitution? This amendment was approved by the Legislatures of the Southern states, said Legislatures having been elected by voters of the states in 1867 and early part of 1868. At that time the state governments in the South were in the hands of Negroes, scalawags and carpetbaggers, but the Negroes were not legal voters at that time, as the right to vote was not conferred upon them until the adoption of the XV Amendment in March, 1870. The clause referred to being as follows: "Section I: The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." Thus it is shown that the XIV Amendment was enacted with the votes of people who were not citizens of the United States at that time.

It can be shown further that the XIV Amendment was technically adopted through compulsion. It was announced that "Whenever the people should come to their senses and ratify the XIV Amendment they might be admitted to the Union." As the Southern states at that time constituted more than one-fourth of the states, it was impossible to adopt this amendment without their concurrence.

Section V of the XIV Amendment reads as follows: "Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this Article."

In enforcing the XIII Amendment the Congress has enacted laws against peonage, but I know of no act of Congress which attempts to control the educational systems of the states, and until such legislation is enacted, it seems to me that the Supreme Court can certainly go no further than its recent pronouncement. Any further attempt would be in effect usurpation of the legislative powers of Congress. I hope that some legal mind will elaborate on this point.

EDWARD B. TEAGUE,
1313-B North 29th Street.

Segregation Is Also Community Problem

To the Editor:

Most of the discussion of segregation is on the statewide basis. It is a state problem, but, like our schools, it is a community problem also. And it varies about as widely in Alabama as it does in the nation.

Really, the problem is solving itself, and if not too seriously disturbed will ultimately work itself out to the satisfaction of the majority. To illustrate: The percentage of Negroes in our population has been decreasing for 70 years. In 1880 there was 48 per cent Negro population, while in the last census there was 32 per cent Negro population. In addition, these are concentrating in the towns and cities, with a few exceptions. Very few younger Negroes are staying on the farms. This change has come gradually in each census except from 1910 to 1920. The older people will recall the exodus of Negroes from the South, especially the Black Belt, during and following the World War. This exodus has changed the agricultural emphasis from cotton to cows, and from manual labor to machinery.

A comparison of the problem from county to county, and from community to community is interesting. Start with our whitest county, Winston, with six-tenths of one per cent colored, and these concentrated in Haleyville, giving it a 2.6 per cent colored. Hence Winston is not seriously excited over the problem.

The next whitest county is Cullman with one per cent colored. Here is an exception to the general drift cityward, for the city of Cullman has only two-tenths of one per cent colored, and these are in one community, and are quite apart from the population as a whole. They are independent, and do not worry the Welfare Department.

From these extremely white counties let us look at the other extreme. Macon County with Tuskegee Institute and its influence over the county has about 85 per cent colored population. This furnishes a completely different problem to the general run. In fact, it has no equal. Lowndes County is also an exception. There is only one town, and it has less than 1,400 population, yet it still has about 85 per cent colored. All are on farms, and they are rather prosperous, and happy.

Other counties with more than 50 per cent colored population are Barbour, Bullock, Dallas, Greene, Hale, Marengo, Montgomery, Monroe, Perry and Wilcox.

W. C. BLASINGAME,
Box 2031, University, Ala.

No Change In Segregation Says School Board

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The State Board of Education has decided there will be no change in the traditional segregation of races in the public schools of the state, at least for the coming school year.

For the guidance of local school boards, the state board adopted a resolution at a recent meeting in Montgomery stating there will be no change in segregation policies for the 1954-55 year.

The resolution, offered at the meeting by Gov. Gordon Persons, pointed out that the provision for segregation contained in the Alabama constitution was not under attack in cases leading to the U. S. Supreme Court's decision that "segregation has no basis in law."

This provision has not been declared void by any court, the governor stated, and will continue to be carried out for at least another year.

COLORED NEWS EVENTS

Negro School Personnel Given

The personnel for Negro Schools for the year 1954-55, which was given in part last week, follows:

M. Hall, (Tuskegee Institute)

Great Hope—Lucy S. Cosby, Principal, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Joella C. Williams, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Fannie B. Moore, (Ala. S. C.)

Guerryton—George Thompson, Principal, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Lydia W. Evans, (Ala. S. C.); Bessie A Brown, B. S.,(Ala. S. C.)

Oak Grove—Maggie Robinson, Principal, B S., (Ala. S. C.); Edna V. Smith, (Ala. S. C.); Bertha Relfe, B. S., (Ala. S .C.)

Oak Grove No. 2—Rosa K. Lewis, Principal, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Frances Sharpe, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Janie H. Harris, B. S., (Ala. S. C.)

Oliver—Julius C. Taylor, Principal, B. S., M. Ed., (Ala. S. C.); Minnie Jewell Jordan, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Eula Barnes, B. S., (Ala. S. C.)

Post Oak—Jack G. Ford, Principal, B. S., (Miles College) Carrie L. Gibson, A. B., (Miles College); Vesserlene M. Brewer, (Tuskegee Institute)

Enon—James V. Poe, Principal, B. S., (Tuskegee Institute), M. S., (Ohio State); Queen F. Meadows, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Amanda Patton, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Gladys H. Williams, (Ala. S. C.)

Aberfoil—Allen Patterson, Principal, B S., (Miles College), Graduate Work, Columbia University; Mattie Pouncy, (Tuskegee Institute); Monica Threat, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Elizabeth Marshall, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Wilma J. Donnatto, B. S., (Ala. S. C.)

Lee—David Cooper, Principal, B S., (Ala. S. C.); Eddie Holland, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Madine Howard, B S., (Ala. S. C.); Catherine Hardy, B S., (Ala. S. C.); Montague Ivey, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Elizabeth C Woods, B. S., (Ala. S. C.)

Thompson—Marcus Rogers, Principal, A. B., (Miles College), Graduate Work, Ala. S. C.; Willam Marshall, B. S., (Le Moyne College); Sarah Bryant, B. S., (Miles College); Celia R. Williams, B. S., (Tuskegee Institute); Julia M. Evans, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Julia Coleman, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Lucile Lloyd, B. S., (Tuskegee Institute)

Perote—Lee Frank Tyson, Principal, A. B., (Miles College), Graduate Work, Columbia University; Raynard B. Grady, B. S., (Fla. N and I College), M. Ed., (Tuskegee Institute); Winifred Albert, B. S., (Ala. A. and M. College); Thelma Thomas, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Jessie R. Bandy, B. S., (Miles College); Johnnie Ashford, B. S., (Miles College); Leona Chilton, B. S., (Tuskegee Institute); Alma L. Smith, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Minnie Nickerson, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Josephine D. Clark, B. S., and M. Ed., (Ala. S. C.)

Merritt—Leon Jordan, Principal, B. S., (Ala. S. C.), Graduate Work, Ala. S. C.; James Thornton, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Ernest Warren, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Benjamin Ward, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Joshua Salary, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Camilla Martin, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); [illegible] Hubbard, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Carolyn Hix, B. S., (Tuskegee Institute); Ruth Y. Daniels, B. S., and M. Ed., (Ala. S. C.); Anna W. Bair, (Ala. S. C.); Fannie Whitfield, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Mattie Pinkston, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Loraine Gavins, B. S., (Ala. A and M College); Beulah Lewis, B. S., (Ala. S. C.)

Carver—LeRoy Raife, Principal, B. S. and M. Ed., (Ala. S. C.); Carl L. Calloway, B. S., (Knoxville College); Charles H. Hubbard, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Maude M. Williams, A. B., (Benedict College); College); Pearl Hutchins, B. S., Jessie R. Rogers, A. B., (Miles Lecora Lucas, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); (Miles College); Florice Evans, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Louise Poe, B. S., (Ala. A and M College), M. S., (Tuskegee Institute); Alice V. Foxx, B. S., and M. Ed., (Ala. S. C.); Jessie Foreman, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Mary McCarthy, B. S. and M. Ed., (Ala. S. C.); Catherine Thompson, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Carrie Braswell, B. S., (Ala. S. C.), M. S., (Tuskegee Institute); Willie Wysinger, B. S. (Ala. S. C.); Mary S. Ford, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Juetta James, B. S. and M. Ed. (Ala. S. C.); Evelyn Studivant, B. S., (Tuskegee Institute); Gladys Dabney, B. S., (Ala. S. C.); Ruby Harris (Ala. S. C.)

TRANSPORTATION AGENTS

Agents and Schools Served:

Mack Caldwell, Merritt, Enon.

Wilburn Thomas, Jr., Oak Grove No. 4, Merritt.

Pete Thomas—No. 1, Carver, Oak Grove No. 4, Murry, Hector, Pump.

Pete Thomas—No. 2 Carver, Thompson, Corner Stone, Fitzpatrick.

Pete Thomas—No. 3, Merritt, Lee, Oliver.

Pete Thomas—No. 4, Post Oak, Inverness.

Joe Jesse Owens, Aberfoil, Indian Creek, Perote.

Roosevelt Rodgers, McClenny, Blue's Stand, Perote.

Richard Young, Perote.

---

of Opelika were weekend guests of Mrs. R. J. Gholston.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Bristow, Martha Bristow, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gholston and Mrs. R. J. Gholston attended the Bristow reunion Sunday at Flat Rock Park, Columbus, Ga.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Barnett of Camden, and Dr. and Mrs. Vernon Barnett of Birmingham were weekend guests of Mrs. S. T. Barnett.

Mrs. Sam Forrer and children have returned home after visiting Mr. and Mrs. Jim Campbell and Mr. and Mrs. Russell in Atlanta.

Education board adopts $74 million school budget

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 2—(AP)—The State Board of Education adopted a budget totaling $74,840,278 for operation of the public schools during the fiscal year which began Friday.

The budget, recommended by Dr. W. J. Terry, state superintendent of education showed state funds estimated at $72,219,894 for the year.

Trust funds, the bulk of them consisting of grants from the federal government, were expected to bring in another $2,149,154. Much of this money is earmarked for special purposes, such as vocational education, training for crippled children, and the like.

Unappropriated balances, left from the 1953-54 fiscal year, make up the remaining amount of the total figure.

To pay expenses of the school system from Oct. 1 until tax receipts earmarked for education begin coming in, the board authorized the Alabama Public Schools Corp. to borrow $12 million.

The corporation, set up for this purpose, has made all arrangements to borrow the money from the Chase National Bank, New York, N. Y., at an interest rate of 1¾ per cent.

EDUCATION OFFICIALS said the money would be available for distribution on Monday to local boards, and checks are now being drawn for this distribution.

All funds of the minimum program fund — major source of school funds—were authorized to be pledged for payment of principal and interest on the loan.

The Department of Education normally borrows at the beginning of the fiscal year, to run schools until taxes begin rolling in.

The board also approved budgets for teachers colleges and trade schools under its control. Schools, and the amount of their approved budgets, were:

FLORENCE STATE Teachers College, $702,087.10; Jacksonville State Teachers College, $1,102,477.70; Troy State Teachers College, $878,070.75; Livingston State Teachers College, $328,169.81; Alabama State College for Negroes, $1,489,118.14; Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College, $749,415.21.

Alabama School of Trades Gadsden, $459,951.39; Napier Field Vocational Trade School, $324,143.91; Decatur Vocational Trade School, $232,642; Wenonah Vocational Trade School, $175,690; Mobile Vocational Trade School, $199,247.80; and Tuscaloosa Vocational Trade School, $165,180.54.

H. L. Upshaw was reelected vice president of the board.

The board also received a report from the Alabama Textbook Committee and adopted textbooks, as well as opening textbook bids.

NAACP Calls Brewton Meet On Signatures

BREWTON, Ala., Sept. 30—The question of the validity of signatures to a petition by a group of Negroes requesting immediate action by the Brewton Board of Education to integrate white and Negro pupils in the schools here remained in doubt tonight.

Samson Cheatham, chairman of the Brewton Chapter of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, said he could not comment on the matter until after a meeting of the branch.

Cheatham, who returned to Brewton after being out of the state last week, said he would talk with other officers and call a meeting as soon as possible.

The petition was presented to the Brewton school board last week. It bore the names of 19 Negro parents and the signature of Peter A. Hall, Birmingham Negro lawyer and NAACP attorney.

Brooks Garrett, school board chairman, told newsmen Saturday 12 of the 19 persons whose names were on the petition said they did not sign it. Asked for comment, Hall referred queries to Cheatham.

Hall said the petition was received about the same time as were several others and he had board.

Cheatham said he had circulated the petition in early July and then delivered it to NAACP state offices.

Similar petitions already have been presented to school boards at Anniston, Montgomery and Fairfield, and an NAACP official said last week 38 such petitions in all probability will be presented.

Persons Reluctant to Call Legislature on Segregation

Committee Reported Favoring Plan for Private School System

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 18—Gov. Gordon Persons, who says that abolition of segregation in Alabama schools is "unthinkable," has refused to be hurried into calling a special session of the Legislature to consider changing the public education setup.

His reluctance in convening the lawmakers is because he does not want to see the state public school system abolished—something many feel would almost certainly happen.

Numerous recommendations have been made to Gov. Persons who nearly a year ago called on members of the Legislature, school leaders, editors and citizens generally for their "views and suggestions" on how to prepare the state for just such a decision as the U.S. Supreme Court handed down.

Committee Plan

Most significant of these recommendations came from a special legislative interim committee, which has been studying the high court's ruling. Working with his committee has been a special group of the State Bar Association.

The committee, headed by Jefferson State Sen. Albert Boutwell, Birmingham attorney, and made up of other widely known lawyers, has recently submitted to the governor what Mr. Boutwell termed a "workable" plan to maintain segregation in the classroom.

While details of the plan have not been divulged, it is understood that a special session of the Legislature was recommended to consider submitting to the people a constitutional amendment that would, in effect, abolish the public school system.

bunal "would be to help formulate decrees ordering mixed attendance of white and colored pupils in the public schools."

The acting attorney general's decision, which reportedly reflected the thinking of Gov. Persons, was announced on the final day for filing briefs with the Supreme Court.

In declining to say whether he would call an extraordinary session of the Legislature, Gov. Persons said the matter is being "given careful consideration, not only by me, but by a number of capable lawyers throughout Alabama."

As to the report submitted by the legislative and bar committees. The Governor added that "I have had the report for several weeks and I intend to give the attorneys ample time to give it the thorough consideration it should have." Earlier, Gov. Persons commented that "I have said many times that if I thought a special session of the Legislature would benefit the state I would not hesitate to call one. I will convene the Legislature only if I feel that genuine good can come from it."

In other developments, the NAACP petitioned the Anniston Board of Education to end segregation in city schools there immediately. And at Montgomery, a group of Negro parents requested that their children be admitted to enter a new all-white school. The Negroes were told their children belonged in another district served by an all-Negro school.

This would be done by removing the word "public" from the language of the state constitution requiring that a public school system be maintained. This would pave the way for a private school system similar to that contemplated for Georgia, South Carolina, and Mississippi.

ALABAMA

Recommendations submitted to Gov. Persons also are understood to provide for giving school officials judicial powers to make them immune from damage suits. The decision during the week by Alabama's Acting Atty. Gen. Bernard F. Sykes not to file a brief in the school segregation cases awaiting the Supreme Court's final decree tended further to point up the school segregation question in this state. Mr. Sykes contended the only purpose now in joining in the suits before the high tri-act as it "pleases" the source stated.

The action was reportedly taken at the joint session of the state committee and a special segregation group composed of Alabama Bar Association lawyers.

ALA. TAKES 1st STEP TOWARD PVT. SCHOOLS

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — There was no official confirmation from Alabama Gov. Gordon Persons that his state would move in line with Georgia and Mississippi to set up machinery to abolish the public school system.

However, Capitol sources indicated that the first step has been taken towards abolishing public schools in Alabama by members of a special legislative committee on segregation.

The committee reportedly has recommended that a constitutional requirement for public schools in the state be lifted. The move would leave the state legislature free to

Bessemer-Fairfield Work Conference Successful

The second annual Work Conference of the teachers of the Bessemer Fairfield City School Systems held September 1-3 at the Robinson School, Fairfield, was a success.

This was the consensus of opinion of those who were in a position to know.

There was a Panel Discussion held each morning. On the first day: "A Review of Literature On an Increased Unnderstanding of Levels of Child Growth and Development." Second day: "A Review of Literature on an Increased Understanding of the Learning Environment," and on the third day: "A Review of Literature on the Implications for the Work of the Teacher of an Increased Understanding of Levels of Growth and Development and an Increased Understanding of the Learning Environments."

After the Panel Discussions the various Groups went to their assigned rooms where further discussion of the topics highlighted each day's activities.

The Co-ordinator for the Conference was Dr. A. J. Davis, Dean of Education, Tuskegee Institute. The Consultants were Dr. J. W. Letson, Superintendent of Bessemer City Schools; G. Virgil Nunn, Superintendent of Fairfield City Schools; Mrs. G. C. Poole, Department of English, Tuskegee Institute. Visiting Evaluator was Frank Pearson Director of Instruction, Miles Memorial College. E. J. Oliver served as Conference Chairman and W. D. Branch served as Conference Secretary. Other Committees were as following: EDITORIAL COMMITTEE — Miss Thelma A. Reed, Chairman, Mrs. Katie Roach, Mrs. Mamie Dowdell, Mrs. Eloise Mullins, Mrs. Hattie Henderson, Miss Alice Soles, Mrs. Ethel Fallin, Mrs. Bernice Keene, Mrs. Marie Perkins, Mrs. Pauline Whatley, Mrs. Essie Pigrom, Mrs. Johnnie Evans, Mrs. Willie McAdory, Mrs. Rosa Yarbrough, Mrs. Ella Moss, Mrs. Rosa White, Mr. W. C. Pressley, J. I. Cobb, Mrs. Rosa Cameron. Mrs. Jessie Studimire, Miss Bettye Meadows, Robert Chambliss, Mrs. Daisy Chapman, Mrs. Eva Grant, Mr. B. W. Austin, Mrs. Pearl A. Shelton, H. L. Dobbins, E. Etheridge, Mrs. Catherine Vaughn and James McWilliams.

EVALUATING COMMITTEE — Mrs. Pearl Shelton, Dunbar High School; Mrs. Mabel Neely, Fairfield Industrial High School and Mr. Pearson, Miles Memorial College.

SECRETARIES FOR GENERAL SESSIONS — Wednesday, Mrs. Alfreda Gray; Thursday, Mrs. Ruth Cook; Friday, Mrs. Flora Lewis.

Directing the Work Conference were Dr. Letson, Superintendent Bessemer City Schools and Mr. Nunn, Superintendent Fairfield City Schools.

STEERING COMMITTEE OF THE BESSEMER—Fairfield Work Conference held Sept. 1-3 at the Robinson School, Fairfield. Reading from left to right James Cobb, Principal Carver School; Walter Branch, principal Hard School; J. S. Abrams, principal Dunbar High School; Marcus Craig, principal Robinson School; Mrs. C. E. Brittain, principal Englewood School; Frank Pearson, evaluator; Dr. A. J. Davis, director; Mrs. G. C. Poole, consultant; T. R. German, principal 22nd Street School; Mrs. D. D. Trader, consultant; and E. J. Oliver, principal Fairfield Industrial High School.

Baldwin County Has School Enrollment Of 10,302

Baldwin County Schools according to W. Candler McGowan, superintendent, has an enrollment of 10,302 students. 8,031 being enrolled in the white schools of the county and 2,221 in negro schools.

Enrollments are still coming in and will continue to do so, especially here in Fairhope where it is expected to have numerous winter visitors enter their children.

Tabulation of the various schools is as follows:

WHITE

Cross Roads	85
Frisco	52
Lillian	64
Magnolia Springs	72
Point Clear	72
White House Fork	78
Elsanor	145
Stapleton	157
Bellefountain	47
Silverhill	150
Swift	87
Rosinton	108
Stockton Jr. High	225
Elberta Jr. High	301
Daphne Jr. High	368
Loxley Jr. High	360
Summerdale Jr. High	281
Perdido Jr. High	375
Fairhope Sr. High	1115
Robertsdale Sr. High	902
Foley Sr. High	1396
Baldwin County High	1590

CREOLE

Wekes	57

NEGRO

Anna T. Jeanes	327
22 Douglasville	518
21 Baldwin Co. Training	607
Antioch	23
Turkey Branch	6
Grove	90
Blakeley	306
Loxley Elementary	293
Foley Jr. High
Vaughn Jr. High

Boutwell gives views—

Segregation solution talked

A constitutional change to end or alter Alabama's public school system is one possible step toward resolving the segregation question, Sen. Albert Boutwell said yesterday.

Speaking before the Birmingham Rotary Club, Sen. Boutwell, chairman of a special legislative committee studying the Supreme Court's segregation ruling, said:

"If our constitutional provisions for a public school system were removed, it would give the Legislature enough flexibility to meet the situation as it might arise."

Another possibility is to do away partially with the system and give "considerable authority to local school boards" to handle needs of various sections of the state, the senator said.

The proposal recommends that a special session of the Legislature be called. Gov. Persons has not made public his reaction to the suggestion.

THE SENATOR said his committee, with the aid of a committee from the Alabama Bar Assn. headed by Joseph Johnston of Birmingham, and advice from educators, has made some recommendations to the governor, who is giving them serious consideration.

The plan is not in final form and he is not at liberty to disclose it, Sen. Boutwell said.

Gov Gordon Persons today said he has named a group of lawyers in North, Central and South Alabama to study the recommendations of Sen. Boutwell's group.

The governor said those attorneys have not yet reported back to him.

Rather than take a "go to hell" attitude toward the Supreme Court ruling, the committee has devoted some eight to 10 months of study toward a simple, sensible, rational solution which has a chance to work, Boutwell said.

Efforts have been directed toward maintaining our way of life in the state and in the schools, he said.

THE SENATOR also said he felt that reaportiopnment of the Legislature can be accomplished in the next session if done by bills and not mixing it with a constitutional convention.

Rep. Paul Meeks, delegation chairman, introduced members of the delegation for brief remarks.

Rep. Hugh Kaul, in his fourth term, said he hadn't been to see the governor and didn't know what's going on yet. He said financial, road and school needs are among major problems facing the session.

Rep. Pat Vacca, delegation secretary, said one "pet" measure he will support is a compulsory motor vehicle inspection law, which he feels will help save lives on the highway.

Rep. Jess Edwards of Bessemer, said he will try to make the Folsom administration a success, but will be "with him when he's right and against him when he's wrong."

Rep. Charlie Nice said that people tell legislators that more money is needed for schools, the city, roads and other needs, but quickly oppose any idea of additional taxes.

Rep. Rufus Lackey said his main objective in the session will be to do everything possible for Jefferson County and Alabama.

Rep. Walter E. Perry Jr. said he would be available at any time to hear suggestions to benefit the county or state.

'The South Speaks'

Courier Team Blasts Apathy; Future Dismal

Courier p.1
Sat. 11-27-54 p.1
Pittsburgh, Pa.

By A. M. RIVERA Jr. and ROBERT H. RATCLIFFE

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—An incipient progressivism, dormant in this state for a half-century, can be seen dimly in scattered cities, but the hour of reckoning for segregationists is not at hand.

The small but growing group of sincere advocates of integrated public schools here admit quite frankly that they face stubborn assistance from both the whites and a number of "status quo Negroes."

The most interesting single fact about the struggle may be simply stated.

* * *

TOO MANY Negroes here still favor segregation or fear integration to justify a report that mixed schools in Alabama have a 50-50 chance for awhile yet.

This situation will persist, it seems as long as the majority of Negroes consider "separate-but-equal" as "normalcy" and as long as white supremacists exaggerate the real and imagined racial differences to maintain an atmosphere of super-charged emotions.

Ironically, the strength of the proponents of integration might also be their weakness. To date three organizations, two white and the NAACP, have been more effective and more vocal than any civic groups. The white groups are the Southern Educational Fund and the Southern Regional Council. Because each group has a different program and a different method of approach some leaders have expressed the belief that the efforts of each are being dissipated. Others contend that they differ only in methods, and claim that a three-pronged attack might be best.

* * *

THE MOST encouraging development on the political front is the recent election of Governor James E. Folsom. He is not expected to order mixed schools. On the contrary, he is on record as opposing integration but is regarded as "a friend to Negroes (Southern style)."

An official indication of his unwillingness to join the rabid group of Governors who want to scuttle public education rather than try an integrated program, is seen in his refusal to sign a joint statement protesting mixed schools.

The statement was issued at the recent Southern Governors Conference at Boca Raton, Fla., and was signed by seven governors and one governor-elect.

* * *

DURING HIS campaign, Governor-Elect Folsom refused to inject the race issue and instructed others on his ticket that he did not want them "running around the state hollering 'nigger, nigger, nigger'."

After his election he invited a group of Negro leaders to counsel with him on racial matters.

Counsel

They presented a list of proposals and demands which he described as "hot as cayenne pepper." He admitted, so we were told, that some of the requests were good and that he planned to give Negroes better representation.

* * *

THE MOST discouraging picture in the entire state is the lack of interest on the part of Negroes in the ballot.

It is almost unbelievable, that in Lowndes County where the Negro population is over 80 per cent there is not a single Negro voter. This is the same county which sent a Negro to the Senate during the Reconstruction.

In Wilcox County where the Negro population is over 80 per cent, there are no Negro voters.

In Jefferson County, where Birmingham is the seat, there are 140,000 Negroes over 21 years of age, but less than 6,000 registered voters.

* * *

IN THE PAST, the accumulative poll tax law made it financially prohibitive.

The law required a voter to pay $1.50 a year until he was 45 years old. Which meant that a man who was 45 and who had never voted had to pay $36 for the privilege. Since 1953 the law is accumulative only for two years.

Voting is still difficult in this state, however, and in some areas impossible. Some places require Negroes to fill out applications for registration then produce "two high type white men to vouch for the validity of the answers."

The two brightest spots, though far from shining, are Mobile and Montgomery—the two cities with the best leadership and the most votes. Other sections fall into three general classifications, the Red Necks in the northern counties, the Black Belt region, so-called because of the rich black soil but ironically where Negroes predominate as much as ten-to-one, and the old plantation culture.

* * *

IN MONTGOMERY there is still a strong undertone of Alabama aristocracy, a fictional designation for old families.

Aubrey Williams, head of the Southern Conference Education Fund, said that the real trouble in this state can be expected from the poor white who regards the Negro as a threat to his job. He said that the "aristocracy" probably is no better nor worse, but that they will exhibit an attitude of noblesse oblige. They will try, according to Williams, to show that they are terribly decent, law abiding, justice loving people. "They still want to eat their cake and have it too," he said.

Williams said the immediate plan in Alabama is to make schools good. He said Negro schools will improve because the plan is to hit mediocrity. "This is the plan of the powers-that-be in the community," he said. "The major concern in this community (Montgomery) is the Negro college," Williams said, "and that community interest will demand that the college have good leadership and good teachers."

He said, "Don't underestimate the appeal of this program among the Negroes."

* * *

IN BIRMINGHAM, the heart of industry in the South, the Negro has been victimized rather than helped by the Northern capitalists and the influx of Northern industry.

Veteran observers here claim that Northerners have created a far more vicious racial pattern than existed under the native Southern whites.

Emory O. Jackson, editor of the Birmingham World, said "White industry came South, trained the available white labor force, now he refused to hire Negroes on the grounds that he is not trained."

Against this cotton curtain of racial conflict and ethnic strivings there can be seen bright frescoes of cooperation and progress. These signs are being painted by young Alabamans who resent being looked upon as a society of troglodytes from Lower Slobovia USA.

* * *

VERNON MERRITT, executive secretary to out-going Governor Gordon Persons, pin-pointed this attitude when he hinted that Alabamans consider themselves above their rabble-rousing neighbors—Georgia, Mississippi and even South Carolina.

Merritt was explaining why he felt that there was such a healthy respect in this state for the U. S. Supreme Court in contrast with Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina. He pointed out that Alabama was never controlled by such race-baiting demagogues as Bilbo, "Cotton Ed" Smith, Talmadge and Rankin.

A further indication that there is a sputtering flame of nascent decency alive among the young people in the state was revealed in a published report of a debate held recently at Auburn between two staff members of the Plainsmen on the question of integration. Significantly neither debater argued the legality of the issue.

One assumed the paternalistic attitude of many of his elders and expressed the feeling that segregation was the best thing for the Negro because of the treatment that whites will give him in white schools. The other student condemned segregation as a threat to the American way of life.

* * *

THE ONE observation that is most poignantly dramatized through the South is that white Southerners have sacrificed generations trying to perpetuate the effete culture of the Old South.

Here you can appreciate the full meaning of Booker T. Washington's admonition that "to keep a man in a ditch you've got to stay in it with him."

A provision in the Tuskegee charter which prohibits whites from teaching on the faculty and whites from enrolling at the school deprives countless native whites from getting a college or technical education. The charter does not prohibit whites from being healed by Negroes and numerous whites flock to the hospital for treatment.

14d.1 Ala

FACULTY MEMBERS and their wives from nearby white colleges avail themselves of this medical care which is regarded as the best in the region.

* * *

WHITES ARE also privileged to bring their pets to the Tuskegee Schol of Veterinary Medicine, but their children are denied by law the educational opportunities available here.

The paradox is heightened by the presence of whites lined up to sell their blood at $15 a pint to the polio foundation. Here they line up, white next to Negro, to sell their life fluid.

What is the picture? In a capsule it amounts to mass ignorance, Negro ineptitude, and political insolence.

In far too many areas in the state the Negro has not even begun to qualify for citizenship, in others the Negro would-be-leadership is satisfied with the status-quo because segregation offers business opportunities with a minimum of competition.

* * *

RANK AND file Negroes lack the know-how and the wherewithal to press successfully for his rights.

The Rev. Wiley Hollis in the black belt Dallas County, said, "Our people are a scared nation." He said "things are getting better but still the white man gangs the Negro and keeps him in the corner."

In Bullock County, Aaron Sellers, a well-to-do farmer, sued the board of registrars because they would not register Negroes.

TODAY, THERE are six Negroes registered out of a possible 8,000 eligible Negro voters.

Bullock is a county controlled by three large white land owners. Sellers said the sheriff scares the Negroes from the polls.

What is the future? The Negro church, the NAACP and the Federal courts appear to be the institutions upon which the Negro will rely most during the period just ahead. The Negro ministers of the Methodist and Baptist churches are doing a yeoman service of creating a desire for first-class citizenship, the NAACP is giving the direction and legal advice.

Traditionally, the Negro in this state has regarded the courts as hostile.

He has never thought of seeking justice through court action. In fact, he has been literally scared to death of the courts. Recently he has learned through experience and hearsay that the Federal courts are where they can get justice.

FORTUNATELY, no one here thinks of the struggle for integration as easy or quick. The old and the young are preparing for a long battle, one which they very philosophically state, had to come soon or later."

Some talk in terms of integration coming in ten years, some say twenty-five and some think it will take fifty years, but you can't find a Negro who doesn't believe that Alabama will be integrated, sooner or later.

Voice Of The People

Three Types Of Schools Should Meet The Problem

To the Birmingham Age-Herald

I and thousands of others in Alabama agree with the report of the Legislative Committee on Segregation.

Your paper's contention that racial discrimination as such is eliminated under the free choice provided for in the three-type school, mixed, colored and white, appears sound. The recent court decision on this subject has done more to stir race feelings and set up bad psychological trends in all sections of the country than any law on segregation in all of the states combined.

I have read the letter signed by Albert M. Horn in the Voice of the People and published Monday, Nov. 1. It appears to this writer that his statements are in many parts based on wishful thinking and fallacious reasoning. He is following the line of the NAACP and other radicals who are not acting in the true interests of either Negro or white races. He says: "Parents... should consider if they are willing to see the new generation suffer and Alabama set back 50 years because of a long outdated concept of racial superiority."

Here is one of the fundamental errors in the reasoning of those who attack segregation. Segregation does not mention racial superiority. It applies equally and fairly to both races and does not proclaim that either is superior. I personally dislike the expression "racial superiority." There is a way that either race can show that it does not feel that it is as good and fine as the other. When one race tries to force itself into the schools and churches and neighborhoods where it knows it is not wanted by the other race it shows bad taste, manners and spirit. In this way it is showing that it feels inferior and is trying to "step up." Why not each race take pride in its homogeneity and accomplishments as a race rather than aiming at heterogeneity and amalgamation?

That segregation implies superiority is a non sequitur. The letter by Horn stresses the psychology of inferiority in "the hearts and minds of colored children in a way unlikely ever to be undone." It is fallacious in overlooking the alternative. How about the tensions and school strikes and mass meetings we have had in opposition to integration? The NAACP and courts might ponder this sort of psychology on the hearts and minds of both races. I believe it fundamental that each person has a right to some choice in selecting his associates, the type of school and church he attends. All-white schools for those who prefer them, mixed schools for those who prefer these, and all-colored schools for those who so choose appears to be a solution that comes near to meeting the interests of all who want to avoid great troubles and strains in all parts of the country and especially in the South.

Gadsden, Ala. A. R. BOWDIN.

Minister bares plot to bomb JC school

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. p. 19 11-6-54

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala. — (ANP) — A local minister was supposedly approached last week by two men with a plan to blow up a new $200,000 colored high school here.

According to the Rev. M. Munn the scheme was part of a plot to "bomb segregation out of existence." He said the master plan calls for similar bombings in four other states. The Alexander explosion was supposed to touch off the chain reaction. The Rev. Mr. Munn is pastor of Great Bethel Baptist Church.

He said the men, one colored and the other white, told him they were out to make "converts" of colored leaders in the South and that "the plan" calls for eliminating classroom jim crow by "getting rid of colored school buildings in this section." He did not say whether he was a candidate for conversion.

— o O o —

HE SAID he was first approached with the scheme on Oct. 18, while leaving the local post office. At the time, the men, whom he described as about 50 years old, well - groomed and seemingly educated, asked for "a conference" and he invited them to his home. There they laid bare their plans, he said.

He was to get two men to help him blow up the school and organize a group to distribute anti-segregation literature, the pastor said.

The Rev. Munn said the men also told him to "remember this is a big thing and we will pay you well." They departed in a yellow 1948 sedan, but the minister said he was unable to get the license number.

Legislators set meeting to map segregation law

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

New legislative plans designed to help maintain segregation in Alabama schools will be discussed at Montgomery Thursday by special legislative and state Bar Assn. committees.

This was revealed here today by Jefferson State Sen. Albert Boutwell, chairman of a six-member legislative interim committee named by the 1953 Legislature to study segregation problems.

Boutwell's committee, together with four leaders from the state bar, will meet at 10 a.m. Thursday at the Capitol.

"WE WILL MEET to discuss new plans and new methods we believe will be extremely helpful in enabling Alabama to maintain segregation in our schools," said Sen. Boutwell.

He said the interim committee, aided by the bar group, has been busy for several months studying problems expected to arise from the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision ruling out racial segregation in classrooms.

Working with Boutwell on the interim committee are Wilcox State Sen. J. Miller Bonner, author of the resolution under which the committee was created; Hale County Sen. Herbert Byars and Reps. Ira Pruitt, Sumter County; Jack Galalee, Mobile, and Bob Kendall, Cunecuh.

THE SPECIAL bar association committee is made up of Joe Johnston, and J. Kirkman Jackson, both of Birmingham; Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, longtime chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee and former State Sen. Norman Harris of Decatur.

Gov. Gordon Persons very probably will confer with members of these two committees Thursday.

The governor last year called on members of the Legislature, school leaders, newspaper editors and citizens in general to suggest ways and means of maintaining segregation in the schools, in event the high court did rule out separation of the races in the classrooms.

Education Board To Discuss Segregation, Dr. Hill's Case

Two controversial matters—school segregation and the case of Dr. W. W. Hill—will be in the limelight tomorrow morning as the State Board of Education holds a special meeting at the Capitol.

A decision is likely on one and unlikely on the other.

Segregation will be discussed by the Board for the first time since the recent Supreme Court ruling abolishing separate schools. The talk tomorrow is likely to be of a general nature since Gov. Gordon Persons and Supt. of Education W. J. Terry have both indicated they will not form plans until the high court outlines working procedure to segregated states.

Observers say the Board will hand down a decision on Dr. W. W. Hill, who remains in office as president of Livingston State Teachers College only because of a court order.

Hill was fired June 18 by the Board for incompetency, insubordination and neglect. Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones that same day gave an order restraining the Board from firing Hill and later at a hearing ruled the Board had acted improperly in dismissing the educator without filing written charges and giving him 10 days notice.

* * *

DR. TERRY SAID Tuesday, "As far as I know, the meeting will be open to the public. There is nothing concealed about it." Called at the direction of Gov. Persons, ex-officio Board chairman, the meeting is to be held in the governor's office.

Dr. Hill, through his attorneys, has repeatedly denied the charges against him as "completely false." He says he is being "railroaded" from the Livingston job. At the hearing held by Judge Jones, Hill's lawyer, T. B. Hill, Jr., of Montgomery, said any hearing before the "politically-dominated Board of Education would be a sham and delusion," adding that the college head wanted a hearing only "to clear his good name."

Dr. Hill was charged with mismanagement of public funds. The governor said that while Hill had not overspent his budget, he had spent the funds for other than their budgeted purpose. He added that Hill had not profited personally by it.

The governor led the fight to oust Hill. The vote was 10-1, with Chas. G. Dobbins, Examiner editor-publisher, opposing.

THE LIVINGSTON president has been defended by special committees of faculty members and students at the school who allege the Board fired Hill for political purposes.

Dr. Terry, who will be leaving his job when a new administration takes over in January, openly stated in the meeting that he did not want the Livingston presidency, as had been rumored.

On the segregation matter, this is the second meeting within a week on Capitol Hill. Last Thursday, Gov. Persons met in a closed session with segregation committees of the State Legislature and the Alabama Bar Association, each five-man groups. Newsmen were barred from the meeting, which was said to be general in nature with no clear-cut decisions made.

Dr. Hill Case, Segregation On Board Agenda

Education Board To Meet In Governor's Office July 9

The case of Dr. W. W. Hill, who remains president of Livingston State Teachers College despite a dismissal order from the State Board of Education, will be up for airing again July 9 at a specially-called meeting of the board.

Also up for discussion will be school segregation in Alabama public schools. The board has not discussed this matter since the recent Supreme Court decree abolishing segregation.

The meeting next Friday was called at the direction of Gov. Gordon Persons, ex-officio chairman of the board, and will be held in the governor's office.

Dr. Hill was dismissed June 18 for "insubordination, incompetency and neglect of duty." Strongly denying all charges, Hill the same day successfully petitioned the Montgomery Circuit Court for a restraining order against the state.

* * *

IN A ONE-HOUR hearing Friday, Judge Walter B. Jones ruled the state acted improperly in dismissing Hill without preferring written charges and giving him 10 days notice. Attorneys T. B. Hill, Jr. and James Carter represented the educator. Gov. Person's legal advisor, Atty. Billy McQueen, argued the state case.

Atty. Hill said it is a foregone conclusion that Dr. Hill would be fired, adding that Dr. Hill wanted the hearing "not to continue in office, but to clear his good name.

"Any hearing before the politically-dominated board would be a sham and delusion," he said heatedly. Dr. Hill, who has repeatedly said the state's charges against him are false, attended the Friday hearing but did not testify.

Hill was fired by a 10-1 vote. Charles G. Dobbins, Examiner editor-publisher, dissented.

Editor's solution—

Separate schools for boys, girls suggested for the South

Separate schools for boys and girls have been suggested as one way of solving school segregation problems by Dr. Clarence Poe of Raleigh, N. C., editor and chairman of the board of The Progressive Farmer.

Dr. Poe also proposed a "gradual adjustment" with the development of geographical lines or boundaries for each school district "as will locate in it the largest practicable number of pupils of one race."

IN AN EDITORIAL in the July issue of The Progressive Farmer, Dr. Poe asked: "Will it not impose the most dangerous strains on race relations in cases where young men of one race and young women of the other—both in the upper teenage brackets—are brought together under such new conditions?"

He said separation of boys and girls of high school would "probably help" in many cases.

It seems plainly inevitable that there will be a certain percentage of colored children in numerous Southern white schools, Dr. Poe said.

But, he asked, "Suppose our Southern people, white and colored, believe (1) that in most cases, under present conditions at least, separate schools are best for both races, and (2) that while segregation in public schools is no longer compulsory, neither is non-segregation compulsory; that it is not a legal requirement where neither race wants it.

"IN THAT CASE could not most white schools and most colored schools continue for awhile substantially as they are?"

About school geographical districts, Dr. Poe said further:

"If there are then several districts near together, one or two being predominantly white and one or two largely colored, then we see nothing in the present (Supreme Court) decision to prevent any Negro or white child being transferred (at his or his parents' request) to some other school, no matter whether the teacher and pupils there are (or are not) members of his own race."

Columnist predicts South will 'torture' segregation ruling

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., July 19—(AP)—A Birmingham newspaper columnist and the Southeastern regional secretary of the NAACP gave their views on the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling yesterday over a nationwide radio hookup.

In an eight-minute broadcast over NBC's two-hour "Week-End" program, News Director Starr Smith of Tuscaloosa's Station WJRD predicted the school segregation issue in the South may reach "desperation stages" within months.

He interviewed John Temple Graves, Birmingham newspaper columnist, and Mrs. Ruby Hurley of Birmingham, regional secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

GRAVES SAID the Supreme Court had "tortured" the Constitution while remaining "perfectly within the law."

And he said the South, "perfectly within the law, will torture the court's decision, taking advantage of every loophole and obstruction it can find."

On the other hand, Mrs. Hurley said "many efforts will be made to circumvent the court's decision but they will be lost. The law is binding."

IN HIS SUMMARY, Smith noted that the "struggle" has begun in the South—"quietly now but it may reach desperation stages before many months have passed.

"The NAACP has set September, 1955, as the deadline for ending all public school segregation under the court ruling, but some Southerners, even those of the most liberal persuasion, believe it will be much, much longer," Smith added.

to preserve the tradition of classroom separation. It's still his first choice and, he says, is gaining support among fellow members of the Legislature.

His newest approach, based on a "voluntary" placement of pupils in the public schools, will be offered only as an alternative, Engelhardt explained, as a fallback measure in case his private school program falls through.

Full Details Secret

The Macon County legislator, who, incidentally, is the son-in-law of the veteran, defeated Sen. J. M. Bonner of white supremacy fame, won't divulge all the details of his placement plan "because we don't want to tell everything we're doing at this time."

But basically, it would work something like this:

Placement boards would function in each school district throughout Alabama to assign students to classrooms by "voluntary choice" but, Engelhardt emphasized, "without prejudice as to race."

As a measuring stick, the board would consider these factors:

Individual student's aptitude, determined through a series of tests.

Educational background.

Whether the assignment of students to new schools would "break longstanding ties of friendship" with past associates, or put them in strange, "hostile surroundings."

Distance of the schools from the pupils' homes.

Home environment of the students.

Individual Relationship

tic action in mind if no other way can be found to circumvent the Supreme Court's ruling that classroom segregation is unconstitutional.

To Abolish School System

If it goes far enough, we are going to introduce a bill to abolish the public school system altogether," he warned. "That will automatically put us back to private schools."

The House member, whose county's population is 82 per cent Negro, argued that no matter what else is tried, "The ultimate answer is private schools, and a whole lot of people who were against us at first are coming around to that way of thinking."

Engelhardt submitted his "free private school" program to the legislature last year but it died in committee. It would have turned the schools over to corporations made of private citizens, with "grants" of state funds used to finance the operations.

Unsound And Unworkable Plans

Better use could the minds of some of our lawmakers be put than trying to devise ways to shift around the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court banning the segregated public school system.

State Rep. Sam Englehardt of Macon County has announced a set of ideas which he hopes would serve as plans to preserve the dual school system. Both appear to be unsound and unworkable to say nothing of their legal shoddiness. One of them, as he announced it, would permit "voluntary" assignment to classroom "by choice". This would create confusion and at the same time lead to the breakdown of the public school system.

The other is the so-called "free private school" system. This is a wacky suggestion reeking with a paradox. It is doubtful whether public funds could be used to finance such a dodge. It is a ridiculous suggestion in the face of the ruling of the Supreme Court that racially separate schools are unconstitutional.

What Dean Robert J. Farley of the University of Mississippi Law School pointed out to lawmakers of his city might be good counsel for Alabama solons. He said "Mississippi can't afford to pass laws to outsmart the Supreme Court of the United States."

He added: "Let's not sacrifice our own children to prevent an occasional Negro from going into a school."

Alabama needs enlightened and right-thinking leaders of goodwill and good sense to formulate ways of soundly meeting the challenge of de-segregating the public schools. Efforts to bypass the courts look no better than moves to defy and disrespect the highest court of the land. When this is done, democracy is done.

The dual school system is an undemocratic system of public education. It imposes a two-way hurt on its victims—Negro and white children. It violates our concept of democracy which guarantees to every one equal protection of the laws. It twinges the conscience of those with the ethical spirit. The Supreme Court has said as much and more. Good citizens can and will live with that decision in its implemented form.

We do not believe that the soundest thinkers among us would substitute the thinking of Mr. Englehardt for that of the members of the United States Supreme Court.

Contracts will be awarded for Negro school additions

The City Board of Education will award contracts tomorrow for additions to two Negro elementary schools here.

Added classrooms will accommodate about 215 more students at the Finley Avenue School, 135 Finley-av, w, and about 175 more at Norm Patterson School, 6446 Washington-blvd.

Bids on the two jobs were opened yesterday and taken under advisement by Dr. L. Frazer Banks, city schools superintendent. Seven construction firms vied for the contracts.

On the Finley-av school, bids ranged from $123,217 to $132,227. School officials said $175,000 had been set aside for both the building and new equipment.

To be added are seven classrooms, a combination auditorium-gymnasium, lunchroom and office.

At North Patterson, only three classrooms and a combination auditorium-gymnasium are planned. Allocated for the building and equipment was $65,000.

Bids for this job averaged about $50,000.

Dr. Banks is to have the base and alternate bids analyzed and present them at the education board meeting tomorrow.

Macon Legislator Works On Alternate Plan For Maintaing Separate Schools In State

By REX THOMAS

The outline of still another school segregation plan to sidestep the Supreme Court's decree was disclosed yesterday by one of Alabama's most outspoken champions of white supremacy.

State Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Negro-dominated Macon County began fitting the pieces together following a recent conference with Gov. James F. Byrnes in South Carolina. He didn't say, however, that the idea originated there.

Engelhardt hasn't surrendered his original recommendation for a "free private school" system

Although Engelhardt wouldn't discuss it, one thing he may have in mind is to break it down to an individual relationship so that protesting Negroes might have to show discrimination in each instance, a slow process.

The blunt-spoken legislator, who will be a member of the Senate in the next administration, also proposes to make state and local school board members, school principals and local school trustees all judicial officers like members of the county board of registrars.

That is designed to make them immune from suit for damages.

Engelhardt has even more dras-

Alabama politics—

Special legislative session discussed to meet school anti-segregation issue

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 7—There appears to be growing unrest among those who would like to see something done to prevent a breakdown of school segregation in Alabama because of seeming apathy on the part of those in authority.

Several states have taken action to combat the U. S. Supreme Court's May 17 anti-segregation decree. Whatever action is planned in Alabama appears to be largely in preliminary unpublicized stages.

SPARROW

The belief prevailing here among those in close touch with state affairs is that the best chance for the state to take positive action would be for the present governor to call the present Legislature into special session.

IF THE MATTER is carried over into the next administration, a new Legislature will be in power and the new governor's program will be in the making. That alone could be a bottleneck to retard passage of school segregation and other legislation.

And then, too, the next administration is expected to be much more "liberal" than the present administration.

Gov.-Nominee James E. Folsom did say during his campaign he was opposed to doing away with segregation in Alabama schools. But exactly how far he would go he feels about it is not clear.

Political football

COUPLED WITH the fact that whatever is being done is being worked out in subrosa fashion is the growing belief that the question of school segregation might become a political football.

After all, politicos do not always think the way the man in the street does. They think in terms of votes. And, because of the uncertainty of things connected with the segregation issue, some here are beginning to wonder if the present administration might not want to leave the problem to the next.

Could be issue later

EITHER WAY the issue is finally settled, this administration might not be criticized.

If matters were left up to the next administration and a workable plan was finally found there would be no criticism for either administration.

But if the next administration botched the job of finding an effective substitute for segregation, this failure could very easily become a convenient issue four years hence.

Persons masks feelings

SO FAR Gov. Persons is keeping his own personal feelings masked.

A few days ago when asked if he planned to call the Legislature into action, the governor replied by asking "What for?"

He then said he had said all along he would call a special session "if someone has a plan that will work." But he made it perfectly clear he does not believe anything proposed so far is sufficiently workable to justify a special session.

And he indicated that he fears the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling offers very little basis upon which to base hope that shrewd lawmakers might find a way to get around it.

These plans studied

TWO GROUPS are working to find a substitute for school segregation. They are the Legislative Council, a special joint legislative committee created especially to study the problem of segregation, and a special committee of the Alabama State Bar Assn.

So far, these plans reportedly have been considered:

1. Amending the law to give local school boards additional power to gerrymander.

2. Giving school boards and superintendents greater power to assign students to the various schools.

3. Giving school boards authority to maintain unsegregated schools for those wishing to attend them, and to maintain segregated schools for the other students.

Time running short

ANOTHER THING THAT'S causing anxiety as to whether the present Legislature will be given a chance to provide a solution to the segregation problem is that time is fast running out.

The present administration remains in office until Jan. 17, 1955. But the Legislature's tenure extends only to the day of the November general election.

In other words, this Legislature has less than three months to do something about segregation.

Gas tax interest

RECENTLY THIS column pointed out the difference between interest rates on gasoline tax anticipation warrants sold by Wilcox County—on competitive bids—and the same sort of securities sold by Calhoun County by private sale.

It was pointed out that on July 1, 1954, Wilcox County sold $100,000 in gas tax warrants due in from six months to 10 years at an advertised competitive public sale and at an interest rate of 1¾ per cent.

Calhoun County, it was reported, in May, 1954, sold $425,000 of the same sort of gas tax warrants due from six months to 10 years at an interest rate of 3 per cent. In that case Calhoun County declined to accept bids from others, but elected to sell the warrants to T. U. Crumpton & Company, Inc., of Birmingham.

Hard on the figures

AT THAT TIME, it was reported that due to the lack of information as to the schedule of retirement of the Calhoun County securities this column could not estimate exactly how much more the higher interest rate would cost Calhoun County.

Since then the information has become available.

Just how much more it will cost Calhoun County taxpayers to have to pay 3 per cent and how much less it would have cost if the warrants had been sold at the same interest rate Wilcox County received follows:

Amounts Retired		Difference Between 1¾ and 3 per cent
$40,000	One year	$ 500
40,000	Two years	1,000
40,000	Three years	1,500
40,000	Four years	2,000
40,000	Five years	2,500
40,000	Six years	3,000
40,000	Seven years	3,500
45,000	Eight years	4,500
50,000	Nine years	5,625
50,000	Ten years	6,250
Total approximate excess interest		$30,375

More to the story

BUT THAT'S not all the story.

Calhoun County also sold in May, 1954, $1,083,000 warrants due in from six months to 20 years at interest rates of 3 per cent, 3 per cent and 3¾ per cent. The estimated interest cost in excess of 1¾ per cent a year on these warrants during the time they are outstanding would be well over $125,000.

In other words, if the bill requiring sale of state, county and local securities strictly on a bid basis had not been vetoed, and if Calhoun had sold its warrants at the same 1¾ per cent received by Wilcox County on bids, it would have meant a savings on the two issues of about $150,000.

It is estimated, moreover, that a considerable amount of the $150,000 went into the pockets of the bond dealers.

St. Clair inquiry

THE ST. CLAIR County Grand Jury investigation of alleged vote frauds and corruption in connection with the recent Democratic primaries has been set for Aug. 16.

Circuit Judge Frank Embry, who served on the subcommittee which recently investigated vote frauds in Russell County, says the jury will be urged to leave no stone unturned in its search for the facts.

Draughon assured

AUBURN'S President Ralph Draughon announced the past week he had been assured that the Auburn School of Architecture would not lose its standing.

For some time it had been reported that the Auburn School, because of dissension and the loss of about half its staff of professors due to resignations and dismissals, faced possible loss of its standing or at least a period of probation.

Several months ago a three-member committee of the Alabama Chapter, American Institute of Architecture, checked into conditions and, among other things, recommended a change of deans.

Many changes

INSTEAD of changing deans, Dr. Draughon ordered Dean F. M. Orr "to correct the situation." The dean responded by firing the head professor in the school of architecture. He had already fired others and had lost others due to resignations.

In all, between six and eight professors were reported to have resigned or been dismissed.

During the past three months three professors have been obtained to succeed some of those who have left or are leaving.

Dr. Draughon said he was assured Auburn would retain its accredited status by Herbert Beckwith, professor at MIT, and president of the National Architectural Board, during a recent visit to Auburn.

Clear bill here

AFTER A CHECK, indications are that there was very little basis for the recent published report—reproduced in this column—indicating voting irregularities in Cullman County this year and two years ago. Further, it appears that Circuit Judge Walter B. Powell, of Decatur, and Circuit Solicitor George C. Johnson did not deny to anyone the right to come before the Cullman Grand Jury and give information concerning voting irregularities.

Solicitors lauded

AFTER SPENDING three days in Phenix City this week, this reporter is convinced that one of the very best jobs being done at Phenix City right now is the work of Sols. Johnson and Conrad Fowler.

Johnson, solicitor of the Eighth Circuit, and Fowler, of the 18th, are the ones dealing out the most misery to Phenix City's lawless band.

Not only are they giving many gamblers, racketeers and others their first real introduction to the law, but they are about to bring to the bar of justice several who have been guilty of murder, among other things.

Crime tied Phenix

UNTIL THE slaying of Atty. Gen. Nominee Patterson finally broke the underworld's stranglehold on the law enforcement agencies, it was in every respect true that Phenix City was a place where you could really "get away with murder."

With gangsters controlling the juries, the law enforcement agencies and all public offices, all that was necessary to prevent a criminal from having to face prosecution for a murder was to be sure a "friendly" Grand Jury handled the case.

In fact, it wasn't even necessary to control the entire Grand Jury. Only seven "right men" of the Grand Jury total of 18 could make it impossible to indict a man for murder.

Slayings unavenged

IN RECENT YEARS at least a dozen slayings have gone unavenged.

In one case, a man reportedly was shot to death "for resisting arrest" when actually he was said to have been sound asleep in a chair on his front porch at the time he was "resisting."

Another bizarre murder was the slaying of a man in a cemetery.

Heat on underworld

IT'S THE INTENTION of Sols. Johnson and Fowler to bring all the slayers to trial if evidence can possibly be found to convict them.

They have, in fact, just about got the entire Phenix City underworld from top to bottom completely flabbergasted as a result of the wholesale arrests for gambling, racketeering—and murder.

And it should be quite possible that, to remove this intense heat that has them sweltering, a lot of those fellows may soon be willing to tell investigators just what they want to know about the Patterson murder.

Guardsmen fearless

GEN. "CRACK" HANNA and his National Guardsmen, too, are turning in a record which shows them to be able, efficient and fearless.

Between the law and its might and the stern guardsmen with their guns, clubs and bayonets, the Phenix City thug has at last met his match. And overpowered and over-awed, he seems to be a rather puny fellow at that.

30,000 School Age Children In County, July Census Reveals

Montgomery County has about 30,000 school age children, it was revealed this week in the results of a school census taken last month.

By actual count the total is 28,287. However, officials say census enumerators probably overlooked some children.

White and Negro children between the ages of six and 20 were counted. Overall, white students or potential students totaled 16,287. Negroes counted were 12,782.

In the county only, Negroes outnumber whites. These figures were 5,538 Negro and 3,354 white.

The census was directed by the city-county school department.

School policy still: Separate, but equal

BY LYNN LILLISTON
News staff writer

Until the U. S. Supreme Court hands down instructions on how its school segregation ruling is to be carried out, school building—in Birmingham and Jefferson County is being done on a "separate, but equal" basis.

Supt. of City Schools L. Frazer Banks and Supt. of Jefferson County Schools L. F. Simmons said they are following the State Department of Education's instructions that no changes be made in school administration during the 1954-55 school term.

The State Dept. of Education decided that since the Supreme Court has given no final instructions for carrying out its decree, and since Alabama law provides for separate but equal school facilities, Alabama schools will be operated this year as always.

BOTH LOCAL boards of education are busy with tremendous building programs, planned long before the Supreme Court made its decision.

Negro school building constitutes a large part of both programs.

Now under construction by the City Board of Education is a new vocational high school for Negroes, financed with $600,000 from the F. W. Olin Foundation.

Underway are additions to these Negro schools: Center-st Elementary, $156,558; Alberta Shields elementary, $187,000; Finley-av elementary, $151,268 and North Patterson elementary, $73,170.

White additions on which contracts have been let are: Woodrow Wilson elementary, $103,000; Charles A. Brown elementary $187,000; Inglenook elementary $143,000; Gate City elementary $205,000 and Robinson elementary $35,000.

All this construction is being financed with $10,500,000 voted for schools in December as part of a $16 million city bond issue.

Scheduled for action by the board this week is further building, at West End High and McArthur elementary—white schools.

The $10,500,000 also will finance school equipment, buying of school sites, renovation and addition of heating and plumbing at certain schools.

JEFFERSON COUNTY Board of Education is in the midst of a $1½ million school building program financed by part of a $3 million warrant issue made possible by a five-mill tax recently passed by the county.

Included in that program are new Negro elementary schools at Red Ore and Mulga, and indoor toilet facilities at Piper Negro elementary school.

White buildings being done by the county include new high schools at Leeds and Oak Grove. A new elementary school is being built at Midfield.

Additions—classrooms, kitchens, cafeterias or gymnasiums — are being built at Warrior, Hueytown and Hewitt white high schools, Irondale junior high school and Warrior, McNeil, Bluff Park, McAdory, Rocky Ridge and Edgewood elementary schools.

Indoor toilet facilities are being added to Sayre and Mineral Springs white elementary schools.

Already completed with warrant funds are additions to Hewitt, Rocky Ridge and Vestavia elementary schools.

MORE BUILDING is being done on white schools by both school systems. However, white enrollment in city and county schools during 1953-54 was 67,206. Negro enrollment was 39,456.

City schools, with total enrollment of 61,821, had 7805 white high school students; 4685 Negro high school students; 27,998 white and 21,333 Negro elementary students.

County schools had 31,403 white and 13,438 Negro high school students; 7837 white and 4098 Negro elementary students.

White Radicals Lead Mixed-School Drive

Alabama Magazine

COMPLACENT hopes of most Alabamians for a "breathing spell" in the southwide desegregation struggle were dashed last week. In the Cradle of the Confederacy, only a few blocks from the Capitol's brass star where Jefferson Davis took office as secessionist president, the gauntlet of insistence on immediate race integration of public schools was flung down.

Herded by the radical son of radical Southern Farm & Home publisher Aubrey Williams Sr., 23 Negro children filed into brand-new William G. Harrison school and gave grim urgency to the demands of NAACP spokesmen that they be enrolled for classes there along with white children.

Refused admission by Principal Robert Anderson who calmly explained that they belonged in a different school district served by colored Abraham's Vineyard school, they trooped out again (after touring the glistening halls), trailed by parents who had obliged by making their youngsters exhibit A in setting up grounds for court action promptly announced by the group's white attorney, Nesbit Elmore.

UNQUESTIONABLY timed and staged as a key part of the national race-rousing effort to force mixed schools on the South as fast as possible, the incident served to remind school and government officials that playing a waiting game can bring serious trouble. It added impetus to the call for action by Gov. Persons on joint recommendations of state bar and legislature committees for keeping separate schools and bolstered Republican gubernatorial nominee Tom Abernethy's demand for a special legislative session.

It underlined the folly of thinking the powers behind the race-mingling drive, who already have seen the high court swing into their propaganda line, will fail to press any advantage or use any available means to break up the long-standing Southern tradition. If heeded it was a sufficient signal that on the desegregation side there would be no patient waiting even for the friendly jurists to implement their May edict (as expected this fall) with a procedure for peacefuly putting the ax to the color line.

THE role by Aubrey Williams Jr. in this deft dramatization of the issue was widely deplored but not surprising. Though claiming he just went along out of "friendly interest" and to see "democracy at work," his participation perfectly fitted the example of Aubrey Sr. in entertaining Negroes in his home and in banging incessantly at segregation in his southwide publication.

Young Aubrey's upbringing enabled him to feel right at home marching against Alabama's segregation-requiring constitution along with two NAACP "observers," Rev. Horace G. Bell and Rev. D. Jackson. His position demonstrated the bold disclosure of Birmingham's state NAACP president W. C. Patton that more such attempts will be made as the schools are "asked to conform with the [court's] decisions . . ."

For heavily-Negro Montgomery the public reaction was mild—confined to some telephone threats against Williams (and mistakenly against another Aubrey Williams listed in the telephone book). The new daily Examiner, which is printed in Williams' shop and smacks of a similar F. D. Rooseveltian philosophy, handled the story gingerly. But it was blazoned by the Alabama Journal ("mischievous, unkind, disturbing, unnecessary, exhibitionist, cruel") and Advertiser which, while not disliking Williams Sr. personally or severely blaming his son, felt forced to hand them the tag "incendiary."

Two Possibilities Are Pointed Up

Obvious Answer Is Abolishment, Birmingham Teacher Declares

BY GENE WORTSMAN
Post-Herald Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 8—Two state legislative committees and Gov. Gordon Persons scratched at the door of the public school segregation problem here today but admittedly haven't found the key yet.

A Birmingham public school teacher, James O. Ogle Jr., in a letter to the governor, however, suggested "abolish segregation."

Despite the difficulty in finding a starting point on the problem until the U. S. Supreme Court rules on whether or not school segregation may continue, the public officials said, it is best to keep studying it and keep an open mind.

Governor Persons and the legislators noted that the final answer to the problem may be found unexpectedly.

Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell, elected today as chairman of a special committee to work on segregation problems, said his committee wants to hear from "anyone in the whole country" who thinks he has the solution.

Two Possibilities Cited

Charles M. Cooper, director of Legislative Reference Service, pointed up two possibilities following a study made on what other states are doing.

If the high tribunal rules that the present "separate but equal" system is to remain, the question, then, said Mr. Cooper, is equalization of the white and Negro facilities. (This would take more than $200,000,000 in Alabama, the State Department of Education reported).

If the court decrees that segregation must be abolished, the question becomes "how to avoid the consequences of the ruling," Cooper stated.

Mr. Ogle, the school teacher, in his letter of Jan. 4 to the governor wrote:

". . . The hue and cry of too many of our more vocal elected officials is clouding somewhat the issue of segregation . . . Yet not one has come up with the most obvious and only right solution—unless, of course, we really do have different laws for different men—abolish segregation.

". . . Segregation," he added, "has been the Achilles heel in the armor of democracy too long . . . with mature and reasoned thinking, we can accomplish what we've always believed in — freedom, equality and liberty — and do it in a way which would strengthen the fiber of public education in Alabama and America."

This course is not the one the legislators and the governor think advisable.

"I think we're together on thinking that abolition of segregation in Alabama is unthinkable," said Tuscaloosa Sen. E. W. Skidmore, who presided at the session.

"All of us," Governor Persons declared, "will continue to work for what the people of Alabama insist on — that is complete segregation of the races."

Persons cautioned against calling a special session of the Legislature or abandoning the state's public school system.

"It's rather doubtful in my mind," he said, "if the tax money paid into the state treasury by both white and colored . . . could ever be separated again where anyone could say you take this school and you take that school.

"I just don't think the solutions which have been offered in other states will stand up for more than the time it will take to go to court."

On a special session, Persons explained:

"When any legislative body is under a highly emotional strain, you can and probably will get some very poor legislation therefrom. That is precisely the reason that I have tried to get the feeling of the public (and) the legislators themselves.

"I would not, under any condition, call a meeting of the Legislature until I am convinced that some good could come from it."

Should he feel that results could be obtained by that method, Persons said he would "have no hesitancy" in calling the special session.

The governor said that because replies still are arriving to his pre-Christmas request for answers to the problem, his report on the suggestions probably will not be made for another two weeks.

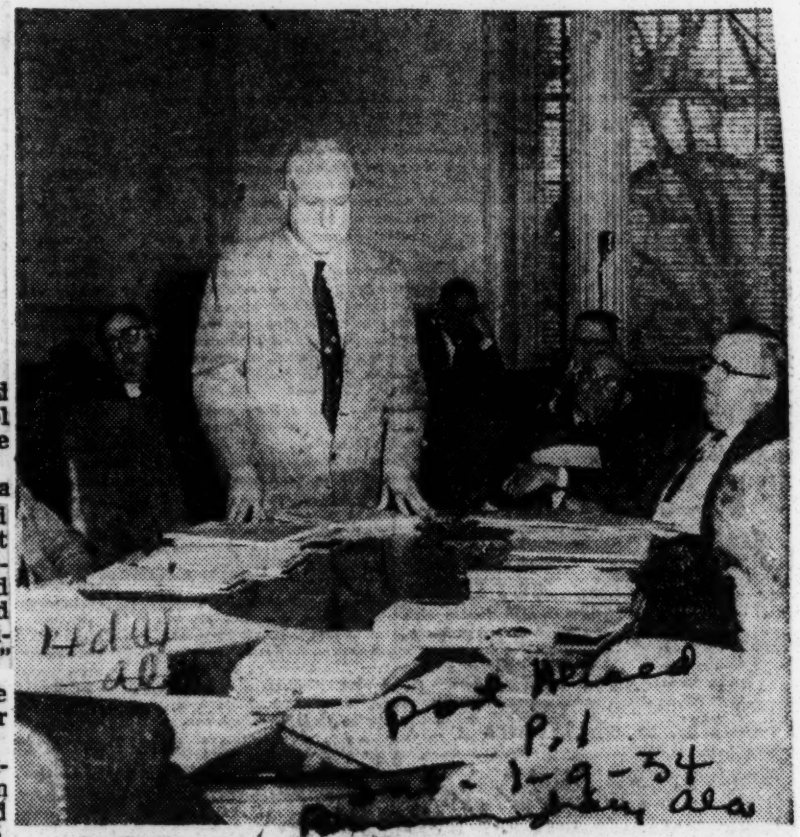
The two committees adopted a resolution by Jefferson Rep. Larry Dumas which read: "We favor complete segregation of the races in our public schools. We propose to continue our study of legal means of maintaining such segregation."

Senator Boutwell's committee said it will request the State Bar Assn., through President William Mitchell in Florence to assist in making legal studies.

"We're gathering all the material that is available to us," he said.

Persons interested in writing their solutions to the segregation problem can send the mail to Boutwell in the First National Bldg., Birmingham.

No further joint meetings were scheduled between the two committees, but members said such meetings will be held.



URGES CAUTION—Gov. Gordon Persons advised state legislators yesterday to think clearly but go slow on proposing solutions to public school segregation. Identifiable in the picture are, left to right, House Speaker Roberts Brown, Reps. Hugh Kaul and Ira Pruitt, Sen. Truman Reneau and Rep. W. L. Martin.

GOV. PERSONS ASKS STUDY OF SEGREGATION

A few days ago Gov. Gordon Persons sent personal letters to members of the press and radio commentators asking for their views and suggestions covering the problem which will confront Alabama in case the Supreme Court rules against segregation in the public schools.

His letter follows:

MONTGOMERY
December 18, 1953

Editor, The Herald
Union Springs, Alabama

Dear Sir:

The one thing which would most greatly affect us here in the South would be a breakdown of segregation in our public schools. A decision from the U. S. Supreme Court is expected in the near future.

The consequences of an unfavorable decision are, of course, unknown to any of us. What the decision itself will be is, of course, also unknown. However, it appears to me that perhaps the Court could decide along one of three general lines:

1. Rejection of the cases on the assumption that the Federal Government's jurisdiction lies only in the District of Columbia. This seems highly unlikely.

2. Complete abolition of segregation. To me this is unthinkable in view of the fact that the present system of "separate but equal facilities" was itself long ago established by the Supreme Court.

3. Continuation of the present system, but with a definite time limit in which to completely comply with the "separate but equal facilities."

Frankly, we all know it is impossible to arrive at any definite course of action until the Court's decision is received and studied.

We all know every city and county in Alabama has, for many years, been making an all-out effort to provide equal facilities. Some have accomplished this. Others are still in the process.

I wonder, therefore, if you will take the time to write me your views and suggestions covering the problems which will confront us in the event of a Supreme Court decision based on the possibilities of No. 2 or No. 3. I know you are busy but certainly none of us are so busy but what we can devote whatever time and thought is necessary to solve this problem. I feel that you will have a good idea as to how your own people will react.

No matter whether you are a Democrat, an Eisenhower-Democrat, a Republican, or whether you are pro or anti Truman, pro or anti Eisenhower, or pro or anti Persons, this problem is bigger than any of us.

Alabama must be prepared. Unfortunately, we do not know exactly what to prepare for. This makes it the more necessary that we, in the meantime, explore every possible solution so that we can be prepared for any eventuality.

Sincerely
Gordon Persons

Persons Plans No Special Session Call To Handle School Segregation Problem

Gov. Gordon Persons said yesterday he would not rush immediately to call a special legislative session if the Supreme Court hands down "an adverse decision" on the school segregation cases now before it.

"When any legislative body is under that kind of emotional strain," he said, "it can, and probably will, get poor legislation."

Instead, the governor said he would wait to call any special session "until I am convinced some good can come from it."

Addresses Legislative Groups

The chief executive was addressing a joint meeting of the Legislative Council and a special Senate-House segregation committee which included more than 50 legislators.

Governor Persons also made known his opposition to any known proposals whereby a private school system would replace the present Alabama public school system in the event that segregation is outlawed in the public schools.

Many lawyers have told him, he said, that it is quite unlikely that the Supreme Court would allow any state to spend tax money indirectly to segregate white and Negro students, if the court finds that it can't be used directly for that purpose.

"I don't think that solution would stand up except for the length of time it takes to go to court," he told the legislators.

He Studied Matter

He said he had studied the matter in other southern states, and none of them has come closer to a solution than Alabama, and some southern states were not so far advanced towards equal facilities as Alabama. From the best legal advice he had been able to obtain, including some important opinions from Washington, he thought it likely that the Supreme Court, whatever its decision, would give the states a time buffer in which to adjust themselves to new conditions whether segregation is knocked out, or an insistance on equal as well as separate facilities is made.

Until the court does hand down its opinion, Persons said, "I don't know what we can do except try and think out every eventuality."

He underlined the need legislators would have to think their way clearly and coolly through the problem, when it is presented, before coming to Montgomery to legislate, when he added:

"You will all want to think it out—not come to Montgomery with some half-baked plan."

Persons thought there was, in any event, considerable opposition in the state to any proposal for a private school system instead of the present public school system.

Soon after the governor had sat down, Legislative Reference Service Director Charles Cooper read a resolution telephoned him yesterday morning by veteran state Sen. Miller Bonner of Wilcox County, from his sick bed in Camden.

Bonner asked the joint committees to pass a resolution that Alabama schools "would stand immovable and forever on the cornerstone of complete segregation in the schools."

Bonner's son-in-law, Rep. Sam Engelhardt, Macon, seconded the motion, but other legislators, saying they were "sympathetic" to the wordage "in general" quickly batted it around, and then came up with a watered down version offered by Rep. Larry Dumas, Jefferson.

"We Favor Segregation"

The Dumas resolution said: "We favor complete segregation . . . and propose a continuing study of the available legal means of maintaining segregation in the schools."

The Bonner resolution was pigeon-holed for further study if and when there is another joint meeting of these two committees.

State Atty.-Gen. Si Garrett told the two groups that the states of Virginia and South Carolina had not been favorable to a proposal that Alabama should enter a separate brief in the cases involving them before the Supreme Court. He outlines their reasons given to him why these two states feared that such an intervention might do more harm than good.

Segregation Co-Operation Is Promised

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 22 (AP)—The Montgomery Advertiser quoted a prominent Negro leader tonight as saying "we will follow a line of moderate co-operation—not upheaval" if school segregation is knocked out by the U. S. Supreme Court.

In a copyrighted story by Assistant Manager Editor Fred Andersen, the newspaper quoted Thurgood Marshall, an attorney for the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, as saying:

"We fully expect to win something more than the so-called 'separate but equal' ruling which has created the present situation."

As to the promised spirit of co-operation, the Washington, D. C. attorney added that he would advise Southern Association (NAACP) presidents to proceed on a local level—on a "school-by-school basis."

The Advertiser quoted Marshall as saying he definitely expects a Supreme Court decision before the end of the current school year in May.

And when the court rules, the attorney said he expects to meet within 24 hours with presidents of 44 state NAACP associations either in New York or Washington to explain the meaning of the decision in laymen's terms.

Within a week he said the association's Southern presidents would meet probably in Atlanta where "it will be my responsibility to suggest to them a course of action."

As to the length of time needed to achieve integration of the races in the public schools if segregation is outlawed, Marshall told the newspaper "four or perhaps five years."

"Of course, you know and I know there are some sections of the [illegible] belt—some of them right here in Alabama—where the Supreme Court decision that we are legally right would have no effect for 30 years," the Negro attorney was quoted as saying, "but it must be gradual and it must be through cooperation at the local level."

Marshall evaluated the segregation feeling in Southern states this wey:

"West Virginia will be the easiest to fall in line. The other border states of Kentucky and Tennessee don't present much of a problem. Florida will be only moderately difficult. Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Georgia—they will be the diehards.

In Segregation Test Case—

Ruling To Equalize School System Would Relieve Educators

A Supreme Court decision modernizing the old separate-but-equal doctrine for public schools, no matter how costly, would bring welcome relief to the worried minds of Alabama education authorities.

The bill would run into millions of dollars, to be raised perhaps in a few hurried years, but the classroom segregation tradition of the South would remain undisturbed.

Even the abrupt equalization of white and Negro school facilities would be, after all, primarily a problem of revenue. Legislators and school authorities might disagree on best source of new tax money, but their objective would be clear and definite.

With segregation abolished — if the Supreme Court reached that conclusion — the question would be immeasurably more complicated. No Southern state has found the answer as yet.

Not Directly Involved

Neither decision would affect Alabama immediately because this state is not directly involved in the segregation appeals pending before the court. But the reaction would come swiftly, says State School Supt. W. J. Terry, when Negroes in the various communities begin court action on their own behalf.

If the Supreme Court draws a new formula for separate- but-equal schools, Dr. Terry said the initial presumption would be in Alabama that the facilities are equal until the Negroes take formal action alleging they are not.

Then, in each instance, the superintendent would be sued.

Some would-be officeholders claim they can qualify under the old oath merely because they supported the state Democratic ticket regardless of what they may have done in the presidential election, Gwin explained.

If that were true, Eisenhower Democrats who voted the Republican presidential ticket could still run in the Democratic primary. States Righters have long contended that the Alabama Democratic Party is an autonomous body separate from the national organization.

Whether Party Chairman Ben Ray, himself an outspoken national party loyalist, and the other committee leaders will go as far as Gwin suggests remains to be determined.

Repudiated National Ticket

McCorvey, former state party chairman and one of the 1948 electors who repudiated the national ticket, said "I certainly intend to object to" the readoption of the present loyalty path or any move to bolster it.

"What they want to do is make the Democratic committee an exclusive club for the benefit of that crowd who is willing to go along blindly with anything the national crowd dishes out," the veteran Mobile attorney charged.

"My idea is that anyone who voted for the nominees of the Democratic Party in Alabama should be allowed to run."

McCorvey said no plan of attack has been spelled out yet as far as he knows, but "I guess those fellows who feel like we do will get together" before the committee meeting.

Smyer, one of those instrumental in the formation of the States Rights ticket in 1948, conceded that "we are in the minority and they (the party regulars) probably can do anything they want to. They've got the votes."

But, he challenged, "I hope they make it as rotten as they can. I don't think the people of Alabama like that kind of thing."

Smyer guessed that one reason for Gwin's proposal is to keep Eisenhower Democrats from running for seats on the State Committee. Along with other federal, state, district and local offices, Democrats will elect a new 72-member committee this year.

Legislators to meet—

Way is sought if court bans segregation

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 4—(AP)—Two Alabama legislative groups meet here Friday to begin plotting on a course they hope will steer the state through the school segregation storm.

Hardly anyone believes Alabama will sail through the expected tempest without a lot of trouble. But the legislators hope to hit on a plan that will hold it to a minimum no matter how the Supreme Court rules.

Members of the legislative council and the Senate-House investigating committee organized to consider the school crisis will be given a report on how other Southern States plan to meet the unprecedented problem.

Charles M. Cooper, director of the state legislative reference service, will outline programs already on the books in other states and explain the changes in the Alabama education system should the high court outlaw separation of the races in classrooms.

Recommendations by the investigating committee, set up by the 1953 Legislature, will be given plenty of consideration if the Supreme Court knocks out segrega-

Official Finds Arson Evidence In Selma Negro Schools' Fires

SELMA, Ala., Sept. 28 (AP) — Two Negro schools destroyed by fire near here recently were deliberately touched off by a person or persons unknown, Deputy State Fire Marshal Tom Hall said today.

But Hall added no evidence has been found linking the incidents with reports the fires were started by someone dissatisfied with the school facilities maintained for Negro children in Dallas County.

A three-room school located about five or six miles southeast of Selma burned to the ground Sept. 19 and the Central School, a six-room structure, was destroyed by fire early Monday morning.

The deputy fire marshal said the latest fire was discovered by James Williamson, a white man who lives about 10 miles south of here but who works in Montgomery.

Williamson told Sheriff W. C. McCain he saw the flames as he was driving by the school on his way home. He said he tried to rouse Negro families living nearby to help fight the fire but none would respond.

He said the fire apparently had just started and could have been put out "with a few buckets of water."

Hall said Williamson reported he saw another car drive away from the schoolhouse but didn't get the tag number or recognize any of the occupants.

Williamson told the sheriff it "looked like" Negroes in the car but that he wasn't sure, Hall said.

Expanding School Needs

Dr. W. J. Terry, Alabama's superintendent of education, told a House subcommittee on education in Washington Friday that Alabama will need "about $345,000,000" to bring its schools up to date by 1960. He said that Alabama needs $307,000,000 to provide additonal school facilities for pupils presently enrolled, and another $37,000,000 to take care of the anticipated increase.

School leaders have a way of setting their sights high when they talk about needed revenue. The taxpayer, appalled at the astronomical figure, will then not feel so bad when he is able to settle for a lesser sum.

The need for continually increasing amounts for education has long existed, and has been presented and harped upon in rather monotonous fashion. An Alabamian remarked a while back that ever since he was a boy, three groups in this world had habitually been in desperate plight: The schools, the farmers and the Armenians. The Turks, he said, had finally killed off the Armenians—at any rate we don't hear from them any more as we used to. Roosevelt and war combined to relieve the farmers and remove them from the downtrodden category. But the schools are still with us, and asking for more.

That is all very true. But the inescapable fact is that more money for education is essential to provide what the people expect and demand. Education in this age of applied science is more than a matter of a classical background—it involves to an increasing degree the means of making a living.

There is mounting emphasis on the amount of formal education as a yardstick in job requirements and pay ranges. For example, countless rather commonplace jobs today require a high school education, where such a requirement was unknown not so many years ago.

This emphasis may be overdone—but it is there right on, and increasing, and Alabamians must be able to meet required standards if they are to compete.

The result has been an increased interest in education from a highly practical standpoint. Older Montgomerians can remember when the graduating classes from public high schools were numbered no more than the proverbial corporal's guard, compared with today.

Along with mounting school enrollment, building costs have greatly increased from depression days. School teachers must eat and have decent raiment, and they have to pay the same prices as the rest of us. It adds up to need for more school revenue, even though we may settle for less than we are told is required to provide 100% ideal conditions in our educationa setup.

Fires Leveling Negro Schools Called Arson

SELMA, Ala.—(ANP)—Fires which destroyed two Negro schools near here recently, were called arson by State Deputy Fire Marshal Tom Hall.

No evidence has been found to bear out reports the buildings were deliberately burned because of dissatisfaction with Negro school facilities in Dallas county.

Hall said the Central school, a six-room building, was set on fire early September 27 and a three-room school about six miles southeast of Selma, was burned September 19.

A white man, James Williamson, who lives 10 miles to the south of here, reportedly told Sheriff W. C. McCain he discovered the latest fire while driving home from Montgomery. He said he tried to arouse Negro families living nearby, but none would respond.

Williamson reported he saw an automobile drive away from the school. He was quoted by the deputy fire marshall as saying the occupants "looked like" Negroes, but that he could not be sure.

Folsom Pledges To Support Bond Issue Of $150 Million For New State Schools

JACKSONVILLE, Ala., Oct. 6 (AP)—Democratic Governor - nominee James E. Folsom today pledged his support to a 150-million-dollar bond issue for school construction in a talk at State Teachers College here.

Folsom gave his pledge after Dr. Austin F. Meadows, Democratic nominee for state school superintendent, proposed the bond issue in an address a few minutes before.

Meadows said the money for the bond issue could be paid back over a 30-year period "without burdening the state as a whole."

"You have heard Dr. Meadows. He will have my support," Folsom said.

The Democratic nominee said, "We'll take the Negro schools out of the barns and shotgun shacks and put them in buildings."

Plans for his program for the next administration and American foreign policy took a major part of his speech.

He said American foreign policy in late years has "aped the British" and has gotten us into two World Wars. Folsom reiterated his proposal of a "Monroe Doctrine for the world."

Meadows also advocated a $600-per-year pay increase for the state's teachers. He outlined the state's school construction needs. The bond issue he advocated would first have to be passed by the legislature and then be approved by a vote of the people.

WITH DEADLINE AT HAND—

Sykes says state won't file segregation briefs

BY CLANCY LAKE, News staff writer

PHENIX CITY, Ala., Sept. 15—Alabama will not file briefs before the United States Supreme Court on the segregation issue as "the only purpose of such briefs would be to help formulate decrees ordering the mixed attendance of white and colored in the public schools.

Acting Atty. Gen. Bernard F. Sykes announced that decision today. This is the deadline for states to indicate whether they intend to file additional arguments and briefs on the segregation cases before the U. S. Supreme Court.

In a formal statement issued here today, Sykes said "Alabama, by filing a brief in cases not arising within its own borders, in cases based on facts not the same as those in Alabama, may find itself either legally or morally bound by decrees requiring both white and colored pupils to attend the same public school."

THE ACTING ATTORNEY general, busy here for the past three months leading the probe into the murder of Albert L. Patterson, said four of the five members of an Alabama State Bar Assn. committee recommended that no briefs be filed by the state on the segregation issue.

But it withheld a mandate putting the decree into effect pending arguments on methods and timetables for carrying out integration.

The six notices received so far are routine forms, giving no indication of the stands the states will take when their briefs are filed.

The statement by Sykes is as follows:

"On May 17, 1954, in certain cases before it, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that separate public schools for white and colored pupils were illegal. The segregation of white and colored in public schools is said by the court to deprive Negro pupils of the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Neither the state of Alabama nor any of its agencies or citizens were parties in these cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. Alabama had no part whatsoever in these cases.

"THE SUPREME COURT of the United States has not yet rendered decrees ordering the admission of Negro pupils to white schools, but the court has stated that the attorneys general of certain states, including Alabama, will be permitted to file briefs a decree is issued. Such briefs are not to be submitted on the question of whether separate schools for the races are legal. This issue has already been decided. Such briefs must be submitted on the basis that separate schools are illegal.

"ATTORNEYS GENERAL are to be permitted only to file briefs on the questions of whether the decree is to be effective forthwith or in gradual stages and if effective gradually, which courts—the Supreme Court of the United States or lower courts—should prepare the decrees? Attorneys general must decide by Sept. 15, 1954, whether or not to file such briefs.

"It is the position of the attorney general's office that the State of Alabama must do all that is legally possible to maintain in Alabama entirely separate schools for white and colored pupils. In order to maintain entirely separate schools for white and colored, Alabama at this time should decline to file briefs in the United States Supreme Court, since the only purpose of such briefs would be to help formulate decrees ordering the mixed attendance of white and colored pupils in the public schools.

"The facts surrounding Alabama's separate schools for white and colored have not been presented to, and are not now before the United States Supreme Court.

"ALABAMA, by filing a brief in cases not arising within its own borders, in cases based on facts not the same as those in Alabama, may find itself either legally or morally bound by decrees requiring both white and colored pupils to attend the same public schools. Alabama should not be bound nor hazard the possibility of being bound by decrees rendered in response to matters arising in other states. The attorney general's office of Alabama, therefore, will not file briefs on this question at this time in the United States Supreme Court.

"In reaching this conclusion, this office has had the benefit of the recommendations of a five-member committee of outstanding lawyers appointed by the president of the Alabama State Bar Assn., four of whom recommended that no briefs be filed."

Florida, N. C., Okla. to take active part

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15—(AP)—Three Southern states told the Supreme Court today they want to take an active part in arguments on how to carry out its decision barring segregation in public schools.

The states, each of which has separate schools for whites and Negroes, are Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma.

Three others — Arkansas, Tennessee and Maryland — notified Court Clerk Harold B. Willey they wish to file briefs as "friends of the court." Willey said he had yet to learn whether their attorneys general plan to participate in the hearing.

The high court declared last May 17 segregation has no place in public schools.

Will file no briefs—Acting Atty. Gen. Bernard Sykes.

10-year plan for county schools is new goal

A 10-year plan for meeting future as well as current needs of this county's schools became the new goal today of the new county Citizens Advisory Committee for public schools.

A vote by the committee today to seek a 10-year estimate of county school needs included a recommendation for an estimate of the cost of bringing all of the county Negro schools up to a level with white schools.

This morning's vote amounted to a committee decision to shoulder the multiplied responsibility of coping with problems to come with the tremendous birth rate increase of the past several years.

In seconding the move for a 10-year study, Mrs. Joe Penick, county PTA Council president, stressed, "We have been faced with problems over and over again largely because we have been too short-sighted in the past."

Fairfield School Supt. G. Virgil Nunn called for the inclusion of the cost of equalizing Negro school facilities as "certainly a problem facing everyone of the county school superintendents."

LAUNCHING INTO its enlarged work realm, the committee asked Chairman George Rogers to name two special subcommittees—one to estimate immediate and long range school needs, and the second to study various methods of obtaining needed revenue increases.

THE COMMITTEE adjourned until Dec. 3 after receiving an inventory-type summary of the present Jefferson County school situation.

That study points up these major facts:

While the Birmingham school system is able to spend more money per child than any other system in the county, Birmingham's expenditure of $155.78 per child year falls $109.68 short of the national average of $265.46.

Average expenditure for the county's other four school systems: Tarrant, $155.82; Fairfield, $150.21; Bessemer, $147.64; Jefferson County, $136.49.

The second major fact brought out in the study emphasized the difference between teachers' salaries within the county, in comparison to national averages.

Average teachers' salaries in the nation as a whole for cities of 100,000 to 500,000 population is $3975. National average for cities of 30,000 to 100,000 is $3931.

Birmingham teachers average $3378.88; Jefferson County teachers, $3011.67; Tarrant teachers $2974.20; Bessemer teachers, $2870.97; Fairfield teachers, $2775.18.

With three possible solutions—

School committee tackles financial crisis

See: 34e(Ala) News Sun 12-19-54
WITH REAPPORTIONMENT HIGH ON FOLSOM'S PROGRAM, BLACK BELT AGAIN IN THE PICTURE

Born under a financial crisis, the Citizens Advisory Committee to the Public Schools was hard at work today trying to solve that crisis.

At its first meeting last night, the committe was told by Mrs. Amos Culp: "You are a broadly representative group, reflecting many viewpoints and interests.

"You must begin with the facts and base your recommendations on a continuing study.

"You have no ax to grind, and you are independent in thought and action. . . . It seems that the schools are always asking for money. They wouldn't need to do that if the public were aware of the situation.

"There is no reason for the Board of Education or the superintendent to come 'hat in hand' asking for more money."

MRS. CULP, asked by City Commission and the City Board of Education to appoint the steering committee's membership, presided until A. E. Brinson, National Cash Register Co. branch manager, was elected the committee's first head.

Dr. L. Frazer Banks, city school superintendent, explained school finances to the committee and said its study will result in either more money for city schools, a cut in teacher pay or limitation of services now being provided by the schools.

Commissioner Robert Lindbergh was unable to attend the meeting, Dr. Banks related, but he sent the committee this message: "It would be unthinkable to close the schools without a full term or to cut teachers' salaries."

THE PRESENT CRISIS was caused, Dr. Banks said, by an increase in enrollment, the necessity of hiring additional teachers to the amount of $20,000 and the fact that the Board of Education had to spend $38,000 in salary supplements for board employes who were not covered under a state Legislature bonus appropriation.

The board was operating with a $1 million "cushion" that is now nearly depleted by these extra expenditures of $58,450, Dr. Banks said.

With a budget of $8,046,209, the board estimates it will have a balance of $124,538 on hand at the end of this school year. "This is a very narrow margin for an $8 million budget," Dr. Banks told the committee. He said the board's monthly payroll is about $700,000.

DR. BANKS and Board Vice President William J. Christian explained that 87 per cent of every dollar spent by the board goes for salaries. In the present situation, teacher salaries still would have to be cut even if some operational services were cut.

The immediate need is about $750,000, Dr. Banks said. This would enable the board to sign teacher contracts for next September in May, and the board would be able to present a balanced budget to the State Department of Education on July 1, when it is due.

Birmingham schools would be "severely penalized" by the State Department of Education if the full school term were not carried out in 1954-55, Dr. Banks said, and graduates would not be recognized when trying to enter college. However, under the law, the school system cannot go into debt.

Mr. Christian stressed the teacher pay problem "has nothing whatever to do with the recent $10.5 million bond issue."

The bond issue, he said, will cover the school system's "immediate building needs" only.

THE COMMITTEE discussed local revenue sources in other cities and Dr. Banks announced he is making an intensive survey of revenue origins in other cities.

Mrs. Culp related that city commissioners feel they cannot levy additional school taxes without a public referendum. The earliest referendum, it was estimated, could be called within 20 days after the problem was put before the commission.

Possibly, a petition with 7500 names would have to be presented first, it was pointed out.

H. C. Sparks, a committee member, indicated that the last new local tax for schools was levied in 1924—30 years ago.

"We are operating on a horse and buggy school tax schedule," he declared.

OFFICERS ELECTED along with Chairman Brinson were Mrs. Claude Hearn, vice chairman, and Mrs. Buist Swaim, secretary.

Mr. Brinson said the committee probably will be divided into these subcommittees: Salary schedule, finance, teacher relations, business department, administration and coordinating.

He, Mrs. Swaim, Mrs. Culp and Mrs. Hearn were to meet today to discuss committee assignments.

School problems in their hands—Members of the Citizens Advisory Committee to the Public Schools are pictured at their first meeting. PTA Council President Mrs. Amos Culp (standing, right) outlined their mission.

Seated, left to right, H. C. Sparks, Mrs. John Martin, Miss Tena Barker, Mrs. Buist Swaim, Mrs. Gordon Goodall, Mrs. John Swindle, Mrs. Claude Hearn and John W. Frierson.

Standing, William J. Moore, A. E. Brinson, R. A. Groenendyke, Dr. L. Frazer Banks, Warren Atchison, R. F. Whitaker, William J. Christian, Harold Mayes, Edgar Keenon, Hugh Brown Jr. and Rabbi Milton I. Grafman. (Staff photo by Tony Falletta)

Education By Poison Label And Monkey Censorship—V

IT APPEARS that the educators of Alabama are finally taking arms against the state's foolish textbook branding act.

Appropriately, the first organized opposition to Act 888 is reported from Birmingham, home of the author of the bill, state Rep. James B. Morgan, and also home of the super-patriots who started the whole thing with their idiotic attack on the textbook, The Challenge Of Democracy.

In a meeting this week, the Birmingham Federation of Teachers denounced the act as "fantastic" and "absurd," which it is. The teachers noted, as we have previously, that the act would "virtually empty every school library in the state." A history teacher made the point that the act, if enforced, would all but eliminate her job, because you "can hardly teach European history without mentioning political science theories." A school librarian noted that to comply with the law would be clerically impossible.

DR. O. C. CARMICHAEL, president of the University of Alabama, is quoted by The Birmingham News as saying that he and other college presidents in the state have been conferring with attorneys about the act. "I have no comment now," Dr. Carmichael said, "but we have not been idle."

Presumably, out of it all will come some planned assault against the poison label law which has ridiculed this state in the eyes of the nation.

★

IT WOULD be an error, we believe, to assume that because it is virtually unworkable it is not dangerous. The spirit of the act must be repudiated. The act is a palpable evil so long as it remains on the books, even if Dr. Terry's orders —for city and county superintendents to commence immediately their branding operations—are not complied with because of the cost.

Even if there is no mass labeling in our public schools and colleges, the law invites invasion of cranks, busybodies, super-patriots and just plain jerks. It does this by deputizing every taxpayer as a Watch & Ward censor with the right of injunction against any book—any book at all — used in any of the schools and colleges of Alabama, if not properly branded.

Act 888, aimed at ghosts, is a flesh and blood peril to sound education in our public schools and academic freedom in our institutions of higher learning.

Will Alabama Have Textbooks?

Public resentment against the Morgan Textbook Act of 1953 (Bill 888) has been steadily rising for several weeks.

The Examiner opened the attack with an editorial on January 21st, and presented the issue verbally before the Alabama Press Association in convention here that same week. Since then effective blows have been struck by many papers including the Brewton Standard, the Lee County Bulletin at Auburn, and the Anniston Star. The Montgomery Advertiser has published a series of vigorous editorials pointing up the vicious and unworkable aspects of what may well be termed the "Communist Advertising Bill."

At last the bill's sponsor, Representative J. B. Morgan, of Jefferson, has publicly admitted that his bill may need "amending." Later, however, he complained that his bill had been misinterpreted, and that the "intent" of the Legislature was not being carried out.

Mr. Morgan's outcry is understandable. In his zeal to please the thought-control element — the same crowd that started out last year to censor Alabama's textbooks, and to whom the State Board of Education regrettably yielded—he has saddled Alabama with a law called by the respected Saturday Review "the worst in America."

This law is badly written, vaguely phrased, and generally regarded by school leaders and lawyers, too, as unworkable. The law was passed in the final frenzy of the last Legislature, and many members admit they did not know what they were voting for. The entire business should remind Alabamians that eternal vigilance is the price of freedom. In this instance, newspapers and school leaders as well were asleep at the switch. Unless there can be some prompt solution, Alabama children may lack textbooks this fall.

Alabama Youth For Segregation

Editor, The Advertiser:

I noted with great interest the excellent manner in which The Advertiser gave news coverage to the recent Youth Legislature. Let me commend you and your paper for this.

However, in your article in Sunday's edition by Irving Fang a tremendous error was committed. In discussing our actions on the question of segregation in the schools it was reported that:

"... a House resolution to put the Youth Legislature publicly in favor of maintaining segregation failed after bitter argument."

It is true that the argument was bitter, but the resolution was passed. (It did not fail). The fact that it passed was reported on page one of your Saturday edition in an article by the same correspondent. In that article it was also reported that a move was underway to have the vote reconsidered. Much effort by the opponents of House Resolution 1 was put forth to have it reconsidered. Their efforts were a miserable failure as were their frantic cries against the resolution during debate. At the final adjournment on Saturday they were still mourning of the fact that the sixth Youth Legislature was dominated and controlled by loyal Southerners.

House Resolution No. 1, which I introduced, was passed, and the young people of Alabama are on record for "all interested and concerned" to see that we favor our present segregation system. If the resolution is not enough to convice, a look should be taken at Senate Bill 31 by Bobby Wood of Tuscaloosa which sets up a board of placement to be used upon the direction of the state board of education for each school district. This proposal which would give us an alternative setup was passed overwhelmingly by both houses of the Youth Legislature.

LEONARD R. WILSON,
Member H. of R., Sixth Youth Legislature.
Selma, Ala.

THE CRISES IN EDUCATION

Do you know where the money which goes into the Alabama Special Educational Trust Fund comes from? Here are the figuress (1952-'53 estimate):

Coal tonnage	$120.000
Express Company	14,000
Hydro-Electric	550,000
Iron Ore tonnage	186,000
Pullman Company	20,000
Railroad Gross Receipts	50,000
Sales Tax x	52,189,000
Store Licensses	63,000
Telephone Companies	750,000
Tobacco	7,804,,000
Usse Tax	3,900,000
Inc. Tax Investment	325,000
General Fund	1,000,000
Miscellaneous	12,077
Income Tax	12,644,250

Where this money goes:

Public Schools	$60,567,900
Colleges	11,010,144
Retirement	5,326,217
Other Ed. Services	2,533,,250
Trade Schools	649,400

We spent 54.58% of the total state fund for education.

5 Ala. cities file petitions

Integration fight to be continued

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (ANP) — The Alabama branch NAACP indicated recently that it intends to continue the fight for desegregation in the state's public schools. Five cities have filed desegration petitions through the NAACP against school boards of education.

They are Fairfield, Brewton Montgomery (state capitol) Roanoke and Anniston. Fair a larger colored population than white. Meanwhile W. C. Patton, president of the Alabama NAACP who made the announcement, said he expects two other branches to file petitions.

Dr. L. Frazer Banks, superintendent of public schools, threw some light on the subject in a speech before the Birmingham Protestant Ministers' association. He said:

MOST [illegible] of fairly good size have the same kind of situation we do. White elementary schools are located near the center of population of white residential areas, and colored elementary schools are near the center of population in colored centers.

"Making separate school districts for each individual school should not make any great shift in school enrollment, where there is enough room for all of the children."

In another section, two other organizations are reported working with the NAACP in the matter. They are the Southern Regional council with headquarters in Atlanta; and the Southern Conference Educational fund. The latter has headquarters in New Orleans.

AEA group hears expert—

Years needed to equalize white, Negro schools

BY LYNN LILLISTON
News staff writer

It would take Southern schools 15 to 20 years to bring Negro schools up to white standards, a prominent educator said here yesterday.

Speaking before an AEA meeting of Alabama Secondary School Principals, Dr. Truman Pierce said that "We are living out an inevitable process of change" in regard to segregation.

Dr. Pierce, who is director of Peabody College's Southern States Cooperative program, added: "Segregation and public education are but one aspect of a much broader cultural problem."

SEGREGATION, HE SAID, is "an emotional rather than a technical problem." Dr. Pierce urged the principals "to try to better understand the minority viewpoint."

Two races sharing the same community have many things in common, he said, and the problem of segregation in schools must be faced by each individual school district.

"There is no one solution to the problem," Dr. Pierce said. "Each school district has its own unique aspect."

HE NOTED THAT drastic changes never come about suddenly.

"Progress usually is quite slow," Dr. Pierce said, "and progress sometimes is 'dislocated' by uneven development; uneven growth."

Although Negro school building has not kept pace with white schools, the differential between pay of white and Negro teachers "has been wiped out" and in several Southern states Negro teachers have a higher average of years in college than white teachers.

IN 1942, DR. PIERCE SAID, Negro teachers had six-and-a-half more pupils apiece than white teachers. But in 1952 that figure had been lowered to only two more pupils than white teachers.

"So you see," he said, "if we are concerned with expansion, we can't look at any one item alone. Progress is being made."

EARLIER, the secondary principals heard a panel discussion of "Our High School Students' Future in College.

They found that main handicaps faced by Alabama high school students entering college are: Poor basic math and English preparation, poor self discipline, bad study and reading habits.

They were advised to place greater emphasis on these factors, on special testing and teaching how to use the high school library.

Visitation days when colleges are hosts to high school students as prospective college students are proving most helpful, it was brought out.

White Alabama Teacher Who Would Abolish Segregation Quits Teaching

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 27 (Special) — A Jefferson County white school teacher who suggested that Alabama "abolish segregation" should the U. S. Supreme Court rule against Jim Crow schools reportedly handed in his resignation.

Back in January when Gov. Gordon Persons was asking for ideas on how to handle the controversial school issue pending before the highest tribunal in the land, James O. Ogle, Jr., history teacher at Shades Valley High School, suggested abolition of segregation in a letter to the Governor setting forth his views on the school issue.

News stories based upon his letter were widely circulated January 8, and thereafter.

Mr. Ogle, according to reports, has given up his teaching job to enter private business. He advocated steps by which Alabama could live with a Supreme Court decision banning dual schools.

API executive deplores school situation in state

BY LYNN LILLISTON
News staff writer

Alabama is spending less than half the national average of money for its elementary and secondary school children.

Only one state—Mississippi—spends less than Alabama.

It would take $39 million annually even to raise Alabama's educational system to that of North Carolina, not a leading state in education."

To raise the average Alabama teacher's salary to that of a teacher in Louisiana or North Carolina, an increase of $14 million annually would be required.

Alabama school plants are in "deplorable" conditions. To raise them to "even reasonable" standards, $300 million would be needed.

THIS REPORT was made today by Dr. David M. Mullins, executive vice president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, as Alabama Education Assn. officials met with more than 100 business and industrial leaders from all over the state to thresh out Alabama school finance problems.

Dr. Mullins noted that Alabama public schools can expect 74,000 more children by 1960 and said:

"Unless steps are taken to correct this situation (the financial crisis facing public eduction) it is bound to grow much worse because of increasing enrollments."

Under the present setup, Dr. Mullins said, the 74,000 additional children will cost the state $8 million more than is now being spent annually. This does not include the 3000 new teachers and the 3000 new classrooms that will be needed, he indicated.

AS FOR ALABAMA colleges, Dr. Mullins declared:

"Only one state—Mississippi—has a smaller percentage of its youth in college than does Alabama. Furthermore, Alabama has fewer colleges graduates in its adult population than any state except one—Arkansas."

And 50 per cent of Alabamians taking graduate study are taking it outside of the state, Dr. Mullins said.

ALABAMA TEACHERS handle a larger number of pupils per teacher than teachers in any other state, the college official said. Yet they are handicapped greatly by "low salaries, inadequate physical plants and a shortage of instructional materials."

Regarding the segregation decision now pending before the Supreme Court, Dr. Mullins said: "Regardless of what the decision may be, there will be serious financial repercussions for the schools and colleges of the state."

DR. MULLINS CALLED for increased support for schools, both at the local and state level, and suggested a public information program to bring home "the seriousness. . . of the financial crisis facing public education in Alabama."

Florence State Teachers College President E. B. Norton outlined ways in which public education in Alabama is financed.

"It is to forthcoming governors and legislators that we must look for continuing and accelerating educational progress and the improvement of our public schools," Dr. Norton declared. "And it is to us, the people, that they, our representatives, must look for a clear mandate for better schools."

UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA President O. C. Carmichael traced the development of education in America and noted:

"The wants of society are measured by the educational status of that society. Primitive hut dwellers are not consumers of goods and services. High living standards and education go together."

He said many of the nation's great technical and medical discoveries originated in universities and said: "I cannot think what the state of Alabama would be if Alabama Polytechnic Institute did not exist."

As for vocational education, Dr. Carmichael said: "It is the center of economic well-being and has contributed more to the progress of industry than we are wont to think."

VIRGIL NUNN, immediate past Alabama Education Assn. president, who welcomed the business men, said:

"We are not here to indoctrinate anybody. We are not asking you to commit yourselves to additional appropriations for education. We are here to discuss our problems and to listen to your opinions of the role that education is playing in Alabama."

ALABAMA POWER CO. President Lewis M. Smith noted a "deep and nationwide concern over education" and praised Alabama schools as "doing a great job considering the insufficiency of their funds and facilities, shortage of teachers, heavy teaching load and the downright indifference of so many citizens."

As for Alabama's low standing in education, Mr. Smith said: "We Alabama economy, Mr. Smith said, want the nation to know that we is causing business men to "look are ashamed of our standing to education for a continuing supamong the states in the matter of ply of trained personnel."

education." Mr. Smith called for "a coura-

Progress is being made in this geous response" to Alabama edu-regard and as Alabama continues cation's "present dilemma" and to grow industrially, "the entire nation is coming to know that Alabama welcomes industry and that our great state is a good place to work and live," Mr. Smith said.

"The continuing expansion of Education Report Comparing States Again Shows Alabama Near Bottom

BY JAMES DANIEL
Post-Herald Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 6—Another National Education Assn. report is out comparing the states in educational opportunities, and Alabama again is near the bottom of most lists.

For example, the U. S. adult population (25 years old or older) median number of years of schooling is 9.3 years.

This means that there are just as many adults with more than 9.3 years of education as there are with less than 9.3 years.

The median for Alabama is 7.9 years. Alabama and North Carolina tie for fourth place from the bottom.

Throughout the U. S. the percentage of adults with less than five years of schooling is 11 per cent.

In Alabama it is 22.6 per cent. North Carolina has 21.1 per cent, which leaves Alabama holding the spot fifth from the bottom with no company.

Only Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana come after Alabama. Louisiana has 28.7 per cent of her people in this least-educated group.

Six per cent of adult Americans have four years or more of college. It is 3.6 per cent of adult Alabamians. Only Arkansas has fewer college graduates.

Fourth From Last

Take another test. In the first year after Korea there were large numbers of draftees rejected for failing the mental-educational test. The national percentage was 16.4 per cent. Alabama has 39.2 per cent rejections—fourth from the bottom.

Average teacher pay in the nation is $3605. In Alabama it is $2610. This is fifth from the bottom. Mississippi is at the bottom, with $1741.

Alabama is the undisputed bottom state in average number of pupils per teacher. The average in Alabama is 30.6 pupils. Nationally the teacher "load" is 24.1 pupils.

Authors of the report theorize that there is a connection between the number of school children and the number of wage earning adults. In other words, bigger families and lots of kids make more of a demand on tax resources.

Nationally, there are 403 school-age children per 1000 wage-earning adults. The "best" ratio is New York State, which has 305 children per 1000 wage-earning adults. Alabama is fourth from the bottom, with 578 school-age children per 1000 wage-earning adults.

The explanation that a high population of children is related to low educational opportunities doesn't always hold. For example, Utah has 568 children per 1000 wage-earning adults, giving Utah the sixth "worst" ration. But the average number of years of schooling completed by Utah adults is 12 years, tops in the nation.

Alabama's Schools May Be Improved

BY JANE ALDRIDGE

Businessmen and school officials from all over Alabama got together here yesterday for what may turn out to be a "history making—if unpleasant"—look at Alabama's public schools.

History-making, because they didn't like what they saw.

And also because, perhaps, the groundwork was laid for bringing about conditions which will make both the educators and the businessmen generally proud of Alabama's public schools.

For yesterday, those 100 or more business leaders and school men learned how really far behind Alabama's school system is in many important ways.

They heard from David W. Mullins, executive vice president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, for example, how Alabama is spending less than half as much per child for education as is the nation as a whole.

They heard how we rank 47th in the states in our expenditure for education. Only Mississippi lags behind us.

They heard how our teachers receive an average of only $2705 annually; $975 less than they would receive in Florida; $608 less than Louisiana; $575 less than in North Carolina.

Schools Outmoded

They heard how our school plants are in "deplorable" condition, so outmoded and inadequate that to bring them up to "a reasonable standard" would require $300,000,000.

Here again, Alabama was 47th in the list. It has invested in its schools approximately $142 per pupil. One state has less. The average for the nation is $454.

And they heard how the condition was inevitably going to become worse, with steadily increasing enrollments on the one hand and a steadily declining supply of new teachers on the other—unless something is done about the situation.

But that is where the bright spot came in.

For it is hoped this meeting yesterday—called by Alabama Education Assn.—will be the opening wedge in a campaign to really do something to change these conditions and give Alabama a school system of which both educators and businessmen can be truly proud.

"I believe that is what is going to happen" summed up Dr. J. W. Letson, superintendent of schools in Bessemer and the final speaker on the program. "And that's why I feel that maybe today will turn out to be a historic day for us."

Believe In Education

"The citizens of Alabama," he said, "have demonstrated time and again that they do believe in education. They believe in it and they want it for their children. I feel we will solve our problem to the degree we succeed in bringing parents and citizens into our schools to help formulate our plans and policies."

A spokesman for "the citizens," James L. Rankin, former president of the State Chamber of Commerce, felt the same way.

"Return home," he told the businessmen, "and organize local citizens committees on education. Promote and work for better schools in your own communities and for the state as a whole."

"Let's analyze our resources," he declared, "and let's all assume our fair share of responsibility. Education is an Investment in people. It is important to each one of us whether we have children or not."

Y Legislators Study Question Of Segregation

By IRVING FANG

The Youth Legislature settled down to business at the Capitol yesterday and considered many important political and social questions facing the state, including the issue of school segregation.

The high school boys and girls in the YMCA model legislature, coming here from all corners of the state and even from Mississippi and Florida, figure that if they pass laws year after year the Alabama legislature may pass some of them for real.

While several of the measures such as putting women on juries were passed in a few minutes with no debate, others were debated hotly.

Segregation Issue

Three of these concerned the question of segregation in schools, something very close to these Southern students.

A House of Representatives resolution, putting the Youth Legislature publicly in favor of continuing segregation in schools, was bitterly argued pro and con.

Submitted by Leonard R. Wilson of Selma, it was passed by a vote of 56 to 50, but a move was being made to have the vote reconsidered.

If it passes, copies of it will be sent to Gov. Gordon Persons, the chairman of the legislative committee studying the matter and to all newspapers published in cities represented at the Youth Legislature.

At the same time a bill was introduced into the Senate providing a method for maintaining segregation in the public schools. It was introduced by Bobby Woods of Tuscaloosa.

Fiercely debated for more than an hour, the measure was passed, 39 to 10.

Beverly Bach of Montgomery submitted a bill to the House of Representatives to allow Negroes to attend post graduate schools in the state.

After another fierce debate and to the accompaniment of scattered applause from the gallery and the chamber, the measure was passed, 77 to 20.

Bill Procedure

Today all the bills passed by the House go to the Senate for a vote, and all the bills passed in the Senate are sent across the hall to the House.

This afternoon those bills passed by both houses go to newly-elected Gov. Nowlin Keener for consideration. If he vetoes any, they will be returned to one of the chambers for reconsideration.

The entire process follows in a general manner the actual legislating of bills, stripped to its bare essentials.

Tonight, beginning at 6, there will be a banquet at the Whitley Hotel. At 8:30 p.m. the three-day session, attended by some 450 high school students selected by their Hi-Y and Tri-Hi-Y clubs, will come to a close with a Governor's Ball in the City Auditorium.

The students arrived at the Capitol for a work session as early as 7:30 a.m. yesterday when the standing committees got together. Facing them were some 120 bills.

Each of the committees chose the three bills they felt were the most interesting to the entire group and, possibly, would bring forth the most debate. This lasted about three hours.

At noon the rules committee met and decided the order in which the bills would be considered. Those bills the legislature will not have time to consider will be dropped.

The entire afternoon and evening was spent presenting, debating and voting on the bills brought up. Those who were not delegates—the alternate delegates, officers, pages, reporters and visitors, listened from seats in the gallery or chamber.

Bills Argued

The House defeated, by a vote of 72 to 34, a bill to amend the Constitution, redistricting the representatives from each county.

It passed, by a vote of 96 to 2, a bill to amend the requirements for candidates in state primaries.

It passed, by a vote of 97 to 2, a bill to regulate state purchases and those making the purchases.

It passed, by a vote of 75 to 13, a bill to keep Communist books out of the school system.

The Senate defeated, by a vote of 26 to 14, a bill to abolish the death sentence.

It passed, by a vote of 38 to 8, a bill to allow women to serve on juries.

It passed, by a vote of 45 to 5, a bill providing for a "clip-on" date to change the year of all motor vehicle license tags, instead of making a new tag.

It passed, by a vote of 41 to 4, a bill allowing the state to add $4 million to the state's debt limit to improve mental hospital facilities.

It passed, by a vote of 39 to 3, a bil to prevent changing the status, duties or salaries of elected officials during their term of office.

BIRMINGHAM WRITER DISCLOSES ALABAMA NEGROES ORGANIZING TO PRESERVE SEGREGATION

Two Kilby Prisoners Said to Be Heading Movement to Escape From Freedom

SLICK ALECKS SEEK TO FOOL WHITE FOLK

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (ANP) — The Birmingham News published a story last week under the by-line of Martin Waldron that a group of Negroes are organizing a group to promote segregation.

The story named Samuel H. Moore as president of the group who served a term in Kilby prison for grand larceny and false pretenses, and Walter H. Johnson who served a term for the same offense, is said to be the chairman of the board.

According to the story written by Waldron, a flat denial was made that the whole proposal is a confidence game. I. W. Chambers, secretary-treasurer of the group, is credited with this statement.

Waldron quoted Chambers as saying: "If I had a copy of the by-laws and the charter, I could tell you what the aims are."

Chambers is also quoted as having said he and other members believe that Negroes are making more and better progress under segregation than they would under non-segregation and mentioned several elected officials of Jefferson county and in Birmingham who have given letters of recommendations endorsing the society's leaders and the segregation plan.

The Birmingham News reporter, Waldron, said in his story that City Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh admitted writing a letter of recommendation, but refused to give the organization permission to solicit funds.

The story in the News said that in a letter Moore said, in part, "Our organization and its members do not condone integration of white and Negro children in public schools here in this state. To try to force this would create such a situation that would only cause a re-kindling of race hatred which would set our people back 25 years or more . . . Outsiders are misleading our people and misinforming them by telling them they can change the picture or situation overnight . . . Interference from the outside which comes from trouble makers and agitators is the only thing that handicaps the southern Negro. We have found that if Negroes improve themselves and stay decent they will receive the consideration that any citizen is entitled to . . . The situation is of such a nature that we need no advice or information from no persons who reside beyond the borders of this state and none from persons in this state who act as agents for these agitators."

The police are making an investigation of the organization.

Attistant Police Chief G. L. Pattie said that so far no complaints had been registered against the organization but two of its officers, Moore and Johnson have prison records for grand larceny and false pretenses, Waldron's story said.

The news of the formation of the socalled Southern Negro Improvement Association of Alabama reached Columnist John Temple Graves who made this comment:

"Many southern Negroes, probably more than a majority, are unhappy at the prospect of mixed schools and see in them a setback, not an advance, for their race. But they, as well as the white people who feel that same way, need to beware of exploitation now.

"You would think the game too familiar and contemptable to succeed but apparently it still works. Negro individuals or socalled organizations pretending to "take the white man's side" when the only side they really take is one for money in their pockets—still are able to wheedle money from otherwise intelligent white and colored people."

Segregation Advocates To Be Probed In Ala.

BIRMINGHAM. Ala. —(ANP) —The Birmingham News published a story last week under the by-line of Martin Waldren that a group of Negroes are organizing a group to promote segregation.

The story named Samuel H. Moore as president of th group who served a term in Kilby prison for grand larceny and false pretenses, and Walter H. Johnson who served a term for the same offense, is said to be the chairman of the board.

According to the story written by Waldron, a flat denial was made that the whole proposal is a confidence game. I. W. Chambers, secretary-treasurer of the group, is credited with this statement.

Waldron quoted Chambers as saying: "If I had a copy of the by-laws and the charter, I could tell you what the aims are."

Chambers is also quoted as having said he and other members believe that Negroes are making more and better progress under segregation than they would under non-segregation and mentioned several elected officials of Jefferson county and in Birmingham who have given letters of recommendations endorsing the society's leaders and the segregation plan.

The Birmingham News reporter, Waldron, said in his story that City Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh admitted writing a letter of recommendation, but refused to give the organization permission to solicit funds.

The story in the News said that in a letter Moore said, in part, "Our organization and its members do not condone integration of white and Negro children in public schools here in this state. To try to force this would create such a situation that would only cause a re-kindling of race hatred which would set our people back 25 years or more. . . Outsiders are misleading our people and misinforming them by telling them they can change the picture or situation overnight. . . Interference from the outside which comes from trouble makers and agitators is the only thing that handicaps the southern Negro. We have found that if Negroes improve themselves and stay decent . . .they will receive the consideration that any citizen is entitled to. . .The situation is of such a nature that we need no advice or information from no persons who reside beyond the borders of this state and none from persons in this state who act as agents for these agitators."

The police are making an investigation of the organization.

Asst. Police Chief G. L. Pattie said that so far no complaints had been registered against the organization but two of its officers, Moore and Johnson have

Birmingham Cops Probe Pro-Segregation Group

BIRMINGHAM — Birmingham police are in the understandably embarrassing position of having to investigate and possibly wipe-out a Negro organization "dedicated to continuing segregation."

White segregationists were overjoyed when they first got word of the organization. Now they aren't so happy.

Heading the group, The Southern Negro Improvement association of Alabama, are two ex-convicts, both of them confidence men.

President of the group is Samuel H. Moore, who has served time in Kilby prison for larceny and false pretenses. Walter W. Johnson, who has served time in prison for the same offense, is chairman of the board.

The group has aimed its policies directly at the pocketbooks of white pro-segregationists and claims that Negroes fare better in the South under segregation.

City Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh dealt the organization its first setback when he refused them a permit to solicit funds. Shortly after that Asst. Chief of Police G. L. Pattie announced an investigation of the group is underway.

He said Johnson is "a police character who has been sentenced to prison several times."

An Alleged former newspaperman, I. W. Chambers, is secretary-treasurer of the association. Chambers has denied the organization is a confidence game.

He said several elected officials in Jefferson county and Birmingham have given the group letters of recommendation, endorsing the leaders and the segregation plan.

To get around the lack of a permit for solicitations, the group has designed a membership card to be given in return for donations.

According to Moore, "Our organization and its members do not condone the integration of white schools here in this state."

He added, "Such a situation. . . would only cause a re-kindling of race hatred which would set our people back 25 years or more."

He said opponents of segregation are outsiders who are misleading Negroes in the South.

The association plans to expound its cause in "give-away" newspaper.

Headquarters of the organization is a nightclub on Fourth ave., N.

The Phoenix Experiment

If Dr. Harold L. Gear did no more, while in Oklahoma City, than tell the Oklahoma City school board about the experiences of the Phoenix board of education with desegregation, his visit here is extremely valuable and helpful. What Dr. Gear has to say deals with example rather than precept and humanity is always more inclined to listen to an experience rather than to contemplate under an uncharted experiment.

Dr. Gear comes from a community where integration is practiced daily and is in its second year of operation, and out of this period Dr. Gear is already prepared to tell of errors made in beginning the operation. For instance, the Arizonan says they started off not realizing the spirit of the Phoenix black man was below the level of white liberalism, so that when the school board left it optional as to whether Negroes would go to white rather than to the old Carver school, only about twenty-five per cent voluntarily accepted integration.

This year the entire arrangement was changed. The school board closed the Negro school and made the Carver building a stock room or supply house for the Phoenix school system. A general order was issued that every child in Phoenix should attend the school nearest his home. The Negro parents and their children had no election. This order completely integrated the school children of the city.

Tucson Negro Heads Integrated School

Mr. Morgan Maxwell, principal in the school system of Tuscon, Arizona, passed thru Oklahoma City this week on his way to Washington, D. C. with his family.

Mr. Maxwell has under his control seven hundred white students and sixty Negro students who he states get along well together. There are 38 teachers on the staff, two Negro teachers. One of the Negro teachers will be transferred next school term to the Senior High school English department.

Mr. Maxwell, principal of schools in Topeka, Kansas and Okmulgee, Oklahoma, where he met his wife, Katheryn McGowan. Miss McGowan a graduate of Langston university in 1931 is a classmate of Dr. H. S. Tolliver, dentist here in the city.

Schools in Tuscon have been integrated for the past three years.

14d(1) 1954

ARIZONA

End Of Segregation Painless, Phoenix Experiment Reveals

NEW YORK—The end of segregation need not be as painful as many people think. This is the conclusion of an article, called "What Happens When Segregation Ends," in the current issue of Look magazine (out April 20).

A "quiet revolution" taking place in the schoolrooms of Phoenix, Arizona, points the way to an end to racial prejudice, Look says. Phoenix, though no typical Southern city, has a long tradition of race feeling and segregation.

The experiment began last fall with the decision to open the doors of the city's white schools to Negro students. Pupils of the first three grades of Negro elementary schools and the students of Carver High had the choice of enrolling in white schools near their homes or returning to Negro schools. About 100 pupils made the transfer without incident, Look declares.

"At first we stayed pretty much to ourselves," said Janis Gossett, one of the high school students entering the formerly white Union High School for the first time. "So did the white kids. Then we decided to break the wall down ourselves. Now the white kids don't treat us any differently than anybody else, and most of them are wonderful."

Janis whose pictures in Look show her mingling with white classmates, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Riley Gossett, formerly of Texas and now living in Phoenix. Her mother has been an active volunteer worker for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Phoenix Ends Bias In School System

By JAMES EDMUND BOYACK
(Special to the Courier)

NEW YORK—The threat of Dixie politicians led by Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina and Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia that legal banning of the South's segregated elementary school system will result in racial and social unrest—has just been exploded by the people of Phoenix, Ariz.

After long deliberation, they decided to abolish their segregated school system. The decision was made calmly and deliberately, in the face of tradition and long-accepted prejudices, without being forced by law or court decision. Except for a few minor, expected incidents, the plan has worked. Mutual respect today is the keynote of student relations, and between teachers of both races.

* * *

WITH THE Supreme Court decision on five cases expected any day, the national spotlight soon may turn on Phoenix which could become a model for other cities and communities.

The city has proved "the hard way" that the end of segregation can be accomplished without incident, in spite of the dire warnings of Dixie demagogues.

While the pleasant Arizona community is no typical Southern city, its background of racial prejudice is strong. There are only 14,900 Negroes among the metropolitan population of 292,000. But one of every four adults moved to the health center from the South or Southwest. Most of its white restaurants still refuse service to colored residents. But the movie houses lowered the color bar as a direct result of the school board's decision. Many of the city's older churches recently began admitting Negroes to membership, and there are other signs of democracy at work.

THE DRAMATIC story of the successful Phoenix educational "revolution" is told in the May 4 issue of Look magazine.

Pupils in the first three grades in Negro elementary schools and students in the Carver High were given the choice of enrolling in white schools nearer their homes, or going back to the Negro schools. The board reasoned that "loyalty, fear of competition and fear of integration itself would prove a deterrent to a mass exodus from the colored schools."

School board members received telephoned criticisms and some anonymous letters. However, these were far outnumbered by signed felicitations. Teachers in some of the schools were requested by white parents to change their children's seats or lockers. About one hundred colored students made the transfer without serious incident.

* * *

THE PROBLEM of mixed dancing at school social affairs inevitably resulted. It was solved in the American way. At a meeting of the executive council, Principal Jim Carter declared:

"We're helping prepare the youngsters for living in a democracy, and that involves freedom of choice. If a Negro boy asks a white girl for a dance, she should have the freedom to accept or refuse."

Only recently, a sign was nailed on the door of Carver High. It was a one word epitaph to segregation in the fair city of Phoenix, Ariz. — "Closed!" And it doesn't say "Closed for Repairs."

Arizona Drops Dual Schools

PHOENIX, Arizona — Judge Charles C. Bernstein ruled in Superior Court here last Saturday that racial segregation in the elementary schools of Arizona is unconstitutional.

"The school board does not have authority, because the State Legislature has not conferred power upon the school board, to establish separate schools for the education of white and colored children," said the Judge.

A like ruling was handed down last year with respect to Arizona high schools.

Judge Bernstein's action was the result of a suit filed by Negro parents in the Wilson District outside Phoenix.

During the trial it was admitted by the Wilson District's attorney that accommodations at Negro schools were inferior to those in white schools.

According to Judge Bernstein, "A segregated educative system is likely to transmit to each succeeding generation the superiority-inferiority value attitudes of a racially conscious society."

There are 100 colored pupils in the Wilson District. Another district nearby has 738 students with a staff of 35.

Following the court's decision a statement was issued by two Negro teachers declaring that Superintendent G. S. Skiff had said to them to resign or they would not get recommendations for new jobs. They said they were told they would not get new contracts if segregation ended.

Neither of the teachers is covered by the State Tenure Law. A third Negro teacher in the District is covered by tenure and has signed a new contract.

Skiff said denied that the racial issue had anything to do with his asking the teachers to resign.

William P. Mahoney, Jr., Maricopia County attorney, issued a statement to school boards saying they could not legally spend money for segregation of Negro pupils.

He declared that the court decisions "in effect hold that expenditures for racially segregated facilities are for a purpose no longer authorized by law in Arizona and we feel that this pertains not only to expenditures for construction, but to those for maintenance of existing facilities."

Phoenix Negro Teachers To Be Fully Integrated

PHOENIX. — Carver high school's 20 teachers have been reassigned to seven schools in the Phoenix high school district that will be operating next school year according to Dr. Harold L. Gear superintendent of the Phoenix high school systems.

But their names and individual assignments will not be announced until tomorrow night—deadline for them to accept or reject what Gear termed "tentative assignments."

CARVER—for years the district's Negro high school—will be abandoned as a school next fall because of its location in the warehouse district and because the school board thinks it cannot be operated economically.

The board has specified that at least two teachers from Carver be assigned to each of the other schools, but left the individual assignments up to the superintendent.

Gear said he has given the teachers until tomorrow to protest these assignments.

"IF THEY don't complain, we will assume they are satisfied," he asserted.

He said the names were not to be made public until after the assignments were considered permanent "because all are subject to change."

Gear refused to divulge the number of teachers tentatively assigned to each of the seven installations.

He said the school board will meet next Tuesday at 7 p. m. at the administration campus to hear

Arizona court also knocks out school segregation

PHOENIX — Racial segregation was declared unlawful in the Superior Court here recently in a case involving jim crow school facilities.

Naacp lawyers and officials hailed the opinion of Judge Charles C. Bernstein as he said that, "Unless the legislature has clearly conferred power upon the school boards to establish separate schools for the education of white and colored children, no such power exists."

Judge Bernstein wrote: "Every society gets encumbered with dead wood from the past. The school has the duty of omitting such things from the environment which it supplies. By selecting the best for its exclusive use it strives to reinforce the power of this best. As a society becomes more enlightened it realizes that it is responsible not to transmit and conceive the whole of its existing achievements, but only such as make for a better future society. The school is its chief agency for the accomplishment of this end. It is the office of the school environment to balance the various elements in the social environment and to see to it that each individual gets an opportunity to escape from the limitations of the social group in which he was born and to come into living contact with a broader environment," the opinion read.

"The school is society's chief agency for conserving and transmitting its culture; educational segregation has extra significance. A segregated educative system is likely to transmit to each succeeding generation the superiority-inferiority value attitudes of a racially conscious society. Furthermore, it provides public approval and reinforcement of private privileges which has become the primary symbol of the Negro's inferiority." Judge Bernstein declared that segregation "intensifies, rather than eases racial tension." He said "In all cases the courts have discussed the physical equality of facilities in teaching and school plant; however, there are intangible inequalities in segregation. These are more difficult to demonstrate. However, we know the impact on the child of the Negro race. These children would seem either to be in conflict about their status or to have resigned themselves to inferior self-images. Our general experience as we observe human status each day, tells us that segregation intensifies rather than eases racial tension. Instead of encouraging racial cooperation, it fosters mutual fear and suspicion which is the basis of racial violence."

TUCSON'S ONLY NEGRO PRINCIPAL SPEAKS ON PROBLEMS OF INTEGRATION AT L. U.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Morgan Maxwell, principal of the John Spring junior high school, Tucson, Ariz., said in an informal talk to a summer session audience at Lincoln University (Mo.) that "integration isn't any problem because the "kids" want democracy," June 23.

Stopping here to visit his brother, Dr. U. S. Maxwell, director of the summer session and head of the chemistry department, Mr. Maxwell was enroute to Washington, D. C.

Mr. Maxwell explained that the public school system of Tucson was integrated in Sept., 1951. They have the 6-3-3 plan. His school was originally named Dunbar, but the name was changed because of the stigma attached when finding jobs. Twenty-two members of his 24 all-Negro-staff were scattered throughout the city's school system. White teachers replaced them.

He pointed out that they orientated new students early to realizing their responsibility. Another technique for success is to never refer to Negro boy or Mexican boy by race but to use names.

"Turn to religion in the process of integration. Think positively. Never discuss the race issue," the educator warned.

Going to Arizona in 1940, the principal asserted that the 120,000 populated city never had segregation on the secondary level. He cited that there are only about 150 Negroes in grades from 1-12.

Bishop Ends Race Bias In Arkansas Catholic Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (NC) — Bishop Albert L. Fletcher of Little Rock declared this week is "especially urgent" that Catholic Negro children "be admitted to any Catholic school available in places where there is no Catholic school especially for them."

He said in an official announcement that "it should be constantly remembered by Catholics that the goal of the Church in the diocese will be that 'no Catholic student is refused admission to a Catholic school on account of race or color.'" Bishop Fletcher's diocese consists of the whole State of Arkansas.

In his letter to the clergy, Religious and laity of his See, the Bishop recalled that since Catholic schools are private institutions, they are not subject to the Supreme Court decision of last May.

IS TAKEN IDEA

"This being the case," he said "some people have thought that Catholic schools will choose to continue the practice of racial segregation.

"This is a mistaken idea. It is contrary to the traditional practice of the Church . . . In places where segregation is enforced by law or custom, the Church simply does the best she can by trying to provide separate churches and schools for the different races."

Bishop Fletcher, a native of Little Rock, then went on to say: "But now the highest civil court in the land has judged segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional. This decision clears the way legally for the Church to act more freely in giving to all races the same benefits she is able to provide for the practice of their holy religion.

"It is especially urgent that Catholic Negro Children be admitted to any Catholic school available in places where there is no Catholic school especially for them.

"Hence every reasonable effort should be made by the pastor and people to make it possible for these children to attend a Catholic school of the place.

In concluding, he said:

EQUALITY TO ALL

"As you will notice from the contents of this letter, there is nothing to get excited about, I am merely outlining what has been the constant teaching of the Church and I am asking your cooperation as working earnestly to take advantage of the opportunity given us by the recent Supreme Court decision to make available equally to all races the benefits which the church is able to provide for the salvation of immortal souls.

"Finally, let me remind some Catholics that persons of every race, creed and nation should be made to feel at home in every Catholic church. Every Catholic church is God's house, not only because it is dedicated to Him; not only because we pray and sing there is His honor; not even because we hear His gospel preached there. Every Catholic church is God's house in a more personal way-it is where He dwells, body and soul in the Blessed Sacrament. He is the Host-we are His guests.

"All are His, not our, invited guests. Anyone who is good enough for Him to invite, certainly ought to be good enough for us to accept. His Church, you know, is Catholic."

GIRLS ADMITTED TO SCHOOL IN ARKANSAS TOWN

FAYETTEILLE, Ark.—(I N S)—Five Negro girls enrolled Friday in Fayetteville's all white high school in one of the moves to end racial segregation in the South.

School officials said the Negro students will start classes next Tuesday when they will sit side by side with white students.

About 50 white students crowded about in the school corridors when the Negroes registered as sophomores and greeted them with kind and friendly gestures.

Fayetteville officials said they plan to integrate the races in Junior High School next year. No plans have been made for integration in the elementary schools.

The city with a population of 10,000 has about 400 Negroes.

School Board Makes No Plans For Changes

LITTLE ROCK, Aak. — (NNPA) — The North Little Rock School Board has no plan for desegregation and will not attempt to draw up such a plan until the United States Supreme Court enters final decrees in the five school segregation cases which are set for further argument, beginning December 6.

That was the answer given Tuesday night to the issue raised by a group of colored persons who met with the school board at the High School. Municipal Judge Milton McLees, attorney for the board stated the board's position in replying to Thad Williams, Little Rock attorney and spokesman for the colored group.

Judge McLees added, however, that the board would comply with the law "in a spirit of cooperation" when suggestions for carrying out the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools come from national and state levels.

"We feel that an attempt to immediately implement desegregation —before the Supreme Court gives us its suggestions—would be premature and unwise," Judge McLees said.

The board will seek the cooperation of colored people in planning integration, the judge said, and the job will be easier if there is no "stalling on one hand or pressure on the other."

In asking the intentions of the board, Williams said he did not think it was necessary for North Little Rock to "wait and see what other school districts are doing."

Among the 19 colored persons who met with the board were Jackie L. Shropshire, Little Rock attorney, and George Howard, Jr., Pine Bluff attorney and representative of the NAACP. Both thanked the board for giving them a hearing.

The session lasted less than a half hour.

Arkansas' Attorney General Requests Board To File Brief

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(NNPA) — Attorney General T. J. Gentry of Arkansas Monday agreed to a request from the State Board of Education to file a brief as a friend of the court in the five school segregation cases in which the United States Supreme Court will hear further agruments on how and when it should order public schools desegregated.

The board made its request after receiving petitions from some thirty schools districts in East Arkansas where there are heavy colored populations and resistance to integration of children in the public schools is greater.

Gentry met with the board and several representatives of interested school districts. He told them he was willing to file the brief on behalf of the state if "you get me the facts and tell me what you want to do."

The Attorney General told them that the only question now before the Supreme Court is: "How do you want the Supreme Court to order you to integrate white and Negro students?"

Gentry sent a telegram to the clerk of the Supreme Court requesting permission to file a "friend of the court" brief and participate in the argument.

The decision to file the brief was brought to a head by the recent petitions for immediate desegregation filed with thirteen school boards by the Arkansas Conference of NAACP Branches.

At the State board meeting Monday, Harold Weaver, chairman of the West Memphis School Board, presented petitions from some thirty East Arkansas districts asking that the board request the Attorney General to participate in the cases.

Weaver said his district has some 2,500 colored pupils and 1,600 white students. The Supreme Court decision "could tear our school system all to pieces," Weaver said.

The resolution approving the request for the Attorney General to participate, adopted by the board, pointed out that 228 of the state's 423 school districts operate segregated schools.

It reiterated the board's policy that school districts should continue to work toward equalizing educational opportunities and that should be done through joint counsel between white and colored representatives at the local level.

The resolution said the petitions filed by the NAACP were "out of harmony" with board policy and with "the deliberative order of the Supreme Court by which the court is delaying its own decree in order to get the views of all southern states as to how any forthcoming decree should be implemented."

Thad D. Williams of Little Rock member of the legal redress committee of the Arkansas Conference of NAACP Branches, issued the following statements in reply to the board:

"On May 17, 1954, the United States Supreme Court ruled that the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States prohibited the separation of white and Negro children in public schools.

"This ruling was an interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, which was adopted on July 28, 1868, by thirty of the then United States; therefore segregation in public schools is not only illegal now but has been since July 28, 1868.

"Still more, the Arkansas statute providing for segregation in public schools is likewise unconstitutional now and has been since July 28, 1868."

Arkansas School Desegregates As Economy Measure

CHARLESTON, Ark. — (NNPA) —Eleven colored students have been attending school with white children here since August 23, the president of the school board disclosed Monday.

H. M. Osborn said the move was made as an economy measure. Osborn, who previously had refused to say whether Charleston would desegregate its schools this fall, said the district would save about $4,000 this year in tuition and transportation costs in sending the Charleston colored students to Fort Smith schools.

Charleston, therefore, is the first school in Arkansas to end segregation—a distinction previously given to Fayetteville High School when five colored girls enrolled there.

Citizens Discuss School Mixing

FT. SMITH, Ark. — (NNPA) — Several hundred persons, both white and colored, met Monday night at the Junior High School here in an open discussion on the questions of desegregating the public schools.

Chris Corbin superintendent of Fort Smith schools, and Frank Beckman, president of the school board here, were asked by representatives of the NAACP to hold the meeting to discuss integration.

Jack Shropshire, a Little Rock attorney, representing the NAACP at the meeting, asked that Fort Smith schools be integrated at once.

STUDENTS STAY CALM AS SEGREGATION ENDS

Negroes Enter Fayetteville Charleston Schools

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Sept. 14.—(AP)—Seven Negro students—six girls and one boy—attended classes at Fayetteville High School Tuesday along with around 500 white students—and everyone took the situation calmly.

Fayetteville is the second place in Arkansas—and so far as is known in the entire old Confederate South—actually to start toward ending racial segregation in the public schools in conformity with the Supreme Court's broad ruling last May.

The Fayetteville school enrolled five Negro girl sophomores last Friday and Tuesday, as classes started for the semester, a Negro girl and a Negro boy registered as juniors.

Fayetteville, which has only about 400 Negroes among its some 20,000 residents, announced several months ago it would start integration in its high school this fall.

Previously the handful of Negro high students had been sent elsewhere for instruction—at the Fayetteville district's expense.

Operation of separate elementary and junior high schools for whites and Negroes is being continued.

In contrast to the advance notice of the Fayetteville action, the school board at Charleston, Franklin County, also with a small Negro population, quietly began integration in its entire system Aug. 23.

The shift didn't become known outside Charleston until Monday.

Arkansas Advances Idea On Ending Racial Bias

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — A novel idea of joint action by the judicial and legislative branches of the Federal Government on the question of ending racial segregation in the public schools is advanced by the State of Arkansas.

In its brief filed in the five school segregation cases pending before the United States Supreme Court, Arkansas suggests that the court should leave the problem of integration to Congress for appropriate legislation.

ALL-TIME RECORD

Aside from such a move contravening the doctrine of states' rights, about which southern states are continually harping, submission to Congress would result in endless debate, breaking the all-time record for filibusters.

Arkansas also suggests that the court should not order immediate integration but should enter a decree permitting gradual adjustments.

The Arkansas brief was filed in response to an invitation to states affected by the decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

A decree ordering immediate integration would have "a most disastrous effect" upon the public schools of Arkansas, the brief states.

It would "seriously disrupt" the effort of both colored and white leaders to solve the racial problem in Arkansas, it says.

The problem of integration in the public schools is of such magnitude, the brief asserts, that it can be solved effectively only by the gradual process which would vary from locality to locality.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS

No person or group—not even the court—has formulated any definite plans of integration which would operate successfully in the schools districts of Arkansas, the brief adds.

The plan for integration in the districts which are directly affected by the decision against segregation, Arkansas argues, should be formulated developed, and finally concluded under the supervision and control of the lower courts.

(The suggestions in the brief filed by Attorney General Herbert J. Brownell, Jr., would permit desegregation to be accomplished under the supervision of District Federal Courts.)

The decree of the Supreme Court, Arkansas says, should give the lower courts the "very widest range of discretion in bringing about integration in a manner which will promote, rather than retard, the ultimate solution of the whole problem."

Arkansas urges the court to issue a supplemental opinion pointing out that the integration problem is one that should be solved by Congress under section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

PUBLIC EDUCATION

Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment gives Congress the power to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation. In deciding the school segregation cases, the court construed the Fourteenth Amendment as forbidding racial segregation in public education.

The American system, being what it is, Arkansas recognizes, cannot compel Congress to act. "But certainly the court can, by some appropriate suggestion, bring about prompt and appropriate action by that branch of the Government, in which the people themselves, by adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, lodged the power to adopt the appropriate plan to correct the conditions which, so the court has said, the states have brought about in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment," says Arkansas.

If the powers of the court were not limited by the Constitution, Arkansas states, the proper decree would be to remand the cases to Congress with directions to take appropriate action.

Lacking the power to command Congress, the brief asserts, the next best thing would be "a most urgent invitation" to Congress from the court.

If the court complies with this request, Arkansas says, the solution of the problem will rest where it was intended by the Congress that it should rest—with the Congress.

MEETS IN JANUARY

The brief points out that the Arkansas General Assembly has not been in session since March, 1953. It meets again in January. Some further words of advice from the court, the brief states, will go a long way toward charting the course of future action or inaction by the Arkansas General Assembly.

One of the purposes of the brief, it says, is to solicit such words of clarification and advice as to the course to be pursued by the people of Arkansas in carrying out the final decrees of the court.

The first general law providing for segregated public schools in Arkansas was enacted July 23, 1868, the year the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted, and re-enacted in 1873.

TWO HOUSES

According to The Arkansas Gazette of February 1, 1873, the 1873 Arkansas legislature had twentey colored members and it was reported that "one-fifth part is a complete master of the two houses, as if the number that composed the group were three times as great."

On January 6, 1873, J. C. Corbin, became superintendent of public instruction for Arkansas. He was a colored educator who moved to Arkansas during the "War Between the States."

Arkansas has seventy-five counties with 422 schools districts, or an average of about five school districts for each county.

There are fourteen counties which had no colored students enrolled in the public schools.

Ten counties with no colored population are located in the north and northwest mountain section of the state. Two of the counties without colored population, Polk and Scott, are in the southwestern section of the state.

In six counties the colored enrollment exceeds the white. Five of these predominantly colored counties—Lee, St. Frances, Crittenden, Chicot and Phillips—are in the eastern section of the state and border the Mississippi River. The other predominantly colored county, Lincoln, is in south central Arkansas.

The colored public school enrollment for the state was about 23 per cent of the total.

Two districts have already mixed colored and white children in the schools. The Charleston School District in western Arkansas (Franklin County) has integrated pupils during the 1954-55 term from the first through the twelfth grade.

The Fayetteville School District in northwestern Arkansas (Washington County) has an enrollment of 3,096 white pupils and sixty-four colored pupils. This district has mixed white and colored pupils at the high school level.

Colored children in the Fayetteville district attend a segregated school from the first through the ninth grade. For the 1954-55 term, eleven colored high school pupils are attending the same high school with approximately 500 whites.

Integration in the Charleston and Fayetteville school districts, the brief admits, has been accomplished so far "without any unusual incidents."

The Arkansas brief is signed by Tom Gentry, Attorney General; James L. Sloan, Assistant Attorney General, and Richard B. McCulloch, special assistant Attorney General.

Ark. Has "Novel" Idea About School Mixing

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—A novel idea of joint action by the judicial and legislative branches of the Federal Government on the question of ending racial segregation in the public schools is advanced by the State of Arkansas.

In its brief filed in the five school segregation cases pending before the United States Supreme Court, Arkansas suggests that the court should leave the problem of integration to Congress for appropriate legislation.

Aside from such a move contravening the doctrine of states' rights, about which southern states are continually harping, submission to Congress would result in endless debate, breaking the all time record for filibusters.

Arkansas also suggests that the court should not order immediate integration but should enter a decree permitting gradual adjustments.

The Arkansas brief was filed in response to an invitation to states affected by the decision outlawing racial segregation in public schols to state their views.

A decree ordering immediate integration would have "a most disastrous effect" upon the public schools of Arkansas, the brief states.

It would "seriously disrupt" the efforts of both colored and white leaders to solve the racial problem in Arkansas, it says.

The problem of integration in the public schools is of such magnitude, the brief asserts, that it can be solved effectively only by a gradual process which would vary from locality to locality.

No person or group -- not even the court -- has formulated any definite plans of integration which would operate successfully in the school districts of Arkansas, the brief adds.

The plan for integration in the districts which are directly affected by the decision against segregation, Arkansas argues, should be formulated, developed. and finally concluded under the supervision and control of the lower courts.

(The sugestions in the brief filed by Attorney General Herbert J. Brownell, Jr., would permit desegregation to be accomplished under the supervision of District Federal Courts.)

The decree of the Supreme Court, Arkansas says, should give the lower courts the "very widest range of discretion in bringing about integration in a manner which will promote, rather than retard, the ultimate solution of the whole problem."

Arkansas has seventy-five counties with 422 school districts, or an average of about five school districts for each county.

There are fourteen counties which had no colored students enrolled in the public schools.

Ten counties with no colored population are located in the north and northwest mountain section of the state. Two of the counties without colored population, Polk and Scott, are in the southwestern section of the state.

In six counties the colored enrollment exceeds the white. Five of these predominanty colored counties -- Lee, St. Frances, Crittenden, Chicot and Phillips -- are in the eastern section of the state and border the Mississippi River. The other predominantly colored county, Lincoln, is in south central Arkansas.

The colored public school enrollment for the state was about 23 per cent of the total.

Two districts have already mixed colored and white children in the schools. The Charleston School District in western Arknasas (Franklin County) has integrated pupils durin gthe 1954-55 term from the first through the twelfth grade.

The Fayetteville School District in northwestern Arkansas (Washington County) has an enrollment of 3,096 white pupils and sixty-four colored pupils. This district has mixed white and colored pupils at the high school level.

Colored children in the Fayetteville district attend a segregated school from the first through the ninth grade. For the 1954-55 term, eleven colored high school pupils are attending the same high school withe approximately 500 whites.

Integration in the Charleston and Fayetteville school districts, the brief admits, has been accomplished dso far "without any unusual incidents."

The Arkansas brief is signed by Tom Gentry, Attorney General; James L. Sloan, Assistant Attorney General, and Richard B. McCulloch, special assistant Attorney General.

INTEGRATION PETITION FILED IN LAKE VILLAGE

Officials Point To Plans For New Negro School

Special to The Commercial Appeal

LAKE VILLAGE, Ark., Aug. 27.—A petition signed by 40 Negro residents of Lake Village has been presented to Ben Angel, president of Lake Side School District, and R. B. Chitwood, superintendent of Lakeside schools, requesting a hearing on desegregation in the Lakeside District.

The petition was one of fourteen filed with school boards in Arkansas. The Dermott School Board in Chicot County also received one of the petitions.

At Lake Village Mr. Angel said that a $200,000 Negro school building program is being planned and will be voted on in March. He said the board has not acted officially on the petition but the sentiment of the individual members of the board is that they will continue the policy of segregation as provided by the laws of Arkansas.

Mr. Chitwood said the school board would meet soon to discuss plans for a new Negro school building. He said if the proposed bond issue is approved by the voters in March, the new building would relieve crowded conditions now existing at the Central (Negro) School.

Wants Congress to Solve the Problem

Tom Gentry, attorney general of the state of Arkansas, has filed a brief with the Supreme Court of the United States asking that the Court:

(1) Not order immediate integration;

(2) Enter a decree in the pending cases which will permit gradual adjustments; and

(3) Leave the problem of integration of the races in public schools to congress for appropriate legislation.

Copies of the brief were released to the press.

The brief states, "Let it be said at the outset that nothing contained in this brief is intended to bring into question the correctness of the ruling of this Court or its reasons for reaching that conclusion."

In addition to its major arguments, the brief contains the policy statement of the State Board of Education, pertinent Arkansas constitutional and statutory provisions on education, and a brief summary of information relating to the 422 school districts of Arkansas.

In summarizing the general situation, the brief devotes a paragraph to Fayetteville and Charleston, the first of which has partially and the second completely integrated its schools. Says the brief, "It is a matter of general information that integration has been accomplished so far in the Charleston and Fayetteville school districts without any unusual incidents."

The brief stresses that integration in Arkansas should be gradual and says, "It is probably safe to assert at this time that no person or group of persons - - not even any court - - has formulated any definite plan of integration which would operate successfully in the school districts of Arkansas."

Southern Teachers Agree On The Integration Of Schools - And Now!

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — Seven representatives from Texas were among the sixty Negro educators who met here last week and unanimously agreed for immediate planning to help implement the Supreme Court decision against school segregation.

In a statement drawn up by the educators, they said "We welcome the decision of the Supreme Court and look upon it as another significant milestone in the nation's quest for a democratic way of life and in the Negro's long struggle to become a first-class citizen .....This is a part of an evolutionary process which has been going on in the South and the nation for some time".

Present at the two-day meeting were: Cleo W. Blackburne, president of Jarvis Christian College, Hawkins, Texas; Milton K. Curry, Jr., president of Bishop College, Marshall, Texas; D. R. Glass, president of Texas College, Tyler, Texas; William H. Jones, vice president of Huston-Tillotson College, Austin, Texas; Rev. J. S. Scott, president of Wiley College, Marshall; Wardell D. Thompson, Consultant in Negro Education at Prairie View A&M College; and Leslie J. White Executive secretary, Colored State Teachers Association, Austin.

The educators criticized sharply "The effort on the part of some leaders and school officials to intimidate Negro teachers and other citizens under threat of loss of job if they express approval of the Court's decision and if segregation is not maintained is shortsighted, vindictive, and contrary to fundamental sense of fair play of the American people."

The group also declared that "Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nulify the Court's decision."

In concluding, the group stated that the implementation of the decision will strengthen the South and the Nation morally, economically and spiritually.

The meeting was called by fifteen Negro educators and sponsored by the Phelps Stokes Fund.

Wednesday said also the high tribunal's decision marked a significant milestone "in the Negro's long struggle to become af rist class citizen."

The statement continued:

"The decision was not a sudden leap out of the American tradition, but the right and moral thing to do.

"Ours is a common democracy in which the weakest and the strongest, the most provileged and the most disadvantages, the descendants of every race and every nation, can share and happily boast that we are proud to be Americans."

ARKANSAS EDUCATORS SEEK CLOSED SESSION

Want To Discuss Plans On Segregation Issues

From the Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 15.—East Arkansas school districts plan a meeting "within the next few days" to discuss segregation problems and perhaps assemble information for Atty Gen. Tom Gentry for preparation of a Supreme Court brief.

Marvin Bird of Earle, chairman of the State Board of Education, said Wednesday a meeting is planned but he wasn't at liberty to disclose where or when it will be held. He said most of the district leaders wanted a closed meeting.

Mr. Bird said officials probably will discuss what they would like Mr. Gentry to submit to the Supreme Court on the problem.

Spokesmen for the districts, as well as Mr. Bird and other members of the State Board of Education met with Mr. Gentry Monday to ask him to file a brief with the High Court. Mr. Gentry at that time told them the brief, under court orders, would have to deal with how best to implement the court's ruling that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

DESEGREGATION URGED

Pulaski School Board To Meet Petitioners Sept. 7

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 25—(AP)—Twenty Negro residents of communities near here Tuesday asked the Pulaski County Rural School Board to begin immediately "devising and implementing a program of desegregation."

Negro residents from Sweet Home and College Station in separate but identical petitions asked immediate steps taken to reorganize the public school system "in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court."

The board agreed to meet with petitioners Sept. 7.

Educators eye school decision

Out to implement high court ruling

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. —Some 100 southern college and school board officials attended a two-day conference on the changing educational pattern in the area here this week in National Baptist Hotel.

Dr. F. D. Patterson, director of the Phelpps-Stokes Fund and W. J. Trent Jr., served as consultants at the conference which considered development of an effective program for the achievement of the goal established by the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in education

— o O o —

DR. RUFUS E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, headed the conference steering committee. Other members included Robert P. Daniel, Petersburg, Va.; Lawrence A. Davis, Pine Bluff; Albert W. Dent, New Orleans; Luther H. Foster, Tuskegee;

Paul L. Guthrie, Lexington, Ky.; Charles S. Johnson, Nashville, Tenn.; Benjamin E. Mays, Atlanta; Charles H. Thompson, Washington; H. Councill Trenholm, Montgomery, Ala., and Benner C. Turner, Orangeburg, S.C.

DECISION WELCOMED BY NEGRO EDUCATORS

60 Meet In Hot Springs, Issue Statement 'RIGHT AND MORAL THING'

By the Associated Press

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Oct. 28.—Leading Negro educators from 14 Southern states and the District of Columbia have placed the Supreme Court decision on segregation as "a significant milestone in the nation's quest for a democratic way of life."

After two days of meetings here behind closed doors, the group issued a statement saying it welcomed the Supreme Court decision on segregation in public schools and "immediate steps should be taken to implement the decision."

"We believe that by virtue of the position which we occupy in American life, we are obligated to express our views," the statement declared.

Sixty Negro leaders were called here at the insistance of Southern educators. Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta University, member Board of Education at Atlanta, issued the invitations.

Benjamin E. Mays, president, Morehouse College in Atlanta, was chairman of the committee which drafted the statement.

Expenses of the delegates were paid by the Phelps-Stokes Fund, which was described by Dr. F. D. Patterson of New York City, former president of Tuskegee Institute and executive director of the fund, as "a small educational foundation interested in the education of Negro youth in America and Africa."

Milestone Marked

The group-approved statement

14d(1) 1954

ARKANSAS

Parents Ask Ark. School Boards To End Jim Crow

LITTLE ROCK — More than 400 parents and patrons of public schools in Arkansas filed petitions last week calling upon their school boards to reorganize their schools in accordance with the constitutional enunciated by the Supreme Court on May 17."

The petitions are the result of activity of local branches of the NAACP under the guidance of the Arkansas State Conference. Mrs. L. C. Bates is president.

Mrs. Bates pointed out that the petitions were filed primarily because of the pupils but made it clear that the NAACP expects teacher integration also.

The petitions state in part:

"We, the undersigned, are the parents of children of school age entitled to attend and attending the public elementary and secondary schools under your jurisdiction.

"Pursuant to state law, racially segregated public schools are now being maintained by you for children of Negro parentage.

"As you undoubtedly know, the United States Supreme Court on May 17, 1954, ruled that the maintenance of racially segregated public schools is a violation of the Constitution of the United States and that '. . . in the field of public education, the doctrine of separate but equal has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal.'

"We, therefore, call upon you to take immediate steps to reorganize the public schools under your jurisdiction in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court on May 17."

The petitions conclude by expressing a willingness of the petitioners to meet with the boards and do what is possible to help a smooth but rapid transition from segregation to integration.

Miss Mildred Bond, field secretary of the NAACP national office traveled through Arkansas for the State Conference of Branches visiting the branches and working with them.

The State Conference has started a ten thousand dollar "fight For Freedom Fund" drive which will end Oct. 24 with a mass meeting here.

Arkansas Town First In South To End Segregation In Schools

Fayetteville, Ark., Sept. 10 (AP) —Racial segregation in Fayetteville's formerly all-white high school came to an end this afternoon as five Negro girls enrolled for the fall term. They will attend their first classes Tuesday.

There wasn't a sign of disapproval from white students present.

Fayetteville is the first school district in any state of the Confederate South to integrate Negroes and whites into the public schools. The city's program of gradual integration probably will be expanded to include the junior high school next year.

About 50 white students greeted their new classmates in a friendly manner.

Both whites and Negroes seemed indifferent to the fact that they were involved in breaking one of Dixie's oldest traditions.

School Superintendent Wayne White said today that there had been no organized opposition to the board's decision to integrate the schools. In fact, he said, the [illegible] received almost [illegible] from school

COLOR BARS DROP ALREADY IN SOUTH

But Integration Problems Are Complex in Area and Vary Widely by Locales

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 11 (AP)—This may be the last year for legal segregation of races in public schools.

Across the fringes of the South —Delaware, Maryland, Missouri and the District of Columbia— the color bars already are being dropped here and there in the public schools.

Every major religious denomination in the region has taken a stand in support of the Supreme Court decision of last May 17 holding that segregation in public schools was unconstitutional.

But while the fringe states are acting, fourteen of the seventeen states affected by the court ruling plan to do nothing about the problem in the coming school year. Several do expect to act, however, in 1955 or 1956.

In ruling against public school segregation, the court refrained from issuing an order specifying how its decision should be put into effect. It asked interested States to submit advice which could be used to formulate a plan of action.

Until the Supreme Sourt does spell out a plan in detail, none of the 'Old South' states plan to do anything.

Problem Is Complex

The South's segregation problem is very complex. "The South" as an entity in which whites are uniformly pro-segregation just doesn't exist. Large sections have essentially "Yankee traditions."

The school situation is a vast hodge-podge of prejudice and politics, budgets and buildings, population and poverty.

The Civil War left the South without an economic base on which to build public schools. Even by 1900 only one State, Kentucky, had a compulsory school-attendance law.

When the States did acquire public school systems, the white Southerners — the taxpayers — were primarily concerned with taking care of their own children first. Whatever was left over went to the Negroes.

The great depression of 1929-1935 nearly wrecked the public school system. Building lagged, especially building for Negroes. As the area recovered from its economic setbacks, it embarked on a school building program which was halted by World War II and only resumed in 1946.

With the end of World War II, the South once again set out to catch up with the rest of the nation. More and more public money was put aside for Negro education.

By the time the Supreme Court handed down its ruling, the southern states were spending a higher percentage of income on public schools than any other section.

But [illegible] integration were begun immediately, the simple problem of space would be acute, especially in rural areas. Rural white children in the South as a rule go by bus to schools in town. Negro children go to country schools, many of them one-room affairs, near home.

Race Ratio a Factor

Two of the region's widely recognized authorities on race relations believe that the white-Negro population ratio is the best index on when integration will be accomplished in any given place. They are Harry S. Ashmore of Little Rock, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, and George S. Mitchell, eexcutive director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

They hold that segregation probably will end first where the Negro population is lightest and last where it is heaviest.

Almost half the 1,328 counties in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Virginia have 10 per cent or less Negro population. One-fifth of these counties contain 40 per cent of the entire Negro population in the region.

In the decade from 1940 to 1950 more than a million Negroes left these thirteen states and went north. The increase in white population was thirty-three times as great as the Negro gain. The Negro farm population declined by 1,300,000.

These statistics mean the South is growing whiter and the Negro is being urbanized.

Mr. Ashmore and Mr. Mitchell believe that if the Supreme Court permits a local-option system of ending segragation, with a time limit for compliance, many of the hill counties, with small Negro populations will integrate swiftly.

Moreover, under their theory, about half of Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee, a third of Kentucky ,about a fifth of Virginia and spots in Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina also will integrate quickly.

Integration Already Started

While the idea of racial integration on the grade school level came as a shock to many white southerners, it has been taking place without friction on the collegel level in most of the South since 1935. Approximately 2,000 Negroes attended previously all-white colleges or universities last year.

Even prior to the Supreme Court decision, twenty-four Sttae colleges or universities admitted Negroes—usually as the result of Supreme Court action—on the graduate or professional level.

Thirteen state and municipal colleges admitted Negroes on the undergraduate level, as did forty-six private denominational colleges.

Racial Integration In Public Schools Moves Peacefully Forward In Arkansas

By The Associated Press

Racial integration in public schools moved ahead peacefully in a city in "confederate" Arkansas Tuesday but segregation barriers went up again in a county in borderline West Virginia where striking students and protesting parents quickly overawed a school board.

Fayetteville, Ark., became the first sizable city in the old South to send whites and Negroes into the same classes and there were no incidents reported as six Negro girls and a boy moved into the sophomore and junior classes in high school.

Fayetteville was following the example set by Little Charleston, Ark., which integrated 11 Negroes into its school system Aug. 23—and did it so quietly that outside newspapers didn't learn of it until Monday. "Things seem to be working out fine, H. M. Orsburn, president of the Charleston School Board, observed Tuesday.

But in West Virginia's Greenbrier County the barriers were up again after a five-day trial of integration undertaken by the local school board on advice of the state school superintendent, W. W. Trent.

At White Sulphur Springs, where yesterday, three of 25 Negroes took their books and belongings away from the school after the board had yielded to students and protesting parents and rescinded the integration order.

Meanwhile, the largest scale experiment in integration yet undertaken went forward with no reported troubles in Washington, D.C.

But with the U.S. Supreme Court still to hand down its operative decision to uphold the principle of integration it announced last spring these developments were minor, preliminary maneuverings as the bulk of the South held strictly to its segregated patterns.

In Mississippi there was growing determination to circumvent whatever final ruling the highest court may make. While the legislature prepared to act on a constitutional amendment that would permit private operation of schools with public funds, so-called "Citizens Councils" continued to be formed.

Seeking to allay concern over these groups, state Rep. Wilma Sledge said there would be no resort to violence but told an applauding House:

"Segregation will be maintained. These councils will maintain segregation through unity of purpose, consolidation of public opinion and utilization of all legal means available."

A possibility that Tennessa might emergy with somo mixed pattern arose when it was disclosed at Nashville that the state might not be represented at the Supreme Court session at which plans to integrate schools will be considered. It was pointed out that local school boards in Tennessee are virtually self - governing and the state can't speak for all.

At Shreveport, La., 15 Negroes filed suit in U.S. District Court seeking admission to Louisiana's McNeese State College at Lake Charles.

Aide wants schools cases remanded to districts

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (NNPA) —The end of legal segregation in Arkansas schools will "work out better you think," Ed McCuiston, assistant state education commissioner for instructional services, told Little Rock Kiwanians here Tuesday.

But he warned that "if we try it out too fast we may have to give up and start again."

McCuistion, speaking at the Kiwanis luncheon, recommended that school districts plan their programs on the basis of what both white and colored patrons want with better education for all as the primary goal.

McCuiston said the cooperative attitude of colored parents honestly were seeking better educational facilities for their children would gain more than all the court suits brought."

He also condemened those he called loud rabblerousers who are not trying to get better schools but are trying to win a place in the sun for themselves or some political organization."

He said that if the U.S. Supreme Court would remand the five pending school segregation cases to the districts involved, "it will give us time to work this thing out, with grass roots democracy, and it will work out better than you think."

STUDENTS WOULD QUIT IF NEGROES ENROLLED

Poll Taken At Fort Smith Junior College

FORT SMITH, Ark., Sept. 18.—Students at Fort Smith Junior College have been asked in a questionaire, "would you withdraw from junior college if colored people enrolled?"

About one-fourth of the total student enrollment, which is between 165 and 170, answered "yes."

Circulation of the questionaire was a result of inquiries made at the college Tuesday by four Negro students seeking enrollment. Fort Smith Junior College is a tuition-supported private institution.

College President Elmer H. Cook said "there is no probability that colored students will be admitted but the final decision will be left to the board of Regents. The board will discuss the question at its regular monthly meeting Tuesday.

The four Negroes were identified by school officials only as spring graduates of Lincoln Negro High School here.

Integration Succeeds In Ark. Town

FORT SMITH, Ark. — In contrast to many Southern towns, the end of segregation in public schools came quietly to a small consolidated district in Northwest Arkansas, recently.

Almost secretively, Negro and white children have been attending classes together for four weeks in Charleston, in Franklin County. It was discovered only last Monday, Sept. 13.

H. M. Orsburn, president of the Charleston school board, said that 11 Negroes were integrated into the school system and "things seem to be working out fine."

The Negroes are attending classes with some 600 white students.

Arkansas School Desegregates As Economy Measure

CHARLESTON, Ark. — (NNPA) —Eleven colored students have been attending school with white children here since August 23, the president of the school board disclosed Monday.

H. M. Osborn said the move was made as an economy measure. Osborn, who previously had refused to say whether Charleston would desegregate its schools this fall, said the district would save about $4,000 this year in tuition and transportation costs in sending the Charleston colored students to Fort Smith schools.

Charleston, therefore, is the first school in Arkansas to end segregation—a distinction previously given to Fayetteville High School when five colored girls enrolled there.

The School Desegregation Story in the South

Arkansas: 'We Will Obey the Law'

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—The school desegregation picture in Arkansas is favorable. The state is setting the pace for the rest of the South and can be easily compared to the border state of West Virginia.

Like Tennessee, the State of Arkansas has its liberal and lily-white areas. School desegregation actually is working in the northwestern and central regions of the state, whereas the southern and eastern sections of Arkansas are more like the western part of Tennessee and all of Mississippi.

Negroes attending formerly all-white schools in the state were able to gain admittance without the aid of lawsuits, but it appears definite that suits must be filed in some sections of Arkansas once the Supreme Court hands down its final decision.

Negroes, by the hundreds, are enrolled in all graduate departments of the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville and at the University Center and Medical School in Little Rock. They also are doing extension work at three of the smaller state-supported colleges — Monticello A. and M. at Monticello, Henderson College at Arkadelphia and Arkansas State in Jonesboro.

Negroes are admitted to the University System on the graduate and professional level only but, technically, colored girls in the nursing school are doing some undergraduate work there.

* * *

THE ROMAN Catholic Church has admitted colored children to some formerly all-white parochial schools in areas where the church has not provided separate schools for Negroes.

At present, Negro pupils are attending St. Joseph's Elementary School in Paris and colored girls are known to be studying at St. Scholastica's Academy at Fort Smith.

Most interesting picture is found in Charleston and Fayetteville where colored children were integrated without publicity or fanfare.

At Charleston, in West Arkansas, eleven Negro children are attending the formerly all-white school and one of the eleven is a high school student. There are 600 white children in the school.

H. M. ORSBURN, president of the Charleston School Board, said he had hoped to avoid publicity on this matter but admitted that integration had proceeded quietly and "seems to be working out fine."

Charleston had only nineteen Negroes of school age last year and it cost the Charleston taxpayers around $5,000 to send these students to an all-Negro school in nearby Fort Smith.

Orsburn said the matter of school desegregation was put up to the taxpapers "on a money-saving basis."

"It is our problem and we worked it out ourselves," he added.

COLORED AND white parents are pleased with the arangement. "It's better this way," one Negro mother said. Now our children don't have to travel long distances to school."

Asked if the desegregation program in Charleston had caused any excitement, another mother said: "No. We have always had good racial relations here."

The Fayetteville High School which opened shortly after the Charleston High School, has enrolled seven Negroes and about 500 whites. The new move has been going smoothly and without incident, said Wayne White, superintendent of Fayetteville schools.

* * *

IT HAD BEEN costing the citizens of Fayetteville about $5,000 a year to send Negro pupils to all-Negro high schools in Fort Smith and Hot Springs.

Segregation was a luxury we no longer could afford," said Mr. White. He pointed out that there are only 400 Negroes living in Fayetteville as compared to the approximately 20,000 whites. He admitted, too, that a larger Negro population might have resulted in a different picture.

He said Negro parents favored the move but did not wage a fight for integration. On the other hand, he said some whites asked that school segregation be ended and even hired a lawyer to press their case.

* * *

SOME NEGRO parents requested that the all-Negro elementary school in Fayetteville remain intact because they feel that smaller Negro children should be prepared gradually for attending school with whites and because the school building serves as a civic center for colored citizens of the little city.

One might ask why are certain sections of Arkansas inclined to go along with the Supreme Court long before the final decision is handed down?

There are several answers. Both Charleston and Fayetteville are located in the northern and western sections of the state where there are few Negroes and where whites are inclined to be more liberal than whites living in the southern parts of the state.

* * *

THE ADMITTANCE of Negroes to the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville set up a pattern for the local school board to follow on the high school and elementary level. Negroes and whites also attend the same theatre, unsegregated, in Fayetteville. The theatre is near the University of Arkansas campus.

And, too, school board officials in small cities realize that school desegregation means a big saving of money, especially when they are on small budgets.

Said a prominent Negro educator: "There are no white rebels in this state and there is no element of Uncle Toms to fight down the aggressive movement undertaken by colored leaders."

* * *

GOV. FRANCIS CHERRY said: "Arkansas will obey the law. It always has."

Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry declared: "Desegregation has been declared the law of the land and we are going to have to abide by it."

Arkansas, despite its woolhat towns along the eastern border, is making a strong effort to be classed as liberal. The state definitely does not want to be classed with Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina.

A lot of the credit for the current integration movement goes to the Negro leadership in the state and chief among that leadership is Atty. Harold Flowers, who was the first to inaugurate a militant campaign against injustices suffered by colored citizens.

* * *

SAID ATTORNEY Flowers: "We've gotten the fear thing out of the minds of Negroes and they have used quite effectively their voting power."

Once threatened by the Ku Klux Klan, Attorney Flowers added: "Arkansas is ready for the change and it is going to depend largely on the Negro himself. The white man is not going to give us anything."

Flowers, who lost in his bid for the State Senate this year, reminded that Negroes in Arkansas were afraid to hold an NAACP meeting publicly in 1938. He said the "little Negro has forced the bigger Negro to come out and take a stand."

* * *

FLOWERS has handled about thirty-five civil rights cases during his eighteen years of practice. Some of his mixed school cases ended in compromises when local school boards agreed to build better school buildings for Negro children.

Probably the No. 1 person in the spotlight at the moment is youthful Mrs. Daisy Bates, in her second years as state president of the NAACP, and wife of the publisher of the militant Arkansas State Press, L. Christopher Bates.

In a special statement to the Courier, Mrs. Bates said: "As soon as the Supreme Court renders its decision, we feel that many districts will be ready to integrate. We feel that this will be done without court action in some districts. In eastern Arkansas where the colored outnumber the white, there may have to be court action. We are ready for such action if it becomes necessary, for we have petitions signed by around 700 persons representing 3,000 school children and these petitions indicate that the signers are ready for integration."

* * *

OUTSIDE pressure had a lot to do with opening the doors of the University of Arkansas to Negro applicants, but it is not generally known that pressure within the university also played an important role in breaking down segregation.

Negro men are now living in domitories on the University of Arkansas campus, but Negro women have not been admitted as yet to campus dorms because, as university officials put it, "facilities are limited."

First efforts on the part of Negroes to enter the university dates back to 1947 when Silas Hunt sought to enter the school of journalism, and Wiley Branton applied for admission to the business administration school.

Both applications were turned down, but in the following year both young men were admitted to the university school of law.

* * *

TO DATE, several hundred

Negroes have been graduated from the university, most of them teachers who sought the master's degree.

The University Center in Little Rock, at first set up on a segregated basis, is now fully integrated. The Center caters mostly to Negro and white teachers on the graduate level. They attend evening and Saturday classes.

The feeling throughout the state is that many of the presidents of the private white colleges in Arkansas would welcome the opportunity to enroll Negroes.

Arkansas M. and N. College at Pine Bluff, only state-supported college for Negroes, is on the fringe area of desegregating. Two professors from India are on the faculty this year, and two foreign students, one from India and the other from Singapore, are members of the student body.

* * *

AT LEAST two white persons from Pine Bluff have attended special classes at Arkansas M. and N., and it is known that several white students have applied for full admission to the college.

General feeling is that once the final decision is handed down by the Supreme Court, the campus of M. and N. will be flooded with whites who live in the Pine Bluff area. Whites in Pine Bluff must travel at least seventy miles to enroll in a non-Negro state school.

Able Dr. Lawrence A. Davis, just turned forty, is president of Arkansas M. and N.

Very little publicity has been given to any of the desegregation and integration activities and for that reason very few people know that Negro professors from Arkansas M. and N. serve on panels and as lecturers at the University of Arkansas. One member of the M. and N. faculty is also a regular member of the teaching faculty at the University Center in Little Rock.

* * *

ALREADY established on the campus of the University of Arkansas is an interracial club of students and the main purpose of the organization is to push for integration on the undergraduate level at the university.

The Arkansas State Press in Little Rock has done much in fighting for civil rights and integration. It was responsible for colored policemen now patrolling the streets of Little Rock and it staged a financial campaign that enabled Edith Erby to study medicine at the university. Dr. Erby is now practicing in Hot Springs.

In Arkansas, the State Board of Education serves in an advisory capacity to local school districts. The Legislature gives each district the right to set up separate schools for Negroes and whites.

* * *

IN 1952, the state had an average school attendance of 268,235 whites and 82,617 Negro children. In the same year, expenditures (excluding transportation costs) per pupil stood at $102.05 for whites and $67.75 for Negroes.

Fifteen of the state's seventy-five counties have no Negro students in public schools. There is only one Negro student in Benton County and he is taught privately in the home of a teacher. Twenty-two other counties have Negro school enrollments of less than 10 per cent and in the remaining thirty-seven counties the colored student population rages from 11 to 60.5 per cent of the total.

Another breakdown shows that Arkansas has 423 school districts. There are no Negro pupils in 184 of these districts, 228 have both races and eleven have only Negroes. There are 634 Negro schools, many of them two-room shacks, and there are 1,540 white schools in the state.

State officials are crying now ecause they say it will cost $21 million to make all-Negro school facilities equal to those now used by whites. A desegregation program would mean that some white children would have to attend schools once used only by Negroes.

* * *

ON LAST MAY 21, the School Board of Sheridan, Ark., voted to integrate its schools. This decision came after Negro parents protested unequal facilities. The decision was changed on May 22, however, after whites protested.

The Sheridan switch caused other desegregation-minded school districts to jump back on the segregation bandwagon. Several of the smaller towns had considered following the pattern set in Fayetteville and Charleston.

It is costing Sheridan officials $4,000 this year to send twenty-one Negro students to school in an adjoining county.

In the capital city of Little Rock, the school board announced that it would continue with the dual system pending further rulings of the Supreme Court but that "it is our responsibility to comply with Federal constitutional requirements and we intend to do so when the Supreme Court outlines the methods to be followed."

* * *

PHILANDER SMITH College, a Methodist institution in Little Rock and heretofore an all-Negro school, enrolled a white student last fall.

Last summer, churchmen and lay leaders met in the capital city and voted to give financial support to the NAACP in its campaign to bring about complete integration within the state.

One all-white college in the state, privately supported Fort Smith Junior College, voted last Sept. 21 to deny admission to four Negro students, fearing that a mixed student body would have a harmful impact on the financial condition of the school.

NAACP at the moment is gathering petitions, holding conferences and creating a favorable climate for integration. "We are trying to work through liberal white organizations," said Mr. Bates, state president.

— BIGGEST and the BEST —

Army Calls Maj. Byas

MEMPHIS — Dr. James S. Byas Jr. has been ordered to active duty with the U. S. Army for two years. Dr. Byas was promoted to the rank of major last October and will be temporarily stationed at Brooke Army Medical Center, Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Tex.

Foe of Integration Suggests McCarthy Probe High Court

By The Associated Press

SHERIDAN, Ark., June 3.—About 300 angry patrons of the Sheridan school district voted Tuesday night at a mass meeting to retain racial segregation in their schools after a speaker said that perhaps the Supreme Court should be investigated.

J. H. (Pete) Duncan, a candidate for State Representative from Grant County, told the meeting "the Communists are dictating the policies of the United States."

"I am wondering," he said, "if the Supreme Court justices are not Communist-infiltrated and if maybe Senator Joseph R. McCarthy shouldn't investigate the Supreme Court."

The meeting was called to protest the rerouting of school buses. The patrons complained they weren't consulted in the changes.

But the session quickly became a protest movement against the Supreme Court's recent decision that recaial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

A motion by Virge Ashcraft that the school district "leave the Negro situation like it has always been until the Supreme Court forces us to do otherwise" was adopted amid applause.

Only a few hands showed in dissent.

MRS. VIVIAN J. TELLIS, assistant professor English at Southern university, Baton Rouge, La., has been granted a scholarship to the School and College Program for Teachers at the University of Chicago. The scholarship was through the Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Order Mixing Of Ark. Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (ANP) — The Arkansas state board of education virtually acknowledged that the much discussed southern doctrine of "separate but equal" is just a hoa:

Last week it issued an order to local school districts throughout the state to bring Negro facilities up to par with whites. Within three years or face a downgrading of white school standards.

as private schools and, as such are not subject to the Supreme Court decision. This being the case, some people have thought that Catholic schools will choose to continue the practice of racial segregation.

"This is a mistaken idea. It is contrary to the traditional practice of the Church."

He urged that "Catholic Negro children" be admitted to Catholic schools where there is no Catholic school especially for them.

Asked about the attendance of non-Catholic Negro students, Rev. John M. Bann, secretary to the Bishop, said that the practice in places where there are Catholic Negro schools has always been to take care of non-Catholic students after Catholics have been provided for if room exists. This is not changed. He said that he did not know what the attitude would be in white Catholic schools.

The new procedure makes Catholic Negroes eligible in Camden, for example. Whether or not non-Catholics will be eligible will depend on the local attitude, so far as the secretary to the Bishop now knows, as fell as on the number of Catholics applying and the facilities available.

He will inform himself more thoroughly on the question and give more definite answer later.

Pattern Is Same In Little Rock for Negro Students

The racial pattern will not change for Catholics in communities where schools for Negro Catholics have been established, according to a letter read in the churches of the Little Rock diocese Sunday. Little Rock has both an elementary and a high school for Catholic Negro students and North Little Rock has had an elementary school. In such places, "the same spiritual urgency" does not exist for admitting them to the white schools.

The letter came from Bishop Albert L. Fletcher. It said in part, "Catholic schools are classified

Ark. Catholics Relax Some Bars

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Negro students will be admitted to some white parochial schools in Arkansas this fall—in areas where the Roman Catholic Church has not provided separate schools for Negroes.

This policy was made known last week in the Little Rock Diocese — (which includes all Arkansas) by Bishop Albert L. Fletcher in a pastoral letter.

The Rev. John M. Bann, secretary to the Bishop, said recently he expected few Negro children to enter white Catholic schools this fall.

THE CATHOLIC Church has established seven grade schools and two high schools in the state for Negro Catholics.

The high schools are at Little Rock and Pine Bluff.

Grade schools have been set at Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith, Helena, Hot Springs, Canway, and North Little Rock.

* * *

BISHOP FLETCHER, in his letter emphasized "the goal of the church in this diocese will be that no Catholic student is refused admission into a Catholic school on account of race or color."

He stated that there are probably less than 300 Negro Catholics of school age in the state, and where they are concentrated in sizeable numbers, the church has separate schools for them.

Some Catholic Schools In Ark. Will Be Mixed

LITTLE ROCK—(ANP)—Bishop Albert L. Fletcher, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of Little Rock, last week declared that Negro students will be admitted to white parochial school in areas where the church has not provided separate schools for Negroes.

The new policy was revealed in a pastoral letter read in churches of the diocese, which covers all of Arkansas.

Calling on his parishioners to be calm in accepting the policy, the prelate letter read in part:

"There is nothing to get excited about. I am merely outlining what has been the constant teaching of the Church."

Touching on the recent Supreme Court's decision on segregation, Bishop Fletcher said:

"Catholic schools are classified as private schools and, as such, are not subject to the Supreme Court's decision. This being the case, some people have thought that Catholic schools will choose to continue the practice of racial segregation.

"This is a mistaken idea. It (segregation) is contrary to the traditional practice of the Church.

Bishop Orders Integration For Arkansas School System

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (ANP)—Bishop Albert L. Fletcher, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of Little Rock, last week declared that Negro students will be admitted to white parochial schools in areas where the church has not provided separate schools for Negroes.

The new policy was revealed in a pastoral letter read in churches of the diocese, which covers all of Arkansas.

Calling on his parishioners to be calm in accepting the policy, the prelate letter read in part:

"There is nothing to get excited about. I am merely outlining what has been the constant teaching of the church."

Bishop Fletcher pointed out in the letter that "it is especially urgent" that Catholic Negro children be admitted to "any Catholic school available" in places where there is no Catholic school especially for them. However, he explained that in areas where there are Catholic schools for Negroes, "the same spiritual urgency" does not exist.

The church maintains two high schools and seven grade schools for Negroes. The high schools are at Little Rock and Pine Bluff. The grade schools are located at Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith, Helena, Hot Springs, Conway and North Little Rock.

He stated that there are probably less than 500 Negro Catholics of school age in the state, and where they are concentrated in sizeable numbers the church has separate schools for them.

Touching on the recent Supreme Court's decision on segregation, Bishop Fletcher said:

"Catholic schools are classified as private schools and, as such, are not subject to the Supreme Court's decision. This being the case, some people have thought that Catholic schools will choose to continue the practice of racial segregation.

"This is a mistaken idea. It is contrary to the traditional practice of the Church.

"Search the pages of history and you will find that where the civil law permits and where local custom and tradition does not forbid it, the Church has never made any distinction of color or race..."

STUDYING PETITIONS — Studying petitions calling upon Arkansas school boards to reorganize their schools in accordance with recent Supreme Court ruling are (left to right) S. S. Taylor, chairman, Educational committee, NAACP; Wiley Branton, attorney and chairman, Legal Redress committee; Mrs. L. C. Bates, president, Arkansas Conference of Branches of the NAACP, and Miss Mildred Bond, field secretary from the NAACP national headquarters. The NAACP also launched $10,000 fund drive at recent meeting in Little Rock.

Effective In Areas Where Separate Schools Not Available

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(ANP)—Bishop Albert L. Fletcher, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of Little Rock, last week declared that Negro students will be admitted to white parochial schools in areas where the church has not provided separate schools for Negroes.

The new policy was revealed in a pastoral letter read in churches of the diocese, which covers all of Arkansas.

Calling on his parishioners to be calm in accepting the policy, the prelate letter read in part:

"There is nothing to get excited about. I am merely outlining what has been the constant teaching of the Church."

Bishop Fletcher pointed out in the letter that "it is especially urgent" that Catholic Negro children be admitted to "any Catholic school available" in places where there is no Catholic school especially for them. However, he explained that in areas where there are Catholic schools for Negroes, "the same spiritual urgency" does not exist.

The church maintains two high schools and seven grade schools for Negroes. The high schools are at Little Rock and Pine Bluff. The grade schools are located at Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith, Helena, Hot Springs, Conway and North Little Rock.

He stated that there are less than 500 Negro Catholics of school age in the state, and where they are concentrated in sizeable numbers the church has separate schools for them.

Touching on the recent Supreme Court's decision on segregation, Bishop Fletcher said:

"Catholic schools are classified as private schools and, as such, are not subject to the Supreme Court's decision. This being the case, some people have thought that Catholic schools will choose to continue the practice of racial segregation.

"This is a mistaken idea. It is contrary to the traditional practice of the Church.

"Search the pages of history and you will find that where the civil law permits and where local custom and tradition does not forbid it, the Church has never made any discrimination of color or race..."

Brownell Brief Meets With Mixed Reactions

